Lord Cockfield produced a drastic proposal for the harmonisation of excise duty. There may have been some advantages to some countries involving petrol and diesel oil, but the biggest change affected alcohol. We all know the level of taxation on alcohol in certain of our continental neighbours. They are quite entitled to that and I do not blame them. They have different traditions, climates, crops, methods of farming and so on. As long as we do not have to pay for their surpluses, good luck to them. However, the duty they place on alcohol per degree proof is extremely low.

I was talking to an official in the Berlaymont building and I said, "Don't you realise what you are proposing? Our Exchequer gets something like £3,000 million a year from alcohol duty. If it were reduced to about £700 million, the effect would be enormous, not just on the Exchequer, because taxes would have to be raised elsewhere; we would have to raise income tax or increase VAT on a whole range of things. Perhaps you do not realise that in the traditions of our country that particular taxation has a social side."

He replied, "The social side does not matter. That is for the social and economic committee and the Social Council." At that stage, at least at the official level, there was a lack of recognition that in Britain the excise duty has a multiple objective which, at least in principle, has the agreement of many people.

Most people in the Community found that the Cockfield medicine was a bit too strong and after a couple of years the proposal was withdrawn.

We have before us a proposal for two broad bands of VAT. One is for necessities, with a rate of 3 to 5 per cent., and the other is for a standard VAT target of between 12 and 20 per cent. At the stage when our rate was 15 per cent., we were in the middle and we regarded the position as satisfactory, as the Chancellor of the day did not have to increase the rate in the Budget. Now, with the rate at 17·5 per cent., he has less of a range within which to operate, but I must not try to anticipate his Budget.

In the proposals negotiated at that stage, we kept those derogations. But, as the Paymaster General agrees, they continue only until 1996. "Everything will be all right on the night," say the Government, "because the decision must be unanimous. Article 99 requires unanimity, which gives us a lock on the door," which the Home Secretary was keen to call a double lock.

If that lock is unlocked and the Government of the day pass through the door—nobody can be sure of the type of Administration who will be in office in 1996; I hope it will be the Labour party—they will face a dilemma. Whatever the reason for passing through the door, once they are through it, the door will be locked. Whatever the issue that led to our passing the lock—or passing the second lock to which the Home Secretary referred—no Government of their own volition will be able to change the position existing then.

It can be changed, but not just by a majority vote by friends who may agree with us. Remember, the people about whom we are speaking when we talk of "us" will not be us. They will be here 20, 30, 40—goodness knows how many—years in the future. We are legislating for people yet unborn who have not had a chance to vote. They will not be able to change the position.

Some people are inclined to say of us that we cannot achieve change, that we are like putty, that we come here to play and achieve little. I try to persuade them otherwise. Up to at least 1973 we could do something about legislation. Indeed, I had the privilege of making the last speech from the Back Benches on the European Communities Act 1972. No longer can we say, "Change the party, change the policy, go to your MP and get him to change it in Parliament."

Doors have been locked behind us one after another during the last 20 years. The occasions when we can make such statements to the rising generation in defence of representative democracy are growing fewer and fewer, just as their discontent is growing greater and greater, particularly in matters of taxation. That makes the amendment especially important. The position is not, as the Financial Secretary recently assured me, fully safeguarded. It is safeguarded only until 1996, after which it will be up for grabs.

Mr. Dalyell: Is my hon. Friend aware that I find the rising generation in my constituency very pro-European?

Mr. Spearing: Can I take this to the tax issue? I am not sure that they are very keen on European taxes, because, I suggest to my hon. Friend the Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell), I do not think the rising generation in Linlithgow, Newham, Stepney, Beaconsfield, Aldridge-Brownhills, or in Harrow—and I see that the hon. Member for Harrow, East (Mr. Dykes) is not here now—know very much about EEC taxation.

The bulk of EEC taxation is in VAT-related charges. I have one more point on 1996, but before that I give way.

11.15 pm

Mr. Cryer: Will my hon. Friend accept that whatever part of the country one visits, if one discusses the Common Market, as soon as one gets on to the common agricultural policy, which is a form of taxation amounting to £17 a week for every family in this country, people very quickly become disillusioned about the Common Market if they were not already?

Mr. Spearing: My hon. Friend has a good point because taxation of food was only introduced in this country in 1973, after we joined the Community.

Mr. Llew Smith: My hon. Friend mentioned parliamentary democracy. Listening to him, it seems to have little relevance to the taxation issue that we are discussing. I was listening to him and some other hon. Members some weeks ago when they seemed to imply that there was little democracy in terms of the regions and some weeks before that I heard some hon. Members saying that there was little parliamentary democracy about the central banks.

The First Deputy Chairman: Order. The hon. Member has been sitting here for some time and he will have heard me rule an hon. Member out of order for speaking about the central banks. This is about indirect taxation and he must stick to that.

Mr. Smith: I am responding to the point which my hon. Friend made about the importance of parliamentary democracy. I was going to make the point that I represent an area which is famous for Chartism and recently celebrated the history of the Chartist struggle for the right to vote.

The First Deputy Chairman: The hon. Member may wish to do so, but that is nothing to do with this amendment.

Mr. Spearing: Taxation and representation go together. If the Chartists were not very keen on taxation, they were keen on representation.

That brings me to the other point about 1996, and the fundamental change that is almost bound to come then in some form or other. We have been told by the Home Secretary and the Paymaster General about the double lock. They said that it was a unanimous lock, and that we could do something about it. Indeed previous Ministers, including Baroness Thatcher, often said that it was unanimous and was therefore okay, implying that we had to get agreement before there would be any change, and she or the Minister in a Department would not budge on anything because it had to be unanimous. It was a sort of black ball in reverse. If one did not get agreement, stationary would be the position. That is the implication we have had, time and again, even at the time of the referendum. No British Minister in Brussels——

Mr. Quentin Davies: The hon. Member is always well informed on European Community matters and I listen to him with great interest, but I do not share his Doomsday fears about British democracy. [Interruption.] If the hon. Member can think of nothing better than personal insults, it shows a tremendous bankruptcy of ideas.

To return to the hon. Member for Newham, South (Mr. Spearing), he accepts the principle of the single market and of the free movement of goods within that single market, I think. Does he not acknowledge that inevitably, if one has a single market of that kind, the extent to which member states' indirect taxation rates can vary is necessarily constrained and that that is necessary for economic reasons? Otherwise there is price arbitrage created by consumers and we are already facing an element of that with the tobacco and alcohol purchases across the continent. If the hon. Gentleman wants a single market, as I believe he does, will he acknowledge that a de facto move towards greater equality of indirect taxation is inevitable?

Mr. Spearing: I will reply to the hon. Gentleman's main thesis when I have completed the next section of my argument, which concerns the importance of VAT within the financial structure of the Community. I think that you will agree, Mr. Lofthouse, that that is central to our consideration, and additional to the points that I have already made. I must, however, make one factual point now: I do not think that I have ever gone on record as being in favour of the single market. [Interruption.] Well, I must have expressed my opinions in a very muted way. I am glad to say that the reason for that no longer exists, and I can now be absolutely frank.

I have never been in favour of the European Community, as set out in the treaty of Rome; I am in favour of a real European community, which is not in the treaty of Rome. That is a long-standing belief of mine, which I shall be happy to debate with anyone at any time, especially in the constituency of the hon. Member for Stamford and Spalding (Mr. Davies). Of course the hon. Gentleman is not too worried about the demise of democracy, which is already proceeding apace in this country, mainly because of the European Communities Act 1972.

Mr. Michael Spicer: On a point of order, Mr. Lofthouse. About half an hour ago, in another point of order, the hon. Member for Norwood (Mr. Fraser) asked you to take into account the fact that he was never called. I think that he added that I was often called—although I have been called only three times in about 11 debates. Should it not also be taken into account that the hon. Gentleman is usually not present? I have just looked across at the Opposition Benches, and noted that he is not present now.

The First Deputy Chairman: I have already ruled on that point of order. As I said then, the Chair takes everything into consideration.

Mr. Spearing: The hon. Member for Stamford and Spalding is here, however—which reminds me of a conversation that I had with an eminent banker. No doubt the hon. Gentleman, who I believe is also a banker, is not too worried about the demise of democracy, as some of my hon. Friends and I see it. In the Maastricht treaty, taxation and banking are closely related, and we seem now to have a Government of bankers, by bankers, for bankers.

Was not the Prime Minister a banker? And the Secretary of State for Transport? They, and the hon. Member for Stamford and Spalding, are not too worried, because the treaty favours bankers. The hon. Gentleman is a thorough believer in the conspiracy theory of history. I am not; I believe that people who occupy a privileged position through statute in their own nation will always seek to extend that advantage.

Mr. Richard Shepherd: The hon. Gentleman is dealing very gently with my hon. Friend the Member for Stamford and Spalding (Mr. Davies). The whole basis of this part of the treaty is the subject of our debate. The hon. Gentleman accepted the contentions of the article, expressed in the form of an assertion by my hon. Friend, as if they were fact; in truth, they are false coinage.

We are discussing why it is necessary for a common market to require harmonisation of tax levels. No economic theory asserts, as has my hon. Friend, that such harmonisation is a prerequisite to the achievement of a market: we have seen that in the United States and elsewhere. So please bash him down!

Mr. Spearing: I love bashing bankers, and I have done so on occasion; but one must deal with other hon. Members on an equal basis, without having one's cheque book handy or one's mortgage around one's neck. However, I thank the hon. Gentleman for his intervention. I told the hon. Member for Stamford and Spalding that I would deal with his point at the end of my speech. I said that, in the meantime, I would deal with two other matters —what will happen in 1966; and the part that VAT plays in the financial structure of the Community.

Following some refreshing exchanges, I come now to the question of what will happen in 1996. I have referred to the oft-repeated remark of the noble Baroness Lady Thatcher and her Ministers that everything would be all right on the night because we had the veto. But what happens in practice? Conservative Members have memories, and two of my hon. Friends who were Ministers know what went on.

Mr. Cryer: Three.

Mr. Spearing: Yes, three. I do not always associate my hon. Friend the Member for Bradford, South with these things. I am sure that if I have got this wrong, the three former Ministers will put me right. My right hon. Friend the Member for Chesterfield (Mr. Benn) not only agrees with what I am about to say but has related spicy anecdotes to back it up.

It is not simply a question of the Council of Ministers sitting round a table; it is also a question of the pyramid of officials in the various offices, including the committee of permanent representatives, a reference to which, incidentally, appears somewhere in the treaty. Certainly there are now more committees of officials. What do they do? And what does the Foreign Office do? The internal department of the Foreign Office and the Prime Minister's office are co-ordinating all the time.

Mr. Cryer: Four Ministers.

Mr. Spearing: Yes, four Ministers. They know all about it.

What happens when important negotiations take place? Do they confine themselves to the narrow issues involved, as, under our procedures, we attempt to do? Members of the House of Commons are able, individually and collectively, to separate issues from one another. Of course, there have to be deals in respect of certain matters. I do not know how far common sense extends, but it is at least apparent. But what happens when there is to be a big Community deal on finance? Are such things as airport slots and agriculture entirely irrelevant? Of course not. When representatives get round a table at Holyrood or the Champs Elysées, these things come together.

Let me give an extraordinary example relating to finance and taxation. The rebates negotiated by the then right hon. Member for Finchley, Mrs. Thatcher, at Fontainebleau about 10 years ago were presented as a great triumph for her. A short time previously the Heads of Government met at Stuttgart and issued a solemn declaration on European union. When these matters come up for debate in 1996, other issues will be on the table. Is the Minister to tell us that the continued derogations for which his successor will fight will be isolated and considered purely on the merits of taxation policy? Are we to be told that that Minister will not deal with some other treaty that is up for renewal at that time? In fact, he will have to deal with an across-the-board package. Nobody can pretend that there will not be a range of considerations involved in some sort of deal. Taxation, because it is money, will play a very important part.

It would be a matter of what is possible. If any hon. Gentleman of any party, who is in a position of ministerial responsibility at that time, thinks that he can get away with a certain derogation on something that will not raise the ire of the populace as much as something else might, he may as well deal that card in order to get something else. That is the way that finance and other matters in the Community work, and everybody knows it.

11.30 pm

That brings me to the question of VAT within the Community itself. There was a time when everybody thought that 1 per cent. of what was spent in VAT went to the Community; some people still think that. Do hon. Members remember the ceiling that Lady Thatcher came up against, and instead we had an intergovernmental agreement to raise the money? It is no such thing: it is 1 per cent. of a VAT assessment. The assessment is not the amount that we get; it is an assessment by the Commission and the finance officers of the Community of the VAT-able turnover of the country. They say that we should pay across 1 per cent. of that figure. If we do not put VAT on some of the derogated items, as we do not, we have to make up through some other form of internal transfer the money that we have received in the Exchequer through VAT. In other words, VAT as an income and as a tax is not directly linked with the VAT assessment made by the Community, but the amount of money that we can raise and devote to that end is.

My hon. Friend the Member for Linlithgow, if I may have his attention for a moment, asked about his young people there. I wonder whether they know how much of their equivalent of VAT goes to the EC. I can tell them: about £4,000 million a year, in 1991 values, went to the EC in 1992. In broad terms—the Paymaster General may be able to confirm this when he replies, as I hope he will—it is somewhere between 10 and 12 per cent. of the VAT take. It varies up and down, according to the basket of the ecu and the level of sterling. I assume that what has happened is that, as sterling has gone out of the exchange rate mechanism and we have rather less, the amount that we are having to put across in our VAT contribution to the Community will be rather less than it once was. But in 1992 it was around £4,000 million. I will quote all figures in 1991 values, for reasons that I will make plain in a minute.

Sir John Cope: I did not want to interrupt the flow of what the hon. Gentleman was saying, but the net contribution to the European Community in recent years has been about £2,000 million. The hon. Gentleman should compare that with the yield of value added tax in this country which, last year, was just over £35,000 million. He was drawing attention to one part of the way in which the contribution of member states to the Community is calculated, the so-called third resource, which is done on what, to use shorthand, I would describe as a kind of artificial VAT base, that is, one which is calculated, as he indicates, on the same basis for each of the countries. An adjustment is done to the figures to make sure that it is done on the same basis for each country.

Mr. Spearing: I am very grateful to the Paymaster General who, like his predecessors—and I must say that—has been a rather different order of Minister in these matters, perhaps because finance is an exact mathematical matter and it is less easy to change the nuances in financial matters than it is in others. I am grateful to him because that is what I was coming to.

When we completed the transition period and had the full finance going, VAT contributed, I think the right hon. Gentleman will agree, about one third of our contributions to the EEC. At that time Customs levies were the biggest resource that we paid over, but he will also agree, I think, that the net figure, which he correctly quoted, is a result of what is paid over compared to what is coming back, adjusted by the Berlaymont abatement.

I am coming to that, because I think the figures ought to be advertised, particularly the VAT ones, since they are not generally realised, even by the strongest critics of the European Community and its finances. They really are quite startling.

I will take the 1972 figures, again quoting in 1971 values. I have had these calculated by the Library, which has also provided me with a wonderful graph, which puts it all even more simply than words, but I cannot show it visually.

The figures show that £4,000 million went to the EEC from VAT and £1,600 million from Customs, and from the gross national product—the fourth resource, I think—broadly £1,100 million, making a total contribution of £7,000 million. That was our 1972 contribution to the EEC. But the receipts—and of course the bulk of those were in the agricultural fund—amounted to only £2,900 million: less than half our contribution; indeed, only three quarters of the VAT-related contribution. That was all we got back. There was a deficit, therefore, of £4·2 billion. That was our imbalance. We were net contributors, after the rebate, of £4·2 billion.

It is true—and Treasury Ministers always mention it—that that was after the rebate, but the rebate, of course, if I am correct, is also on leasehold. The rebate has been successfully maintained, but it is coming up again, if not in 1996, not very long afterwards.

Sir John Cope: All this has nothing to do with article 99, or the amendment, or anything that we have been discussing this evening. It has to do with the contribution to the European Community. However, the hon. Gentleman will no doubt be pleased to learn that at the Edinburgh summit a short while before Christmas the United Kingdom abatement was extended to the end of the century. Thereafter, of course, another decision will require to be made.

He may also like to know that the third resource, the VAT resource, was reduced in its importance by various extra restrictions, which it would be improper of me to go into at this point. But if he consults the evidence that I gave only yesterday to the Treasury and Civil Service Committee, when it is published in due course, he will see some more details. The proportion of the Community contribution which is to come from the VAT resource in future will reduce over the period of the financial perspective—that is to say, between now and 1999.

Mr. Spearing: I am grateful to the Paymaster General for giving us that information. I said that I knew that it was some time in the future. He has now told us that our VAT-related contributions will be going down, but of course the amounts may well be rather big. I was rather surprised, his having agreed with me the net figure of £2·4 billion after abatement, which he mentioned himself a little while ago, at his reaction to my going through the figures, because it is not possible to find them very easily.

Mr. Leighton: Is my hon. Friend saying that we are sending vast amounts of taxpayers' money to Brussels, where they are translated into 11 languages, as it were, and that a small proportion of them is returned to us? Surely we are subsidising countries that are much richer than the United Kingdom. Is this true?

Mr. Spearing: I shall not go down that road, Mr. Lofthouse, because if I were in your position I would pull myself up. I say only that this year about a third of what we contributed was paid back. That is without the Fontainebleau arrangement.

The hon. Member for Stamford and Spalding has challenged me by saying, "You can't have a proper and common single market without a single system of taxation." I think that that was the burden of his remarks.

Mr. Quentin Davies: With respect, that is not what I said. I was not suggesting that any formal harmonisation was required. I said that if we agree that there should be a free exchange of goods across frontiers without controls and restrictions and that my constituents and the hon. Gentleman's, for example, should be able to go to France, Belgium or Germany to make their personal purchases and bring them back to the United Kingdom—I thought that he agreed with that liberal development, but perhaps he does not—we must agree also that the corollary of such a single market is that the scope within which individual member states can vary their rates of indirect taxation must, de facto, be reduced by market pressures. People will not cross the channel or drive hundreds of miles to save 1 or 2 per cent. on the price of goods, so some variation in indirect taxation will be possible and sustainable. That is what happens in the United States. On the other hand, people will travel long distances to save themselves 10, 15, 20 or 25 per cent. There is that market constraint. That is what I was talking about. That is very different from formal and deliberate harmonisation, which I do not believe is necessary.

Mr. Spearing: But article 99 says that it is necessary, and that is something which the hon. Gentleman clearly supports. However, I do not agree—I was grateful for the intervention of the hon. Member for Aldridge-Brownhills (Mr. Shepherd) earlier—with the hon. Gentleman's premise. Instead, I believe in common sense in the face of article 99 and variations in VAT or excise duty. It is in that light that the amendments are designed to protect the people of the United Kingdom, and that protection could be forthcoming. The acceptance of the amendments would mean that the Government would be instructed by Parliament to say, "We shall go along with article 99 as long as it means that we do not have to have any more derogation losses on VAT. We shall go along with article 99 as long as there is no further harmonisation of excise."

It is not necessary to take these matters to the degree of a mathematical level table. The Community has said, "We shall get as reasonably close as we can to a unified system on the basis that it is a mechanism that does not distort the market very much in practice." In other words, it is willing to make a compromise. That is the position that the Community has reached.

That brings me to harmony. It is said that we can achieve what are considered to be the benefits of a single market without frontiers and barriers—I happen to think that such benefits do not exist—by bringing together different notes to produce the whole. It is said that there is no need for that to happen in unison. In other words, we do not have to lose our derogations from VAT on necessary items and we do not have to put up with the harmonisation of excise duties. That is why I hope that my right hon. and hon. Friends will support the amendments.

Mr. Tim Smith: (Beaconsfield): It would be nice to be able to say that this has been an illuminating debate, but I fear that there has been some obfuscation—some deliberate and some voluntary. However, the hon. Member for Newham, South (Mr. Spearing) gave us an illuminating account of the history of value added tax in the European Community.

Article 99, as amended by the treaty, makes no significant difference to that article as it appears in the Single European Act. It merely adds consultation with the Economic and Social Committee. If one reads the reports of the debates on this subject in 1986, one finds that the fears expressed then are similar to those being expressed now. The only substantial change in VAT since 1986 arises from the infraction proceedings to which I referred earlier.

Those proceedings were based on the sixth EC VAT directive of 1977, which the hon. Gentleman rightly mentioned. That directive was agreed by the previous Labour Government, and the hon. Gentleman told us that it was agreed by the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food. I was not aware of that, but it could explain a great deal. It is that directive with which we have to deal, and it is based on the original article 99 of the treaty of Rome.

Even with the Single European Act, article 17 of which amended the original article 99, there has been very little change to the treaty of Rome. Therefore, in many ways, this debate is irrelevant, because the Maastricht treaty makes no substantial change to the arrangements of indirect tax harmonisation.

My hon. Friend the Member for Worcestershire, South (Mr. Spicer)——

Mr. Wilkinson: Just because the provisions in the proposed treaty on European union differ only in minute detail from those already enacted in the Single European Act is no reason not to examine them critically or to draw sensible conclusions, especially as my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer consciously forwent the perfectly sensible, independent option of lowering VAT, if necessary below 15 per cent., in favour of adopting a European directive requiring a minimum level of 15 per cent. That was the first instance in recent days of the potential damage to the Treasury's independence which the provision encapsulates.

Mr. Smith: I was about to say that my hon. Friend the Member for Worcestershire, South had made that very point, that it was perfectly legitimate to scrutinise these issues again. He was straightforward in saying that he had previously got it wrong—he had voted for the Single European Act and article 99 as amended by article 17 of the Single European Act, but he was now worried about what might happen in the future.

I think that my hon. Friend the Member for Ruislip-Northwood (Mr. Wilkinson) is in the same position, and I do not dispute the fact that it is perfectly legitimate to scrutinise the proposals again. My point is that similar fears were expressed in 1986, and the only substantial change which has taken place since is that to which I referred.

Mr. Cash: Answer his point.

Mr. Smith: If my hon. Friend the Member for Stafford (Mr. Cash) will be a little patient, I shall come to that.

Dr. Norman A. Godman (Greenock and Port Glasgow): Address the Chair.

Mr. Smith: I apologise, Mr. Lofthouse.

My hon. Friend the Member for Ruislip-Northwood referred to the recent agreement reached by the Council of Ministers on a minimum standard rate of VAT of 15 per cent., but that does not arise from the Maastricht treaty. It has nothing to do with the treaty but arises from the existing article 99. I read the record of the debates that took place then. We should remember that article 99 is subject to unanimity. During the Second Reading of the European Communities (Amendment) Act 1986, my hon. Friend the Member for Stafford said:

> "We tend to exaggerate the dangers of majority voting. We live in a global economy but have to keep our interests ahead of other people's. We must have regard to our own interests while working in the EC."—[Official Report, 23 April 1986; Vol. 96, c. 378.]

I am sorry that he does not feel the same now. Very little has changed in the intervening period—all that has changed in relation to VAT is the decision of the European Court.

Mr. Cash: I do not depart from one word of what I said then, and I repeat it. There are a tremendous number of benefits to be derived from the single market, but the difficulty is the way in which it is being manipulated, and the Commission's complete failure to subscribe to the rules, so that we frequently operate on illegal treaty bases. That throws up considerable doubt, which the Select Committee on Trade and Industry is now investigating.

The First Deputy Chairman: Order. That is in no way concerned with direct taxation.

Mr. Smith: To return to the subject of indirect taxation, when the hon. Member for Oxford, East (Mr. Smith) moved the amendment, which would have no significant effect——

Mr. Marlow: Will my hon. Friend give way?

Mr. Smith: I think that I had better press on.

Mr. Marlow: May I make a brief but important point? My hon. Friend says that all that stuff about indirect taxation and VAT has to be decided by unanimity. We all know that our right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer did not want to agree a minimum rate of VAT at 15 per cent. Yet, despite the fact that he did not want to agree, and despite the requirement for unanimity, that rate was agreed.

Does that not point to many sections of the treaty which require decisions to be made by unanimity but on which, despite the fact that the Committee is told that we shall have safeguards and that there will be no majority voting, the Government will be pressured into making decisions that they do not want to make?

Mr. Smith: Unanimity means that, if the Government take the view that our vital national interests are at stake, they will not make the concession that other members of the Council are making. In this particular case——

Mrs. Gorman: Will my hon. Friend give way?

Mr. Smith: I am trying to answer the question asked by my hon. Friend the Member for Northampton, North (Mr. Marlow), and I am only halfway through doing so —[HON. MEMBERS: "Oh."] But I will give way to my hon. Friend the Member for Billericay (Mrs. Gorman) in due course.

What was the question that my hon. Friend the Member for Northampton, North asked about? Oh yes, it was about unanimity. If the Government thought that our vital national interests were at stake, of course they would use what is effectively a veto. But in this particular case, our standard rate of VAT is 17·5 per cent., and I do not believe that the Government have any intention of greatly reducing it, so there is no practical effect.

Mrs. Gorman: Will my hon. Friend explain to me how the Chancellor's decision on the 15 per cent. base rate could possibly help this country, when, as a result of it, the horse racing industry, for example, is decamping to Ireland, where the rate is 2·5 per cent.? Why does unanimity appear to apply to us but not to our competitors?

Mr. Smith: My hon. Friend has my total sympathy; I agree with her. It is not our Government but the Irish Government who are at fault, and the matter should be dealt with by the European Commission. The hon. Member for Oxford, East referred to that matter, among other things. It is important, but it does not arise directly from the amendment, which the hon. Member for Oxford,

East said was a probing amendment—[Laughter.] That is what the hon. Gentleman said, and the amendment has enabled us to have a useful debate. But now we should agree to throw it out so that we can have article 99, as amended, in the treaty. I am sure that the hon. Gentleman would agree to that.

Mr. Denzil Davies (Llanelli): My hon. Friend the Member for Newham, South (Mr. Spearing) made a marvellous speech which showed a complete grasp of the technicalities of VAT, but I must correct him on one matter—not only for myself but on behalf of my right hon. Friend the Member for Ashton-under-Lyne (Mr. Sheldon), who chaired those wretched meetings which finally arrived at the sixth directive. Perhaps we were all in the agriculture Committee—I do not know. Brussels is a funny place at 3 o'clock in the morning, and one sometimes does not know exactly which Committee one is in. Perhaps one final comma was approved at the end of the day by John Silkin in the agriculture Committee. I assure the Committee that we had night after night of discussion on that wretched VAT directive.

We have also heard about a purchase tax. It is perfectly in order, Mr. Lofthouse, to discuss indirect taxation. The article mentions turnover tax, which is probably VAT, and goes on to mention other forms of indirect taxation. I tend to agree with hon. Members who feel that VAT is not the best form of indirect taxation for the European Community. Some time ago Treasury civil servants were asked by the Japanese Government to go out to Japan to advise the Japanese Government on whether to introduce the kind of VAT that operates in the Community. I am told—this is all hearsay—that those civil servants had to consult Ministers on whether to go. Treasury Ministers were apparently enthusiastic that the permanent secretary to the Treasury should go to Japan. Some Ministers believed that one way of stopping the Japanese economic miracle in its tracks would be to export this crazy tax—which was invented by a French tax inspector and a German philosopher a long time ago.

The Japanese, clever people that they are, did not fall for it. They have no intention of introducing VAT; nor has the United States——

Mr. Richard Shepherd: It is too regressive.

Mr. Davies: Precisely. The pass was sold on this one. The Labour party voted against it in 1972, but the pass was sold. The tax is convenient for the EEC, but it will put Europe at a disadvantage in the competition that it faces and will face from Japan and other Asian countries, and from the United States.

So much for the history. We are saddled with the tax now, even though it is bureaucratic and rather inflexible.

I, like many other Members, have some dificulty with article 99. Either it is terribly important, or it is not important at all. My problem is with the words

"within the time limit laid down in Article 7a".

As has been said, article 99 of the Maastricht treaty is not really different from article 99 in the treaty of Rome—except that that talking shop, EcoSoc, as we used to call it, has been incorporated in the new article 99. That is fine; if it wants to discuss these matters, no one objects.

Meanwhile, article 8a, in which the time limit is supposed to have been laid down, has become article 7a. The treaty of Rome used a capital "A"; this treaty uses a little "a". I suppose that lawyers would call that "de minimis", but we should not worry unduly about it.

At all events, article 8a—now 7a—gives the time limit as 31 December 1992, by which time all the harmonisation was to be carried out to ensure the establishment and the functioning of the internal market. As far as I can tell, once we have reached 31 December 1992, the article becomes defunct. Perhaps the Paymaster General will be able to tell me that I am wrong. Unless I am greatly mistaken in my interpretation, however, the article should not be included at all. It seems that the clever guys who drafted it have made a mistake——

Mr. Wilkinson: Will the right hon. Gentleman, who has one of the best legal minds in the House, elicit from the Financial Secretary a definitive answer to this important question? It will be germane to the whole debate on these amendments. Will he ensure that the Financial Secretary replies soon, and specifically?

Mr. Davies: The Paymaster General and not the Financial Secretary will no doubt reply to the debate. If we are right we can all go home and need not have this nice debate about VAT and unanimity or about the future of democracy or anything else. Perhaps I should move to another issue.

Sir John Cope: I can explain now rather than leave it until later. The passing of the deadline does not in any way invalidate—it would be wrong if it did—the measures already passed, starting with the sixth directive and others which are based on article 99. Therefore, that article needs to continue after the deadline. The single market must continue to function effectively. There is case law to show that the passing of a deadline in a treaty article of this kind does not remove the obligation on Community institutions to take action which is prescribed within the deadline. I would not be surprised if in future hon. Members and people elsewhere in the Community draw attention to matters of indirect taxation which need to be based on article 99.

Mr. Davies: The Paymaster General has given the game away. He said that the obligation is to carry out the orders of the article within the deadline. I do not know what happened to the obligation, but the deadline has passed.

Sir John Cope: I have just explained to the right hon. Gentleman that the obligation does not end with the passing of the deadline: it continues and, as I said, there is case law to that effect. We and the other members of the Community have done our best to put the system in place. It is largely in place, but corrections and refinements may need to be made in future, and we need the treaty base to do that.

Mr. Davies: The obligation was to do something within the deadline, and the deadline was 31 December 1992. The Paymaster General can cite as many precedents as he likes, but that deadline has passed and the obligation can no longer exist.

Sir John Cope: The obligation remains. The primary obligation was to achieve as much as we could by the deadline. As I have already explained, there are perfectly good precedents, case law and all the rest of it, which the right hon. Gentleman can look up if he wishes, to continue the obligation insofar as it has not been fulfilled by the deadline, should that be necessary. In addition, article 99 is needed because it is the basis of the sixth and other directives. The right hon. Gentleman is not being as sharp as usual on legal matters.

Mr. Davies: The right hon. Gentleman cannot get away with that. We all know that the sixth directive exists and that steps can be taken without any of these measures because countries can get together and agree to amend the sixth directive and to harmonise. I do not care what case law says because there is no need to go to case law. The document states in clear language that the obligation is to do something by 31 December 1992. That deadline has passed and, as the condition precedent for the obligation is that the actions have to be completed by 31 December 1992, the obligation no longer exists.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: On a point of order, Dame Janet. You will have heard the exchange between the right hon. Gentleman and the Paymaster General, who has said that there are precedents for what is being done. Does the Minister not have an obligation, in this case if nowhere else, to present the precedents to the Committee, failing which may I ask you to suspend the sitting?

The Second Deputy Chairman: That is not a point of order for the Chair, although it would make an intervention.

Mr. Davies: I do not want to labour the point. As I understand it, the article was incorporated into the Single European Act and provided for certain things to be done by the date when the internal market came into operation on 1 January 1993. It makes perfect sense against that background. It was inserted into the treaty of Rome because the Single European Act was inserted into the treaty of Rome. Then, someone did not get it quite right, so somebody else said, "We must put EcoSoc in there." Nobody really noticed that it was defunct because 31 December had gone.

Mr. Cash: The right hon. Gentleman is making a brilliant speech and raising many practical points. Has he noticed that article 99 merely provides that we should carry out that form of indirect taxation to assist the internal market? Therefore, the arrangements being proposed by the Government are not necessary. Not only is the right hon. Gentleman right about the fact that the obligation had to be fulfilled by 31 December 1992, but it is not necessary anyway to go down this route to achieve the Government's objectives.

"to the extent that such harmonisation is necessary"

Mr. Davies: I agree that to some extent what is necessary is a subjective matter.

My hon. Friend the Member for Oxford, East (Mr. Smith) was terrified of even considering a vote on the amendment because he said that it was a wrecking amendment. Apparently, the whole of the Maastricht treaty would be destroyed if the Committee dared to remove this wretched article 99, which does not mean anything anyway. Terrible things would happen and the whole of western Europe would collapse. My hon. Friend began to sound like the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office discussing the social chapter yesterday. "It is terrible", he said, "we shall have to have a conference." Of course, it might last only 30 seconds.

I am becoming worried about the Con-Lab pact; my hon. Friends are sounding more and more like Ministers. That is extremely worrying for Back Benchers. I ask my hon. Friend the Member for Oxford, East to go for a vote on the amendment this time. The whole of Europe will not collapse. Mr. Kohl will not be on the doorstep of No. 10 tomorrow morning berating the Prime Minister about it. They will call an intergovernmental conference, it will last 30 seconds and they will sort it out. It is not really important, so why suggest that it will wreck the treaty?

Let us suppose that the matter is important. I do not believe that it is, but the Paymaster General has a large brief and he believes that it is important. He has spent a great deal of time going back and fro to Brussels to discuss these wretched VAT directives. He has to believe it to be important. How on earth could he do his job if he did not?

Sir John Cope: I assure the right hon. Gentleman that I would not have taken the job if I did not believe it to be important, and I do. It was necessary to create the single market and now it is necessary to ensure that it functions effectively. Article 99 is all about it functioning effectively and we need to retain it to ensure that it continues to do so, especially with regard to the matters that we are discussing.

The right hon. Gentleman did not correctly understand some of the remarks made earlier by his hon. Friend the Member for Oxford, East (Mr. Smith) and by some Conservative Members, including myself. If the amendment were carried, it would not remove article 99 from the treaty. Its only effect would be to insert EcoSoc into our deliberations, which a few minutes ago the right hon. Gentleman said he would be happy to accept.

Mr. Davies: I understand that and I pay tribute to the right hon. Gentleman. I do not want to sound patronising, but he is an excellent Minister. He understands VAT. He is an excellent accountant. His law is a bit weak, but he is a good accountant. I am sure that he works hard. Customs and Excise has done well in trying to put into operation some of the complicated rules that have arisen.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My right hon. Friend the Paymaster General has said that the amendment will not remove article 99, but the amendment says that it will.

Mr. Davies: The Paymaster General did not mean that.

Mr. Spicer: That is why I am asking. I am sure that the right hon. Member for Llanelli (Mr. Davies) can give a good interpretation of what my right hon. Friend meant. But he said twice that the amendment will not remove article 99 when it says that it will. I do not understand the point that he is getting at.

Mr. Davies: The Paymaster General meant that if we remove the present article 99 we shall still have the old article 99, but EcoSoc will not be in it; it will be either article 8a or article 7a—I am not sure.

We have also discussed the binding obligation of the directive whereby we are now apparently not allowed to reduce VAT below 15 per cent. That may be the only time that a British Government have agreed to a binding directive—it may be only until 1996, although that is not clear either—denying the House the opportunity to reduce a major tax below a certain level. That is a substantial derogation from the sovereignty of the House.

In theory, we could reduce the tax below 15 per cent. in a Finance Bill, but any importer, exporter or business man in Britain who suffered damage as a result of that would be able to take the British Government to court and eventually the case would wind its way up to the European Court and the British Government would lose. An action was recently brought against the Italian Government for not carrying out a directive on redundancy payments and the Italian Government lost. Therefore, we have lost our sovereignty, certainly until 1996.

Mrs. Gorman: Is the right hon. Gentleman aware that there is an attempt to eliminate VAT between countries —to have a zero rate? However, the complications are such that the directive comprises 650 pages of closely typed instructions which business men on both sides of the transaction are supposed to read and understand. Does the right hon. Gentleman think that that will help or hinder matters?

Mr. Davies: That makes it more complicated. That is part of the Government's problem. That is why Lord Cockfield or the Commission later suggested that the tax should be charged at the point of production.

That binding directive is a major derogation from the sovereignty of the House. During the passage of the European Communities Act 1972, we were told that all taxation directives would have to be passed in the House through a Finance Bill, but even if we do that through a Finance Bill, it still does not mean that we have any real power. If a Finance Bill contradicts a directive, we can be taken to court. I do not think that a Finance Bill is even necessary. The detail of the directives is lifted in detail into the Finance Bill. Anyone practising in the VAT sector now has to look at the directive itself because the courts construe the directive.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: Is not the right hon. Gentleman highlighting the totally unsatisfactory nature of the European Community processes inasmuch as the Council of Ministers will agree something which merely has to be ratified by the House. He referred to the minimum rate of VAT. The House never debated that with the opportunity to reverse it. The Government of the day, with its supporters here in a majority, would have said that we were letting them down if we went back on what they had agreed in a nice cosy little Council of Ministers. This place is becoming irrelevant. The British people no longer have a Parliament of their own.

12.15 am

Mr. Davies: We shall be told that this is a wrecking exercise. Perhaps the Paymaster General can advise the Committee whether this legally binding directive, which will prevent Britain from reducing VAT below 15 per cent. and from taking other action, will appear in this year's Finance Bill. I know that the right hon. Gentleman is in purdah, but perhaps he can say whether it is likely that the directive will be incorporated in a Finance Bill.

Sir John Cope: No.

Mr. Davies: Will the House be able to debate and amend a directive which will be legally binding?—[HON. MEMBERS: "No."] So the hon. Member for Macclesfield (Mr. Winterton) is right. We cannot amend much of the Bill either, because when we attempt to do so Members on both Front Benches say that we are trying to wreck the Bill. The Committee can debate but not amend a rule which will continue to exist until at least 1996, that VAT shall not be reduced below 15 per cent. That is a further derogation from the power of Parliament to make changes.

I have totted up those derogations. Under monetary union, we shall have no control over interest rates. Neither shall we have any control over public expenditure—and now taxation. Those are all matters over which Parliament and the Government will have little control. That may have one good effect—we shall not need as many Treasury Ministers. Once we reach 1996, we shall not need four or five Treasury Ministers, though we shall need a Paymaster General to write the cheques.

Mr. Richard Shepherd: The right hon. Gentleman is right. We must see this in the context of the Government and their allies—members of the Labour Front Bench—being intent on building a European state with all the attributes, taxation and absolute rights which will enable it to determine such matters. That is all that the Bill is about. It is a major step on the way to acquiescence by the British people, through their leadership, in accepting new institutions and national arrangements—the Eurofed.

Mr Davies: It is a Eurofed which will not even have the virtues of a federal system. I do not want to be out of order and to prolong the debate on that ground, but we are transferring powers to non-democratic bodies having no Executive recognised by the people.

Mrs. Gorman: Will the right hon. Gentleman give the Committee the benefit of his extremely intelligent analysis? He will recall that the Government of the day used VAT for their own convenience, whacking on 2·5 per cent. to mitigate the effects of the community charge. That is a very cynical use of a tax which we were given to understand was meant to be imposed on services and goods, but which is apparently used sometimes for the benefit or convenience of contributing nations in dealing with their domestic difficulties.

Mr. Davies: That is something like hypothecation, is it not? The Paymaster General was not listening, but the Treasury does not like hypothecation—so in effect it hypothecated 2·5 per cent. for local taxes.

It is said that there must be unanimity. As many right hon. and hon. Members have argued, that may sound good in theory but in practice it is not so easy for a Minister or a Government to stand up against the 11 other member states. The Maastricht agreement had to be unanimous. The British Government had a veto, and if they had shown any courage and vetoed the treaty it would have collapsed completely. I do not believe that many other countries were too keen on it either, but the momentum carried it forward. That is a purely personal view—and no doubt an eccentric one. The agreement was not vetoed because the pressure was so great that one country could not really veto it. It will be the same with taxation. We cannot use the veto. It is like firing off a nuclear deterrent: once it has been used, the deterrent has failed. So I do not believe that the unanimity rule will be very helpful.

[Mr. Davies]

I predict that in 1996 we shall be moving gradually towards a system of VAT being collected at the point of production and not at the point of consumption. The Paymaster General said very little about it but, as I understand it, the British Government were opposed to proposals that VAT should be imposed at the point of production instead of at the point of consumption or importation. The German Government were in favour, of course, for the simple reason that Germany is a country of producers and Britain is a country of consumers.

Mr. Timothy Wood (Lords Commissioner to the Treasury) rose in his place and claimed to move, That the Question be now put.

ROYAL ASSENT

Madam Deputy Speaker: I have to notify the House, in accordance with the Royal Assent Act 1967, that the Queen has signified her Royal Assent to the following Acts:

SOCIAL SECURITY ACT 1993

LONDON UNDERGROUND (KING'S CROSS) ACT 1993

Ministerial Responsibility

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Wood.]

12.58 am

Mr. Gerald Kaufman (Manchester, Gorton): I am grateful to Madam Speaker for having selected this subject for the Adjournment debate. I am asking the Government to respond to the case that I am making because I believe that the rights of the House are being steadily eroded by the Government's actions. It is extremely important that we try to call a halt to what is being done.

The House, with its votes, can make and unmake Governments. Right hon. and hon. Members have no power and no privileges as individuals. It is right that we should have no privileges other than the two rights that we have as elected Members. Those two rights are exercised on behalf of our constituents. One is the right of completely free speech in the Chamber and in the relevant parliamentary documents which accompany our work in the Chamber. The other is the right of access to Ministers.

Ministers derive their authority from the House and should be accountable to it. It is an inalienable right of our constituents that we, on their behalf, should have access to Ministers. We should have the right to go to a Minister and to ensure that he is compelled to consider the needs and interests of any or every citizen in the land, whatever his or her status or occupation.

The right of access is an issue which affects every right hon. and hon. Member, regardless of political party, but the Government are steadily eliminating that right and are consequently diminishing the rights of the House, of individual hon. Members and of the constituents whom they represent. In so doing, the Government are diminishing parliamentary democracy.

The Government are engaged in a massive transfer of responsibility from Ministers into the hands of executive agencies. Previous Governments of both parties have sometimes made individual transfers of responsibilities, but nothing has been done on the scale of what this Government are engaged in. Labour Governments created publicly owned industries which were not directly responsible to Parliament for their day-to-day operation, but the nationalisation of those industries made them more publicly accountable than they had been, because they had previously been privately owned and had no accountability to Members of Parliament. Of course, privatisation has ended even the former limited accountability that public ownership provided. When some of my right hon. and hon. Friends recently met the President of the Board of Trade to discuss redundancies at British Aerospace, he made it clear that he had no power and he washed his hands completely of any accountability of that industry to Parliament. More and more Ministers are now washing their hands of responsibilities to the House for which, until recently, they were fully accountable to the House.

In the past four and a half years, responsibility for numerous Government activities affecting many millions of our citizens has been hived off to 78 so-called next steps agencies. They range from the Building Research Establishment to the Central Science Laboratory, from the Ordnance Survey of Northern Ireland to the social security Benefits Agency. Two hundred and thirty-eight thousand people are employed by those agencies and, what is more, the Government have plans to establish 29 more, employing 109,000 more people. Huge areas of Government activities are being removed from Ministers and transferred to unaccountable bodies headed by officials who are generously—often over-generously—recompensed. Rights are being taken away from hon. Members in the process.

Until recently, hon. Members had the right to table parliamentary questions on individual cases and to get a ministerial reply. Now, what we get—and it took a battle to get that—are letters from heads of agencies, which are published in Hansard. My hon. Friend the Member for Don Valley (Mr. Redmond) gave me a substantial pile of letters that he has received in place of what should have been ministerial replies to him.

What is more, by doing that, the Government are eroding the rights of Parliament in another sense because until now only Ministers, as Members of Parliament, had access to Hansard. Now, non-parliamentarians have access to it.

Furthermore, Members of Parliament have the right to write letters to Ministers and receive replies from them —or rather, Members of Parliament used to have that right. Now, instead of a Member writing to a Minister, as he has always been able to, and receiving a ministerial response, the Minister simply acts as a postbox, passing on the Member's letter to an agency which may—or, it has to be said, very likely may not—reply.

The postbox function is not confined to next steps agencies. The Secretary of State for Health simply passes on letters about Members' constituents' health problems to a health authority or a trust. The Home Secretary passes on immigration cases, to which he used to reply, to immigration officers, so that hon. Members who accept that practice have to haggle demeaningly with civil servants rather than argue with Ministers, as is a Member of Parliament's right. The Foreign Secretary passes on immigration cases within his purview to something called an immigration correspondence unit, which was set up by Lord Howe when he was Foreign Secretary.

Instead of an individual's case ending up on a Minister's desk, with the Minister, whether or not he or she bothers to read the letter, having to sign it and so take responsibility for its contents, that individual and his or her poverty, needs or suffering are swept off the Minister's desk and out of the Minister's mind.

I do not know why we need so many Ministers to do so little work, for that evasion of parliamentary responsibility is being carried out by members of the largest Government this country has ever had—with 111 Ministers of various ranks. The biggest Government in this country's history are doing less and less work more inefficiently, and at higher and higher costs.

The gradual transfer of responsibilities to agencies and units may or may not be irreversible. I hope that it is not. But the evasion of ministerial responsibility and accountability to the House is not irreversible. I am determined to play what part I can in reversing the trend. One individual Back-Bench Member may not have power, but he can be a nuisance. I am determined to be a nuisance to the Government—not for the sake of protecting my own status, whatever that may be. That is of no importance whatever to me.

When Lord Howe was Foreign Secretary I argued with him when he tried to pass off my letters to his immigration correspondence unit, and he very sulkily wrote to me saying that he was ready to reply to me if I insisted on my status as a member of the shadow Cabinet. I wrote back saying that that was not my purpose at all. My purpose was to ensure that a Member of Parliament has the right of response from a Minister. For the sake of protecting the rights of my constituents, I intend to continue a campaign which may, I hope, have some success.

From time to time, it may be in my constituents' interests for me to contact the local office of some agency, as I have done in the past. That is for me, representing the constituents who have sent me here, to decide. But when I decide that it is in the interests of my constituents, who have sent me here to serve them and to protect their rights, to contact a Minister, I shall do so, and I shall expect a response from a Minister and from no one else. I have made it my firm practice to send back to Ministers any letters that I receive from agencies to which my constituents' cases have been sent, and to insist on a reply from the Minister to whom I have written. I am pleased to say that some Ministers are responding in a forthcoming manner.

The Home Secretary is now responding to cases that I send him—and not only to immigration cases. When last month his office wrote to tell me that a constituent's passport problem that I had sent him had been forwarded to the Passport Agency, I told the right hon. and learned Gentleman that it was him whom I wanted to hear from. Last week he wrote confirming that he would respond to me.

I also acknowledge the positive response from the Secretary of State for Employment with regard to the agencies hived off from her Department. She replies to me on these matters. So does the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs with regard to the immigration correspondence unit. When he recently sent one of my cases to the unit, I sent him his letter back and told him that I wanted to hear from him. He writes to me.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has gone much further and I give him full credit for acknowledging the rights of Members of Parliament. Last month, on behalf of the Chancellor, the Paymaster General wrote a letter to every Member of Parliament concerning Members' correspondence on subjects relating to the work of agencies. He said that letters will be forwarded to the agencies for reply "unless, of course, you"—that is, the Members of Parliament—

"indicate that you require a Ministerial reply."

He made it clear on behalf of Treasury Ministers that a Member requiring a ministerial reply would get one. He said the same about other agencies: that the letter will be referred "to the agency Chief Executives to reply direct, unless, of course, you indicate that you require a Ministerial reply."

That last is underlined in the letter. I give the right hon. Gentleman full credit for recognising that he has a responsibility to Members of the House.

In accordance with this policy, I received a letter in the past few days from the local Customs and Excise office in Salford, making it clear that while the official concerned is ready to reply to me about my cases, if I want a ministerial reply I wil get one. That is good. I give the Chancellor all credit for acknowledging his accountability to the House.

I have also written to the Prime Minister praising the Treasury's practice and asking him to instruct all Ministers to follow it. The Prime Minister customarily speedily acknowledges all letters that I send him, and replies as soon as he can. Curiously, in this case he has neither acknowledged nor replied to the letter that I sent him last month or the reminder that I sent him last week. I am aware of the Prime Minister's great courtesy in respect of ministerial correspondence and I am confident that he has not ignored my letter—that would be wholly uncharacteristic of him. I hope that his delay in replying is due to his careful and positive consideration of the proposal that I have made: that all Ministers in all Departments be instructed to respond to Members of Parliament in the same way as the Chancellor and Treasury Ministers do.

Such response is necessary because some Ministers are still determined to act as overpaid post boxes. By far the worst of these—I saw him during the Division a few moments ago—is the Secretary of State for Social Security. I have made it clear to him that I do not wish to hear from the agencies to which he forwards my letters against my wishes. I have made it equally clear to the principal culprit, Michael Bichard of the Benefits Agency, that I do not wish to hear from him. Yet both carry on—the one dodging his responsibility to Parliament, the other sending me letters against my will, which I then send back to the Secretary of State, as I have advised him I shall continue to do.

I do not know who is the more arrogant—a Secretary of State who regards himself as above Parliament, or the unaccountable head of a quango who insists on writing to a Member of Parliament when that Member does not wish to receive communications from him.

It so happens that Mr. Bichard is unbelievably inefficient. He is paid £79,000 a year to make decisions affecting the lives of the poorest in our community, and he makes a botch of his job—losing files, making mistakes all the time, taking months to reply and helping to plunge further into despair some of the most desperate and despondent members of society.

Any other Minister would sack Mr. Bichard; so would any private enterprise employer. But this Secretary of State regards him as a convenient receptacle, enabling him to avoid his ministerial responsibilities to Parliament, for which I am sorry to say he appears to have little or no regard. I hope that the Prime Minister will require that Secretary of State and all others like him in the Government to conduct themselves in the democratic manner that the Chancellor and other Ministers are accepting. It may be difficult and strange for the Secretary of State to conduct himself in that manner, but I hope that the Prime Minister will lay down standards for all Ministers.

No doubt from his lofty height the Secretary of State and those like him may regard my stand on this issue as petty and finicky. After all, what does it matter who sends a letter, he may ask. If he does not understand that, he does not understand parliamentary democracy. Democracy in this country will not be destroyed in one blow—our people are too attached to democracy to let that happen—but the erosion of democracy through the erosion of the rights of Parliament is taking place now and emerging in its place is a corporate state. Some 346 years ago Thomas Rainbrough said:

"The poorest he that is in England hath a life to live as the greatest he."

Parliament is more important than any Member of Parliament, whether he is a Back-Bench Member or a Minister. We all have our day and then pass on.

I have sat in the House for 23 years and, with the consent of my constituents, I hope to sit here for many more. I do not intend to sit here quietly and allow the rights of my constituents to be stolen away from them.

1.16 am

Dr. Tony Wright (Cannock and Burntwood): I pay tribute to my right hon. Friend the Member for Manchester, Gorton (Mr. Kaufman) for raising this important issue. He speaks for the whole House and it is appropriate that a junior Back Bencher should say thank you to a very senior if recently returned Back Bencher for raising issues that go to the heart of what the House does and what our system is about. I think that we all feel that what might be called arm's-length accountability is beginning to develop in the system. When we try to raise issues we are directed away from Parliament. My right hon. Friend spoke about that in relation to agencies, but it is happening on almost every front.

This week I tried to ask questions about constituents who have been denied hospital treatment, and I was referred to contracts being made by health authorities which have an arm's-length relationship with Ministers. That is happening across the whole spread of Government. Ministers appoint people to bodies that are no longer directly accountable to the House. When we seek to ask questions about the health service or schools we are directed somewhere else, and when we ask about public utilities we are directed to regulators and told that they are concerned with such matters from now on. New bodies are being created to carry out whole tracts of public administration but, increasingly, those bodies have no direct accountability.

By addressing the issue, my right hon. Friend is getting hold of a thread that is beginning to unpick the nature of our system. Something called ministerial responsibility is supposed to define what goes on here, but in so far as Ministers are becoming ever less responsible, the basis of the system is beginning to erode. It is significant that almost everyone who commentates on the British system points to the erosion of accountability of Ministers to Parliament. The system of ministerial responsibility is being transformed into a system of ministerial irresponsibility. That will soon be the way in which the text books will begin to describe what is happening to our system. This week senior figures in the civil service are beginning to talk about fragmentation and the dissolution of accountability in the system.

I pay tribute to my right hon. Friend for raising an issue which I hope we will pursue on other occasions. The issue certainly will not go away; it will become central to what Back Benchers will want to argue about their role here.

1.20 am

The Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service and Science (Mr. Robert Jackson): I welcome this opportunity to put clearly on the record the Government's position on ministerial accountability to Parliament in relation to the agencies that now constitute more than half the civil service.

The right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton (Mr. Kaufman) said that the rights of the House were being eroded. The point to make at the outset is that we are not talking of anything new in accountability to Parliament. The next steps programme, establishing executive agencies within government, was launched in 1988. In its first report on the next steps programme, which covered the very subject of this debate, the Treasury Select Committee said:

"We certainly do not advocate abandoning the principle of ministerial accountability, but modifying it so that the Chief Executive who has actually taken the decisions can explain them, in the first instance. In the last resort the Minister will bear the responsibility if things go badly wrong and Parliament will expect him or her to put things right, but the process of Parliamentary accountability should allow issues to be settled at lower levels, wherever possible"

That report reflects clear all-party support, both for the next steps programme and for this approach to handling its operational consequences. Moreover, the Leader of the Opposition, the right hon. and learned Member for Monklands, East (Mr. Smith), is on record talking to the Royal Institute of Public Administration in May 1991. He quoted approvingly from the 1968 Fulton report the doctrine that:

"To function effectively, large organisations, including government departments, need a structure in which units and individual members have authority that is clearly defined and responsibilities for which they can be held accountable. There should be recognised methods of assessing their success in achieving specified objectives."

The common ground in the debate is, of course, that parliamentary accountability remains fundamental. There is no question of the Government's washing their hands of that, as the right hon. Gentleman suggested. It is right that Members of Parliament should be able to question Ministers on Government policy. It is also right that Members should be able to follow up the cases of individual constituents. However, the thought behind the creation of agencies is the need to improve and to clarify the way in which that necessary accountability to Parliament is exercised. There is felt to be a need to get a clearer focus at the strategic level and an improvement of accountability at that level. The hon. Member for Cannock and Burntwood (Dr. Wright) is a former lecturer in politics and I think that he understands that point.

Ministers should be responsible to Parliament for the policies pursued by their Departments, for setting the targets and standards to be delivered, for allocating the resources and for ensuring that systems are in place to deliver the policies. The fact is, as I shall demonstrate, that at this level accountability to Parliament has been strengthened.

The trouble with the position taken by the right hon. Member is that he seems to think that accountability is simply a matter of being able to intervene in detailed and day-to-day management issues. That is a mistaken view and I am not breaking any new ground in asserting as much. To quote from a letter sent by Ministers to all Members of Parliament:

"As you know there are continuing calls to avoid excessive centralisation of Government and to stop the growth of the civil service. The way to prevent over-centralisation is to foster a sense of local responsibility and accountability. But all too often we erode the position of local people by referring matters to Whitehall without any compensating reduction in effort locally."

The letter goes on to address the specific issue raised today by the right hon. Member for Gorton—ministerial accountability to Parliament. It says:

"It is essential that we preserve entirely intact our Ministerial responsibility to Parliament. In particular, we fully accept that members will want to raise with Ministers any cases where they feel dissatisfied with the result of inquiries at local level or within independent agencies or which raise general issues of policy and perhaps serious complaints against local administration or conduct. But, confident that this is in the best interest of both Members and their constituents, we do ask you to make initial enquiries at local level in all appropriate cases."

That letter, which sets out the Government's position in the debate so well, was not sent by any of my right hon. Friends. It was a letter sent jointly by the then Chancellor of the Exchequer and the then Secretaries of State for Social Security and Employment in May 1977. In other words, it was sent by a Government of whom the right hon. Gentleman was a distinguished adornment as a Minister of State at the Department of Industry.

It is well-established practice, dating back to a Government of which the right hon. Gentleman was a member, that Members of Parliament should, in their constituents' interests, seek replies at the operational level. The creation of the so-called next steps agencies has clarified the responsibility for providing such replies by publishing details of chief executives' responsibilities in addition to the information that is available to Members of Parliament about local managers. But the accountability of those civil servants is still through Ministers to Parliament. It is still the case that, where an hon. Member is dissatisfied with the reply that he receives from the chief executive, he can raise that with the Minister. While the day-to-day operational responsibility is delegated to the chief executives, Ministers can override their decisions.

We have the necessary arrangements in place for Members of Parliament to pursue individual cases. But the challenge of the present arrangements is to the professionalism of Members of Parliament. As well as looking after individual constituents' cases—which must, of course, be a top priority—the challenge is to be able also to hold the Executive to account at the strategic level. The right hon. Gentleman knows from his time in government that those are the matters which occupy Ministers. The question is, is he ready, as a Back Bencher, to enter the debate at that level?

For all agencies, framework documents are published, setting out aims and objectives, delegations and the specific areas of responsibility of Ministers and chief executives. Nothing like that has been available in the past. Each year Ministers publish the key targets that agencies have to meet—a clear statement of what we want those organisations to achieve. Nothing like that has been published in the past.

Where agencies serve the public, they have published, or will publish, charter standards, giving each individual customer a clear statement of the standard of service that they can expect. Again, nothing like that was published in the past.

In many cases, except where, for understandable reasons, commercial confidentiality or security prevent it, corporate and business plans are published. Again, nothing like that has been published in the past.

We have had the annual review of next steps. We have not had that before. The agencies also publish annual reports and accounts on the same basis as commercial organisations, providing Parliament and the public with the ability to scrutinise performance and the use of public funds.

We have increased the professionalism of management within Government and I hope that I will not be misunderstood if I urge the right hon. Gentleman and the hon. Gentleman to redirect the campaign of which the right hon. Gentleman spoke to ensuring that the Mother of Parliaments makes use of all the new information about the operation——

PRAYERS

[MADAM SPEAKER in the Chair]

Parking (Speaker's Court)

9.34 am

Madam Speaker: I have an announcement to make on a matter of internal administration. The parking of cars in Speaker's Court is by permission of the Speaker. All the available spaces there are allocated. Despite repeated requests not to do so, which have continued now for a matter of months, the hon. Member for Cynon Valley (Mrs. Clwyd) continues to leave her car in the court, thereby taking someone else's parking space and, by her conduct, causing embarrassment to the servants of the House whose duty it is to enforce the regulations. This situation cannot be allowed to continue and I have given directions that if, after today, the hon. Member leaves her car in Speaker's Court, she will not be allowed to move the vehicle until she has given an undertaking that in future she will make use of the parking facilities available to her elsewhere.

Orders of the Day

Freedom and Responsibility of the Press Bill

Order for Second Reading read.

9.35 am

Mr. Clive Soley (Hammersmith): I beg to move, That the Bill be now read a Second time.

It is with pleasure that I seek to move the Second Reading of the Bill. I hope that the House will not make the mistake of rushing into hasty legislation as a result of the high-profile cases of recent months. Those cases are important, but the genesis of my Bill is events before those cases came to light. The case for my Bill lies in the rights of ordinary citizens to a decent, fair and accurate press. The House has to get right the standards, combined with the freedom, of the press. I hope that today's debate will be the beginning of that process.

The debate about press freedom has a long history. Frank Allaun, a former Member of Parliament, introduced a Bill many years ago. That was followed by Bills introduced by my hon. Friends the Members for Cynon Valley (Mrs. Clwyd), for Clydebank and Milngavie (Mr. Worthington) and for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell). Mr. John Browne, who did not retain his seat at the last election, introduced a privacy Bill. All those Bills had an impact.

There have also been two royal commissions—in 1949 and 1977. We have had the first and second Calcutt reports. We had the Press Commission from 1953 to 1991 and the Press Complaints Commission since 1991. Much more recently, I set up my own committee as part of my legislative process, if I can describe it in that way. I thank the many people who were involved in supporting the taking part in the proceedings of the committee and to the hon. Member for Staffordshire, South (Mr. Cormack), who chaired it throughout in his usual able way.

The committee undertook an important process. The results of its deliberations have been fully transcribed and are now available. They make useful and informative reading on the background to the Bill. I suggest that it is helpful to hold such hearings before a Bill begins its Committee stage, or in Committee. I have always been a great supporter of the welcome reform of the special Bill procedure introduced by Norman St. John-Stevas when he was a Member of Parliament.

When a private Member holds hearings before introducing his Bill he takes three weeks out of his own time. Unless we reformed other procedures of the House, it would be a high-risk business to do it through the normal system offered by the House. That is why I did it in the way that I chose. However, it puts an enormous burden on the resources and work load of the Member involved. It is difficult enough to think of the right questions to ask witnesses who appear before a Committee. But when one is worrying whether the next witness will appear, it puts a different meaning on the words "stress of the work load". One starts to wonder where one's priorities are—delivering the people or asking the questions. It is a good system and I commend it, but we ought to make it possible within the structure of the House, without risking the loss of time that it implies, especially for a private Member.

[Mr. Clive Soley]

A number of people have asked me why I have introduced the Bill, and what was my interest in the press, as I have not been involved with it or been a journalist. I have a long history of interest in the subject—going back 10 or 15 years—which came about simply because I was concerned about the erosion of press freedom during the past 10 to 20 years. The House has placed many Acts on the statute book—sometimes unthinkingly—that have had a profound and detrimental effect on press freedom. Yet, at the same time, journalistic standards have collapsed in some parts of the press, although not all, and we now have a serious problem.

Mr. Michael Stern (Bristol, North-West): The hon. Gentleman and I were present yesterday at a meeting of the Chartered Institute of Journalists. Does he agree that it is at least commendable that that is one body which not only has a charter of conduct for its members but enforces it?

Mr. Soley: The National Union of Journalists also has a charter, and its ethics council gave evidence to my committee and made the important point that any member of the public can take up a complaint, which can be enforced by disciplinary procedures, against a member of the NUJ. The problem is that those codes of practice are not well known, and hardly anyone either inside or outside the House is aware of them.

May I refer Members to the debate that I initiated when I was fortunate enough to win the ballot on private Members' motions on 27 November 1987 and introduced a similar Bill? Many of the issues of which I gave examples then still trouble me today.

I must make it clear—as I have done several times in the media—that this is not a privacy Bill; nor does it involve any pre-publication censorship. Underlying our debates on the subject is the idea that we should steer clear of legislation that involves such censorship. There is a strong case for putting something right after one gets it wrong, but if one wants to prevent the publication of something, one needs to be clear that, in so doing, one is not preventing good investigative journalism. Frequently we have not dealt with that issue, and although other aspects of the laws that we have passed have been well-intentioned, they have had that side effect.

Mr. Michael Fabricant (Mid-Staffordshire): Does the hon. Gentleman not accept that, while many hon. Members and people outside say that it is so difficult to draft legislation to decide what is in the public interest and what is invasion of privacy, nations such as Holland, Germany and the United States, among others, all have privacy legislation? If they can draft it, why cannot we?

Mr. Soley: I shall come to that in more detail later, but, briefly, the critical difference between Britain and the countries that the hon. Gentleman has named is that they all have a press freedom law. That is an important issue, and I shall deal with it.

It is often not mentioned that the underlying agenda and thrust of my Bill is designed to raise standards of journalism. The problem is not that there are insufficient laws affecting journalists—in many respects there are too many—but that the standards and ethical codes of some editors and journalists are too low and we must tackle that. People should view my Bill through the eyes of someone who is trying to raise standards. One cannot legislate automatically to raise standards and tell people that, by law, they must behave better. However, one can construct a framework of law that encourages and protects good behaviour. That is an important part of my Bill and it is the agenda for the House on any law. We are always looking for a structure and framework that seeks to achieve the aims of society.

As I have made clear, this is not a privacy Bill, because such legislation has certain problems. First, such a measure would largely, although not entirely, protect the rich and powerful. I have had some involvement in the debate that has been raging for the past few months, and hon. Members must be aware that it has centred on public figures with some power, wealth and influence. Although I would strongly argue that such people have a right to privacy, the question is whether we should pass a law simply to deal with the problems of the rich and powerful. If anything, the balance needs to be weighted slightly the other way.

As public figures, Members of Parliament expect and should get more scrutiny than ordinary people, such as non-Members of Parliament and people in less powerful and influential positions. Although we have rights to privacy, we must expect some intrusions. If we passed a Bill to protect people's privacy at this time, no matter what the intention, it would be seen as a measure to protect the rich and powerful

Mr. Andrew Hargreaves (Birmingham, Hall Green): While I am sure that my hon. Friends on the Conservative side would perhaps sympathise with the hon. Gentleman's stated intention of raising standards for the press, rather than with the formal title of the Bill, the concept that you raised——

Madam Deputy Speaker (Dame Janet Fookes): Order. I remind the hon. Member that he is addressing me.

Mr. Hargreaves: I apologise, Madam Deputy Speaker. The concept that a privacy Bill would only protect the rich and famous does not wash. It would also protect other people—for example, modest and unknown people who have been involved in some calamity and then suffer the intrusion of having cameras stuffed under their noses.

Mr. Soley: I well understand that, but the underlying aim of my Bill is to raise standards. In the present climate, a privacy Bill, without counterbalancing freedoms, would be seen as a measure to protect the rich and the powerful. The hon. Gentleman is right to say that such a Bill would protect other people, but that has not been the most frequent complaint from ordinary people who complain to the Press Complaints Commission or to me.

Mr. Joseph Ashton (Bassetlaw): My hon. Friend has been busy in recent weeks, and we have obviously not been able to see him at the National Heritage Select Committee's sittings into intrusions on privacy. Perhaps the press has given massive publicity to the problems of the royal family, and Mr. Kelvin MacKenzie got enormous publicity last week with his list of Members of Parliament. However, there are members of the Select Committee in the Chamber today who can tell my hon. Friend that we have given the maximum emphasis to the problems of rape victims and people who have been harassed after a bereavement, such as widows of members of the IRA—people who have been thrust into the limelight through no fault of their own and have suffered great distress. That is the reason why we need a privacy Bill—not to protect the rich and famous who attract the attention of the newspapers.

Mr. Soley: My hon. Friend is absolutely right.

The other problem is that if we introduced privacy legislation in Britain, there would be no counterbalancing press freedom or freedom of information Act. That is profoundly important.

Some people would say that we can write protections for the press into the small print of a privacy Bill, but there are a number of problems with that. First, one would be creating a Bill designed with let-out clauses for the press, which would create problems in its own right. Secondly, we need a measure that the courts can adjudicate on, that could act as a balance between the rights and needs for freedom of the press and the rights of individuals.

Let us take the matter one stage further. The problem with many of the privacy legislation proposals is that they would not have prevented the publication of material in recent high-profile cases. For example, the proposal on physical intrusion in the summary of recommendations in Sir David Calcutt's report, which was defined, among other things, as was subject to a let-out clause that would have allowed publication of the tapes of the right hon. and learned Member for Putney (Mr. Mellor) and the photographs of the Duchess of York. Paragraph 2 of Sir David's summary includes subsections (b) and (c), which provide two let-out clauses in the public interest—they are exclusion clauses.

We are in danger of talking ourselves into a privacy law that would not prevent the problems posed by the recent high-profile cases, which may or may not address the needs of "small" people, about whom my hon. Friend the Member for Bassetlaw (Mr. Ashton) is concerned and which would not guarantee press freedom. I should be happy to consider a privacy Bill if it were counterbalanced by a press freedom or freedom of information Act.

Mr. Patrick Cormack (Statffordshire, South): Surely the nub of the matter is deciding what is in the public interest and what is of interest to the public. The two things are not the same.

Mr. Soley: The hon. Gentleman is absolutely right; I have made that point on a number of occasions.

Most complaints about the press relate to accuracy. The most recent report of the Press Complaints Commission that I have studied reveals that 66 per cent. of complaints were about that. The interesting thing about the cases that have been forwarded to me is that harassment follows an inaccurate story and is aggravated by that inaccuracy.

A classic example of that is the case of Linda Townley, who gave profoundly effective evidence to my committee, and who received a lot of national coverage. She was the maid at the centre of the story about Princess Anne's letters. The story suggested that she was the thief of those letters. If she had stolen them, one did not need to be too bright a journalist to work out that she knew what was in them and, better still, where they were. The story therefore became doubly attractive because people wanted to get hold of those letters.

The harassment that Linda Townley suffered was largely caused by that inaccurate story. She believes that the problem is that, if one cannot go for libel, which is a heavy weapon to use, one has to put up with the inaccuracies. Mona Shourjabi also put that argument very effectively recently. That is why such people—and there are many—who have suffered from intrusion and harassment have said no to a privacy law and no to Sir David Calcutt's recommendations, but yes to my Bill.

Mr. Tam Dalyell (Linlithgow): I am exceedingly bothered by my hon. Friend's Bill. How does he define accuracy? One person's perception of fact may be very different from that of another. Some of us consider his Bill a lucrative field for lawyers and a nightmare for editors.

Mr. Soley: My hon. Friend has asked a question which was, until recently, put to me many times, until people realised that the answer is abundantly clear. I shall come to that issue later.

Another alternative to my Bill is anti-bugging legislation. I should certainly vote for such legislation, but it would not stop the publication of the Camillagate tapes because the transcript was published overseas—by chance, of course, in a Murdoch newspaper—and somehow or other it found its way into similar papers here.

If we had an anti-bugging law, one might be able to stop the publication of a transcript in this country, but once that transcript was published overseas—whether the bugging was done here or somewhere else would be irrelevant—we would then have to have a law to say that we could not publish it here. I do not need to remind the Government of the problems created by "Spycatcher". The Government fell into that exact trap when they chased the publishers all around the world trying to stop the publication of that book in Britain when it had been published in every other country. One cannot sensibly go down that road.

I accept that we should endeavour to make bugging difficult or impossible, but the new offence on bugging recommended in the Calcutt report would not have stopped the bugging of the telephone in the case of the right hon. and learned Member for Putney when that telephone was in someone else's flat. It would not stop papers being able to use the transcript of those telephone conversations, because they could claim the public interest defence. Although I am fully in favour of stopping bugging, legislation is not the answer, because overseas publication of transcripts presents a problem.

I was strongly against the use of the photographs of the Duchess of York. It was not necessary to use them to make the point that dishonest statements were being made about relationships in the royal family. Obviously, the nature of those statements and consequences for our constitution, which is somewhat unusual, but has nevertheless been very successful. I do not doubt that those photographs were used to increase circulation.

It may be fine to bring in a law to restrict the use of photographs taken on people's private property, but how does one stop the publication of photographs when a television crew goes to the door of any hon. Member, asks for a comment and that person closes the door with the words, "No comment"? The television company must get the permission of that hon. Member before using those photographs, but are we suggesting that they should be unable to use photographs of that hon. Member coming out of his front door? There are all sorts of traps.

I was as offended as anyone else by the use of some recent photographs, but the most effective legislation would be an effective code that is respected and honoured by journalists and editors. If we had that, we would not need to trouble the House with specific legislation. What to do about the failure of self-regulation is the problem.

Mr. Ashton: Surely it is possible to have a law to prohibit the buying, selling and publishing of such material. No one can stop pictures being taken or a telephone being bugged, but it is the buying, selling and publishing of such material without permission that is the problem. Child pornography is published abroad, but it is not published here because we are allowed to have separate laws.

Mr. Soley: I understand that, and I am not saying that it would be impossible to draft the necessary legislation, but we would be faced with the difficulty of trying to restrict the publication of photographs, tapes or whatever that were published in other countries. Such material is fundamentally different from child pornography because of its political slant—it may relate to the royal family and therefore have constitutional implications. It is not impossible to get round the problem, but it would be profoundly difficult to do it in a way that does not impinge on genuine investigative journalism.

I believe that there is a better case for a tort of harassment, but, again, I emphasise that that must be balanced by legislation guaranteeing press freedom. That is the difficulty we face.

I shall now outline briefly the scope of my Bill. I will take further interventions, but I should be grateful if hon. Members were brief, because I know that many wish to speak. Clause 1 sets up the Independent Press Authority which has two duties: to enforce accuracy and to promote press freedom. The duties and powers of that authority are spelt out in clause 2. It aims to promote high standards, the lack of which is the underlying problem and is top of my agenda. We cannot legislate simply for bad newspapers; we must legislate for all, so that the balance is right.

It is important to stress that many of my proposals would protect good journalists. A photographer came to see me recently and told me that he did not like climbing over people's fences to get photographs, but he admitted, "Frankly, if I don't, I don't get the job." That is the problem. Good journalists and photographers need to be protected against the practices of some editors and others, who are anxious for material at any price.

Clause 2 promotes press freedom. I have already spoken about a possible amendment to it, and, in this regard, I have sought the help of the Government.

My Bill provides a good structure for the way forward. A key element that should be considered for inclusion is a legal defence of press freedom. That would make it easier for the House to enact an anti-bugging law, a law forbidding the photography of private property, and a privacy law. Were such a provision included, the cases in France, Germany and the United States would become more meaningful.

It would be easier for people such as myself to vote for such measures if the law contained a provision on press freedom that could be cited in court. If the Government could come up with something like that, they would profoundly help the cause of press freedom. That would allow the House to legislate on matters such as those suggested by my hon. Friend the Member for Bassetlaw (Mr. Ashton) on privacy, bugging and photography.

Mr. Paul Channon (Southend, West): I agree with much of what the hon. Gentleman has said. However, will he explain in a little more detail what the law on press freedom will actually say? What freedoms will be enshrined in it that do not presently exist?

Mr. Soley: The simple route would be to use something similar to article 10 of the European convention on human rights, which was drafted by the British—as were so many other parts of the law around the world—in 1945. I looked to see whether we could include article 10 in the Bill: I do not think that we can merely lift it and place it in the Bill.

There is another argument, about whether we should incorporate all European human rights legislation into British law. There would be problems in doing so, but it would not be beyond the wit of lawyers to include in the Bill a clause similar to article 10. If that could be done, it would provide a good way forward.

As a halfway measure, I have suggested tightening up my clause so that it reads:

"and to promote the fundamental freedom of the press to hold opinions and to receive and impart information and ideas."

That section would replace the words "press freedom" in clause 2(b). That would place a much stronger duty on the organisation to promote press freedom, not just argue for it, which is important. However, that would not be as good as having a legal defence of press freedom.

Mr. Edward Garnier (Harborough): I understand the hon. Gentleman's arguments about introducing into the Bill, if possible, something on the lines of article 10 of the European convention. However, if he is prepared to do that, would he be prepared to introduce into the Bill article 8, which states that everyone has the right to respect in his private and family life, his home and his correspondence?

Mr. Soley: The hon. Gentleman has missed much of my argument—that was precisely what I was saying. If there were a press freedom law, people such as me would not have a problem with privacy law. My problem—and that of many hon. Members—concerns introducing privacy laws without the counterbalance of legislation on press freedom and freedom of information. It is fine by me if the hon. Gentleman wants to introduce such laws through articles 8 and 10 of the European convention on human rights, but we cannot have one set of laws without the other, particularly if we introduce privacy laws first with no provision for press freedom. Therefore, the hon. Gentleman is right, but he must remember that that is precisely what I have just said at some length.

Clause 2 also relates to monopoly. I do not want to spend too much time on that subject, but the monopolistic structure of the press—not just its ownership, but its distribution—poses a problem. Circulation wars rage between competing groups. When the Daily Mirror published the photographs of the Duchess of York, The Sun suddenly decided that, having sat on the tape of Diana and not used it for about two years for "a principled reason", that reason no longer applied, mainly because the sales of the Daily Mirror had risen by 100,000. The problem with such battles—they also pose problems for the Press Complaints Commission—is that circulation wars take precedence over the ethics of journalism.

The Bill contains a code of conduct, which is profoundly important. A code of conduct in a high-status, lay-dominated organisation of the sort that the Bill sets up would have more effect than the present one, which is unbelievable. The status of that organisation is important. Examples showing how well it can work can be found in the electronic media.

Clause 2(1)(g) and (h) refer to Parliament's influence. We should debate the subject more frequently in the House. Press freedom is too important to be debated only occasionally.

Clause 3 relates to the power to enforce accuracy, and marks the basis of my assumptions. If people understood my assumptions, many of their arguments would fade away. One of my great disappointments is that editors will not say what I am about to say: citizens have a right—I mean a right—to expect their news to be reported accurately.

There is no such thing as inaccurate news; there is only disinformation. If that were disseminated by Pravda, we should rightly be furious—and we were. If such action is taken by our papers, we should be equally furious. Inaccuracy is a contradiction of press freedom; it is the other side of the coin of press freedom. If one makes that assumption, many of the other arguments fade into irrelevance.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce (Gordon): Does not the hon. Gentleman accept that some of the disputes within the press—both regional and national—over the past few years have undermined the drive towards accuracy by forcing experienced journalists out of jobs in favour of cheap, inefficient and untrained journalists, in order to bring down costs and, with them, standards?

Mr. Soley: Much of what the hon. Gentleman says is contained within the duties of the new Independent Press Authority. That organisation has a duty to look at the training and ethics of journalism. Another problem is that there are relatively few schools of journalism in Britain, and within them the standards and teaching of ethics is minimal. I am not saying that a wonderful ethics code exists that can always be applied, but any journalist should always ask himself questions about the ethics of what he is doing.

Journalism is one of the trades where one does not need to be trained in a specific way of behaviour, but must keep asking oneself, "Am I invading someone's privacy, am I doing my job properly and for a good reason, or merely to sell papers?"

Mr. Peter Bottomley (Eltham): I think that the House will want to pay tribute to the hon. Gentleman for the work that he has done in preparation for his speech. Surely, freedom is the right to be wrong. If something that I say turns out to be wrong, I should correct it, but I should not be required to prove everything that I say before I make a contribution. In that context, the press have a far harder job than Members of Parliament.

Mr. Soley: One reason that I have drafted the Bill as tightly as I have—many legal experts agree that it is tightly drafted—is that I deliberately wanted to stress that we should not comment on opinion. I have proposed dropping the section on impartiality, as I see that it would cause difficulties, such as those currently faced by the BBC and ITV. That subject is not contained in the Bill, only in the long title which is set down earlier.

One can still hold an opinion and express it, but if one makes a factual inaccuracy, one must set it right. The Bill does not involve pre-publication censorship. One can publish whatever one likes, but if one gets it wrong, one has to put it right. People get things wrong for many reasons, often well-intentioned reasons.

Mr. Bob Cryer (Bradford, South): My hon. Friend has been saying that journalists should have standards, should not intrude and should adopt a decent moral code. The problem is that perfectly decent journalists who want to do good work have to take jobs with rotten employers. If a journalist is told that he has to get the news story and find dirt on the Labour party—as is frequently the case—the journalist either has to maintain his high standards and not be employed or do the dirty work. How will my hon. Friend's Bill provide a safeguard so that journalists can maintain the decent standards that they were taught during their training?

Mr. Soley: The organisation in my Bill has a duty to report on, research and recommend on journalistic standards, including training, ethics and the practices of the employers, including the editor. There is no reason why that should not be done. However, the organisation should not enforce, which is why I have not given it the power to do so. The Bill contains only one statutory power: to correct inaccuracy. That is important as standards can be raised in other ways.

My hon. Friend's intervention was helpful in another respect. I recently saw a press release from News International stating that The Sun and others were now going to enforce the Press Complaints Commission code. Any employee who breached the code would be fired. I am looking forward to Kelvin MacKenzie giving himself notice.

Mr. Stuart Randall (Kingston upon Hull, West): I ask my hon. Friend to extend his arguments with regard to the intervention from the hon. Member for Eltham (Mr. Bottomley). The hon. Member said that there should be a freedom to be wrong, and then my hon. Friend the Member for Hammersmith (Mr. Soley) went on about accuracy, with which I agree completely. The other consequence of this—it is an argument much used by the hon. Member for Eltham—is the harm it creates. Surely it cannot be right for journalists to be free to create harm.

Mr. Soley: My hon. Friend puts the point very powerfully. That point has been in my mind recently, but I had not yet made it, so I am grateful to him.

Mr. Peter Mandelson (Hartlepool): My hon. Friend the Member for Kingston upon Hull, West (Mr. Randall) argued that there is a straightforward difference between factual information on the one hand and information on the other. Surely, there is a third category—interpretation. In the case of the marriage of the Prince and Princess of Wales, journalists were interpreting the information they had, and then the heavens opened and they were damned for doing so. It then turned out that they were accurate.

Mr. Soley: I do not think that that is the problem which the hon. Member for Eltham fears. I have made it clear that if one is printing something which one believes to be accurate at the time but which turns out to be inaccurate because someone else has been lying, covering up, or whatever, one corrects it at the time it comes out. If it is the other way round—if one publishes something which one believes to be accurate—that is all one needs to do.

In other words, if a paper wants to print a story in which I say something that they think is daft, wrong or dishonest but is newsworthy, it does so. It is for me to take the flak if I am wrong. It is the same thing to give me that flak if I got it wrong. I shall come back to the royal family in due course because it is an important point.

Let me put it this way. I use the example of a criminal who is managing to fool a journalist who believes, rightly, that the person is indulging in criminal behaviour. Let us say that the journalist must correct an inaccuracy which later turns out to be right—perhaps when the criminal goes to court, the case is found to be proved. Are we really saying that that criminals should be convicted on inaccuracies? On the other hand, if a newspaper turns out to be accurate at the end of the road, is not that part of the evidence?

The job of the newspaper is to report accurately what it judges to be news. If the news turns out to be inaccurate for reasons other than the newspaper's reporting, that is when the newspaper corrects it. That is when newspaper says, in great big headlines: "We told you so. We told you that Clive Soley was doing a cover-up". That is how it should work, and it is how it works in other democracies. There is no problem with it.

If I may make a bit more progress on this, I was about to move on to clause 4—the power of enforcement. Under clause 4, a press complaints adviser is appointed. A press complaints adviser is important because of some of the failures of the present Press Complaints Commission. Complaints are taken only in writing; there are no oral hearings. Some of the complaints that I have heard are that the way in which the Press Complaints Commission reformulates complaints does not cover the points which the complainants were making. There are no oral hearings in which the complainants can put their views. In other words, there is no one to help the complainants, although that help is clearly important.

The Bill contains a more flexible time span than exists under the present code of the Press Complaints Commission. The time limit is one month, although that can be extended in certain circumstances. In the Bill, I also rule out trivial and vexatious complaints. One of the arguments used earlier in the debate is that it will be inundated with letters from the green ink brigade. Frankly, Members of Parliament are inundated from time to time by those letters. Most of us are capable of dealing with them without too much trouble. If we can deal with them, I do not see why another body cannot deal with it. The Bill provides the body with the ability to exclude vexatious and trivial complaints. Once again, it is not a problem. I have said that the code of conduct is important.

Clause 5 deals with adjudication. The press complaints adviser will hear both sides of the argument. Clause 6 sets out the powers of the adviser, which may also be a conciliatory role. The House should remember that most complaints will be resolved between the editor and the complainant, as happens now. Most complaints continue in that way. A minority of complaints in which there is a major problem go on. In such cases, there should be, and often will be, a rate agreed by conciliation. Cases will only need to go to the much further extent, which I shall come to in a moment, in other circumstances.

There is only one schedule in the Bill. Paragraph 1 appoints the Independent Press Authority. Many people have told me that article 1 troubles them. My hon. Friend the Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell) is worried about it. Editors are worried about it; they panicked like mad. My Bill provides that the Home Secretary will make the appointments. I know that there is some anxiety about that.

Such a system of appointment has worked well for the regulated electronic media, television and radio, for 40, 50 or 60 years. No one goes around the world saying that ITV, the BBC and so on are not free, are grossly inaccurate, do not have a decent code of behaviour and do not do good investigative journalism. The electronic media are regulated, and they perform well. The system in the Bill is the same.

Having said that, I have proposed two amendments which might be worth while. I should like hon. Members to address the issue if they feel strongly about it. In Calcutt's first report, he suggested—Louis Blom-Cooper and others have suggested it as well—that an appointments commission be set up by the Secretary of State, which would then appoint the members. One could say that it is at arm's length. I have suggested a slightly more radical approach, which could incorporate that proposal. I commend it to the House, and I should welcome views on it.

There is a strong case for saying that the relevant Select Committee—probably the Select Committee on National Heritage—should have the power to veto appointments. That is not only an additional safeguard, but a traditional British method of the legislature checking the Executive. It also gives more power to the Select Committee and Back Benchers. I have always argued—indeed, many hon. Members on both sides of the House have also argued—that that is something which we need to do in the House, because in some respects Back Benchers have lost the powers they had in the 19th century. It is an interesting way forward. I should welcome comments on that proposed amendment.

I want to turn to some of the arguments that have been used against the Bill. Let me deal first with the argument raised in an intervention by my hon. Friend the Member for Linlithgow. His argument is the one that was used constantly during the first few weeks of my campaign on the matter by the editors all round the country. The editors then dropped the argument. They said that one cannot define accuracy: one man's accuracy is another man's opinion. One cannot adjudicate on the matter.

I picked up the Press Complaints Commission's code, which was drawn up by the editors. Clause 1 relates to accuracy. One should notice the importance and the status of it: "You will report accurately. You will put it right if you get it wrong." Who adjudicates on that? The Press Complaints Commission adjudicates on it. The argument is not and never has been that one cannot have accuracy or adjudicate on it.

The argument—this is why the editors dropped their opposition—is who should adjudicate. The editors want to be the judge and jury in their own cases. I am saying, as one who is strongly in favour of regulated bodies, that it is a profound mistake to sit in judgment on oneself, because even if one gets it right, one will not be believed. That is the problem, and that is why it is so powerful.

Mr. David Harris (St. Ives): I have great sympathy for what the hon. Gentleman is saying. In approaching the whole issue, he seems to see the whole question of news reporting in black and white terms. The hon. Member for Hartlepool (Mr. Mandelson) was right to say that there is a grey area, especially with regard to interpretation. I spent 19 years in the parliamentary Press Gallery and in the Lobby of the House. As we all know, that is an area in political journalism where one deals with facts. In the Lobby, one is sometimes dealing with something else which cannot be proved, whether it relates to facts or not. That matter will provide great difficulties, especially on the point of correction.

Mr. Soley: Someone muttered that it was a rumour. I shall answer in a different way. The BBC and ITV do not have that problem, but their investigative journalism is better than that of the press. Secondly, newspaper editors say that it can be done under the PCC code, but the hon. Gentleman says that it can not. He is really saying, as are the editors, "We want to judge it, please. Let us judge ourselves." It is as if the House said, "We shall have elections but MPs will elect themselves"—[Interruption.] I should not give the House ideas; it could be dangerous.

Mr. Bruce Grocott (The Wrekin): As my hon. Friend has rightly said, newspaper editors and most journalists strongly oppose self-regulation for everyone else. When self-regulation is mentioned in respect of any other area of our national life, journalists, and newspaper editors in particular, are rightly derisory about it. They are in favour of independent regulation for others and opposed to it for themselves.

Mr. Soley: My hon. Friend is right. The point was powerfully made in my committee. I read a powerful editorial in The Guardian—it often has good editorials—which said that self-regulation in the City had not worked and needed to be independent. Two weeks later, it came out against my form of regulation for the press. That suggests that people have not fully thought through the arguments.

The next argument, which I am pleased to say is not much used now, is that people do not have a right to accuracy. One or two editors told me that, and they were really saying that it did not matter if they got it wrong. The citizen has a right to expect his news to be accurate. The argument against that, more than any other, ignores the damage caused to people's lives. I have many cases of people who were deeply hurt and are fearful of the press. That is sad news for journalism, and I do not get any joy from saying it.

The next argument is that the Press Complaints Commission is all right, is doing a good job, and should be left alone. However, it has a credibility problem. Just about everyone—including the Government, to judge from the statement by the Secretary of State, and Sir David Calcutt—agrees with me on that. It has only reluctantly accepted a lay majority, but I am sorry to say that that majority will not be of the people who are necessary to adjudicate. I am also worried about so many editors being on that board. I am in favour of working journalists being on such a body, and for my committee I suggest working journalists. I have no objections to one or two editors serving on it, but there are far too many editors and senior executives from the newspaper industry on the PCC.

The PCC has been far too reluctant to take third-party complaints, although it has told me that it is now willing to take them more openly, and that is a move in the right direction. The concept of the third-party complaint is interesting, because it contradicts my belief in the rights of the citizen.

I shall give the example of Mr. and Mrs. McKeever from Northern Ireland. I shall endeavour to make the Bill cover Northern Ireland, because two Northern Ireland cases were used in committee. Mr. and Mrs. McKeever are a classic example of the citizen's rights. They read in a tabloid newspaper that there was to be a cure within one year for the form of muscular dystrophy that their son had. Their son would be in a wheelchair by the age of 10 or 11 and probably dead in his early 20s.

I have not gone into the background of how the story was written, but I guarantee that it was not malicious. I am sure that it was well intentioned, but it was wrong. The professor concerned strongly objected to the use of the story, saying that it was right in other newspapers. The McKeevers read the story and believed it, and for three days their hopes were dramatically raised. That is an example of what I have said about people being hurt by the right to be wrong. Those people believed that their son would be saved, but three days later their hopes were dashed.

Hon. Members who served on my committee will remember the depth of feeling of those two people. All they wanted was for the newspapers to get it right, and that is what many other people want. I am sure that the story was a genuine mistake, and the problem may have arisen because of sloppy journalism or sloppy sub-editing. The story had good intentions, but it was wrong, and that had a profound and dramatic effect on those people. That is why I say that the citizen has a right to expect news to be accurately reported.

Mr. Patrick Thompson (Norwich, North): The House has some difficulty with the concept of the word "accuracy", and there is plainly some disagreement about how much it can be applied. Does the hon. Gentleman agree that the words "truth" and "untruth" should be used a little more in the debate?

Mr. Soley: I have no objection to that, but for a number of reasons the word "accuracy" is better. The press accepts that it can be achieved, and another example of accuracy is to be found with the Advertising Standards Authority. Hon. Members with long memories will recall that, when that authority was given power to go to court to enforce accuracy, the arguments that are now used by the press were used then. It was said, "You can't get accuracy in an advert. What about the jokey ones? It is opinion." However, there have been no problems, and only three cases have gone to court for final adjudication. That would have applied under the Bill, and such a provision also protects editors. The important issue is that such cases are in a minority, and the back-up of natural justice is there if it is needed. It has been done before, it is proven and it works. Let us do it for the sake of the people that I have described.

[Mr. Soley]

I have described other problems with the PCC. It rephrases complaints, interviews are not oral and it is dominated by the impact of the circulation war, which means that, when they are adjudicating, editors and others have one eye on circulation and the other on the ethnics of journalism, and the latter tends to lose out over the former. A powerful point emerged in a recent example. The press reported that there were problems in the marriage of Prince Charles and Princess Diana. My hon. Friend the Member for Hartlepool (Mr. Mandelson) spoke about that. People were asking, how did the press know that the stories were true? The press had no problem in reporting the story and, as I have said from the beginning, there was a legitimate case for reporting it, because it does have an impact on the constitution.

There were many arguments about the way in which that story was reported, but there is no doubt that there was a case for reporting it. It emerged that a couple of editors and journalists were in the know because they were being taken into the confidence of the two members of the royal family who were involved. The interesting point about the case is that the editors, or one of them, told Lord McGregor of Durris, the chairman of the Press Complaints Commission, who made a great burst of it, holding forth rather along the lines of my hon. Friend the Member for Hartlepool and saying, "Ah well, the press is vindicated."

What happened, of course, is that not only did the truth come out in the way that I have described in response to an intervention, but Lord McGregor joined the cover-up. That troubles me deeply, and it should trouble everyone. I can understand an editor or a journalist protecting his sources, but it is incorrect for the chairman of the PCC, the body in which we are supposed to have confidence and which is there to protect the public, to join in the cover-up and say, "We will not tell you, either."

There has been much nonsense from The Sun and other newspapers which say, "We are here to tell you the truth." They are covering up, and they are joined by the Press Complaints Commission. That is unacceptable. There was a so-called attack on the Establishment by The Sun, but that newspaper is involved in nonsense, and to pretend that it is attacking the Establishment is, I am afraid, a dream in the mind of Kelvin MacKenzie.

The PCC adjudicates on a tiny percentage, about 3 per cent., of all cases that come before it. I do not want to attach too much weight to that, although it is important. I do not think that many complaints go to the PCC anyway, because until recently no one knew that it existed.

Mr. Ashton: It is a waste of time.

Mr. Soley: That is one of the sad features.

Others say that the recommendations of the Calcutt report and privacy would be better. I have dealt with privacy, and I shall deal now with the problems that I find with the Calcutt report. There are profound dangers. If there is a code of conduct that provides that heavy fines can be imposed for any breach, it will act on good journalists as the law of libel acts on them now. The good journalist is looking over his shoulder at the law of libel. If there is a code of conduct with 40 or 60 clauses, that journalist will be worried about the imposition of heavy fines as a result of each and every provision. That would be a profoundly dangerous mistake. That makes the case for focusing on one statutory power that bears on accuracy and to raise standards by that method.

Paragraph 7.6 of the Calcutt report deals with the new concept of physical intrusion. The paragraph deals with why only journalists should be caught by the provision, not editors. The second sentence of the paragraph reads:

> "The Privacy Committee considered this point . . . but concluded that the case had yet to be made for an additional offence of publication."

The following words should trouble hon. Members:

> "Further, any editor or proprietor could, if circumstances warranted it, be charged as an accessory or with conspiracy."

If we put editors in the dock on conspiracy and other such charges when there may be a real debate about press freedom, we shall set out on a dangerous road. It is far better to have a code that is respected. If we have a code with sufficient body behind it to ensure that it is respected and has status—it has worked with the electronic media without inhibiting their freedoms—we shall embark on a much safer road. That is the proven way forward.

Mr. Gary Streeter (Plymouth, Sutton): The hon. Gentleman will be aware of my strong agreement with much of what he has said. I recognise the work that he has done on this important issue. If we are talking about a code that will be respected and his proposals being respected, does he accept that they will be respected by the best journalists, of whom we have many? There will always be some journalists, however, and some newspapers, that will say, "We are only in business to sell newspapers. We are not bothered about standards or the law. We shall drive a coach and horses through anything."

Mr. Soley: I understand that argument. The same argument applies, however, to many minor radio stations, most of which achieve high standards. They do so because there is an independent regulatory body. Those stations are involved also in a circulation battle, but they stay within their code most of the time. Against that background, I am reasonably optimistic. If the Bill were amended on the basis of press freedom, and if the hon. Gentleman and others then discovered that my system did not work, we could introduce legislation of the sort that other hon. Members wish to see on the statute book. That is the way forward. I suggest that that approach meets the anxieties that have been expressed.

Some say that statutory regulation is dangerous. I have dealt with the argument that accuracy is the other side, as it were, of press freedom. I have dealt also with the argument that that applies already to the BBC and ITV.

It is important to understand that the press is already heavily regulated. Those who argue against press regulation are ignoring the fact that it is the subject of regulations. My argument—this may seem strange to some—is that the press is over-regulated. But it is over-regulated in the wrong way. The present regulations prevent good investigative journalism, but do nothing to stop the abuses that we have all been worried about. Surely that is evidence enough that we have got it wrong and that we need to get it right. That is the purpose of the Bill.

The press has been the subject of regulation—some of them favoured it—since the 1880s. For example, it was given exemptions in certain libel proceedings. It was able to report Select Committees in the 19th century. It was free from the risk of libel in certain circumstances. It has protections in copyright legislation and in the law that applies to the rehabilitation of offenders. It has protection in the covering of elections. These are positive freedoms for the press. They are positive regulations.

On the other hand, there are negative regulations, as the press sees it. There are problems with contempt of court legislation, libel laws, official secrets legislation and the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984. The press is concerned about the power that the law provides to confiscate journalists' photographs and some of the terms of prevention of terrorism legislation.

In other words, we are regulating the press right across the board. We have been doing that day in and day out in this place, especially for the past 10 or 15 years. In doing so, we have eroded press freedom. We have undermined good investigative journalism and we have allowed bad journalism to flourish. We have got things wrong and we need to turn them round. The argument is not to regulate because we do so massively already. Instead, we must consider how to regulate and for what purpose. I seek to regulate for accuracy, higher standards and press freedom. Surely there cannot be a better approach than that.

Mr. Fabricant: Does the hon. Gentleman agree that, if there were freedon of information laws, the scandal involving Robert Maxwell, which was known to many journalists for four or five years before he died, would have been exposed? Gagging writs prevented the scandal from being exposed.

Mr. Soley: It would be a much easier approach to reform libel laws. Some say that we should make legal aid available in libel cases. The hon. Gentleman is right to say that the law of libel and other legal devices prevented Maxwell from being investigated. That being so, to extend the law of libel would be the worst possible way to discipline the press. We need instead dramatically to reform our libel laws. In doing so, we must include within them correction of inaccuracy provisions.

There were many punitive settlements against newspapers a year or two ago. I cheered along with everyone else because they got their just deserts. Deep inside me, however, a little voice said, "This is a bad way to regulate the press, because it will be used against it in due course." Editors seem, sadly, to be blind to these arguments, while journalists are often not so blind. If we had correction of inaccuracy legislation, libel actions would not be the first step for many people, and financial settlements would come in lower figures. If a correction is published, there is less need or desire for a jury to say, "Half a million pounds in settlement." That is extremely important. In that way we could head off libel actions.

Many people have said to me, "I don't want a money settlement. I want a correction. Please can I have a correction quickly? I do not want to wait one or two years before it is printed in the newspaper. I want the matter to be dealt with quickly." In my view, that is their right.

Some say that what I propose is the thin end of the wedge. That is a strange argument to advance when there is all the regulatory law that I have described. Instead, we have the thick end of the wedge. The problem is how to turn things round. The regulatory body that I am describing would do just that. It would be necessary to introduce other legislation. We would not be able to pin things on to the system that I have described as though it were a Christmas tree.

There is something of a vacuum when it comes to the Government's policy on regulation. I do not intend to be offensive, and the Minister knows of my concern about these matters. The Government have said that self-regulation has failed, so what do we put in its place? The Minister has acknowledged that there is a problem. I suggest that the special form of regulation that I am suggesting—it would be similar to that which we use in the electronic media, which is so successful—is the way forward. We might, of course, want to change some parts of it. It has worked well, however, in giving us broadcasting media that are among the best in the world. Why are we so worried?

Mr. Chris Mullin (Sunderland, South): The media were the best in the world until the Broadcasting Act 1990.

Mr. Soley: I know that my hon. Friend is worried about that Act, and I share some of his concerns. If we take a long-term view, however, things have gone well.

It is right that the royal family and others need protection. It is——

Mr. Quentin Davies (Stamford and Spalding): The hon. Gentleman has several times used the analogy of the broadcasting media, which are regulated. As he has rightly said, they have established high standards. Surely the fundamental difference between the press and the broadcasting media is that the media have to be licensed or franchised because the airwaves have to be rationed. Therefore, there is a considerable sanction on the broadcasting media. If they establish a reputation for consistent inaccuracy or irresponsible behaviour, they risk the non-renewal of their franchise. If they lose that, they will be out of business.

The hon. Gentleman is not suggesting that the commission that would be established if his Bill were enacted would have the ability to withdraw the franchise of a newspaper and so put it out of business. It is—[Interruption.] Some hon. Members might think that that is a desirable prospect, but that is not seriously on offer. Does the hon. Gentleman agree that it would be impossible to reproduce the sanctions that exist against the broadcasting media within the context of the Bill?

Mr. Soley: I understand the argument. The hon. Gentleman is right to say that regulation is about the withdrawal of a licence at the end of the day, but that is not what happens. He will remember the interview of the investigative journalists. They were asked by my hon. Friend the Member for The Wrekin (Mr. Grocott) why the BBC and the ITV were better than the press. One of them had worked as a freelance press investigative journalist, and before that he had worked for television. He gave an answer to the effect that there was a culture of accuracy in the broadcasting world. That is the difference. Although it is right that the regulatory body could not withdraw a licence—I would not want to go down that road—it could go to court on the question of accuracy.

That power improved the general performance of advertising and made British advertising much better. Indeed, it is now among the best in the world. It is more accurate because of the power to go to court. Advertisers say, "We cannot afford to make mistakes, so let's check it again." Unfortunately, that does not happen in the press.

We must remember the rights of people in public life. A number of countries make it clear that Members of Parliament and royal families, for example, have less right to privacy. I accept that, but the people concerned have the right to expect the reporting to be accurate. I have a letter from a Mrs. Kibel, who took on the Sunday Express. She sent me a rather nice quote about the Queen's feelings about Diana and the royal family. It referred to a discussion in the palace on that matter and said:

[Mr. Soley]

"The discussion cleared the air and Diana left feeling that the Queen, who has always made her feel nervous, was understanding and comforting."

The article then directly quoted the Queen as saying to Diana:

"The whole family holds you in the highest esteem, so don't worry."

What happened is obvious—the journalist picked up the telephone and said, "Can I have the Queen please?" He then said to the Queen, "Is it right that you said, 'Don't worry Diana, we all like you.'?" The Queen then said, "Yes, that's it, you've got it." Alternatively, the journalist might have rung the press office at the palace, which said, "I've got a quote here from the Queen, who says . . ."

The number of times that people are directly quoted when there has been no such quotation is horrendous. We heard a great deal about that at the Select Committee.

Mr. Quentin Davies: Did the hon. Gentleman ever think that the simple explanation might be that the journalist was bugging the Queen's conversations?

Mr. Soley: I had not thought of that. Inventive quotes such as that are really too much.

A MORI poll in 1992 showed that lack of confidence in the press and dislike of its practices were widespread. It is sad that people have such a poor regard for journalists. It is a great profession, of which we should be able to be proud. It is a pity that journalism is being besmirched by some practices.

I have many letters about the issue, but I shall quote from just two more. One woman wrote:

"I must add that because of the distress caused to my family and myself I am not prepared to have this case made public . . . writing this has once again opened up a festering wound. You know after four years I still can't come to terms with the fact that although I was guilty of nothing I have had to fight to clear my name and in the meantime lost nearly everything I cared about."

She had lost her job and her home.

Another letter was from a father writing on behalf of his daughter. He said:

"It would not take much for the ratpack to turn and rend her . . . so she feels that she is not justified in running the risk of drawing fire on herself and even more so on her family . . . So there we have it. The tabloids seem bound to win because in the end they can make life unacceptably unpleasant for those who displease them and—more to the point—those people's families."

I could quote and requote those sentiments from many, many letters. The House must act and bring about a balance between freedom and responsibility.

I am pleased to say that I have been told by a variety of people that matters will improve, and that everything is looking up now.

Mr. Tony Worthington (Clydebank and Milngavie): I was told that as well.

Mr. Soley: That is very likely.

I do not like the bully-boy image of some of the press. Most of the press is good, some of it is appalling—and it is that small part that causes the bully-boy image. I was pleased to see a report in a newspaper recently that Kelvin MacKenzie editor of The Sun, had said, "We are now going to report the news accurately . He used the word "now". It is the first recorded case of a man who has been asked, "When did you stop beating your wife?" replying, "A few moments ago." But I have this horrible feeling that he is going to start beating her again.

What annoys me is the talk about disciplining journalists who breach the code, yet those editors have been breaching the code for years. Who is going to sack them? Will Mr. Murdoch come over here and sack them? There is a curious relationship between people like Mr. Murdoch and Mr. MacKenzie, who have a curious attitude that is a combination of being both prude and crude. That is very dangerous and damaging, and it makes us wonder what on earth is the underlying morality and code of such people if it is not just to make money out of circulation. It is a matter for them, in which I do not want to become involved, but if everyone else is fair game for journalism, perhaps they should be fair game, too.

Mr. Peter Thurnham (Bolton, North-East): The hon. Gentleman is introducing his Bill with good humour and good sense. May I take him back to the difficult question of the failure of the media to expose Maxwell? Could he explain how he thinks his Bill would help to overcome such a failure?

Mr. Soley: I shall do so; it is precisely the point that I have been putting for many years in the House.

We must change the libel and other laws that restrict investigative journalism. That must be done in the context of freedom of the press or freedom of information legislation that will allow investigative journalism, while also raising the standards. It is not a quick fix. We cannot rush an Act through the House to solve the problem. The law should have allowed the investigative journalists who knew about Maxwell to expose him. My proposed body could recommend how that should be done. Under the way that I have structured the Bill, it could take its time working out the sort of legislation that we need, and advise the House accordingly.

I want to make one further comment on the nature of the press during recent months. I am deeply disturbed, as the House should be, by the hidden threat. Some 250 Members of Parliament have been under the threat of Miss Whiplash. Everyone has something to hide; no one is pure and clean. I am not worried about sexual morality provided that it does not affect those who do not consent. However, when that is used as a weapon of warning, whether against Members of Parliament or anyone else, the press is taking on not just the Government, but Parliament.

When the issue began to grow in importance just before Christmas, senior members of the press said to me, "We are going to go nuclear on the Government if they support Calcutt or your Bill." I said, "Go nuclear if you like, but at the end of the day citizens have rights. We need a free press and we are going to have it."

When I presented the Mona Shourjabi case, the following day the Daily Mail, in a ridiculous piece of journalism, attacked her in a vitriolic article based on the assumption that she was supporting privacy. The reason that I introduced her was that she was so good at warning against privacy. I decided to check whether the BBC had used the word "privacy" on its "Today" programme when it interviewed her. It had not used that word, but I was immediately told, "Oh, you're ringing about that story. The Sun has already been on to us to ask us why we gave her such a soft time."

The Sun did not think that the story was important enough to print, but certainly thought it important enough to ring the BBC and try to strongarm it into being tougher the next time.

It is troubling to see the press working like that. It is worried less about reporting the news than influencing it. A number of people around the country have published editorials about me and my Bill. The Guild of British Newspaper Editors has written to hon. Members saying that my arguments do not stand up. I shall leave hon. Members to judge that for themselves as best they can.

In some cases, both the guild and newspaper editors said that I would not release details of the cases that came to me as a result of a letter that I had published in most local papers. Some refused to publish it, but the majority did. The purpose of that letter, which I sent out last August, was not to measure the level of content or discontent. I have made that plain a number of times, although the guild and some editors appear to believe that that was its purpose. If that were so, I would not have submitted that letter in August, when most people were on holiday and not reading newspapers.

That letter was designed to produce new cases, which I needed to inform the process of my Bill. There is no dispute that, at a meeting, I said that I would try to find a way of letting a guild representative examine those letters, subject to confidentiality. That was a genuine offer, because I like the open government bit and wanted the guild to see those letters. However, when we returned to my office and read through them, I found statements of confidentiality of the kind that I have already read to the House.

We then drew up a table for the editors and sent them that instead. Still they objected, saying that they wanted to see the letters. Rather more worrying was that they wanted the name of the newspaper, the date and the type of case—which information would of course serve as an identifier. I felt that the best that I could do was to write to everyone who had written to me asking whether he or she would be prepared to put their case to the newspaper—but stating that if they were worried about the consequences, they need not bother. That was all that I could do in the circumstances. I may add that newspapers are much tougher about protecting their sources than I ever was in that example, which I give because a number of hon. Members wrote to me on that subject.

Bad newspapers have no culture of accuracy and no respect for customers. When I complained recently to the Daily Mail about its treatment of Mona Shourjabi, I was horrified to find myself speaking to someone who exploded with anger when I asked if she had read the article. She seemed to think that I should automatically know that in her position as deputy editor, she had read it and was familiar with it. I thought to myself, "If she treats me—a Member of Parliament—like that, how on earth does she treat an ordinary citizen?" There is no recognition of the importance of the customer.

Bad newspapers do not run correction columns or make a friendly response to the public—although, to be fair to the Daily Mail, it came back to me in a very friendly manner after about an hour saying that yes, it had got it wrong and was very apologetic. From that moment on, I was dealt with most fairly and a correction was published. That correction was for me, but I do not know whether a correction for Mona Shourjabi was published—and I know that she wrote.

Bad newspapers do not publish a statement of aims or publicise the existence of the Press Complaints Commission, although that has been done more often recently. Some local newspapers, to their credit, do all those things. Local newspapers are often better in that respect because they are closer to their communities. Everyone should observe those practices.

My Bill allows for some negotiation on where a correction appears in a newspaper. I should be happy for such items to appear in a corrections column, and my Bill would allow that. Why do not newspapers publish correction columns? A simple correction is what people want to read. That is a simple way forward. I suggest that my Bill is the way forward for the Government, the House and the country.

Some editors have said that I am more interested in regulating the press than in press freedom. I remember issuing press statements during the progress of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 and the prevention of terrorism Act, for which I sat on the Labour Front Bench, and a number of other Bills, stating that, if the legislation went through in its present form, it would lead to journalists appearing in court. Sure enough, under the prevention of terrorism Act, Channel 4's Box Productions appeared in court only last year. I warned of that six years ago, but to the best of my knowledge, not one newspaper responded to or pursued my press release.

In the case of PACE, I warned of the danger of the police having confiscatory powers in respect of photographs, because that would put photographers at risk when they covered inner-city riots and so on. Again, little attention was paid to that warning, with one or two honourable exceptions—particularly a newspaper in Bristol that was affected.

My record of defending press freedom in the House is much better than that of the editors who did not even bother to publish my press release. More importantly, they attack those who express dissent. I have not yet dealt with the reason for my initial involvement in this subject, although I have mentioned it often enough outside the House. I am an ex-probation officer, and I knew in the 1970s and early 1980s that policing in his country was going off the rails. I knew that bad practices were creeping into policing, and I said so, as did others.

I knew that the Birmingham Six convictions were wrong. I was one of those who took groups of people to see the then Home Secretary about that case. I am the ex-probation officer for one of the defendants in the Guildford Four. Initially, I believed that she was guilty, because she said, "I suppose that I must have done it." I still remember her saying that to me. We now know the way that she was dealt with in the early stages—of the treatment that she received after her arrest. We know also —this became increasingly apparent to me the more that I looked at her case—that she could not possibly be guilty. We made the same discovery in respect of the Broadwater Farm case.

In those instances, I did not witness good investigative journalism that opened up the problem of this country's criminal justice system going off the rails, but the wrong people being sent to prison while the guilty went free, and

I saw that our criminal justice system had failed and failed badly. What an opportunity those cases presented for good investigative journalism.

I make no complaint about the press not pursuing such cases, for whatever reason, but I make every complaint about the press turning on the families and friends of the individuals concerned for protesting their innocence. They were presented in the press as either anti-police or pro-IRA. That is what was so wrong and so damaging. When people tell me that the press has the freedom to get it wrong, I reply that it has no freedom to present dissenting minority groups, who are vulnerable enough already, in a way that is inaccurate and leads to their being pilloried. The press has no right to do that, for that is profoundly dangerous to our democratic structure.

Today, we have an opportunity to put in place the structure of a Bill that would give our citizens the right that they deserve—the right to accurate news reporting which could improve the standard of journalism in this country and could protect something that we all need and which does not belong to editors or to Members of Parliament but to every British citizen, everywhere—the freedom of the press.

Several Hon. Members rose——

Madam Deputy Speaker: Order. Before I call the next speaker, may I say that it is clear that there is great interest in the Bill. Many hon. Members have signified their wish to speak, and I hope that those who catch my eye early will remember that.

10.56 am

Mr. Roger Gale (Thanet, North): I start by declaring an interest as a member of the National Union of Journalists, which supports the campaign for press and broadcasting freedom and is a supporter of the Bill.

I congratulate the hon. Member for Hammersmith (Mr. Soley) on his success in the ballot and on the way in which he prepared the ground for the debate and his meticulousness in collating evidence. I am only sorry that I was unable—for reasons of which the hon. Gentleman is aware—to take part in that exercise. Above all, I congratulate the hon. Gentleman on generating a debate on a subject of considerable interest, not only to right hon. and hon. Members but to those outside the House. The debate is really about a Bill which is about and for ordinary people.

If there is a Division, I shall support the Bill in the Lobby, though I shall describe certain reservations that I have about its drafting. However, it is most important that the Bill receives a Second Reading and is considered in Committee and has further chances of a wider and deeper debate.

We are dealing with two needs. First and foremost, there is need for a free press in a free society—for the freedom of a free press to question the Establishment and people in any position of power. I refer to the sort of freedom without which Goverments become extremely dangerous, as has happened in other parts of the world.

The freedom of the United Kingdom press is of immense value to ordinary people and to our democratic process. However, that freedom must be exercised responsibly, and that has gone wrong in recent years and must now be addressed. We must get that train firmly back on the rails, for the alternative is that those who want to gag the press, for a variety of reasons—many of them malevolent—will win the day.

The second need that we must consider—a need with which the Bill deals—is for the individual to be free to enjoy privacy without harassment, especially the privacy of his own home. There seem to be two responses to that, at two different levels. First, there is the response to what Sir David Calcutt has described as physical intrusion, in the form of electronic eavesdropping, telephone tapping, trespass of people's property and homes and "photo intrusion" by means of the telephoto lens.

The public have made their views known. The press will tell us that it does not really believe in opinion polls, except when they suit it. A Kent newspaper recently decided to place itself and its readership firmly in the same stable as that notable organ The Daily Sport by publishing in full what became known as the Camillagate transcript. That publication was the subject of an interview on Meridian television. At lunch time, the editor defended his publication; the television company subsequently conducted a phone-in opinion poll. By the evening, it was able to announce that 60 per cent. of the public were in favour of publication.

It then conducted a further interview with the editor in which the general public were asked how they would feel if their private telephone conversations had been tapped and then printed on the front page of the Kent newspaper —which I shall not bother to publicise by naming it. Surprisingly—or, perhaps, not so surprisingly—by the end of that television programme, when another phone-in poll was conducted, the pendulum had swung in the opposite direction. The overwhelming majority of the ordinary people of whom we hear so much had decided that publication was not such a good idea after all. In other words, the vicarious pleasure to be gained from the publicising of the affairs of people in high places had given way to the stark realisation that this was the thin end of the wedge—that anyone in the United Kingdom could be affected. The Bill seeks to protect the ordinary individual's right to a fair and factual presentation in the press.

I am on record as supporting Calcutt's recommendations for changes to criminal justice legislation. As a journalist, I have reached the conclusion that the way in which to control the more unsavoury aspects of public life and journalism in general—electronic eavesdropping, phone tapping, intrusion by long-tom lens and trespass —is to introduce a clause in the next criminal justice Bill to outlaw such practices. That should apply not only to journalists, but to everyone in the United Kingdom—and I mean everyone. That clearly raises issues concerning the security services, and we must face those issues.

That is half the argument. The other half involves the right of redress for those covered by that wonderful phrase "ordinary people". Let me gently suggest that, in this context, we are all ordinary people. We are not talking about pre-publication censorship; the hon. Member for Hammersmith (Mr. Soley) made that very clear. We are not seeking to censor the press; that is not compatible with the existence of a free press in a free society. We seek to protect the right of ordinary people to a fair hearing, not the right of access to the libel law which is available to those who can afford it.

I have said that, in this context, we are all ordinary people. Those outside the House may have a different view, but I doubt whether many hon. Members' bank balances would allow them to take on a major libel case against a national newspaper. Some hon. Members have taken such action, and have put their lives, homes, families and jobs on the line to protect themselves. It takes a very courageous person—or, perhaps, a very foolhardy person—to do that.

We are talking, then, of the rights of most people—people without big bank balances, people who want a fair hearing. Those are the rights which the Bill seeks to protect, and I believe that they are a vital aspect of the debate about press freedom and the freedom of the individual.

In the opening pages of his excellent report, Sir David Calcutt expresses very clearly his belief that the Press Complaints Commission has failed. I believe that too. I find it extraordinary that Lord McGregor is still in his job. The hon. Member for Hammersmith referred to the commission's publication of criticism of press treatment of the royal family, and to the suppression of information given to the commission's chairman by a member of the commission who was a senior editor. That information would have redressed the balance; but the commission did not publish it, in order to defend the press. It did not have the guts to stand up and say, "We were wrong." That strikes me as just as wrong as certain other things that the Press Complaints Commission has chosen not to investigate, or has treated with scant attention. It is not surprising that there is no public confidence, and very little press confidence, in the commission as it is currently constituted.

Sir Ivan Lawrence (Burton): Unfortunately, Lord McGregor is not here to defend himself. He would say, would he not, that his Press Complaints Commission cannot do anything if the parties affected by offensive press reporting do not complain? What is my hon. Friend's response to that?

Mr. Gale: My response is very straightforward. It should be understood that I am saying nothing today, under privilege, that I have not said very publicly outside the House. Lord McGregor is aware of my views.

This week, the press suddenly decided that it might be in order to investigate complaints that are not instigated by a first or second party. It strikes me that, if the press can make such a decision now, it could have done so earlier. But my prime complaint is that, faced with detailed inside knowledge, the chairman of the Press Complaints Commission—the person to whom we are all supposed to look confidently for redress, either as members of the press or as members of the public—failed to make that inside knowledge public. I consider that inexcusable, and I said so at the time.

Mr. Garnier: I agree that the Press Complaints Commission has failed signally to achieve what it set out to achieve. In the past few days, the commission has announced to the public that it wishes to invite complaints about the Prince of Wales tape recording, and then announced that the affected parties did not wish to complain. Does that not destroy the whole purpose of the commission? First, it announces that the possibility of a complaint; then it announces that the potential complainants do not wish to complain, thereby destroying whatever privacy and right to be left alone those potential complainants may have had.

Mr. Gale: I would have agreed with my hon. Friend had not the press then decided that, given a reasonably free rein, it could investigate matters instigated by people other than those directly involved. The press does not seem even to know its own mind.

As for Calcutt's suggestion that there should be a press tribunal, I shall quote from a letter that I have received from Tony Bennon, the chairman of the Campaign for Press and Broadcasting Freedom. In that letter to Members of Parliament, under the heading "Calcutt and Privacy", he says:

"The proposals to introduce measures to protect privacy are, in our opinion, a threat to Press Freedom. The measures—the creation of new torts and the use of pre-publication injunctions and post-publication fines—would only benefit those people who are wealthy enough to access these processes. Secondly they would, as current libel laws are, be used as a device to gag investigations. We believe the issue is to give citizens rights, and not—as the Calcutt proposals do—to take them away from serious journalism. The Calcutt proposal to establish a three person tribunal with powers to enforce a statutory code and impose fines is a negative one. Firstly the composition—three people, one of whom is a judge—would be narrow and unrepresentative. Secondly imposing fines on papers would effectively act as a form of censorship—discouraging investigative journalism—and would, in our view, have a disproportionate effect on small publications whose existence is vital to media freedom."

I agree entirely with those sentiments. I have great respect for much of the content of the Calcutt report. However, Sir David's proposals for a press tribunal are draconian and restrictive and would damage the freedom of the press. I believe that, almost certainly, they would be unworkable.

I come, therefore, to the proposal by the hon. Member for Hammersmith for an independent press authority. Its purpose would be to assist the ordinary person—that is, most of us—to obtain redress. I intend to refer to one current example—and if I begin to move out of order, Madam Deputy Speaker, I know that you will correct me immediately.

The issue that has been raised in the press in the past 24 hours involves the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom. It may or may not come before the courts. I do not intend to comment on attitudes towards that issue, apart from saying that a quarter of the front page of The Times today is taken up with the photograph of a lady, clearly under some stress, whom I at least regard as a very ordinary person—not the high, not the mighty, not the rich, not the famous. Apparently, she is a reasonably successful business woman, working on her own behalf and providing a service to other people. Because of the publication of a story in one, two or three newspapers, she has become embroiled in an issue which is now common knowledge throughout the press. The lady has parents who must, presumably, be suffering the same distress as must be experienced by any parent when their child is objected to gutter journalism.

The photograph was not to be found in a publication that was seeking relaunch publicity for itself. It, and others like it, are in every national newspaper. It is of an ordinary person—not people who have to be exposed and whose every thought and murmur has to be interpreted by the Press Gallery because they are making the policy that runs the United Kingdom. That is the kind of ordinary person who needs protection but who does not have the money to fight an expensive libel case.

I am afraid that we hear too much from the press to the effect, "It's in the public interest." What the press means is that it is interesting to the public and that it sells newspapers. I fear that that is precisely why one of my local newspapers decided to take a chance and publish the Camillagate transcript. I was assured by that newspaper, and accepted its undertaking, that it was trying not to increase sales but to inform the public. You will appreciate, Madam Deputy Speaker, that, as a journalist, I suffer from no cynicism whatsoever.

After receiving that assurance, I had an anonymous telephone call. I do not like anonymous telephone calls, but it was from somebody who works in that press print. My informant told me, "You ought to know that the print run was dramatically increased first thing this morning because we knew that this was gong to be good for selling the paper." That is the public interest—it is interesting to the public and is selling newspapers.

I do not believe that the pre-publication of the Queen's speech by The Sun before Christmas was in the public interest. The material was going to be in the public domain in two days' time, in any event. I have to say, with due respect to Her Majesty, that the Queen's speech is not normally the most dramatically controversial event of the year.

Mr. Dalyell: Who decides what is the public interest? Some of us may have very different views about the public interest.

Mr. Gale: The hon. Gentleman made that point earlier. We are, of course, talking about degree and opinion, but I suggest that that breach of an understood embargo, if not a literal embargo, can hardly be claimed to have been in the public interest. One editor of one newspaper stuck two fingers up and said, "I don't give a xxxx for the Establishment of the United Kingdom."

One case has been referred to three times this morning, the Robert Maxwell case. I suggest to the House, on behalf of my constituents, that the fact that Maxwell pensioners lost money was in the public interest and that that fraud ought to have been exposed. Where were the dogs of Fleet street? They were not barking. The editor of one national Sunday newspaper told me, "I've got a cupboardful of gagging writs that prevented me from publishing that story." Forgive me, but how does one take out a gagging writ on a story that is so carefully and delicately handled that it is published before a writ can be obtained? One can take out a libel writ afterwards, but one must have prior information to gag. That is one singular occasion upon which Fleet Street failed the country.

I have some concerns about the Bill. The provision for the quick correction of errors, particularly in the case of small local newspapers which have a tendency for inaccuracy, usually through haste or inexperience but not through malice, may lead to their front pages being filled with corrections. I know that that is not what the hon. Gentleman intends. In clause 4(5) he provides that his authority would be able to dismiss applications that it considered to be trivial. The hon. Gentleman will have to look at that matter carefully in Committee so that the right balance is struck.

Mr. Dalyell: How much space would "Tiny" Rowland be given in correcting the Al Fayed brothers?

Mr. Gale: The hon. Gentleman will be making a speech. He has intervened about five times this morning.

Mr. Mandelson: Answer the point.

Mr. Gale: I am endeavouring to——

Mrs. Teresa Gorman (Billericay): My hon. Friend does not have to answer.

Madam Deputy Speaker: Order. We must be careful about reasonable standards of courtesy. We cannot have a sub-conversation going on.

Mr. Gale: I am grateful to you, Madam Deputy Speaker. You invited hon. Members to be brief. Many hon. Members want to speak in the debate. I could spend half an hour talking about that issue, but I choose not to do so. It will be much better if hon. Members make their own speeches.

My personal inclination is that we should amend the criminal justice legislation to regulate electronic eavesdropping, the taking of photographs by long-tom lenses and intrusion into people's homes. That is a matter entirely for the Home Office and criminal justice legislation. I look to the hon. Gentleman and to my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for National Heritage to provide redress for the ordinary person.

Last week, members of the press ordered the last drinks in the last chance saloon by trying to find a way round the Press Complaints Commission. After everything that I have said, and after having heard what the press has said this week, I believe that if it is prepared to implement each and every one of the alterations that have been suggested, a revamped Press Complaints Commission, under a new chairman and with many more lay members, might prove eventually to be the way forward for the ordinary person. However, the hon. Gentleman's Bill makes a serious attempt to address a serious problem. I commend him for having introduced it. I hope that it receives a Second Reading. I wish it well.

Mr. Tony Worthington (Clydebank and Milngavie): I am grateful to be called, and I add my congratulations to my hon. Friend the Member for Hammersmith (Mr. Soley) on introducing the Bill. As he said, I was involved in the issue some years ago.

The best article that has been written on the subject recently appeared in The Herald, in which Mr. Ian Bell said:

> "The issue is not privacy; the issue is not bias. The issue is not good taste, ethics, or the relationships between information technology and the state. The issue is not smut, deference, royalty or David Mellor's big toe. The issue is accuracy, where journalism begins and ends."

The first question should be, "Is it true?" If we concentrated on that, many of our problems would be at an end. That is where I started from, and that is where Kelvin MacKenzie starts from. He said that tabloid journalism cannot be condemned simply because it is brash or noisy or declamatory; it must be called to account only if it is false, irresponsible or reports untruthfully. I agree entirely. But what does someone do if a newspaper is inaccurate or, worse, if it prints lies? As my hon. Friend the Member for Hammersmith said, when I introduced the Right of Reply Bill, I was assured that matters had improved considerably and that the press had cleaned up its act.

Mr. MacKenzie says that his newspaper no longer lies. What does someone do who disagrees with him, when the courts are not available and, frankly, when the courts can never be available? Even if legal aid were available for defamation, court procedures are not appropriate to such action. Surely the onus should be on the press to show some evidence for their stories, given the huge damage that can be done, as my hon. Friend the Member for Hammersmith showed.

This week I tried to find some untrue stories. The difficulty is that one gets only one side of the story. On Wednesday, the Nimmo Smith and Friel inquiry reported on the allegation that there is a gay network in Scotland. A headline from The Sun appeared in The Herald, saying:

"Gay Judges Linked to Palace. Homosexuals in Scotland's top jobs are part of a deep-rooted gay network with members stretching all over Britain and even to Buckingham Palace, The Sun can reveal".

There is no hesitation about that statement. The article was about a list that had come from a man called Colin Tucker. The Nimmo Smith/Friel report states:

"Colin Tucker's so-called 'list' is a Statement which we have in our possession and which does not name or otherwise identify any prominent member of the Scottish legal establishment, apart from Lord Dervaird"— who resigned several years ago—

"as a person who has allegedly engaged in homosexual behaviour."

There is a fair amount of evidence that that story is untrue, that it is a fabrication and that it was probably known to be such when it was written.

Another headline appeared in The Sun on Monday, not on page 23 but on page 1. It says:

"Kick out Colonel Charles."

—I am not a great monarchist; I am simply quoting from this week's stories—

"Army anger at Camilla affair. Senior Army officers last night called on Prince Charles to quit as colonel-in-chief of six regiments—over his affair with Camilla Parker Bowles."

I read on with great interest to discover which six regiments were calling for the Prince's resignation, but The Sun could not find one Army officer or even a batty old retired general to make the story stand up. One knows what probably occurred: it was a slack Sunday in the office at The Sun.

On Tuesday, The Sun reported:

"Prince Charles yesterday turned down an investigation into the Camillagate tape"— that is true—

"and declared: 'I have got to get on with my job'."

The thought that Prince Charles telephoned the deputy editor of The Sun, Stewart Higgins, and said, "I have got to get on with my job", beggars belief. I have no problem saying that that is inaccurate; it is not true. We must start by asking, "Is it true"? The journalist will be able to say, "Yes, it is true; here is the evidence."

I am sad that such journalism masks the superb journalism, of which we have seen some good examples this year. It was not our Government or the Foreign Office but the world's journalists who alterted us to the problems of Somalia. There is some incredibly brave journalism coming out of the Balkans. I watched a moving programme on television last week about the work that is being done by journalists in the Balkans. In neither place will one find the newspapers that are causing us so much concern. When I went to Somalia, I asked myself, "Will I find The Sun there? Will I be able to escape press harassment?" Somalia is a good place to go if one wants to avoid The Sun. Its brave lads are at the bedroom window. Its editors have decided that the world's greatest humanitarian disaster—Somalia—is not a story. I find that rather difficult to accept.

It is nonsense to say that such newspapers are on the side of the little people. One of the extraordinary achievements of such papers is that they have made freedom of the press unpopular in a democracy. An extraordinary story appeared in The Independent this week. It said that a survey conducted by Glasgow university found that the public put tabloids at the bottom of the list of agencies for protecting human rights.

Mr. Robin Corbett (Birmingham, Erdington): With The Sun at the bottom.

Mr. Worthington: Yes, The Sun was at the bottom. The public found lies and distortions more offensive than anything else.

It is not freedom of the press if the press can say in print anything it likes about someone without offering redress. As my hon. Friend the Member for Hammersmith said, the freedom of the press is a concept which belongs to the people, not a few editors. A right of reply, as embodied in the Bill, enhances the freedom of the press because the ordinary citizen can have his or her say. The knowledge that someone can bite back and say, "It is not true" is a formidable deterrent to a lying or sloppy newspaper.

When I introduced my Bill, I was aware that one of its weaknesses was the way in which it proposed to establish a press commission. It looked as if the Government were setting up a body. I am aware that, as my hon. Friend the Member for Hammersmith said, we have a long tradition of setting up bodies which achieve some distance from the Government. However, the idea suggested by Sir Louis Blom-Cooper is worth examining. He said that we should give the duty of appointing an authority to people in responsible posts who did not obtain those posts through any Government appointment. That would be a valuable way of creating some distance.

I commend the Bill. I know that my hon. Friend the Member for Hammersmith would like to tackle the whole sorry mess of our press laws. I should like a Bill of Rights, freedom of information, a new official secrets Act with a public interest defence and a reform law on defamation with perhaps a small claims court attached to it. There would be differences among us about a privacy law. I remain to be convinced that it could be framed adequately. However, the Bill is a valuable start, and I commend it to the House.

11.30 am

Mr. Alan Howarth (Stratford-on-Avon): It is a privilege to follow the hon. Member for Clydebank and Milngavie (Mr. Worthington), who has also introduced legislation intended to address these immensely important issues. So we are indebted to him, as to the hon. Member for Hammersmith (Mr. Soley).

I have some worries about the proposals in the Bill which I should like to elaborate. I am a member of the National Heritage Select Committee. The review that the Committee is currently undertaking of privacy and the media takes us into some of the same territory as the Bill occupies. The Committee has reached no conclusions. My remarks this morning will be in an entirely personal capacity.

[Mr. Alan Howarth]

What is the nature of the problem to which we should address ourselves? What is the evidence of a collapse of journalistic standards? Jaded and dyspeptic individuals at their breakfast tables have always complained of what my hon. Friend the Member for Thanet, North (Mr. Gale) described as the gutter press. In the home counties a generation ago, it was widely assumed that the country was going to the dogs because The Times intended to print news on the front page. The decline of the press is always with us.

If we contemplate legislation, we need to consider the facts and the practicalities calmly. There is a good deal too much righteous indignation sloshing around our political system. We hear tirades from editors and from some politicians. It will be as well if we look to see what objective evidence there is on the problem. We do not find very much.

The statistics of complaints to the Press Complaints Commission in the 18 months to July 1992 show, as the hon. Member for Hammersmith said, that complaints about accuracy were by far the largest category. But they numbered in total 1,052. There were another 40 complaints about the opportunity to reply. There were 143 complaints about privacy. In the same period, the press ran hundreds of thousands of stories. Are we to conclude, as the Press Complaints Commission and the editors do, that there is no great problem? Or are the complaints received from aggrieved individuals the tip of the iceberg? Possibly they are.

Regrettably, the Press Complaints Commission does not monitor the press. Nor has it considered third-party complaints. I commend the hon. Member for Hammersmith on his attempt in clause 3(2) to address that need. We all have our hunches and prejudices, but there is no body of evidence upon which to base the contention that there is a problem of abuse of power by the press such that we should legislate to control further than we already do what the papers are to print. After all, that is a decision not to be taken lightly in a free society.

Of course, journalists write inaccuracies from time to time. They produce quantities of material to tight deadlines. But I suggest that one important reason why inaccuracies occur is that few, if any, of us operating in the political world systematically seek to lodge in the minds of the press a complete and objective version of things which does justice to all sides of the argument. All Governments, at any rate in Britain, are great culprits here. Knowledge is power. Therefore, they deny information to the public. Huge quantities of information are systematically but unnecessarily kept secret. Governments make highly selective information available and steer interpretation on the part of the press, often by unattributable guidance.

Politicians do their best to manipulate the press and lead it by the nose. Is it fitting, then, that we should legislate to establish a statutorily based authority, the job of which would be to require the press to print the truth under compulsion of powerful sanctions? I worry about the proposal in the Bill that the Secretary of State—even so liberal and honest a Secretary of State as my right hon. Friend—should appoint the members of such an authority. The editor of The Observer, Donald Trelford hit the nail squarely on the head when he said:

"I think it would be undesirable for people appointed by the Government to decide what is truth."

The hon. Member for Hammersmith acknowledges that difficulty, and contemplates the establishment of an intermediary appointments commission. Even then, I would be worried about the indirect element of political patronage. I should have similar reservations about his suggestion that the National Heritage Select Committee should play a part in determining who is appropriate to serve on such a body.

Of course it is desirable that the press should adhere to high standards of accuracy. Indeed, it is proper that a citizen who suffers from some inaccurate report should be able to exercise the same freedom of expression as a journalist and have a correction stated in the same media. However, the establishment of what is correct will often not be easy. I feel that the hon. Member for Hammersmith underestimates that difficulty.

The Bill postulates a notion of "due accuracy". What is due accuracy? What is truth? The answer has baffled philosophers and perplexed the courts time out of mind. With the best will in the world, truth will often be hard to ascertain.

How would the Independent Press Authority deal with propaganda—when politician A says something which politician B insists is wrong? If a newspaper correctly reports what the hon. Member for Loamshire, South says, may it not perpetuate the untruth about which the hon. Member for Coketown, North has so vigorously complained? What would be the proper role of the IPA there? What should the IPA do where there is a complaint of selective reporting which is misleading on account of what is not said?

The 21 good persons and true who are to be members of the authority would need a godlike wisdom to discern what is accurate, true and in the public interest in myriad such cases. However, the issues will be immensely important. Truth matters, as the hon. Member for Hammersmith eloquently impressed on us.

For that very reason, the press will insist on a full right to defend themselves against charges of purveying untruth. The press argued against the Bill introduced by the hon. Member for Clydebank and Milngavie, which would have established a right of reply. The press argued that the Bill would deprive it of proper legal safeguards, including the rights to demand evidence on oath, to cross-examination, to legal representation and to discovery of documents.

When arraigned for falsifying the truth, the press will surely, at least in important cases, claim the right to trial by jury. The press won that right at the end of the 18th century in Fox's libel law. It has been part of our law ever since. Are we to deny those long entrenched rights?

The hon. Member for Hammersmith envisages that the IPA should make up its own procedures. I think that he hopes that they would be informal and rapid. I fear that his hopes would be thwarted and that the procedures of the IPA would be driven to approximate more and more to those of a court. The IPA would be like no other court. It would be a special court to try the press. It would try the press without the full rigour and processes of a true court of law.

For a long time at least, the IPA would be unpredictable in the exercise of its authority. It would wield its powers on the basis of loosely defined duties rather than a detailed body of case law and jurisprudence. The IPA would be confused in its purposes, as its role would be in certain instances to conciliate as well as adjudicate when conciliation fails. I do not believe that it is possible satisfactorily to combine both functions. The defendant will not co-operate fully and candidly with a conciliation body, if he knows that what he says will be noted as evidence when that same body later adjudicates on a complaint.

The IPA would be overwhelmed in its work load. The Bill proposes to go much further than that of the hon. Member for Clydebank and Milngavie, which provided a statutory right of reply to factual inaccuracies which were damaging to "the character, reputation and good standing of an individual or body of persons."

I apologise if I am mispronouncing the hon. Gentleman's constituency, perhaps he will correct me.

Mr. Worthington: It is "Millgye".

Mr. Howarth: I am very willing to grant him that right of reply. His Bill limited the types of inaccuracy to which there would be a right of reply.

The Bill provides in clause 3(1) a right for any factual inaccuracy, regardless of whether it is damaging. That would open the IPA to a vast body of potential complaints. Hon. Members of this House alone —651 of us—could keep the IPA busy around the clock. The hon. Member for Hammersmith would have complaints considered not only from those people about whom the inaccurate statements were made but from anyone else who wanted to complain.

"a published correction of a factual inaccuracy"—

The hon. Member for Hammersmith seeks to make the work load of the authority manageable by his provision in clause 4(5):

"The Authority may dismiss any application which it reasonably considers to be vexatious or trivial."

But it would be no easy matter to do that sifting. Each case would need to be considered with proper care.

Some of the best justified third party complaints to the Press Council were pooh-poohed by editors as vexatious and trivial. An example is the case of Mr. Robert Borzello —a private individual who has campaigned persistently and courageously for years against racist language in the media. He has repeatedly been characterised as a crank and a vexatious troublemaker by arrogant and apprehensive editors.

It is extremely important that third-party complaints, raised in the public interest by whomsoever, should be reviewed by the regulatory authorities with care and respect, but all that would take time. I worry that the IPA —on the model proposed—would become an enormous organisation and would flounder. It would prove unable to carry out the duties laid upon it, even with regard to dealing with inaccuracies.

The correction of inaccuracies looms large in the Bill. My feeling is that the measure lacks balance on account of that. The hon. Member for Hammersmith wants to strike a proper balance between the freedom and the restraint of the press, but I question whether he has done so, although that needs to be done.

The sections of the Bill that refer to the upholding of freedom are brief and highly generalised. As far as detailed provisions are concerned, the parts that deal with the restraint of press freedom and the clauses that create a power to require the press to print new material are the meat of the Bill. Its emphasis is on restraint.

It also seems unbalanced and inconsistent, in that, whereas it would be the duty of the IPA to promulgate codes of professional and ethical standards for the press, as in clause 2(1)(d), it will be its duty to police the conduct of the press in one respect only—the correction of inaccuracies.

Of all the items that one would expect to be in the code —privacy, harassment, cheque-book journalism, intrusion into grief or shock, discrimination and so forth—I do not understand why the IPA should police only inaccuracies. A number of different values have to be kept in balance. If accuracy is of paramount concern, we could hardly complain about bugging. Bugging is a great aid to accurate reporting, but privacy matters at least as much, yet the balance of the Bill does not reflect that.

We need to be prepared to allow certain risks to be taken with investigative journalism. We need newspapers that are prepared to run risks and to penetrate the opacities presented to them in the interests of exposing bad practice. If we are not prepared to risk inaccuracy, we may prevent public good being done through investigative journalism.

Perhaps the hon. Member for Hammersmith thinks that the IPA will have enough to keep it busy in dealing with inaccuracies. By the time it has got through the catalogue of duties set out in clause 2(1)(c)—

"to investigate and monitor ethical standards of the press, distribution of newspapers, ownership and control of the media, access to information and restrictions on reporting and any related matter it may consider appropriate"— its members will be dizzy with confusion and fatigue. Under clause 2(1)(b), apart from anything else, the IPA will be monitoring itself—a somewhat circular and giddy process.

I am glad that the hon. Member for Hammersmith leaves most of what will be covered by a code of standards for the press to self-regulation. I am not entirely clear about that from my reading of the Bill, but I assume it to be the case. Self-regulation is greatly preferable to statutory supervision by an external body. I cannot understand or accept the notion of a code of professional standards imposed from outside. The essence of professionalism is ethical autonomy and self-regulation.

Mrs. Gorman: Does my hon. Friend not agree that newspapers are businesses? Journalists are not professionals who discipline themselves from within but people who are trying to make a profit out of peddling stuff, some of which causes great distress to the public. The hon. Member for Hammersmith (Mr. Soley) has pointed out the difficulty of achieving perfection in any piece of legislation drafted in this House, but, while we may not achieve perfection, do not the public expect us to try to provide a society in which they can go about their everyday lives without being unduly harassed or traduced so that someone can make money out of them?

Mr. Howarth: Many eminent and respected journalists would agree with my hon. Friend that journalism is not a profession but a craft or trade. If that is so, perhaps we should not be talking about professional standards, but we certainly must talk about ethical standards and ground rules. As far as possible, it is much better for those to be generated by the newpaper industry staff, through self-regulation. If journalists own their own code of practice there is a better chance that they will feel committed to it. If the regulatory body contains a good proportion of practising journalists, their colleagues are more likely to respect their judgments, but the most important part of the case for self-regulation is that a free press is a crucial safeguard of a free society.

The press have, however, confronted us with a great difficulty. For years they have dragged their feet over self-regulation. Instead of embracing it positively, they have done the minimum that they could get away with at the latest possible stage. Self-regulation has therefore been unimpressive and that has certainly applied during the two year existence of the Press Complaints Commission.

Self-regulation, however, could be made more effective. The gaps in the code could be filled, the code could be made more detailed and specific, and its application could be made tougher, reinforced by penalties agreed by the industry. Fines would be an effective self-imposed sanction. There is already a requirement under the code —imposed by the press on itself—that corrections should be printed. They could be printed in prescribed ways. When an editor could not agree with a complainant that an inaccuracy had been printed, the code could stipulate that a reasonably argued letter of refutation should be published. That would be greatly preferable to the quasi-judicial apparatus of the IPA.

I am afraid that events have convinced me that self-regulation, while necessary, will not be sufficient. The breakdown of ethical consensus in our society and the pressures of the circulation wars mean that some newspapers will occasionally brush aside the code of practice to which they claim to subscribe.

That being the case, I believe we must reinforce the legal remedies available to the citizen. We can strengthen the law of confidence, as recommended by the Law Commission and accepted in principle by the Government some years ago. We could create a new tort of infringement of privacy, although, like the hon. Member for Hammersmith, I have some doubts about that. The creation of a new tort of harassment seems attractive. We must make legal remedy against defamation, which bears on the issue of accuracy that is so emphasised in the Bill, available in practice to people other than the rich. I presume that the simplification of procedures that the Lord Chancellor is contemplating would bring down the costs of libel actions, and I hope that he will reconsider his position on legal aid and make it available for plaintiffs in libel actions and at levels well above income support.

The third element of reform needed, to balance the proper protection of the individual with enhanced freedom of the press, as the hon. Member for Hammersmith wants, is freedom of information legislation. Happily, the House will have an opportunity to debate that next month.

There are other possibilities of strengthening press freedom in beneficial ways. The Law Commission's proposed Bill would provide a clear-cut public interest defence in proceedings for breach of confidence. That would reduce the scope for prior restraint of publication, which also needs underpinning in libel cases, as the Robert Maxwell saga has shown.

Although I applaud the hon. Member for Hammersmith for giving new focus and urgency to the national debate on the freedom and the responsibility of the press—in the hearings in his committee before Christmas, as well as in today's debate—I must say, with respect, that I do not believe that his independent IPA is what is needed. I have explained my reservations. If the Bill goes into Committee, I hope that some of these difficulties can be looked at in more detail.

I hope that the House will prefer to consider a threefold thrust of reform—improved self-regulation by the press, strengthened civil remedies for the citizen and enhanced freedoms for the press, by far the greater part of which is responsibly committed to the public interest.

11.50 am

Mr. Malcolm Bruce (Gordon): The two speeches that we have had from Conservative Members have rather neatly encapsulated the divide on the argument. The hon. Member for Thanet, North (Mr. Gale) wanted a level of control and regulation of the press that I should like to think that most of the House would wish to resist. The hon. Member for Stratford-on-Avon (Mr. Howarth) expressed his reservations about the Bill. He accepted that they could be absorbed by the Bill, although he chose to take a different view.

In some ways, I regard this debate as a sad day. I should make clear my own interest as a member of the NUJ, although I am not in any way speaking on its behalf. I was in the House on the day when the hon. Member for Hammersmith (Mr. Soley) had the debate on the motion to which he referred. I said then that I was resistant to any measures that might infringe the freedom of the press or require legal measures to control it in any way. That remains my view, but I also said then that it was becoming increasingly difficult for those of us who took that view to defend the excesses of at least some sections of the press.

It is right for hon. Members to acknowledge that the press is, to some extent, our bread and butter and vice versa. On occasions we can sound a little self-righteous, if not priggish, when we complain about the excesses of the press, when we are more than happy to see that and to witness the effect it can produce on unwitting voters when it is done on our behalf.

Mr. Mullin: I cannot remember the last time that the press was excessive on my behalf.

Mr. Bruce: As a Liberal Democrat, I echo the hon. Gentlman's sentiments. I do not believe that the press is excessively committed to putting forward the arguments that I should like to see presented.

The sad fact is that self-regulation has failed. Editors make themselves look a little foolish when they write highly charged critical editorials about the need for independent regulation of the City and an independent investigation of the police, and then say, "But, please, not an independent body to look into the affairs of the British press."

The hon. Member for Hammersmith has put his finger on it—the issue is not whether there should be some measure of assessing the accuracy of reporting in the British press and the rights of citizens to redress, but what that mechanism should be. How can we be sure that that mechanism will be independent? How do we ensure that the citizen feels that he has a reasonable chance of fair redress?

I commend the hon. Member for Hammersmith on the innovative way in which he has brought his Bill to the House. Although I was unable to take part in his investigative committee, it demonstrated his long-standing commitment to this issue. He is aware of the need to get the balance right, and he has sought to canvass a wide range of opinion to shape his bill. The hon. Gentleman should not only be commended for that: hon. Members should take on board the fact that his Bill has been brought here after a great deal of thought, consideration and canvassing of widespread views. That cannot always be said for the Bills that we debate on Fridays, or indeed on Mondays, Tuesdays, Wednesdays and Thursdays.

The hon. Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell), who is not present in the Chamber now, but who hopes to speak, has strong reservations about where the Bill could lead. I have been drawn, reluctantly, to the conclusion that support for a Bill of this kind is necessary, but I am firmly opposed to the many draconian proposals of Sir David Calcutt. I am absolutely opposed to any pre-publication censorship. If we ever begin to travel down that road, the freedom of our press will be in grave jeopardy. I was astonished that Sir David, as a member of the judiciary, did not appreciate the dangerous nature of that proposal. I am pleased to note that the general reaction to it seems to suggest that it does not command widespread support —I am not too sure about the hon. Member for Thanet, North.

It is important to put on record one's appreciation of the great deal of good that is done by the British press. Exchange of information, a change in public attitudes and change in Government attitude could not take place but for the work of the press, and the popular press.

Mention has been made of investigative journalism, but let us consider the simple issues that popular newspapers take up in the right vein. I have an example of one such issue, which demonstrates just how effective the popular press can be on an issue of concern to certain sections of the community. Some time ago, without warning, the children's television programme "Blue Peter" withdrew the subtitles, even though they had been introduced as a result of a poll conducted among children about which programme they wanted subtitled. They had been financed by the National Deaf Children's Society. On the basis of a campaign that consisted of an early-day motion signed by myself and the then right hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South, Jack Ashley and others, which was then taken up by the Daily Star, the BBC's decision was reversed within a week.

I do not believe that the House would have been able to achieve that without the benefit of a popular newspaper identifying that issue as one which the BBC had got wrong. That newspaper launched an effective campaign and encouraged its readers to complain in writing and by telephone. That campaign forced a public corporation to recognise that its decision was indefensible and that it needed to reverse it.

Every hon. Member could quote an issue on which they have enlisted the support of the press. We all depend on our local press, week in, week out, to achieve changes in our communities. It is important to put on record the positive nature of a campaigning popular press. That balances the regret that we feel when certain sections of the press overreach themselves in their determination simply to achieve higher sales.

It is also difficult to pick out recent examples of press excess. The press have ultimately been able to say that, in many cases, the stories that they ran were true. They may have been sensationalised and those stories may have been handled tastelessly, but their basis was true. We must be extremely careful that we do not introduce measures that prevent those stories from ultimately reaching the public domain, given that there is a legitimate public interest in the information that they contain, if not necessarily in the way in which that information is disseminated.

I believe that the hon. Member for Hammersmith has addressed the problems. I have been persuaded by the way in which he conducted his committee and by his long speech—justifiably so—to present his Bill. I was also impressed by the way in which he handled interventions. He demonstrated conclusively that he has thought about the problems deeply and that he is well aware of the dangers of going too far.

This is a sad day. I should prefer to vote against the Bill, because I should like to believe that it has not become necessary. I regret to say, however, that some sections of the press have not heeded their own self-regulatory bodies and the pleas of the ordinary members of the public who have suffered at their hands. They show no signs of mending their ways or adapting their codes of practice. They treat those codes with contempt.

By simply requiring newspapers to be accurate and, when proved inaccurate, to make amends by publishing true statements of equal value to the original misstatement, we are not fundamentally censoring the press, but giving ordinary citizens the right to have their views expressed properly and in a balanced fashion, and to seek redress where necessary.

It will not surprise the House to know that I, as a Liberal Democrat, believe that many freedoms in this country are under attack, but the freedom of the press is not the one which is most threatened. We need positive measures to establish the rights of citizens against the concentrations of power within the estates and the country. We must recognise that there has to be a standard of integrity in high places, which is now being questioned.

In the past two or three weeks, a major British airline has been exposed in the courts as having pursued illegal, fraudulent, corrupt practices to destroy several British companies. In spite of that court case, two chief executives of the company have said that they intend to study the organisation to find out who is responsible and sack them. There is no suggestion of the integrity of responsibility of top management. Even if they did not know what was going on—I do not believe for a minute that they did not —they should resign and accept that they and their company have been found out, and they are not fit to hold public office. Unfortunately, standards in this country are such that we cannot now expect that sort of honour, which used to be the practice, both in public office and in public service in the private sector.

We must accept that the time has come for a modest measure to give individual citizens the right to a fair, accurate and responsible press. The overwhelming majority of the press has those attributes. The problems relating to the local press will not detain the Independent Press Authority. However, we cannot allow to continue the practice of editors who believe that freedom to make money and sell newspapers should be upheld at the expense of trampling on the lives of individuals without the resources to defend themselves.

Mrs. Teresa Gorman: Is it not a fact that most of the investigation in the British Airways and Branson case was done by Richard Branson and Virgin against the background of newspapers publishing scurrilous, inaccurate material allegedly issued by British Airways?

[Mrs. Teresa Gorman]

Therefore, all that the newspapers achieved was to help British Airways in its attempt to undermine Virgin. The newspapers then printed reports of the brave case that Mr. Branson brought in the courts, but they had been party to the British Airways campaign.

Mr. Bruce: That may be true and had the Bill been in place, redress might have been available. However, that is no comfort to British Caledonian, Laker, Air Europe and Dan Air, which were all destroyed by such practices and had no right of reply.

The hon. Member for Hammersmith has introduced a Bill which is, regrettably, necessary. It is extremely well balanced and guarded in what it seeks to do. It commends itself to the majority of the House and should be allowed to make progress so that, in Committee, some of the issues raised may be further considered.

I apologise to the House for having to leave as soon as I sit down, as I have to attend a press conference in the Grand Committee Room on the launch of the report of the Select Committee on Trade and Industry on the pit closures. I am sure that the House will understand why I wish to attend it.

As I said, the Bill is, regrettably, necessary; I hope that the House will allow its passage so that it may be given proper consideration in Committee.

12.6 pm

Mr. Peter Bottomley (Eltham): I understand what the hon. Member for Gordon (Mr. Bruce) has to do—perhaps he will bring a few spare copies of the report back for us.

The House must consider what structures and methods are used in countries where the press is constrained. One of the few good functions of the National Union of Journalists is to support Amnesty International to ensure that the barbed wire comes off the pens in other countries. Some hon. Members will have been present when Hong Kong journalists spoke earlier this week about what was happening among some authorities in China which were restricting not merely journalists' opportunities for reporting what was going on in China, but their freedom to be effective journalists in Hong Kong.

Although many criticisms can be levelled at the NUJ, we should use its expertise and worldwide contacts, and consider Index, produced each year on press restriction round the world, to understand what leads to restraints that go far beyond those being considered by hon. Members today.

There are few wrongs in society that have not been put right without both journalists and editors taking a risk. I shall return to what has now become a more fashionable issue.

The hon. Member for Sunderland, South (Mr. Mullin) was regarded as pernicious and his reports as inaccurate. It was felt that he was undermining the foundations of society as we knew it. It was only when a Conservative Member of Parliament started paying more attention to what he was saying that an alliance began to develop that led to the righting of a wrong.

Although some people who believe in free enterprise may occasionally see a joke that others do not, it is often the unfashionable and the unlikely that deserves to be given an airing.

In many of the instances where people have been challenged to prove that something is accurate, they have not been able to do so immediately. They depend on evidence being brought forward later once the issue has come into the public arena. We should learn from such lessons.

It turned out that haemophiliac sufferers were being poisoned by the blood products that were supposed to extend and enhance the quality of their lives. One person's private guess resulted in research, which was not initially accepted as soundly based. I suspect that some of the researchers, who were not necessarily doctors but people associated with haemophiliac sufferers, wanted to give the issue more prominence.

We must be careful about introducing a requirement for proof. We should allow people to raise issues which, in turn, allow us to overcome disadvantages, distress and other handicaps that must be brought into the public arena. That has to be done before the change can be fully accepted.

Mr. Mullin: I am grateful for the hon. Gentleman's generous reference to me. However, I do not want it to be used in an argument for voting against the Bill. The issues in which I was involved were not based on one person's private guess—I know that the hon. Gentleman was referring to haemophiliacs—but careful research of a sort that, unhappily, is not common among newspaper journalists in a large section of the press. As a result of my research, I found that the entire free press, with certain honourable exceptions, had been unleashed on me. My constituents were repeatedly, and over a long period, told that I was a supporter of the IRA. That is the sort of malicious falsehood which I hope the Bill is designed to correct.

Mr. Bottomley: That may be so. I recommend that those listening and those who read the debate read the hon. Gentleman's book. It is a good example of what a journalist or a non-journalist can achieve by studying published sources and talking to people.

One of the earliest cases that I took up as a Member of Parliament was that of a young man who had been wrongly convicted of attempting to steal on an underground train. I visited him in prison. He did not appeal against his sentence of three months—which I thought was far too severe—as he thought it best to get the sentence behind him and get on with his life.

Five years later a journalist reported a case of a detective sergeant who was suspected of framing someone. It was only then that we linked the two cases and discovered that the detective sergeant had been a detective constable and had been involved in framing my constituent and one of his friends. I am not saying that all the good things justify any particular example of the worst behaviour of the press. It is important that people speak up for what the role of the press can be, and we must ensure that we preserve that role.

I am speaking against the Bill, and I shall vote against it if there is a vote. I welcome the debate. It is a good idea to have more debates on the freedom and practices of the press. The hon. Member for Hammersmith (Mr. Soley) should be congratulated not only on his speech but strongly on the work that he and his colleagues put in to the Soley report and the hearings. I pay tribute to my hon.

Friend the Member for Staffordshire, South (Mr. Cormack), who chaired the proceedings in an admirably effective way.

I shall make various references to the inquiry. First, I acknowledge that the form that the inquiry took is one which the House should by vote insist takes place in various other areas where the Government are minded to propose legislation or to intervene when the Government have proposed legislation to ensure that it happens as well. In three hearings, we have seen that it is possible to cover a lot of ground and get a lot of information into the open.

I shall make a declaration of respect for the media, affection, occasional frustration, normally because they do not take up my causes early enough, and frequent anger when I see them doing things which are avoidably painful to others. On rare occasions I have low levels of writing income from them, rare payments of legal fees and sometimes damages for things which they have said or done. I hope that that list covers enough declarations of interest to keep everybody else happy.

I ask a question: how do people in the United Kingdom deal with Members of Parliament who damage others? How do people deal with a Member of Parliament who goes too far, is inaccurate or is reckless, malicious or simply mistaken?

As Peter Preston said on page 80 of the Soley report,

"A functioning democracy is rough trade, as the House itself sometimes shows. So is the press."

When people question how we should get what we might call control over press mistakes, we should ask how it happens when we do the same in the House. A free Parliament and a free press are both essential parts of democracy.

How do people deal with lawyers in court who try to get witnesses to say something is true when the witness knows that it is not true? Most of us who have had any experience of courts know that lawyers, paid professionals, can, almost without limit, exert immense pressure, sometimes over several days, to get people to agree to something to which they should not agree, knowing that it is not true. What redress is there for ordinary people in such cases?

Mr. Garnier: Let me declare an interest as a member of the Bar. Barristers in court do not seek to do anything other than put their client's case. It would be a professional offence for barristers to advance a case which they knew to be false. I hope that my hon. Friend the Member for Eltham (Mr. Bottomley) is not suggesting that barristers spend their time persuading people to change their minds when the lawyer knows that what he is proposing is based on a falsity.

Mr. Bottomley: May I put it to my hon. Friend in roughly the sort of words that lawyers use? It is not simply in civil and criminal courts; it is also in tribunals. The best example I have is when I assisted a constituent in a case in which the Inland Revenue was appealing against a rate reduction. A clever lawyer who I do not think is in the House at present said to Mrs. So-and-so, "I put it to you that this, that that and the other is the case." She said, "It is not true." For half an hour, the lawyer banged away. He was a professional and she was a small, frail pensioner who had had unbelievable aggravation from the people next door, which is why her rates evaluation had been halved.

The lawyer went on and on. Eventually, I slipped her a note as I could not speak. She said to the chairman, "Excuse me. Can I ask this gentleman if he has been instructed to say this by the Inland Revenue and by the council, or is he making it up?" That was the collapse of the lawyer.

I have been in magistrates courts, civil hearings and criminal courts in which lawyers have continued in the way that I have described. I accept that no lawyer would do anything unprofessional. It is more than I can say for politicians. If that is what my hon. Friend the Member for Harborough (Mr. Garnier) is putting to me, I give way to his pressure.

Ms. Glenda Jackson (Hampstead and Highgate): Surely the basis of the hon. Gentleman's argument is in the examples that he has given to the House. There is a comparative equality of the ability to refute whatever point is put forward. The Bill of my hon. Friend the Member for Hammersmith (Mr. Soley) defends the individual who is traduced by the press. The argument against that individual goes into millions of homes and there is no possibility of the individual countering that argument on a one-to-one basis.

Mr. Bottomley: If someone such as George Carman QC takes a day or two to interview someone in court, and if it is reported widely, there is the same impact and the same inability to come back. I would argue that Members of Parliament may be able to speak of an individual from outside in a way which is reported with the same impact, so I do not think that there is an absence of equivalence.

About a week ago, I asked my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister whether the same rules should apply to political parties in advertisements, for lawyers in court and jounalists on newspapers. I would have added Members of Parliament, but for some reason the Bill of Rights stopped me from doing so. Would he propose legislation to require those three groups always to be accurate, and provide equal time for balancing arguments when people disagree with what has been said, establish a statutory body which would adjudicate and let such statutory bodies have the power to impose fines if, at the time of adjudication, it turned out that the person who had made the remark was not convincing when there was a hearing? The Prime Minister's answer was no. That was sensible.

Ms. Angela Eagle (Wallasey): My interpretation of the Bill is that there is no chance of fines unless the newspaper responsible refuses to print a correction. As most editors say that they are in favour of prompt corrections, I am not sure whether the hon. Gentleman is exaggerating what the effect of the Bill will be. I have been listening to him refer to the problems with the Bill. Everyone recognises that there have been problems with the press. Does the hon. Gentleman have any views as to how the press should be dealt with? He does not seem to have put his views forward so far.

Mr. Bottomley: I am against the Bill. If the hon. Lady reads in Hansard what I have said, she will find the answer to her intervention.

William Cobbett, who helped to break the secrecy with which this House conducted its affairs hundreds of years ago, said:

"no general rule can be given beyond this; that, the right and the duty being clear to our minds, the means that are surest and swiftest are the best."

That is the argument for legislation because we all are supposed to know that the law stops people doing what the law says they should not do. There is no evidence of that.

[Mr. Bottomley]

In the United Kingdom, one third of men have already been convicted of a criminal offence for which they could have been sent to gaol for six months or more by the age of 30, but that is a side issue. William Cobbett went on to say:

"In every such case, however, the great and predominant desire ought to be not to employ any means beyond those of reason and persuasion, as long as the employment of these afford a ground for rational expectation of success."

I argue that, by bringing such issues into the public gaze, and by getting the proprietors, the editors and the journalists as well as the people and the politicians to discuss it, we will continue to see improvements of the sort that we have seen in the press recently.

Mr. John Gorst (Hendon, North): Will my hon. Friend give way?

Mr. Bottomley: I will give way to my hon. Friend and then I shall not give way again.

Mr. Gorst: When my hon. Friend refers to problems with speeches made in the House and the treatment of people in the courts, is he arguing that, because there is a problem, we should not try to find a solution for the press treatment of people? Is that part of his argument? I got rather lost.

Mr. Bottomley: It is difficult by law to establish the truth. It is difficult to rely on a statutory body having any more beneficial results than the Press Complaints Commission has at present. Some of the criticisms of the PPC are fair and may go beyond good debating points, but most of them are wrong.

During my time in the House, many people have come to me with problems of many kinds, but few have been about their treatment in the press. Generally, there are fewer complaints now than there could justifiably have been a few years ago. There are some scandals, but even the hon. Member for Hammersmith would not argue that his Bill would get rid of all of them.

My hon. Friend the Member for Stamford and Spalding (Mr. Davies) asked what would happen when people defied the law. Do we create some kind of licensing system for journalists which prevents them from working until they kowtow to the courts? Would we end up with the sort of controls that now exist for broadcasters? [Interruption.] My hon. Friends will have an opportunity to speak later in the debate.

The problems of accuracy go beyond the tabloids, about which much could be said. The best recent example was in the Church of England newspaper in which an eight-line report about a meeting on the ordination of women was followed two weeks later by a 13-line apology for about five errors in the original eight lines.

My hon. Friend the Member for Thanet, North (Mr. Gale) gave a good example in the way that The Times treated a person in a current case. The same problem occurs with The Daily Telegraph, which continues to use unreliable correspondents, especially on religious affairs.

The Times refused to correct a report by Clifford Longley when Archbishop Runcie announced his retirement. Longley said that Runcie could not make up his mind about the rights and wrongs of the Falklands war. He was factually and demonstrably wrong for the year of the war and for every year since.

There are also problems about the sensitivities of journalists. In the Soley hearings there was a rather curious session with Pat Healy of the NUJ ethics committee which seemed to hold proceedings on one case in secret. There were other odd happenings which reminded one of the 1920s when the NUJ complained about Members of Parliament, especially Labour ones, writing and said that journalism should be preserved for journalists. That is the sort of closed society for which people seem to argue all too often, and it is also a restraint on the press.

We would do well to place on record what the Cross-Media group said in its evidence to the committee:

"Stripped of its verbosity, the Bill boils down to simply this: there should be a legal obligation on newspapers, enforceable by the Courts, to publish corrections of 'factual inaccuracy' as adjudicated by an Independent Press Authority. It has nothing to do with sleaze, bias, sensationalism, unfairness or any of the other sins that journalists can commit.

Mr. Soley's Bill is perhaps well-motivated, but it is wrong-headed and potentially dangerous to the freedom of the press in this country."

I do not say that I agree with the way that that was put. As I said in the House, I think earlier this week, Members of Parliament should be even more keen to protect the freedom of the press than members of the press.

We cannot do our job under a system that would lead to greater and greater constraints on the press. I do not say that all the constraints should be removed because there are ways in which the laws of libel can be adapted.

There is an important step to be taken by saying that no law should apply to the press that does not apply to others as well. In such ways we can move forward.

I do not think that Dugal Nesbitt Smith of the Newspaper Society was wrong when he said that the price of a free press was worth the price of a few bad newspapers. I do not think that there are bad newspapers, only bad parts within them, and there is some sloppiness and habits which grow but which can be squashed. For example, The Sun is not sued for libel nowadays. Some years ago it was casual about libelling people, but now it is not.

There are problems even with newspapers such as The Guardian, because this week Peter Preston, whom I have quoted with approval, published an article by the Archbishop of York saying that The Guardian leader the day before had been wrong and that he had not mentioned the present royal family at all. In the same issue, there was a letter from Dame Barbara Cartland built on the false assumption that the paper had made. That is sloppy work within the newspaper and should be stopped, but a statutory authority is not needed to do that.

Malcolm Rutherford of The Financial Times, a well-respected journalist, said:

"The existence of the Bill is worrying. A blanket law to stop tabloids going as you think perhaps too far would have a very serious effect on The Financial Times."

The House should take such evidence seriously.

Mr. Fabricant: Some serious newspapers gave evidence to the effect that the Bill is unnecessary for them because it will require them only to print a correction if they get something wrong. We are aiming at irresponsible newspapers which print something that is incorrect and refuse to print a correction.

Mr. Bottomley: My hon. Friend must establish why statutory regulation would go much further than voluntary regulation. The House and the country must decide what to do if people decide to defy such regulation. The courts will also have to establish what they will do in such instances.

As the right hon. Member for Chesterfield (Mr. Benn) often says, the history of this country is built as much on defiance as on compliance. My hon. Friend would probably discover that people would ask, "What is the next stage?"

I fear that, one way or another, we shall end up with a small bit of barbed wire around the pen. I do not want that, and the time to stop it is now.

Mr. Bruce Grocott (The Wrekin): Like so many hon. Members who have spoken, I begin by warmly congratulating my hon. Friend the Member for Hammersmith (Mr. Soley), not only on his care and trouble in introducing the Bill, but on the tremendous amount of work on the pre-hearings. I found them thoroughly enjoyable and most helpful and informative.

I shall make a couple of simple declarations of interest because they will affect part of my speech. I am a member of the National Union of Journalists, although I do not agree with the NUJ view on this issue. Secondly, I spent some time working in broadcasting and that experience greatly affects my attitude to legislation of this sort.

I should like to establish a couple of propositions that provide strong arguments for my hon. Friend's proposed legislation. The first key proposition is that there are basically two types of media—print and broadcasting. Print is subject to self-regulation, and broadcasting has a long history of democratic regulation and control. Despite that contrast, the almost universal acknowledgement is that, especially on news and current affairs, the broadcast media are freer, more accurate and the more independent. This may sound paradoxical to hon. Members who hold the Conservative philosophy, but that area of the media commands most public respect.

There is endless evidence for that. One piece of evidence that I like especially was produced by the BBC. From time to time it conducts a test of the believability of different sources of news and current affairs. The rating scale is from nought to five. At the top of the believability rating —I do not know what conclusion is to be drawn from this —is "Crimewatch" with a rating of 4·4. It appears that everyone believes it. I am not sure whether that is a good or a bad thing. I shall not detain the House with that finding because we are concerned basically with newspapers and current affairs programmes.

Near the top of the believability scale is ITN's "News at Ten", with a rating of 4·1, along with the BBC's nine o'clock news. "World in Action" and "Panorama" are also high on the list.

The newspapers are far lower down the scale. At the bottom, beneath the Daily Mail and the Daily Express —this will not greatly surprise the House—are the party-political broadcasts. I am happy to report that the Labour party-political broadcasts had a higher believability rating than those of the Conservative party. Beneath even the party-political broadcasts was The Sun, with a rating of 1·4. As the evidence is overwhelming that the public place trust in the broadcasting media and not in the press, I shall not labour the point.

The source that I am about to quote might destroy our bipartisan spirit on some issues. In an important NOP poll before the last general election, potential voters were asked whom they trusted to give them the truth about the facts surrounding the election. They were asked, "How much do you trust each of the following to tell the truth in the coming general election campaign?" It appeared that 67 per cent. of those polled trusted ITN. That result showed that they trusted it either a "great deal" or a "fair amount". Clearly they trusted ITN to tell them the truth about the campaign. There was a similar figure for the BBC's news.

The respondents were then asked how much they trusted the daily newspapers to tell them the truth about the campaign. Two of the categories were "a little" or "not at all". It appears that 64 per cent. trusted them "a little" or "not at all". That should concern hon. Members. It should be our right to receive good and accurate information, especially in the context of the democratic decision that the electorate has to make at the end of a general election campaign. There was not much sympathy from those who are now sitting on the Government Benches in response to the clear distortions and lies with which we were confronted in the run-in to the last general election and to previous elections.

The resignation of the former Secretary of State for National Heritage has been mentioned. The key quote that I heard from both the right hon. and learned Member for Putney (Mr. Mellor), the former Secretary of State, and, I think, from the Prime Minister—this was the opinion of Conservative Members generally—was to the effect that it is outrageous that members of the Cabinet should be selected by the press, especially the tabloid press. I say, "Amen to that", but I wish that it had been found similarly outrageous when Governments were being selected by the press——

Mr. Fabricant: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Grocott: I would rather not. I want to be brief. The hon. Gentleman has intervened on two or three occasions already.

No one can dispute that the press has enormous power. Similarly, it cannot be disputed that its standards of accuracy in its news and current affairs coverage are not a fraction as good as those of the broadcast media.

Despite the evidence that the press, when compared with the broadcasting media, leaves a great deal to be desired, all the trends in recent years are towards making the broadcasting media more like the press rather than the other way round. I cannot think of any other area of national life or consumerism where it is said, "We have two machines for news and current affairs, one of which works pretty well while the other is flawed in many respects. Let us copy the flawed machine and move further in that direction." Unfortunately, that is precisely what is happening.

The Government carry a fair degree of responsibility for the way in which things are drifting. The former Home Secretary, now the Foreign Secretary, said during the passage of what was the Broadcasting Bill that one of his aims was to make broadcasting a bit like browsing through a good bookshop.In other words, he envisaged numerous channels. He seemed to be saying, "Let us use the model of the press for broadcasting where you pick and choose what newspaper you want, and have a proliferation of broadcasting channels to mirror it." We have seen what has happened since the Bill was enacted.

As deregulation has begun in broadcasting, new questions have arisen about the accuracy, fairness and quality of the broadcasting media. There is a direct correlation between the current regulatory system and the quality of news and current affairs programmes. What has happened since the Broadcasting Act 1990? There has been a loss of production facilities and a cut in programme budgets. Good news and current affairs programmes cannot be produced on peanuts. Standards are falling, there is less training of journalists, less money is being spent and there is greater competition for audiences in a narrow field where advertising influences the way in which programmes are made.

Mr. Fabricant: I thought that we were here today to discuss the Bill. The hon. Gentleman has drifted off the point, first to become party political and now with a discussion about the Broadcasting Act.

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Geoffrey Lofthouse): Order. The Chair will decide what is in order.

Mr. Grocott: The hon. Member for Mid-Staffordshire (Mr. Fabricant) has made a couple of interventions and a bogus point of order. I hope that he will listen as I come precisely and exactly to the conclusion of my remarks.

Mr. Fabricant: The hon. Gentleman is going round in circles.

Mr. Grocott: I am not. The hon. Gentleman can read my speech tomorrow if he does not like the oratory.

There is a simple proposition in the Bill, which encompasses the lessons to be learnt from the clear contrast between the broadcast and the print media, and which is moving precisely, gently and moderately towards the establishment of some sort of standard. The only power within the Bill is to correct inaccuracies. It is a simple measure which recognises that quality news and current affairs reporting cannot happen by accident. I know that many Conservative Members think that a free market delivers everything, but it palpably does not deliver everything needed for quality news and current affairs. I am staggered that the Bill has any opposition when it is simply about correcting factual inaccuracies.

The PCC's code of practice states:

"Whenever it is recognised that a significant inaccuracy, misleading statement or distorted report has been published, it should be corrected promptly".

All the Bill does is to provide for the statutory framework in which that can happen.

Some of my many, many friends who are journalists and fellow members of the National Union of Journalists are concerned about the Bill. Item 4 of the NUJ's code of conduct states:

"A journalist shall rectify promptly any harmful inaccuracies, ensure that correction and apologies receive due prominence and afford the right of reply to persons criticised when the issue is of sufficient importance."

Of course, it is not always within the power of a working journalist to guarantee that redress. This modest Bill will help good journalists because it enshrines the codes of practice of the PCC and the NUJ. The assumption in those codes is that we know what is accurate or inaccurate. No one denies that the matter can be complex, but there is an assumption that we can find out through some machinery what is accurate or inaccurate. The only argument is what body should provide that machinery.

There is a philosophical difference between Conservative and Labour Members. The evidence is overwhelmingly on the side of people who, like myself, believe that good news and current affairs reporting does not happen by accident and by just hoping that the training and the money will be provided. Good news and current affairs reporting occurs when a proper democracy understands and accepts that there are times when there is need for democratic regulation and control. That is not a revolutionary statement. Such a system exists in the broadcasting media and has served this country well in the outstanding field of investigative journalism in which so many broadcasters have received notable awards over the years.

My hon. Friend's Bill redresses a little the balance of free market forces and democratic regulation, and tries to bring the press closer to the standards of broadcasters. It should be enthusiastically supported by those who cherish our democratic values.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for National Heritage (Mr. Robert Key): I am conscious of the fact that this is a precious Back Benchers' day, but it may be convenient to the House if I spend a few minutes explaining the Government's stance on the Bill. I thank the hon. Member for Hammersmith (Mr. Soley) for the opportunity to have such a wide-ranging debate both in the House and beyond. I have not noticed any particular differences between the two sides of the Chamber, but impressive arguments have been deployed in all parts of the House. As the hon. Member for Hammersmith said, it is, above all, a parliamentary matter.

The Government's attitude will come as no surprise to the hon. Gentleman. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for National Heritage gave due warning of it in his statement to the House on 14 January, on the occasion of the publication of the "Review of Press Self-Regulation" by Sir David Calcutt.

The House will be aware that in the report of his review, Sir David makes six recommendations. Five concern privacy, while the remaining—and central—recommendation concerns the future basis for regulation of the press. So far as the recommendations on privacy are concerned, my right hon. Friend accepted the case for new criminal offences to deal with specified types of physical intrusion and surveillance. Subject to further examination of the details of the proposed offences and to consultations with practitioners, the Government will therefore bring forward legislation in due course to give effect to those proposals in England and Wales.

My right hon. Friend accepted also Sir David's recommendation that further consideration should be given to the introduction of a new tort of infringement of privacy. He accepted that we would, in addition, look at the possible relevance of the Data Protection Act 1984 in situations where there is misrepresentation or intrusion into personal privacy by the press; give further thought to the legislation on the non-identification of minors and others in court proceedings; and look at the legislation covering interception of telecommunications.

Giving effect to all those recommendations will represent a substantial programme of work, not just for my own Department, but for the several other Government Departments—particularly the Home Office and the Lord Chancellor's Department—concerned with different aspects of them. Suitable machinery will be established for overseeing and carrying forward that programme of work in the fastest possible time scale.

It is, however, Sir David's central recommendation, concerning the future basis of regulation of the press, that is most relevant for the purposes of today's debate. As the House will know, Sir David's overall conclusion is that the Press Complaints Commission is not an effective regulator of the press. He considers that the press would not now be willing to make the changes needed to make the commission the truly independent body, commanding the confidence of the public as well as the press, that it should be.

He therefore recommends that the Government should introduce a statutory complaints tribunal on the model of that described in the 1990 report of the committee on privacy and related matters, which Sir David chaired. The tribunal would have wide-ranging powers, including the power to restrain publication of material in breach of its code of practice; the ability to require the printing of apologies, corrections and replies; and the ability to award compensation, impose fines and award costs.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State set out clearly the Government's initial response to that recommendation. I remind the House of what he said. He made it clear that the Government agree with Sir David that the Press Complaints Commission, as at present constituted, is not an effective regulator of the press. We also recognise the strength of the case that Sir David makes in his report for a statutory tribunal with wide-ranging powers. We have not ruled that out. At the same time, we are conscious that action to make such a body statutory would be a step of some constitutional significance, departing from the traditional approach to press regulation in this country. In the light of those considerations, the Government would be extremely reluctant to pursue that route. A most persuasive case for statutory regulation would need to be made out.

Mr. Ashton: Is there not a precedent? The police used to investigate complaints against the police force—for instance, allegations that they had beaten people up to obtain confessions—and we were forced to establish a statutory Police Complaints Authority. The local government ombudsman and the body appointed to investigate the national health service are also statutory. Why should the Government resist the establishment of a similar authority to investigate the press?

Mr. Key: I shall address that point shortly. Part of the reason is that we want to listen to the voices of those who have a great deal to say, but who may not have had time to marshal the evidence—and, indeed, their own thoughts—on this crucial issue, which is possibly more important than all the other issues put together. I refer to the constitutional relationship between the state and the press.

My right hon. Friend said that, in reaching a final view, we would want to take account of the debate surrounding the Bill. He explained that the Government would advise the House that, although we had not announced our final conclusions regarding a statutory regime, we could not support the Bill.

As I have said, the main reason why we do not support the Bill is that we are not persuaded at this stage that statutory regulation of the press is necessary or would be appropriate. That does not mean that we are satisfied with the present approach to self-regulation. Sir David pointed to the shortcomings of the present arrangements and we consider his detailed analysis compelling. We hope that, in the light of his report, the press will now give further consideration to improving self-regulation; we want it to address in particular the 12 points listed as deficiencies in Sir David's report, which cover mainly the independence and procedures of the Press Complaints Commission.

The most important step that the press could take would be to introduce reforms designed to ensure the independence of the Press Complaints Commission. Sir David charted the way forward; we hope that it will be followed. Sir David also identified the need for a further look at the Commission's code of practice, which would need to be amended to reflect more closely what was proposed in the privacy committee's report. In particular, the code would need to spell out more specifically what "public interest" considerations had to be satisfied for publication to be considered justifiable. The Government look to the press to take all those points to heart; it remains to be seen whether, and how far, the press will respond to the crtiticisms in Sir David's report.

Mr. Michael Carttiss (Great Yarmouth): I hope that I am not premature in expressing a desire for my hon. Friend to conclude by wishing the Bill a fair wind, which would allow the very developments for which he asks to take place here. I refer to his personal view, rather than to his description of the Government's response.

As my hon. Friend has said, this is a parliamentary matter. I have an awful fear that the Government are intimidated by the press and are afraid to act; alternatively, they may think that they owe a debt to the press, because it helped them to win the general election. We are told that no one believes reports in newspapers such as The Sun and the Daily Mirror—although everyone seems to have voted Tory as a result of reading The Sun.

Can my hon. Friend reassure those of us who have our doubts about the Bill on certain grounds but who believe that such issues should be examined in the way suggested by the hon. Member for Hammersmith (Mr. Soley) and that that could best be done by giving his Bill a Committee stage? That would enable hon. Members to examine, freely and openly, the very issues about which the Government are concerned, but in which they do not wish to become involved at this stage.

Mr. Key: I am going to ask my hon. Friend to do something very difficult and unusual. I am going to ask him to make up his mind without the assistance of a Government pressing him in a certain direction. I shall not seek to cajole him, or any of my right hon. and hon. Friends, at 2.30 this afternoon.

My right hon. Friend and I have of course studied carefully the many editorials which have appeared on the subject, and not only in national newspapers. As my right hon. Friend also made clear, the Government will want, before reaching final conclusions on a statutory regime, to take account of not only today's very useful and timely debate but the outcome of the inquiry into privacy and media intrusion that the Select Committee on National Heritage has set in train. We look forward to receiving the Select Committee's report as a further significant contribution to the public debate on these issues. We have had a number of excellent speeches today from both sides of the House and members of the Select Committee.

Mr. Mandelson: The hon. Gentleman seems to be joining the herdlike, headlong rush of opposition to the Press Complaints Commission. As it happens, I am not in that herd. However, both I—and, I believe, the House—should like to know precisely why the Government think that the Press Complaints Commission has been so ineffective. Is it because the code of practice is flawed? If so, in what respect? Or is it because the commission has not invoked the code sufficiently? Or is it because the code has been flouted once a judgment has been reached? Which of these three is it?

Mr. Key: The hon. Gentleman has anticipated the next paragraph of my speech. I shall, of course, come to his absolutely crucial and reasonable request.

I must make it clear to the hon. Member for Hammersmith that we regard his Bill as premature and misconceived. I have already explained why we regard it as premature. We think that there are other voices to be heard and other judgments to be made. We think that it is misconceived because, in effect, it invites the House to tackle the complex issues raised by Sir David's review on a piecemeal basis, rather than in the round.

The Bill has two main purposes. It creates an Independent Press Authority, with duties to promote high standards of journalism, and it establishes a right to a published correction of factual inaccuracy in the press.

We believe that the Bill has a number of defects. The new press authority, for example, would have wide-ranging duties to promote ethical standards among the press and to issue advice and guidance, but it is given no powers to enforce its codes of practice or any other guidance material. It has potentially far-reaching powers to order the publication of corrections of factual inaccuracy, but the Bill makes no attempt to define what is meant by "factual inaccuracy".

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett (Denton and Reddish): The Minister suggests that the Bill is premature. I am aware of hundreds of people throughout the country who have suffered personal tragedies—someone having been assassinated or murdered, or a member of a family having been arrested—and have then been subjected to horrendous doorstepping by the newspapers. Is it not time that we did something to stop that now, instead of going on talking about it, month after month, leaving more people to be subjected to that sort of treatment on their doorsteps, which is absolutely disgusting, given the horrors that they are already suffering?

Mr. Key: I do not deny for one moment that many of our constituents and many hon. Members fall into that category. The hon. Member for Clydebank and Milngavie (Mr. Worthington) highlighted that problem by seeking to substitute his judgment regarding what should be the editorial policy of newspapers for that of a particular newspaper whose editorial policy he does not like. That is the danger of following the route suggested by the hon. Gentleman.

Mr. Hargreaves: The point made by the hon. Member for Denton and Reddish (Mr. Bennett) was that enough time had gone by and enough people had been subjected to horrendous doorstepping after not just criminal offences but tragedies in their own families. Their house may burn down, and the press immediately turn up on the doorstep. Surely the flaw in this Bill, if it is flawed, is not its suggestion that the press should improve its conduct—a suggestion which both I and the whole House probably believe to be admirable—but the fact that it does not balance sufficiently the freedom of the press, encompassed in its title, and privacy from doorstepping.

Mr. Key: The hon. Member for Hammersmith referred to freedom of information, which is an important issue. I do not seek to sidestep it, but it stretches far beyond the press and my Department's responsibility. My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister feels passionately about open government, one manifestation of which is his determination to extend the principle of the citizens charter—an idea which, initially, was derided but which is having a substantial and welcome impact on public service. My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster is urgently undertaking much work on the issue of open government and the management of information right across government.

Mr. Worthington: The Minister referred to my intervention. I would be critical of the editorial judgment of some newspapers—that is my right, but it is their right as well. I disagree with some of the points that have been made by my hon. Friends. I buy newspapers because they are biased and because I know what I read in them will be what I like. I expect that that is true of every hon. Member. If a newspaper gives an opinion, it is an opinion, but if it says, in direct quotes, "Someone said that", and they did not, that is a lie. It should be seen as a lie and nailed as such.

Mr. Key: The hon. Gentleman is right about that point, but I was referring to his comments on Somalia.

I am being pressed by hon. Members on both sides of the House, which, perhaps unusually, I find helpful, because it shows the urgency to take on board the need for some reform. We are now arguing, I hope in an informed and balanced way, about the need for such reform.

It might have been possible to correct some of the matters to which I have referred during the Bill's passage through Parliament if we had been able to endorse its underlying policy, but at present we are not in a position to do so. We need to listen further.

What is clear—on this point the Government can express full agreement with Sir David Calcutt—is that, if a statutory complaints tribunal or authority were to be introduced, its remit would have to encompass not only those areas that the Bill seeks to cover but other matters. Sir David makes that point in paragraph 6.4 of his report, where he says that the Bill, which suggests that the press authority should have responsibility for promoting high standards of journalism, does not accept, except in relation to matters of accuracy, how such standards are to be attained.

Mr. Dalyell: The Minister said that he would listen to comment. In the light of what he said about Calcutt, how does he answer the charge by the Guild of Newspaper Editors that we are going down the road of state-appointed press policemen?

Mr. Key: That is one of the problems, which is why we want to listen to the Select Committee. It undoubtedly will have much to say about how the commission should operate. I do not deny the gravity of the hon. Gentleman's charge. That is why I do not wish to be hurried, but I see the need to make haste.

Mr. Mandelson: The Minister said that the Government have not made up their mind about the crucial issue of moving from self-regulation to state regulation, but, within 72 hours of the Calcutt report being published, the Prime Minister let it be known through his press secretary to the parliamentary lobby, that he—he is not an unimportant member of the Government—had now decided against statutory regulation of the press. Was that because he sensed Kelvin MacKenzie's tanks rolling down Whitehall and approaching No. 10 Downing street?

Mr. Key: The hon. Gentleman is being slightly fanciful and is using words that my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister did not use. Quite specifically, my right hon. Friend did not say that he had decided anything. It is alleged that he expressed an opinion, which anyone is entitled to express. I am glad that he has opinions, with which I can always agree.

Sir David's view is that a somewhat different statutory body with wider functions and powers would be needed. He went on to say what he thought those functions and powers should be. As I have said, Sir David's recommendation is still on the table. The Government have not yet picked it up. We want to hear what others think of his ideas. We want to see what response the press is prepared to make to his call for reform.

For all those reasons, we are not able to support the Bill today. It may secure a Second Reading today. If so, we recommend that it should not be passed unless it is suitably amended.

1 pm

Mr. Robin Corbett (Birmingham, Erdington): It has been one of those odd weeks in this place. It started with Ministers and Conservative Members of Parliament on Monday putting the boot into the football pools because they were private firms making private profits and Labour describing the Government's proposals for a national lottery as the unacceptable face of nationalisation. Today Conservative Members want new legal constraints on the press and Labour defends and wants to extend press freedom. The Bill of my hon. Friend the Member for Hammersmith (Mr. Soley) seeks to do just that. However, we shall need to consider in Committee the route by which he proposes to achieve the ends of better accuracy and faster correction for the citizen.

I congratulate my hon. Friend on his Bill and especially on the enormous amount of work that he has put into it. He follows in the steps of my hon. Friend the Member for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell), who is absent today, and my hon. Friends the Members for Cynon Valley (Mrs. Clwyd) and for Clydebank and Milngavie (Mr. Worthington). The central issue of the Bill and of both Calcutt reports seems to be how we balance the freedom of the press, which we too often take for granted, with the responsibility of the press, which it too often ignores in the chase for sales and advertising revenue.

The issue essentially involves the national daily and Sunday press. Regional daily and local weekly newspapers are nearer to their readers, more in touch with them, feature far less often in complaints and are much speedier in putting complaints right. I worked on papers in each category when I had a real job, so I feel able to make that claim.

Various attempt have been made to achieve the balance between freedom and responsibility after bouts of public and parliamentary anxiety about press behaviour and standards. They included the former Press Council, the present Press Complaints Commission and now the repeated Calcutt proposals for a statutory body. The Press Council went because it was recognised that it had failed. It failed because, as with the Press Complaints Commission, owners refused to make clear to their editors the standards that they expected them and their staff to meet.

The new breed of owners have their eyes more firmly on cash than on quality and they enable and encourage an atmosphere in which the object is sales rather than standards. Each should go hand in hand. I do not put the editors in the dock alone. The owners are in the driving seat. They pile on the pressure for sales, especially in the never-ending tabloid war on weekdays and Sundays, but that does not leave the editors blameless.

In earlier days, editors had an independence from owners which has now all but gone. There is no way in which the editor of The Sun, even if he wanted to, could urge readers to vote Liberal Democrat or Labour before a general election because his paper's foreign owner would not allow it. To that extent, he is not free, so he should not feel free to invent stories and put words into people's mouths, whether for fun or for malign reasons, if the paper's owner accepted equivalent responsibility. It is in that sense that I say that responsibility rests with owners. They cannot stand aside and pretend that the editors are in charge. The owners—those owners especially—decide. If an editor is in any doubt about that, he soon becomes a former editor. The central aim of the Bill is simple. It seeks to make it

> "the duty of newspapers not to publish deliberately or carelessly, inaccuracies or statements designed to mislead, and to correct promptly and with due significance inaccuracies which they have published or misleading statements for which they are responsible, apologising for these where appropriate."

The words are not mine. They come from appendix Q on page 119 of the first Calcutt report into privacy and related matters, which was published in June 1990.

The Press Complaints Commission significantly altered that and most other provisions of the proposed code and, in many respects, went back to the inadequate code of the former Press Council. Even then, some editors and owners have chosen to ignore it. It is because the PCC tampered with the Calcutt code that we have Calcutt mark 2 and, in part, my hon. Friend's Bill.

Press and Parliament have been playing a cat and mouse game for years. The press and its owners do not believe that the House will seek to rein in the wilder excesses of publications at the sleazier end of the business because, in so doing, it would be seen to be acting against what little proper investigative journalism is carried out on behalf of the public, mainly by the broadsheets—or the "quality" press, as it titles itself.

In turn, that has encouraged those with little respect for accuracy and a lot of respect for commercial success to take risks because they know that their posher and more responsible brothers, like the American cavalry, will ride in and come to their aid in the name of them all. Because the press and its owners have failed to exercise properly the responsibility that goes along with its freedoms, we need to encourage them on behalf of the public.

The Bill stands on its own, although Calcutt is close alongside. In a sense, the row between press, public and Parliament was bound to happen from the moment the press was shown into the last chance saloon with seven editors and eight of the great and the good to set up the Press Complaints Commission and began by watering down the code of conduct proposed by Calcutt.

As they are relevant to the Bill, I shall give two examples that deal with inaccuracies and the chance to reply. As I said earlier, Calcutt stated that it is "the duty of newspapers not to publish, deliberately or carelessly, inaccuracies or statements designed to mislead".

The Press Complaints Commission code said that "Newspapers should take care not to publish inaccurate, misleading or distorted material."

There is an enormous difference between a "duty" and "taking care".

Following the former rule of every journalist when I was at it—if in doubt, leave it out—Calcutt said that it was a "duty" not to publish. The PCC coyly changed that to "take care". The gap is wide and significant. In paragraph 2 of the proposed code, Calcutt said:

"It is the duty of newspapers to allow a fair opportunity for reply when reasonably called for."

The PCC's version is:

"A fair opportunity for reply to inaccuracies should be given to individuals or organisations when reasonably called for."

Again, the House will note the "duty" that Calcutt wanted newspapers to accept became simply "a fair opportunity".

We know, and I think that we understand, that many newspapers do not like to publish corrections, even when they acknowledge that a genuine error has been made. Often, errors are made because of the speed of production. Newspapers often seek to put things right by offering to run another version of the same story, but that is not good enough. It allows the first story to stand so that, as the late Manny Shinwell described it, and inaccuracies and distortions run the risk of being repeated.

"Reporters check the cuttings in the fond belief that they are checking the facts"

I shall give a third example in which a change between what Calcutt wanted and what the PCC delivered sowed the seeds of failure. On intrusion into grief, Calcutt said in paragraph 7:

"Newspapers and journalists serving them should in general avoid intruding into personal grief. Inquiries should be carried out and approaches made with sympathy and discretion."

The PCC massaged this in the following permissive way:

"In cases involving personal grief or shock, enquiries should be carried out and approaches made with sympathy and discretion."

Where Calcutt wanted inquiries avoided, the PCC assumed that they were okay if they were done with "sympathy and discretion". I just do not understand why either editors or owners have any objection to a bid to raise and maintain standards of professional competence and, where inaccuracies happen, to have them corrected. Certainly no working newspaper journalist can properly object to this. As my hon. Friend the Member for The Wrekin (Mr. Grocott) has rightly said, journalists working in broadcasting have to meet far higher standards than anything envisaged in the Bill proposed by my hon. Friend the Member for Hammersmith.

The Independent seems to manage this all right. On page 2, its first home news page, of its edition on Wednesday it carried an apology for a statement—on the face of it a damaging one—made in its edition on Monday. It apologised for that report and then added the most unusual words in my experience

"We are happy to correct this error."

Surely that is the way in which it should be done. I cannot for the life of me see why there is any argument against. I assume that, in this case, there was a civilised conversation between the complainant and the newspaper and that things were sorted out. Such an approach is one of the main thrusts of the Bill and my hon. Friend the Member for Hammersmith lays great stress on the role of the adviser who, he believes, will try to achieve that.

The problem starts where the complaintant and the newspaper cannot agree that an inaccuracy or a misstatement has occurred. That brings us to the real choice of the Bill. Should there be some form of statutory body or should tenders now be invited for an extension to the last chance saloon and yet another go at self-regulation?

We have made it clear that we are opposed to the route that Calcutt has suggested. As the House has heard today, there are bodies set up under statute, but which are independent of government. That may be one of the keys to solving this puzzle. There is the Independent Television Commission, the BBC board of governors, the Broadcasting Complaints Commission, the Advertising Standards Authority, the Office of Fair Trading, the Monopolies and Mergers Commission, and so on. All those organisations have been given life through laws passed here, so perhaps the choice between self-regulation and statutory form needs putting in another way.

We probably all agree that, at least to date, self-regulation has not worked as we intended, and we are entitled to be dubious whether it ever will. We and many others also do not want any form of body that is Government run and seen to be a licensing system. We shall try to find an answer somewhere between the two as we consult and consider our response to Calcutt. In the context of the Bill, we shall see whether there are other ways of getting adequate powers of enforcement if persuasion and reason fail.

The press response to my hon. Friend's Bill might have carried more weight if some of them at least had come out strongly in support of a freedom of information act, a Bill of Rights or an inquiry into the growing threat to true freedom of the press through monopoly ownership and cross-ownership of the media.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The hon. Member mentioned a Bill of Rights. I noted with great interest the speech reported today from the right hon. and learned Member for Monklands, East (Mr. Smith). The Labour party should think carefully before endorsing a Bill of Rights and the large shift from democratic to judicial power which that would entail. Does the hon. Gentleman recall how the Reagan Administration set out successfully to shift the ideological balance of the Supreme Court in the United States? Is the hon. Gentleman aware of the observations of the former chief justice of the Canadian Supreme Court, Brian Dickson? He and his colleagues were the final arbiters on many of the important social issues confronting society. Is that how the Labour party want parliamentary democracy to develop?

Mr. Corbett: I am sure that if I begin discussions with the hon. Gentleman on a Bill of Rights, you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, will pull me up. I am glad to have anticipated the speech of my right hon. and learned Friend the leader of the Labour party. The Bill of Rights would not stand alone, but would be one of a number of other measures that I have mentioned—not least a freedom of information Act. It has long been the Labour party's position that the general provisions of a Bill of Rights should be underpinned by specific measures. However, I shall not develop that issue.

The Labour party and I are not alone in believing that a growing threat to freedom of the press lies in the monopoly ownership and cross-ownership of the media. It cannot be healthy for press freedom that a man who owns 50 per cent. of BSkyB also controls more than 35 out of every 100 newspapers sold each day in the United Kingdom. He also has an effective monopoly of the technology needed to operate satellite pay television services in the United Kingdom, which makes his the only organisation allowed to issue the smart cards needed by satellite viewers.

I have deliberately not mentioned the other issues in the Calcutt report such as intrusion, trespass and illegal electronic bugging as they form no part of my hon. Friend's Bill. However, I have no doubt that the House will discuss them later.

The press should welcome and embrace the Bill's aims and help us to find a sensible way of achieving them. If it will not, we shall have to encourage it to exercise its responsibilities more effectively and to attain higher professional and ethical standards by giving the Bill and Second Reading today.

1.17 pm

Mr. Quentin Davies (Stamford and Spalding): It is a pleasure to follow the hon. Member for Birmingham, Erdington (Mr. Corbett), who made a thoughtful and constructive speech, as did my hon. Friend the Minister. I very much agree with what the hon. Member for Erdington said about the facile way in which a falsehood, once formulated in the press, takes on a life of its own and is endlessly repeated as an established fact.

I was the subject of an amusing example of that a little while ago. The Evening Standard printed an article stating that I was a millionaire. I cannot imagine that any research was undertaken to verify that claim, which was fundamentally false and must have greatly surprised my bank manager. Having been published in the Evening Standard, it has since been repeated nearly every time that my name is mentioned in the press—which does not happen frequently—as an established fact. The claim, which was not defamatory, has established a life of its own. No doubt it greatly increases my credit among shopkeepers and tradesmen. Such examples must be reproduced thousands of times over the year.

Unlike the majority of my Conservative colleagues, I am not intrinsically opposed to a freedom of information Act. I hope that the Government will look more positively at the possibility of learning from the satisfactory experience in the United States.

I am pleased that most hon. Members who have spoken this morning began by congratulating the hon. Member for Hammersmith (Mr. Soley), because he deserves the warmest possible congratulations. In my relatively brief time in the House, I cannot recall any other private Member's Bill which has been the subject of such thorough and thoughtful preparation. That was reflected in the speech of the hon. Member for Hammersmith when he introduced the Bill this morning. His initiative in setting up a committee to take evidence before he introduced his Bill was most valuable. I hope that the same practice will be followed on future occasions. It was a privilege for me to serve on the committee. We took some most interesting evidence, some of which was horrifying in the abuses of press behaviour which it revealed.

The hon. Member for Hammersmith knows that I have one or two fundamental reservations about the principle of his Bill—I have never hidden that from him. Nevertheless, there is no question but that the Bill raises important and timely issues. It would be wrong for the House to bury those issues today by voting against the Bill at this stage. It would be right for those issues to be given full parliamentary scrutiny in a Committee. Therefore, I shall vote without any hesitation for the Bill if I have an opportunity to do so later today.

My reservations can be rapidly summed up because they are essentially matters of principle. It is right for the House always to be extremely reluctant to introduce any sort of regulation, especially a statutory governmental regulation, in any field. It is far too easy for hon. Members to dream up new things that should be regulated and new restrictions that should be imposed on human freedom. Sometimes it is much too difficult to deregulate—and it is rarely done—to get rid of the enormous incubus of restrictions and regulations from which we suffer in our society. It is right to treat with the greatest suspicion any suggestion that we should regulate something that is not regulated at present. It is especially right to treat with suspicion the suggestion that the Government should become involved directly or indirectly in such regulation. When we forget that basic principle, we shall be on our way to a society that becomes so regulated that it suffocates, and possibly loses the right to call itself a genuinely free and open society.

My second reservation, which connects to my first one, is that I am inherently suspicious of any concept of a press law. A press law exists in many totalitarian or semi-totalitarian countries. One should not be worried by the fact that the phrase "press law" is often used in such countries. One should look at the merits of the proposal before us, although a certain amount of suspicion and hesitation are in order.

Mr. Fabricant: Surely my hon. Friend would not refer to Holland as being anything other one of the most liberal nations, although it has privacy legislation. We are not even discussing a privacy Bill today.

Mr. Davies: I agree with my hon. Friend. I shall move on to the question of a privacy Bill in a moment, but I am strictly addressing the Bill before the House today, which is a press law.

We must look at the matter open-mindedly. However, it is right to look at the matter with some hesitation, for the fundamental reason that the press should, in a free society, have exactly the same rights and obligations as all other citizens, no more and no less. When one introduces a law that governs the behaviour of a specific class of citizen —in this case the press—an amount of doubt and scepticism are in order. I put it no more strongly than that.

Ms. Glenda Jackson: On the basis of the hon. Gentleman's argument about equal rights and privileges, would he say that the credit rating of a billionaire should be passed and be equal, or that the credit rating of someone who was not a billionaire should be absolutely equal, too?

Mr. Davies: I have now been elevated to being a billionaire, if I heard the hon. Lady correctly. My credit will be going up by leaps and bounds. I was unable totally to follow the mathematics or the logic of the hon. Lady's intervention, but when I read it in Hansard I promise to think carefully about it.

On the other side of the balance sheet, the Bill has some clear attractions. First and foremost is the appalling state of the press in this country. There is no doubt that in some respects we have a good press. I greatly regret the demise of so many of our good provincial broadsheets over the past 10 years or so. But we have five quality national dailies which are a great national asset. I know of no other western country which has more than two or three national quality dailies. That applies to the continent and to the United States, although the United States has time zone reasons for quality papers on the west coast not circulating on the east coast.

The five national quality newspapers that we all know set extremely high standards of journalism and deserve to be considered among the best newspapers in the world. That is high praise, because there are some extremely good ones, especially in Switzerland and Germany. At the other end of the spectrum, our tabloids are quite appalling. Only Bild Zeitung in Europe competes with the tabloids in this country either for trivialisation and sensationalism, or for low standards in the verification and presentation of stories. Such a national issue concerns us all.

Tabloids are published throughout the world and there are the rather lurid ones at the check-out points in American supermarkets; the National Enquirer is the most famous. There are many others elsewhere, such as Ici Paris or France Dimanche, in France. They serve a certain market for titillation, but it is accepted by readers and everyone else in those countries that the great majority, if not the totality, of what is contained in them is complete rubbish or invention. No doubt they are the more titillating and exciting for that. Sometimes our tabloids seem to have an identity crisis because they do not know whether they belong in that category of publication or are still trying to be newspapers presenting news. The result is the problems with which we are all familiar.

Mr. Garnier: Does my hon. Friend accept that the more disreputably journalists behave, the more obscure the benefits of their freedom tend to be? Thus the defenders of the freest possible press are never more needed than when press freedoms are most abused.

Mr. Davies: That is an unexceptionable and worthy statement of aims.

The second important reason for making use of the opportunity that the Bill presents to discuss these matters is that it is quite clear that the Press Complaints Commission is a paper tiger It no longer has any credibility in any section of society, except of course in the section that dominates the PCC—the proprietors and the editors. The fact that the PCC is dominated by the industry is a weakness which even Lord McGregor, under considerable pressure, has had to recognise.

The Press Complaints Commission suffers from other defects. It is a toothless as well as a paper tiger. No sanctions are available to it and, in their absence, its judgments are likely to be treated with some contempt by those who do not respect the commission's aims, which are in themselves highly laudable.

I have read the commission's last two reports and I was struck by the extraordinary tone of complacency that they reflected. They seemed to suggest that the commission was saying, "Everything is perfect in the best of all possible worlds. We have seen off the enemies of press freedom. Everyone is happy with what we are doing. If we do not pass judgment against newspapers, generally it is because there are no complaints or because the complaints made have no merit." It seems that the continued existence of the commission is not in the public interest. It acts as a screen behind which the worst abuses will continue. If the initiative of the hon. Member for Hammersmith does nothing else—the same can be said of the Calcutt report—I hope that it will bring about sorely needed reform.

I am prepared to be convinced that we should support the Bill. I look forward to its consideration in Committee. The House and the country will greatly appreciate the opportunity to examine in great detail and with much care the important issues that the Bill raises.

I greatly welcome what my hon. Friend the Minister said about privacy. It is the Government's intention to look favourably at the possibility of introducing a tort for breach of privacy. They have a commitment to look favourably at making illegal several of the mechanisms that have been used recently by the media to invade privacy. It seems to be an even more important issue than the regulation of the press. It is based on a fundamental principle to which I believe we all subscribe, which is that in a free society everyone must have the maximum freedom that is compatible with the freedom of others. That principle leads us inexorably to the view that there is an area of everybody's personal life that should be secure from invasion.

My personal belief is that if someone is in public life there is a quid pro quo for entering it, its being a voluntary act. That person must accept that any aspect of his activity that could have any bearing on his public activities or publicly stated opinions should be open to public scrutiny. Therefore, any privacy Bill must have a public interest protection clause.

I am aware of some sad cases of invasion of the privacy of some of my constituents. One, for instance, is by no stretch of the imagination a public figure. He found that two pages in the News of the World were devoted to his private life. That is inconsistent with the basic principle that in a free society people's privacy should be immune from attack in that way.

Various methods have been used by the media recently to invade the privacy of citizens. They include the bugging of telephone conversations, purchasing purloined photographs or private correspondence, corrupting so-called friends or acquaintances of the media's targets and the use of surreptitious electronic or photographic surveillance devices of various sorts. It is not an exaggeration to say that we have the use by the media here in the 1990s of methods that are more usually associated with the operations of secret police forces in totalitarian societies. That is a serious matter and a practice that should be brought to an end rapidly, and I hope that it will be by the implementation of the proposals to which my hon. Friend the Minister referred.

Mr. Fabricant: Does my hon. Friend share my concern that if privacy as a concept is introduced into civil law —it has been said already that it is those who are perhaps weak and financially less able to defend themselves who are most at risk—the tort will be available only to those who are rich and powerful unless we provide legal aid or another mechanism to enable those most at risk to use the civil courts?

Mr. Davies: I do not want to be drawn too much into the important matter raised by my hon. Friend, but I can give him three short answers. First, surveillance methods such as bugging should be brought within the criminal law and, therefore, subject to criminal prosecution in verified instances of such behaviour. Secondly, there should be a civil tort of privacy, enabling individuals to gain some protection from those who attack their privacy. Thirdly —this is not a matter on which you would allow me to go into any great detail, Mr. Deputy Speaker, as it is rather wide of the debate—there is a major problem because sadly civil legal redress is, in practice, restricted to those on income support—who thereby qualify for legal aid—and those who, unlike myself, are genuine billionaires and can afford to pay lawyers.

If I may be allowed to make a personal plug, I attempted to deal with the problem through a ten-minute Bill during the last Parliament, which would have overridden the rules of the Law Society and the Bar Council that currently prevent lawyers from taking on briefs on a contingency-fee basis. If we had contingency fees, the problem would be solved without a great burden on the Treasury. There would be no danger of a great many frivolous law suits because lawyers taking on such briefs would have to be sure that the cases had merit and a reasonable chance of success or they would not be paid. That would be a useful discipline.

The methods to which I have referred and the whole squalid morass of corruption and intrusion that has grown up in Fleet Street has brought about a new industry which has replaced the traditional industry of blackmail. Throughout the history of society—ours and others—there have been blackmailers. They are unpleasant criminals and we have always treated them as such, with high penalties for those convicted.

The blackmailer has been put out of business because anyone who purloins some document or photograph or bugs some conversation that might be used against an individual no longer has to go to that individual and say, "Unless you pay me money I will reveal all", get £1,000 or £2,000 from his poor victim and risk 10 years in gaol; he has only to go to Fleet Street or Wapping to get tens of thousands of pounds for the information and be hailed a hero, without risk of any penalty.

We have not so much given a new lease of life to blackmail as replaced it with something much more attractive and with much greater economic inducements. We have produced a new and squalid industry that has been the cause of a number of scandals, to which I do not need to refer as they are fresh in our minds.

The House cannot for much longer continue to sweep the matter under the carpet. The hon. Member for Hammersmith has provided us with a splendid opportunity. The Government's initative in setting up the Calcutt inquiry did the same. We have now reached the stage where, as a House of Parliament, we must take some important decisions in the next few months. I hope that, whatever we hear during our debates, we do not hear any more of the argument that we are being premature and that we can continue to avoid making difficult decisions.

Mr. Chris Mullin (Sunderland, South): I know that we are not allowed to see beyond the Chamber, but it is a pity that our debate has not yet succeeded in attracting more than half a dozen members of our free press to the Press Gallery.

I add my congratulations to my hon. Friend the Member for Hammersmith (Mr. Soley) on the dignified, restrained and careful way in which he presented his case. Like many hon. Members who have spoken, in a previous incarnation I was a journalist. For a time, I was the editor of a small but distinguished publication entitled Tribune. All the issues that we discussed today presented themselves to me in that capacity but never caused me any difficulty. It was always taken for granted that if we made a mistake, as we sometimes did, we would correct it and that we would apologise when we were wrong.

I always took it for granted, not merely on questions of fact. If someone of a different opinion felt that it had not been properly represented in our publication, I gave them an opportunity to put their point of view. Previous and subsequent editors did the same.

Mr. Stewart Steven, editor of the Evening Standard was quoted the other day as saying, "You have to be in a profession to understand it well enough to make proper judgments upon it." Many hon. Members who have spoken are in that profession and have made proper judgments on it—and I am glad to add my name to theirs. I have been in that profession 20 years and understand it all too well.

I understand that while we have journalists and newspapers of integrity, they are a minority. I understand that most national and many regional newspapers are controlled by multinational corporations motivated by a ruthless desire for profits regardless of facts twisted or lives ruined. Our worst newspapers are no more than a branch of the entertainment industry run by unscrupulous men and women willing to do whatever is necessary to make money for their proprietors, their shareholders and themselves. They have to some extent debased our way of life and the profession of journalism.

I understand also that some newspapers are owned by proprietors whose interest is not only making profits but seeking an outlet for their political prejudices. That was more the case in the past, but it is still true today. At least some of the old press barons were frank about that. Lord Beaverbrook told the 1947 royal commission on the press, "I own the Daily Express for the sole purpose of making political propaganda and for no other reason." Nowadays, the Maxwells and Beaverbrooks are a dying breed; money is the main motivation now.

I understand that it is one of the functions of much of our tabloid press to assume the role once performed in the Soviet Union by the KGB—the hounding of dissidents on behalf of the state. All the talk about independence from the state is nonsense. The tabloid press often acts as an agent of the state. When the Government have been offended by the actions of a particular individual, a tidal wave of hatred is unleashed on that person. We can all think of examples. One of the most vicious attacks in recent times was perhaps on Peter Tatchell, who had the good fortune to be selected as Labour candidate in Bermondsey. I believe that today politicians of all persuasions are ashamed of what occurred in that by-election. That man's life was ruined: his house had to be boarded up, he came under siege, he received enormous amount of hate mail and he was attacked in the street—on one occasion, by people chanting from a headline in The Sun—and all because of false reporting.

There was the case also of Carmen Proetta who, while washing up in her kitchen in Gibraltar, happened to see from her window the killing by the Special Air Service of three IRA people. It was not as though she planted herself there—it was her own home. Her version of events differed somewhat from the official version. I will not get bogged down in those two versions, but a tidal wave of hate was unleashed also on Carmen Proetta—with some encouragement from the state. Here is one of the better-known examples:

"The Tart . . . The Sun discovers shock truth about IRA death witness Carmen . . . she is an ex-prostitute, runs an escort agency, and is married to a seedy drug peddler".

All that was false, and ultimately had to be paid for in libel damages, but if a correction ever appeared in The Sun—I certainly did not see one—I bet that it was a bit smaller than the article that committed the original offence.

Towards the end of his speech, my hon. Friend the Member for Hammersmith said that those who dared to suggest that there was anything wrong with our system of justice had had to endure a certain amount of hatred in the early days, generated by those who took a different view. I regret to say that that was sometimes encouraged by members of the Cabinet. I am proud to have on my wall, framed, my own front-page headline from The Sun in letters several inches high: "Loony MP backs bomb gang". I also possess various editorials, "Mr. Odious . . . Is there a more odious man in Britain than . . .".

I do not mind any of that. As several hon. Members have already pointed out, politicians are not really entitled to complain. People who depend on votes for a living, however, find it somewhat regrettable that those who peddled such nonsense chose not to deal with the arguments, but, as I said earlier to the hon. Member for Eltham (Mr. Bottomley), preferred to tell my constituents that I was motivated by a love for "the men in balaclavas". I am afraid that a lot of the mud stuck. As I have said, it does not bother me much; those who run public campaigns find that a good denunciation is something to be grateful for, because it shows that they have managed to catch the attention of people whose attention needs to be caught. In such circumstances, the worst that the press can do is to ignore one. That, however, was not the position of Carmen Proetta, an ordinary citizen who, when washing up in her kitchen, just happened to witness events with which she was unconnected. She was given the full treatment.

I treat with contempt any suggestion that the likes of Kelvin MacKenzie are protecting our liberties from the excesses of the establishment. Mr. MacKenzie's loyalty to the establishment is exceeded only by his loyalty to his proprietor, Rupert Murdoch. We must all be amused by the spectacle of editors demanding independence from the establishment while simultaneously queueing to accept knighthoods from the very establishment from which they claim to protect us. What more loyal lickspittles of the establishment can there be than Sir Larry Lamb, Sir Nicholas Lloyd, Sir Peregrine Worsthorne, Sir David English and Sir Alastair Burnet—oh yes, Sir Alastair Burnet too? Anyone in doubt about why those knighthoods were handed over by the state should read the coverage of recent general elections or of the miners' strike. If we have to depend on such people for our liberties, we are all doomed.

I believe that a free press is the lifeblood of democracy. My only regret is that we have no such free press. I feel rather like Mr. Gandhi who, when he came to this country in the 1930s, was asked what he thought of British civilisation. He replied that he thought that it would be a very good idea. If I were asked what I thought of a free press I, too, would say that I thought it a very good idea. The Bill takes a small step in that direction—although, with great respect to my hon. Friend the Member for Hammersmith, it is only a small step.

Having spent most of my life in inquiring journalism, I would not support any measure designed to shackle press freedom, but the Bill does not threaten press freedom in any way; it merely legislates for a minimum standard of integrity, in an area in which all attempts at self-regulation have failed.

Many hon. Members have referred to the appalling state of the tabloid press, and I agree with all that they have said. Indeed, I can add to it, but it is a little too easy to justify what we are seeking to do on the sole ground of the worst example—The Sun. In fact, the problem is not confined to the gutter press. When I went to Vietnam for the first time, in 1973, I was amazed to discover that The Daily Telegraph's Saigon correspondent—who appeared in the paper every day under the name "John Draw"—was actually Nguyen Ngoc Phac, a captain on the general staff of the Saigon army, responsible for press relations. So confident was he that his cover would never be blown that he even used to appear in the Reuter office to tap out his dispatches among all the other journalists, wearing his uniform.

When I went home I dropped a letter to The Daily Telegraph which at that time was, I believe, edited by Lord Deedes. It refused to publish my letter, despite having agreed in advance to publish one. It then wrote back with a lie, saying that while I was correct in assuming that the correspondent was Nguyen Ngoc Phac, and not John Draw, it had no idea that he was an officer on the general staff of the Saigon army.

To test how far freedom of the press went, I then offered this snippet to the diary columns of The Times and The Guardian. From The Times there was only silence. From The Guardian, the reply was that it thought that this news was a bit "so what-ish." I then took the matter to the Press Council, as it then was. I still have the fascinating correspondence that I had with the Press Council over a period of nine months or a year. It went up hill and down dale with reasons why it could not touch this thorny issue with a bargepole.

Lest anyone think that 1973 was a long time ago and that The Daily Telegraph has cleaned up its act since then, I will offer a more recent example, In August of last year The Daily Telegraph increased the price of its Saturday edition from 50p to 60p, without passing on the increase to the newsagents. That followed a reduction in the retailers' percentage 18 months previously. The National Federation of Retail Newsagents attempted to take out an advertisement in The Daily Telegraph to explain the position of its members. The advertisement was refused without explanation.

When I raised the matter with the editor, I received a reply from the circulation director, Mr. C. J. Haslum, which we should bear in mind when told that we have a completely free press which is open to all schools of thought. He said:

> "It is very well established that no newspaper publisher is ever obliged to include in his newspaper any advertisement to which he takes exception, whether on the ground of taste or because it is not in his commercial interest to do so."

So commercial interest, not principle, guides certainly The Daily Telegraph and, I suggest, most of our press.

In Sunderland we have a newspaper called the Sunderland Echo, whose commitment to impartiality is not so great as to prevent its board from donating money, from time to time, to the Conservative party. My relationship with the Sunderland Echo is not bad now, and I am not complaining about it—I hope that they can hear me up there—but it got offer to a rocky start. Now we have a good working relationship. The editor, Mr. Andrew Hughes, is a man of integrity. He is also a member of the Press Complaints Commission. He wrote in The Times on 27 January that my hon. Friend's Bill could turn into a malignant tumour on democracy.

I want to give an illustration from my own experience —only one of a very large number that I could give— regarding the Sunderland Echo, edited at the time by the same gentleman. On 20 May 1989, in a front page lead story, the Sunderland Echo falsely reported that I had attacked leaders of the local Labour council at a public meeting on coal imports. As that was the lead story, it presented some difficulties for me. The paper then rang the leader of the council and put that falsehood to him and got him to attack me. The paper made that the lead story on the following Monday, its next edition. I contacted the editor of the Sunderland Echo. After five days of negotiation and in return for these two false front-page leads, I was rewarded with a five-line correction on page three. The paper was not all that quick in coming forward with that correction; nor was it all that keen to publish it.

I shall give another example from the quality press. I am concerned about the idea that this is all to do with The Sun and the Star. It is not. It is the whole lot of them, basically, with the most obvious exception of The Independent, which is an honourable newspaper and the brightest thing to occur in British national newspaper history in recent years.

I recall a big battle in the Labour party in September 1981. I shall not bore you with the details, Mr. Deputy Speaker, as you were around at the time. The Times published a profile of the three candidates for the deputy leadership. It inserted a false statement about one of the candidates, my right hon. Friend the Member for Chesterfield (Mr. Benn): "City sources speak of a Stansgate trust registered with the Bank of Bermuda", from which members of his family were supposed to be beneficiaries. I rang the Bank of Bermuda to ask whether that was true and it said that not only was there no such trust but that nobody from The Times had bothered to ring to check. I asked the journalist who had written the profile about it and he said that the paragraph that he had included in the article had been removed and replaced with this deliberate falsehood. In due course, but not before the damage was done, my right hon. Friend the Member for Chesterfield was awarded a one-line apology at the end of a letter.

The only views of newspapers editors to which I listen with respect are those of editors such as Mr. Andreas Whittam Smith of The Independent, but I must, with respect, disagree with him. He said that self-regulation has been successful. It has not. In every example—the City of London, that much-derided body—the Solicitors Complaints Bureau, the police investigating the police and the Advertising Standards Authority—self-regulation has been tried but has not worked properly. That is why, not for the first time, we are discussing a modest measure of this sort. If the media are not happy about the Bill, they have only themselves to blame.

It is my pleasure to support the Bill. I regard it as only a small step in the right direction. Honest journalists have nothing to fear from it and, as an honest journalist, I am proud to support it.

With respect, I do not think that the Bill addresses the real issue, which will await later legislation. My hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Erdington (Mr. Corbett) gave us a clue in his excellent speech, in which he outlined the real problem in a democracy. A democracy depends on the free flow of information, without which there is no democracy. It cannot be right that one proprietor should have five national daily and Sunday newspapers and control of all satellite television. It cannot be right that almost all our national newspapers are in hock to enormous commercial interests rather than to the principles to which they pay lip service.

I look forward to the day when a Government genuinely committed to a free press introduce a little liberal anti-monopoly legislation designed to break up the media empires, but until that day dawns I am happy to support the Bill.

1.57 pm

Mr. Michael Carttiss (Great Yarmouth): The hon. Member for Sunderland, South (Mr. Mullin) is not one of the hon. Members with whom I normally find myself even within spitting distance of remote agreement, but I endorse much of what he said. He must not assume that all of us who believe in market forces necessarily think that it is good if market forces lead to the media being owned by one or two people. That is not part of my philosophy.

[Mr. Michael Carttiss]

I share the hon. Gentleman's objection to knighthoods. He expressed his objection to the journalists who accept knighthoods, but I express it to those who recommend them for knighthoods. It is a prostitution of their profession that they accept a knighthood from a Government, and it is a wrong tactic for a Government to seek to buy them off by giving them knighthoods. I must tell the House that, if I am here long enough and Her Majesty the Queen is recommended to offer me one, I shall refuse it. I hope that Kelvin MacKenzie will, too.

Other hon. Members want to speak, so I must constrain myself. I hope that the hon. Member for Hammersmith will not mind if I do not launch into paeans of praise. However, I wish to put on record my admiration of his speech today and the way in which he has tackled the problem. He has made an enormous effort. It is an example of this place at its best when an hon. Member goes ahead in that way, strikes a chord across the party divide and involves what we call "ordinary people"—I hope that we put it in quotes because we are ordinary people, too —who would not normally be involved. I commend him greatly for that.

The hon. Member for Birmingham, Erdington (Mr. Corbett) is another Member with whom I would blush to agree, but today I find myself in agreement with almost everything that he said. He shares the name—we once chatted about the possibility that he might have his ancestry—of the famous Member of Parliament for Great Yarmouth, Miles Corbett, who lost his head for freedom. He was one of those who signed Charles I's death warrant. When Charles II exercised retribution, Miles Corbett lose his head.

One of my predecessors lost his hand in the interests of press freedom in the reign of the previous Queen Elizabeth. He had written a piece that suggested that Queen Elizabeth I should not marry a particularly ugly and senile French duke who was being promoted for her hand. We Yarmouth people have always been rather disinclined to view European potentates with any great favour. My predecessor lost his hand, not for daring to question the Queen joining in matrimony with the ugly French duke, but for suggesting that there was no point in her marrying because she was too old to bear children.

The hon. Member for Erdington highlighted, as did the hon. Member for Sunderland, South, the hypocrisy of the editor of The Sun. I also highlight the hypocrisy of the editor of the Daily Mirror. They suggest that they are the free press upon which the liberties of the nation depend. They are in hock to their proprietors. The Sun is owned by Mr. Murdoch. I am not sure who owns the Daily Mirror now. When Maxwell owned it, he honourably set forth his support for the Labour party. But it is no good the Daily Mirror or The Sun pretending that they are independent.

The quality newspapers are not independent either. The hon. Member for Sunderland, South concentrated our attention on the quality newspapers—this is not all about tabloids. The first time I came to this place, I was about 15 or 16. I had always believed everything that I read in The Daily Telegraph. That is probably why I am a Conservative—I never got over the experience. I sat in the Gallery when I was 16 or 17—I am going up in age because I must have been older than 14. I am sure that I did not read The Daily Telegraph when I was 14. When I read the next day The Daily Telegraph report of the debate that I had attended here, it bore no resemblance whatever to the debate that I had heard.

Mr. Patrick Thompson: Will my hon. Friend give way?

Mr. Carttiss: I shall not give way to anyone because we are running short of time. I apologise to my hon. Friend. Too many Members have given way today.

I share the anxiety that has been expressed about party allegiance. I apologise to my hon. Friend the Minister that I suggested that he and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State might be intimidated. No one could intimidate my hon. Friend the Minister. I said it in case I was not called. I thought that it would be a good soundbite for my local television and radio stations.

Mr. Kelvin MacKenzie addressed the National Heritage Select Committee. He said, "You guys would be nuts if you wanted the American privacy law". I go to the United States quite a bit and I admire the privacy law; indeed, I am wearing a Cape Cod tie. I should be happy for us to have similar privacy.

Because Miss Whiplash has evidently entertained Members of this House, it has been said that we would be nuts to allow the list to be published. Who are those guilty men? Let them be named.

Mr. Ashton: They are all public schoolboys.

Mr. Carttiss: Do not believe it. What about the journalists and editors? We know that the editors of two quality newspapers have had a liaison with a lady of questionable character. Let us publish the Miss Whiplash list, and not merely the names of Members of Parliament on it. Why is Kelvin MacKenzie not publishing it? The best argument that I have heard for the Bill is the fact that he said, "You must be nuts if you want to publish it". If he did not want to publish it, it shows that the United States legislation on privacy and the press is a good law. Let us copy it. The hon. Member for Hammersmith has not.

The hon. Member for Hartlepool (Mr. Mandelson) mentioned the problem of defining the truth and my colleagues have also referred to it. My hon. Friend the Member for Stratford-on-Avon (Mr. Howarth) was concerned about the question of truth and accuracy. However, truth cannot be defined and that is not what we are talking about. There can be different views of the truth.

My. hon. Friend the Member for Eltham (Mr. Bottomley) has left the Chamber. He put up a number of Aunt Sallies and shot them down and he mentioned many matters that are not dealt with in the Bill. Hon. Members tried to use truth as a synonym for accuracy, but one can be accurate but untruthful. It is easy to determine whether something is accurate.

I have no real complaint about my local newspapers, even though they have never contributed to the Conservative party in all the time that they have been in existence. However, one thing has always bugged me. Three or four years ago my local authority applied for assisted area status. I thought that it had no chance of getting it, and it did not. Lord Tebbit was then Secretary of State for Trade and he was not going to give anyone anything. I told the Conservatives and socialists on Great Yarmouth borough council that there was no chance of getting that status and said, "We must stand on our own two feet." The headline on the front page of my local newspaper that week was, "MP says 'You must stand on your own two feet'". That was inaccuracy. It was not telling an untruth as that was what I meant but, by suggesting that I was separating myself from the people that I represent—in an area where generations of my family have lived and worked—it was pretending that I was adopting a position that was inappropriate for me as a Member of Parliament.

Lady Olga Maitland (Sutton and Cheam): Does my hon. Friend agree that, although the local newspaper made an error in that headline, by and large, reporting standards and accuracy in regional papers are higher than those of the national press, the reason being that they cannot afford the heavy cost of a libel action? Their sales depend on credibility, which means accuracy.

Mr. Carttiss: My hon. Friend has stated her case, but I do not think that it was a mistake. The headline was a deliberate inaccuracy and it was in quotation marks—the sort of inaccuracy that we have been discussing.

The hon. Member for Hartlepool was concerned about truth and accuracy in relation to the royal family. He said that the newspapers were talking about the marriage between the Prince and Princess of Wales being in a rocky state, which turned out to be the truth. The fact of the matter is that the prince and princess were pushing the story. I saw a problem with the hon. Member using that as an argument against the Bill, which is concerned with accuracy. That is not a matter of accuracy. People are entitled to express a view about a marriage.

I make no complaint about the intrusion of the press on the private lives of Members of Parliament. No hon. Member has mentioned Sunday Sport, but I am going to give it a plug because I have been in it several times. The famous occasion—famous for me—when I suddenly decided to vote for the Government, something I do reluctantly every day—[Interruption.] Wait a moment. When I see the alternative to the Government, that forces me to vote for them. There was a suggestion that the Whips had used all sorts of blackmailing tactics to persuade Conservative Members to go in the Lobby on the Maastricht Bill. It was suggested that some people had changed their vote, not for the reasons they gave or because of the issues, but because someone knew something about their private life. The next day one of the journalists in the Lobby said to me, "Are you aware that one of your colleagues was threatened that if he didn't vote with the Government the Whips Office would reveal the name of his mistress to his wife?" He asked me what I thought and I said, "I am not worried about my colleagues' mistresses—I've got too many of my own to concern myself with."

Mr. Ashton: Name them.

Mr. Carttiss: Read it in the Sunday Sport.

The next day the Daily Mirror sent two people to the village where I live, where my mother was born and before her my grandparents and great-grandparents. For two days they went around asking my neighbours about my private life. Those neighbours were free to show those journalists the door, as they did. One dear old lady of 80, who has known me since I was a baby, said, "You send the Mirror down to me, boy."—I will have to clean up the language. "The only thing that that paper is any good for is to wipe your backside on." I was away from my house, but those two newspaper people were outside my door. My neighbours kept asking them to go, and eventually they telephoned the police.

If I had changed my vote in the House because I was fearful of some private scandal coming out, the public have the right to know that. If a Member of Parliament puts himself forward to the electorate as a family man, which I do not, and fresh from going to the photographer to be photographed with his wife and adoring children, he then consorts with his mistress, telephone bugged or not, the public are entitled to know.

So, members of the press have a duty which we should be supporting, but they have abused it in many ways. The hon. Member for Hammersmith has done a signal service not just to the House but to the country in obliging us to focus attention on these issues in a small way. If that prods the ample form of my hon. Friend the Minister into coming forward with suitable Government legislation, the Bill will have served its purpose, even if it gets no further. However, I hope that the Bill will reach Committee where the issues will be debated; and there I promise to reveal more of my private life.

2.13 pm

Ms. Glenda Jackson (Hampstead and Highgate): I should like to join the hon. Member for Great Yarmouth (Mr. Carttiss) and others, not in the pages of Sunday Sport, but in congratulating my hon. Friend the Member for Hammersmith (Mr. Soley) not only on introducing the Bill but on the amount of work that so clearly went into it before it was presented to the House. I believe that the title of the Bill, "Freedom and Responsibility of the Press", is a model for what my hon. Friend is attempting to produce. Freedom of the press is essential to any society that wants to be free. However, as we have heard today, that freedom within this country has, in some sections of the press, devolved into licence and its concomitant responsibility has been conspicuous by its absence.

I am sorry that the hon. Member for Eltham (Mr. Bottomley) is not in his place. I was puzzled by his misunderstanding of my hon. Friend's Bill, which contains no attempt to reduce the freedom of the press. Indeed, in his splendid opening speech, my hon. Friend the Member for Hammersmith took time to say how the freedom of the press is and has been diminished. His Bill attempts to ensure that news and information is presented and disseminated accurately by prompting codes of ethical and professional standards that will produce the highest standards of journalism.

The argument that the code proposed by my hon. Friend the Member for Hammersmith 'would be unworkable falls when considered in the light of existing codes exercised by the BBC and the Independent Television Commission over the broadcasting of television and radio. An example of how such codes of practice can work in the best interests of the public is the world service of the BBC, which is regarded—not only by the people of this country, but by millions of people around the world who, in many instances, are attempting to create a democratic society—as a reliable exponent of accurate facts, news and information.

My hon. Friend the Member for The Wrekin (Mr. Grocott) spoke of believability tables, in which the press fell way below television and radio in the public's trust. What protection is afforded for our democratic system and our free society if the press so loses its credibility by abusing its own power? That power should, of itself, be engaged in countering the awesome power of government, and of great wealth, privilege and influence. That credibility is most quickly forfeit when power is exercised without responsibility.

The exercise of democracy in a free society is not solely and totally served by our right to place our votes in ballot boxes. We also need accurate information on which to make reasoned judgments about how we wish to be governed. If that information is tainted, so is the political process and democracy. Freedom of expression cannot be tampered with simply because the views expressed are those that we—on whichever side of the political spectrum—do not wish to hear.

Another sphere of concern of which we have heard only this week relates to the invasion of the privacy of those in power and high public office. That issue has become the focal point for the debate on press freedom and responsibility. The debate has centred on those issues and, regrettably, in some instances, seems to have become stuck. In common with other right hon. and hon. Members, I believe that all citizens should have privacy rights. I also believe, however, that those who hold positions of privilege, power and influence must accept a degree of intrusion into their private lives, particularly if their public power directly affects and can limit an individual's privacy. To give more power to the already powerful is not to strengthen a free society, but to weaken it. All too often, people with no privilege, influence and, increasingly, no recourse to lengthy and expensive legal redress, fall victim to the excesses of the press.

My hon. Friend the Member for Hammersmith referred to good behaviour on the part of the press as part of the code of conduct. The Minister referred to a possible Government Bill which may include a new law of tort on the invasion of privacy. I prefer my hon. Friend's view that the provision should relate to harassment. I can give the House a personal anecdote. A member of my family was criminally attacked, as a result of which he had to be operated on and spent a few days in hospital. On three separate occasions, the already overstretched and overworked staff of my local hospital had to throw off the ward a photographer from a tabloid newspaper. I have not raised that story in the House because of my involvement, but that was a gross intrusion not only on a member of my family but on other patients. It is desperate that those who dedicate their whole lives to the sick and the ill have had more burdens placed on their shoulders. Such behaviour is simply unacceptable.

The press cannot have it both ways. If its right to protect the public interest is to be safeguarded, the rights of the public must be safeguarded from the press. If the press wishes to protect its right to speak freely about the powerful, the public must have the right to reply to the powerful. If the press wishes to pass comment on private individuals, those individuals must be guaranteed the right to respond.

In common with hon. Members on both sides of the House, I believe that the freedom of the press is central to democracy—indeed, to a free society. It is central because the press is one of the vital links between the people and those whom they elect. In many instances, it is the press who can guard people from abuse by those who, once elected, would otherwise turn their backs on people's needs. It is that link between the interests of the public and of the press which the Bill introduced by my hon. Friend the Member for Hammersmith seeks to maintain, and I shall vote for the Bill today.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Ordered,

That, at the sitting on Tuesday 2nd February, notwithstanding the provisions of Standing Order No. 14 (Exempted Business), the Speaker shall—

(1) put the Questions necessary to dispose of proceedings on Motions in the name of Sir John Cope relating to Customs and Excise not later than one and a half hours after the first such Motion has been entered upon; and

(2) put the Questions necessary to dispose of proceedings on the Motions in the name of Sir John Cope relating to Value Added Tax not later than one and a half hours after the first such Motion has been entered upon; and the said Motions may be proceeded with after the expiry of the time for opposed business.—[Mr. Robert G. Hughes.]

Ordered,

That, at the sitting on Wednesday 3rd February, notwithstanding the provisions of Standing Order No. 14 (Exempted business), the Speaker shall put the Questions necessary to dispose of proceedings on any Motions in the name of Mr. Secretary Howard relating to Local Government Finance not later than Ten o'clock.—[Mr. Robert G. Hughes.]

Ordered.

That, at the sitting on Monday 8th February, notwithstanding the provisions of Standing Order No. 14 (Exempted business), the Speaker shall put the Questions necessary to dispose of proceedings on any Motions in the name of Mr. Secretary Hunt relating to Local Government Finance (Wales) not later than Seven o'clock.—[Mr. Robert G. Hughes.]

PRISONS

Ordered,

That the Order [12th January], That the draft Criminal Justice Act 1991 (Contracted Out Prisons) (No. 2) Order 1992 be referred to a Standing Committee on Statutory Instruments, &c., be discharged.—[Mr. Robert G. Hughes.]

Mr. Mullin: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I asked you a moment ago whether, by chance—I do not make the allegation—the hon. Member who objected to my Secret Societies (Declaration) Bill had an interest. You said that whether the hon. Member concerned had to declare any such interest was not a matter for the Chair. Can you advise me for whom it would be a matter?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: An hon. Member need not make a declaration when objecting to a Bill.

Mr. Cryer: Further to that point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. One answer would be for my hon. Friend the Member for Sunderland, South (Mr. Mullin) to write to the Chairman of the Procedure Committee. It would help considerably, however, if the occupant of the Chair drew the Committee's attention to a point about which many hon. Members feel very strongly—the ability to object to Bills without declaring an interest.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The terms of reference are wide enough for Members to write themselves.

Mr. Jeremy Corbyn (Islington, North): Further to that point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. There is a problem with my hon. Friend's suggestion, excellent though it is. At the moment, objections to Bills are made anonymously on Friday afternoons, so it would be impossible to require a declaration of interest.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The same would apply if 100 Members objected all at once.

Mr. Corbyn: Thank you, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I shall indeed refer this matter to the Procedure Committee.

Royal Marsden Hospital

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Robert G. Hughes.]

2.49 pm

Lady Olga Maitland (Sutton and Cheam): My own interest in the future of the Royal Marsden hospital began some 25 years ago when a dear school friend, then just 29 years old, was a patient. My interest in the hospital continues to this day. Part of the hospital lies in my constituency of Sutton and Cheam; the rest is in the Fulham road. Many of my constituents are deeply grateful for the treatment that they have received in both sections of the hospital. What happens to the Fulham road branch of the hospital has every bearing on the hospital as a working whole. Therefore, I am committed to ensuring that all concerned come to the very best possible decision about its future.

It would be very easy for me to make an emotional speech on the work of this magnificent hospital. Cancer touches the lives of almost every family in the land. It is an illness fraught with fear but also success. That is why, alongside the Earl of Stockton, I was able to hand in to No. 10 a petition with more than 500,000 signatures on it. That is why I, and many Members of Parliament throughout the land, including even the Outer Hebrides, well away from London, have received hundreds of personal letters begging us to ensure that we examine very carefully indeed just what we plan to do with this hospital.

Our responsibility is heightened, in that we are dealing not just with another London hospital with a surfeit of beds but with an institution which is famous both here and throughout the country and overseas. I appreciate that my hon. Friend the Minister for Health is well aware of this hospital's fine reputation and understands its work, following his earlier career as a radiation biologist. Therefore, he needs no lessons from me on the uniqueness of this hospital. Hence the importance of putting to one side the emotional issues and concentrating on just one crucial point: whether the future of this hospital is being decided on honest economic grounds or—and this is the danger—whether it is to be made the scapegoat for bad decision making elsewhere. Is there not a danger of throwing out the baby with the bath water so that, in the end, nobody will benefit? Furthermore, we should all lose, for the sheer cost involved in moving the hospital would mean that less money would be available for urgent treatment elsewhere.

I welcome in principle the Tomlinson report. Very few would dispute the fact that London's health services need a radical overhaul, with primary community and health services rightly deserving more support and a fairer share. However, that does not mean that the report does not contain errors—some of them rather serious errors. They need to be dealt with before any damage is done.

Professor Sir Bernard Tomlinson has recommended that the Royal Marsden hospital, together with the Royal Brompton National Heart and Lung hospital, be moved to the Charing Cross hospital site or, if that is not acceptable, that the Charing Cross site be sold. There are number of reasons why I and many others more expert than I completely disagree with that recommendation.

Let me deal with the history of this hospital so that the implications can be understood. The Royal Marsden hospital was founded in 1851 by Dr. William Marsden.

Following the painful death by cancer of his wife, he decided to create a hospital—the first in the world to be devoted exclusively to the diagnosis and treatment of cancer. Today, it is a leading postgraduate teaching hospital, drawing students from all over the world for specialist training. For example, it trains 90 per cent. of Britain's cancer nurses. In collaboration with its associated Institute of Cancer Research, the hospital continues to play a world-leading role in developing new anti-cancer drugs, surgical techniques and new approaches to radiotherapy treatments.

No one has questioned the ability of the Royal Marsden to treat cancer effectively. Indeed, it is one of the largest comprehensive cancer centres in Europe and it constitutes a national centre of excellence for research, development, education, treatment and care in cancer.

The Government have recognised how vital the battle against cancer remains. The White Paper "The Health of the Nation" draws attention to that fact by placing cancer as one of its top priorities, alongside heart and coronary disease.

As a disease, cancer affects all ages, from babies upwards. A newly built children's unit in Sutton is due to be opened by the Princess of Wales next month. All sexes and all areas of the body are catered for. The successful treatment of this complex and diverse disease has led the Royal Marsden to become a multi-specialist centre with 16 distinct clinical units located on one or other of its two sites. Surely this is no time to allow anything to get in the way of such important work. Moreover, a reduction in the number of patients would mean a loss of the critical mass that is so essential for research of this nature. It makes no sense to dismantle an institution so well established and recognised by the International Union Against Cancer as a role model to ensure the best possible research and patient care.

Yet that is precisely the effect that Tomlinson's proposals would have by moving the Royal Marsden to Charing Cross. If moved, the Brompton and Marsden would lose nearly 170 beds between them and more than one third of their staff. The loss of beds would result in fewer patients being treated. Is that a price which we can afford? Do we really want to reduce the service on which we place so much importance?

Turning to the subject of cost, which is at the heart of my argument, in evidence to Professor Tomlinson, the North West Thames regional health authority suggested that to close the Brompton and Royal Marsden hospitals and move them to Charing Cross would cost only £10 million. One might ask whether even that sum could be justified in the present climate, but an independent study by Ernst and Young, the management consultants, has subsequently reported that that sum is hopelessly inaccurate. Ernst and Young suggests that, in fact, the move would cost at least £47 million and up to £62 million. It could be even more. Moving the Royal Marsden is not the same as moving a house, and it certainly is not the same as moving any other type of hospital; it is much more complex.

I should like briefly to show why costs are so high. It would cost, for instance, £4 million to move four radiotherapy machines, each of which is placed in a purpose-built concrete bunker weighing up to 4 tonnes with walls up to 3 ft thick to provide radiation protection. The machines operate to a fine degree of accuracy. Experience of machines that have been moved shows that they are very unlikely to operate sufficiently accurately again for the effective treatment of patients.

There is a unique operating theatre where radiation is carried out under open surgery. That requires 3 ft thick walls. To move the theatre and bunker and rebuild them in Charing Cross is impossible because the theatres at Charing Cross are high up on the 14th floor. The building is simply not structurally strong enough to be able to hold a bunker that high up. It would mean rebuilding elsewhere.

It would cost £650,000 to move five single wards, which again have 3 ft thick walls and are designed for low-dose radiation treatment. The task of building it into the existing Charing Cross wards in a tower block would be a nightmare, if not technically impossible. I have given just a sample of reasons why moving such a hospital site would not be so easy.

The proposals mean that £62 million would be spent juggling hospitals around and, in the process, destroying the important national services which they currently offer. What possible gain can there be for the patient, let alone the taxpayer?

The Tomlinson report and the submission by the North West Thames regional health authority base much of their economic argument on plans to use land sales to finance such a move, despite the collapse in the property market. That would appear to be a high-risk strategy at a time when property values in London are still falling. In any event, Ernst and Young showed that potential income to the Exchequer from land sales is almost identical to the cost of moving the hospitals: £27·5 million would be spent at Charing Cross and £28 million would be gained from the sale of the two hospitals in Chelsea.

Moreover, there is the risk that no sale will take place for a long time. Large sites in London simply are not selling. The need for expensive borrowing to plug the gap while the hospital move went ahead would be crippling. While I do not wish to be churlish about the opening of the Chelsea and Westminster hospital last week, it is interesting to note that the recent National Audit Office report slammed in no uncertain terms the North West Thames regional health authority's decision to go ahead with building the Chelsea and Westminster.

The report highlighted the severe financial problems that have arisen with the project as a result of difficulties in recouping the expenditure through land sales. Capita and Touche Ross have been asked by the Department of Health to provide the financial costing of Tomlinson's proposals. I understand that, far from agreeing with the original estimate submitted by the North West Thames regional health authority and accepted by Professor Tomlinson, the costings tend to endorse what Ernst and Young reported. Is my hon. Friend the Minister in a position to confirm that?

I wonder whether there is a hidden agenda and the Tomlinson report has been used for other purposes. I have already mentioned the inaccurate figures supplied by the health authority to Professor Tomlinson, who felt unable to challenge them. Indeed, why should he? He said that costings were not part of the brief. Why should he not accept the advice of the local health authority, which ought to know the facts and figures? Let us not forget that this is the same regional health authority which built the Chelsea and Westminster hospital. It decided to go ahead and build a huge new hospital even though the Charing

[Lady Olga Maitland]

Cross hospital, which is only 20 years old, is just down the road. The new hospital was redundant before it ever opened.

The health authority grossly underestimated the costs of moving the two hospitals. The original estimate of £110 million to build the new Chelsea and Westminster hospital has risen to almost £236 million. More simply, each bed will cost about £300,000, while hundreds of other health projects in the region have to be cancelled or postponed.

In view of the escalating costs, why on earth compound the error by incurring unnecessary costs in making the Royal Marsden and Royal Brompton hospitals move? As Nurse said, it is a case of going from bad to worse. It would also appear that the North West Thames regional health authority, faced with two hospitals—Charing Cross and the Chelsea and Westminster—is using the Marsden and Brompton as scapegoats; or, to use a medical metaphor, it appears that the hospitals have been stitched up. The health authority should have the courage to recommend that the Charing Cross hospital be closed.

I take this opportunity to ask my hon. Friend the Minister another equally important question; it is a moral issue which should not be ducked: has any consideration yet been given to the legality of ordering the demolition of facilities and buildings paid for by charitable donation? The large proportion of such donations is from grateful patients who are far from wealthy. They have given what I can only describe as the widow's mite.

Gratefully given, it should not be scorned and thrown away. Let us not forget that public affection for the Royal Marsden resulted in £25 million being raised in the midst of a recession and spent on new state-of-the-art clinical facilities. An entire new clinical block has been built, containing four new operating theatres, a unique radiotherapy unit and four new wards. The work has only just finished and the last lick of paint went on only a few weeks ago.

I implore the Minister to have the courage to reject those aspects of Tomlinson that do not add up. As I have made clear during the debate, too many costs are attached to the proposal to uproot the Royal Marsden and Royal Brompton hospitals and to force them into the Charing Cross site. As much as I attach importance to the Tomlinson report, whose ideas are important and far-reaching, it is vital that we maintain a sense of balance. It is not in our character to be doctrinaire for the sake of it. If the proposal is sound, we must go for it; if it is not, we must take courage and say no. The idea may seem attractive on paper, but in practice it does not make sense in human or economic terms.

May I make a plea that the decision making should judge the Royal Marsden on its own economic terms? The decision should not be allowed to become embroiled in any views held by other parties, especially the North West Thames health authority, which has powerfully demonstrated its interests at the expense of others.

My abiding image of the Royal Marsden is of an utterly loyal following of patients from far and wide, together with dedicated doctors. They deserve the highest consideration. Like my neighbour, my hon. Friend the Member for Carshalton and Wallington (Mr. Forman), I join in their hopes that they will be able to take full advantage of the Government reforms to gain trust status next year, on their present site and in their present form. I have no doubt that the Royal Marsden will not only succeed but will go on to flourish.

3.7 pm

The Minister for Health (Dr. Brian Mawhinney): I congratulate my hon. Friend on her good fortune in getting the Adjournment debate on the way in which she made her case so cogently. She has done it a service by not indulging in the sort of emotionalism that she eschewed at the beginning.

My hon. Friend is right to say that I have some personal knowledge of that aspect of the Royal Marsden that is in her constituency. As I recall, I was sitting in an office in that very building when I was told by one of the professors that I had become a doctor of philosophy, after he had given me my viva on my thesis. It was out of that building that my first post-doctoral job emerged—teaching in the university of Iowa medical college in the United States.

As my hon. Friend was kind enough to acknowledge, I have some knowledge and understanding of the issues with which she dealt. What she did not say—I will put it on the record for her so that her constituents can be even more impressed by her assiduousness as their Member of Parliament—is that she came to see me in the Department a few days ago to make the same case that she made so eloquently today. I assure my hon. Friend that what she has said, and the issues that she has mentioned, will all be taken into account before the Government make a final decision on matters that relate not only to the Royal Marsden but to the other aspects of health care and its delivery included in the Tomlinson report.

The Royal Marsden Hospital is one of the eight special health authority London postgraduate teaching hospitals and its prime role, in partnership with the Institute of Cancer Research, is research and development, ranging from basic science to clinical research and health services, dissemination of good practice to the wider health service and the postgraduate and post-basic training and teaching of doctors, nurses and others. In recognition of that special role, and unlike other provider units, the hospital is managed and funded directly by the NHS management executive.

In recent months many issues have arisen that might affect the hospital's future. My hon. Friend touched on the Tomlinson recommendations and on the Marsden's intention to apply for trust status. The third factor is the decision to look to the future funding of special health authorities in the new NHS market. I was pleased to hear my hon. Friend express her support for that market because that will have a bearing on the future of the hospitals, wherever located.

My hon. Friend rightly focuses on the recommendations of Sir Bernard. I assure her again, as I have assured so many others in the past three months, that Sir Bernard's report is advice to the Government. It does not represent the Government's view. My hon. Friend will know that I have spent the past three months visiting all the hospitals that were mentioned for significant change in Sir Bernard's advice. I have visited 24 of them. In addition, I have met a variety of national and professional bodies, about 30, not to mention politicians, all of whom have been kind enough to give me their views on the various aspects of the Tomlinson report. I hope that my hon. Friend will be encouraged by the fact that the Government are taking that advice so seriously and want to probe it in such depth before we come to any conclusions.

Sir Bernard was effectively seeking to reconfigure health care in London. He recognised the inadequacies and the patchiness of family doctor health services and some community services. He recognised the achievements of the great teaching hospitals and their international standing. He also recognised that, in the market, medical excellence, which used to be available only in London, is now available more widely across the country. My hon. Friend and I will be pleased about that. As a result, those who once had to come to London to be treated at those hospitals no longer have to do so. Contracts are now being placed elsewhere. All those facts must be taken into account.

Arising from that, the Government do not have an option not to consider change. Change is taking place now —rightly so, and to the benefit of health care delivery to Londoners. I stress to my hon. Friend that that is an important part of our considerations. Whenever we emerge from this process we want to be able to say that it has benefited the health care of Londoners. We shall take that factor into account.

As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has said, the Government welcome the broad conclusions reached by Sir Bernard. There is some evidence that there are areas of duplication in some specialties in London and we are therefore considering the need to establish, as Sir Bernard recommended, a series of specialty reviews, including cancer. We firmly believe that there is need to consolidate and thereby strengthen specialty provision in the capital. Only by doing so shall we ensure that London will continue to have world-class centres of excellence in the next century.

As my hon. Friend explained, Professor Tomlinson recommended that the Royal Marsden's services on the Chelsea site should form the basis of an integrated and rationalised west London cancer service at the Charing Cross site, and also recommended that the Sutton site should be left as at present organised. Sir Bernard formed the view that by concentrating a greater number of patients on the one site there could be significant benefits for teaching and research, thus strengthening the special health authority's essential role in increasing the effectiveness of research and development within the NHS.

I stress—I am sure that my hon. Friend will agree—that Sir Bernard recognised the excellent work done by the Royal Marsden and its specialist teams. I stress, too, that he has not recommended that teams should be broken up or their services closed down. However, centres of excellence are not found only in London: they have now been established throughout the United Kingdom.

The Government recognise that many of the London postgraduate teaching hospitals are highly rated by patients, by the Universities Funding Council and by many others. Indeed, I congratulate the Royal Marsden's partner, the Institute of Cancer Research, on achieving such high ratings in this year's Universities Funding Council research rating assessment exercise which has recently been published. In part, that rating depends on the facilities provided by the special health authority, which is currently not part of the NHS market.

My hon. Friend has spoken eloquently and passionately about the need to ensure that the Royal Marsden hospital remains on its present sites and I have sympathy with her view. Indeed, it will be taken into account when the Government reach their conclusions on the details of the report. As part of the programme of visits that I mentioned earlier, I visited the Royal Marsden late last year when the hospital, the Institute of Cancer Research and the chairman were able to put to me their views on the proposed move. Since then, some of them have made further comments to me. Therefore, I hope that my hon. Friend will accept that we are making every effort to take account of the opinions of those affected before reaching conclusions. I must, however, stress that the position of the Royal Marsden is no different from that at any other institution covered in the Tomlinson report. As with the rest of London, the Government seek the best solution to safeguard the health and health care interests of London and Londoners.

To show how seriously we take the issues of research and teaching, we have also started a comprehensive review of the special health authority's research programmes. The Royal Marsden, in line with the other special health authorities, has been asked to provide evidence to an independent review group of both national and international experts, set up by the Department.

It has been Government policy for some time that the special health authorities should join the internal market, which will happen in April 1994, but we wish to ensure that that move does not put the high-quality research at risk. I mentioned earlier that the research review conducted by Professor Peckham will report in the summer. We have also instructed a consultancy group to look at the excess costs of the authorities over comparable hospitals. The study has now reported and the findings are being discussed with the relevant authorities.

Trust configuration is a separate issue from closure or change of use of hospital sites, and does not imply prior acceptance of any recommendations about the use of hospital sites. Once we have made a decision on the future of the Royal Marsden we shall be in a position to consider its trust application. When I say "made a decision", I stress that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will make proposals on which there will be statutory consultation.

The Government value tradition and recognise the respect and affection in which the Royal Marsden is held both nationally and internationally. But it is not sufficient to rest on past glories. I am conscious that the authority, supported by many charitable sources, has invested millions of pounds in new equipment, and in bricks and mortar. However, the Government cannot let that fact drive the need to change. If, after consultation, hospitals are closed, it is hoped that much of that investment can be used elsewhere.

We are determined to maintain and, indeed, reinforce the best research and teaching of postgraduate students of all disciplines. Much of the NHS work in the special health authority meets specific patient needs and can be funded in part through the internal market with support for the extra service costs of research and teaching. I can assure my hon. Friend that we shall exercise the greatest care in ensuring that the new arrangements reinforce the best research in those centres while allowing high-quality institutions, both inside and outside London, to benefit from NHS support for research.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at eighteen minutes past Three o'clock.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Israel

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations on the case of the imprisonment of Mordecai Vanunu were made during the visit of Prime Minister Rabin of Israel to London on 10 December 1992.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister did not raise this subject. But we have privately made representations to the Israelis about certain humanitarian aspects of Mordecai Vanunu's case.

United Nations

Sir Nicholas Fairbairn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the total size of the staff of the United Nations; and what is its cost.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: According to the United Nation's proposed programme budget for the biennium 1992-93, staff costs funded from the regular budget of the United Nation's for the calendar year 1992 amounted to $893 million, representing 75·6 per cent. of the total budget. This represents a provision for 10,129 posts.

In addition, according to the Secretary-General in his report "Composition of the Secretariat" dated 7 October 1992, there are approximately 21,000 staff occupying posts funded from voluntary contributions. The report states that the total staff employed in the United Nations and its subsidiary organs is 31,127.

Civil Servants (Bicycles)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the currrent conditions on which civil servants in his Department are granted salary advances to enable the purchase of bicycles for home-to-office travel; if he will make a statement on the current conditions in each agency of his Department; what plans he has to change the conditions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: The Treasury have given Departments discretion to offer up to £100 advance of salary for the purchase of bicycles for home-to-office travel. This discretion has not been taken up by the FCO diplomatic wing, which has no plans to do so. The Overseas Development Administration, which administers itself separately, has given its staff an entitlement to a salary advance of up to £100 for this purpose. Its has no plans to change this.

Bosnia (No-fly Zone)

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has concerning breaches by Croatia of UN Resolution 781 concerning the no-fly zone over Bosnia-Herzegovina.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The UN Secretary General has issued regular reports to the Security Council giving details of violations of the no-fly zone established by resolutions 781 of 9 October and 786 of 11 November. It is clear from these that, to varying degrees, all parties in Bosnia-Herzegovina, including the Croats, have conducted flights outside the terms permitted in the resolutions. The total of unauthorised flights to 10 January was 375.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what evidence he has of the number of Croatian air force flights in contravention of UN resolution 781; and what steps he will take to enforce impartially the no-fly zone in Bosnia-Herzgovina.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The UN Secretary General has issued regular reports to the Security Council giving details of violations of the no-fly zone established by resolutions 781 of 9 October and 786 of 11 November. It is clear from these that, to varying degrees, all parties in Bosnia-Herzegovina, including the Croats, have conducted flights outside the terms permitted in the resolutions. The total of unauthorised flights to 10 January was 375. The Security Council is currently considering a resolution on enforcement of the no-fly zone which will apply to all parties.

Somalia

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what measures he has taken to inquire into the facts of the killings at Kismayu in Somalia; and what representations he has made to prevent such massacres from recurring.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The alleged killings in Kismayo are of great concern. Belgian troops deployed there are investigating the reports. A recent meeting in Addis Ababa between the Somali factions has reached provisional agreement on a cease-fire, disarmament and encampment of militias. This should help prevent such incidents.

Cameroon

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current human rights situation in Cameroon.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 15 January 1993]: We welcome the lifting of the state of emergency in North West province announced by the Cameroon Government on 29 December and the release of detainees. We hope that the situation in the country will now improve. These encouraging developments do not, however, absolve the Government of Cameroon from their responsibilities for earlier serious human rights abuses in Cameroon. We have called upon the authorities to investigate the allegations. A statement in similar terms was issued by the European Community and its member states on 11 January, a copy of which has been placed in the Library.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Cameroon concerning human rights abuses.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 15 January 1993]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Clydebank and Milngavie (Mr. Worthington) on 3 December at column 316. We have continued to make our views known to the Cameroon authorities.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement concerning the message to all Christians by the Archbishop of Bamenda in Cameroon, a copy of which has been sent to him.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 15 January 1993]: We strongly support the Archbishop's call for the abolition of torture and warmly welcome his appeal for peace and reconciliation.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has concerning the use of torture in Cameroon.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 15 January 1993]: We have received numerous reports from different sources alleging ill-treatment or torture of detainees. We have called on the Cameroon Government to institute inquiries into these cases.

Nuclear Conference

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, if he will make a statement on the purpose of and participants in the conference on the nuclear future-dilemmas of arms control, reduction and proliferation, to be held at his departmental conference centre at Wilton Park from 11 to 15 January.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to Wilton Park under its chief executive, Mr. Geoffrey Denton. I have asked him to arrange for a written reply to be given.

Letter from Geoffrey Denton to Mr. Llew Smith, dated 21 December 1992:

Thank you for your question asking for a satement on the purpose of and the participants in the conference on "The Nuclear Future: Dilemmas of Arms Control, Reduction and Proliferation". I hope the following will answer your question.

The purpose of the conference, as for all Wilton Park conferences, is to provide a forum for the exchange of views, in order to promote international understanding of the issues and to enhance the reputation of the UK as a country that believes in resolving international problems through peaceful dialogue.

The participants will be drawn from 15–20 countries, and several professions: military and civilian defence staff, diplomats and other officials, businessmen, academics, media.

More specifically, the conference will discuss the future of nuclear weapons with due reference to the fact that the ending of the East-West military confrontation has coincided with a situation where the role of nuclear and chemical and biological weapons has increased outside Europe.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Scott Inquiry

34. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Attorney-General how many members of the Attorney-General's Department are involved full-time or part-time in supporting Lord Justice Scott in his inquiry.

The Attorney-General: One lawyer from the Treasury Solicitor's Department has been transferred on loan to the Department of Trade and Industry and assigned on a full-time basis to be Secretary to the inquiry.

38. Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Attorney-General what legal documentation has been supplied by his Department to Lord Justice Scott in regard to his inquiry into arms and military exports to Iraq.

The Attorney-General: No legal documentation has been supplied so far. Departmental papers will be made available to Lord Justice Scott as and when he requests them.

Serious Fraud Office

35. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a statement on the objectives set for the Serious Fraud Office in 1993.

The Solicitor-General: In 1993 it remains the objective of the Serious Fraud Office to increase the efficiency and effectiveness of its work in investigating and prosecuting serious and complex fraud.

Right to Silence

36. Mr. Bennett: To ask the Attorney-General what comments he made on the right to silence in his evidence to the Royal Commission on Criminal Justice.

The Attorney-General: I discussed this issue with the Royal Commission at a meeting when they sought my views on a range of issues. My personal thoughts on the ability of the court to draw inferences from silence were set out in my speech last October to the Howard League for Penal Reform, a copy of which I have placed in the Library of the House.

Crown Prosecution Service

37. Mr. Vaz: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a further statement on recruitment to the Crown prosecution service.

The Solicitor-General: I refer the hon. Gentleman to my reply today to the hon. Member for Hendon, South (Mr. Marshall).

Racial Hatred

39. Mr. Wilson: To ask the Attorney-General how many prosecutions there have been in each of the past three years for incitement to racial hatred.

The Attorney-General: In 1990, there was one prosecution for offences contrary to part III of the Public Order Act 1986; in 1991, there were four such prosecutions; and in 1992, one. At present two cases are waiting to be tried.

Paintings (Charity Commission)

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Attorney-General what response he has made to submissions he has received from senior University of London academics, concerning the scheme devised by the Charity Commission for the sale of paintings from the Founder's collection, Royal Holloway and Bedford new college.

The Attorney-General: I have replied that I have found nothing in those submissions to cause me to revise my view that the Charity Commissioners had sufficient evidence before them to reach a decision to approve a scheme and that I would not be furthering the interests of charity by commencing an appeal against their decision to do so.

Civil Servants (Bicycles)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a statement on the current conditions on which civil servants in his Department are granted salary advances to enable the purchase of bicycles for home-to-office travel; if he will make a statement on the current conditions in each agency of his Department; what plans he has to change the conditions; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: Staff in the Departments for which I have responsibility (the legal secretariat, the Crown prosecution service, the Treasury solicitor's department and the Serious Fraud Office) are aware of the availability of salary advances for the purchase of bicycles. All permanent staff with a minimum of two months service (other than the Serious Fraud Office which has no minimum requirement) are eligible to apply. Any advance made for the purchase of a bicycle is currently limited to £100. I have no plans to review these conditions.

Seamus McElwaine

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Attorney-General what examination is being undertaken by the Director of Public Prosecutions of the papers arising from the verdict of the jury in the inquest into the death of Seamus McElwaine.

The Attorney-General: On 13 January 1993 the Director of Public Proscutions for Northern Ireland asked the Royal Ulster constabulary for a full report on the inquest into the death of Seamus McElwaine.

The director will consider this report and decide what further steps, if any, are required.

Ambiguous Statutes

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Attorney-General what guidance he has issued to Government Ministers about the implications of the ruling in the case in the House of Lords of Pepper v. Hart about the right of courts to have access to the Official Report in seeking to interpret the wording of ambiguous statutes; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: On 26 November 1992 the House of Lords decided by a majority that courts could look at parliamentary materials if the legislation is ambiguous or obscure or leads to an absurdity; the material that could be relied upon consists of a statement by a Minister or other promoter of the Bill; and the statements relied upon are clear.

By established convention advice given by the Law Officers, and the fact that they have advised, is not normally disclosed.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Joyriders

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will issue guidelines to police authorities to discourage the misuse of the term joyriders to describe offences arising from taking vehicles without the owner's consent.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The law provides for offences of taking and driving away of motor vehicles without the owner's consent and for aggravated taking of motor vehicles. These are the terms which are used by the Home Office for statistical returns. Chief officers of police view such offences with great seriousness, but the use of other terms in less formal circumstances is a matter for them. It would not be an appropriate subject for Home Office guidance.

Replica Guns

Mr. James Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps are being taken to control the sale of replica guns.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Under the Firearms Act 1982 the sale of any imitation firearm which can be readily converted to fire live ammunition is already subject to the same strict licensing controls as real firearms. My right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary agrees with the advice offered to him by the Firearms Consultative Committee that controls on the sale of other types of replicas would be neither feasible nor effective. But he intends to implement the committee's recommendation to extend the range of offences which apply to the misuse of imitation firearms.

Computers (Prisons)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisons in England and Wales do not have a computer; and what is his Department's policy on the provision of such equipment in each prison.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Every prison in England and Wales has a computer. The prison service information technology strategy incorporates plans to extend the use of information technology throughout the service where clear benefits in cost and efficiency can be identified.

Mr. Paul Malone

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what assessment he has made (a) of the reliability of evidence produced at the trial of Paul Malone and (b) of new evidence presented to his office in this case;

(2) if he has decided to refer the case of Paul Malone back to the Court of Appeal.

Mr. Jack: My right hon. and learned Friend will be in a position properly to consider all the representations made on Mr. Malone's behalf—including those about the reliability of evidence given at his trial, as well as the new evidence submitted to him—only when the Metropolitan police have completed the inquiries they are presently carrying out at the request of the chief constable of Cheshire. He will then decide whether there are grounds for referring Mr. Malone's conviction to the Court of Appeal.

Police (Firearms)

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions (a) in 1992, (b) in 1987, (c) in 1982 and (d) in 1977, Metropolitan and City of London police officers were authorised to carry firearms in the course of their duty; and on how many occasions those firearms were used.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The only readily available information is contained in the following table:

Year	Number of operations[1]	Number of occasions when shots were fired 1991
City of London	71	0
Metropolitan	1,520	6
1987
City of London	16	0
Metropolitan	1,248	3
1982
Metropolitan	6,035	1

[1]The figure for 1982 is for the number of occasions on which firearms were issued. From 1987 onwards, the figures are for the number of firearms operations.

I will write to the hon. Member when the information for 1992 is available.

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what distinction is drawn between the use of concealed weapons and rifles, carbines or semi-automatic weapons when authorisation is granted to Metropolitan police and City of London police officers to carry firearms; and on what basis.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Firearms may be issued only on the authority of a senior officer, to an authorised firearms officer. Decisions as to whether a firearm is concealed when carried, and the type of firearm, are based on an assessment of operational requirements.

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many recorded incidents of assaults against Metropolitan and City of London police officers occurred in (a) 1992, (b) 1987, (c) 1982, and (d) 1977; and in how many of these incidents firearms were used against police officers.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The numbers of officers in the Metropolitan police who have suffered serious assault necessitating periods off work are as follows:

1992	n/a	n/a

There were 12 assaults on officers in the City of London police in 1992, none of which involved firearms. The City of London police do not hold a record of the number of assaults on police officers prior to 1991.

Prisoners (Self-injury)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what arrangements exist for ensuring that any tendency to deliberate self-harm in an inmate is known to the authorities of a prison to which such an inmate is sent from court or transferred from another prison establishment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Where a prisoner is being handed over from police custody into prison custody, or vice-versa, information about possible suicide risk is conveyed via the exceptional risk form, instructions on which have been issued to both police forces and prison establishments.

In London special arrangements exist under which prisoners' inmate medical records accompany them in a sealed pouch when they are escorted to court, so that they are immediately accessible should the prisoner for any reason be returned from court to a different prison establishment.

All prisoners are seen by a member of health care staff on arrival at the establishment as part of the reception process. Prisoners must also be examined by a doctor within 24 hours in cases of first reception and reception following conviction, sentence or transfer. This examination includes an assessment of possible risk of suicide or self-harm.

Where prisoners are transferred between prison establishments, any warnings about possible risk of suicide or self-harm will be contained in the inmate medical record (IMR), which accompanies the prisoner when transferred under escort.

In many cases the prison service also receives information about possible risk of suicide or self-harm from a variety of agencies and individuals who are involved with prisoners in the pre-trial period and at court, including probation officers, solicitors, court staff, social workers, psychiatrists and the prisoner's family. Such information is generally conveyed to the receiving prison by telephone or via the escorting officers.

It is the continuing responsibility of the suicide prevention management group at each prison establishment to ensure that liaison with other agencies works effectively and that any information received is carefully assessed and acted on appropriately.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of deaths from an act of deliberate self-harm that took place in prisons in England and Wales during 1992.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Forty-one prisoners died from an act of deliberate self-harm in England and Wales in 1992.

Travellers

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the traditional travelling community is classified as an ethnic minority.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The criteria for defining a racial group for the purposes of the Race Relations Act 1976 were established by the judgment in Mandla v. Dowell Lee (1983). Gipsies have been accepted as meeting these criteria—Commission for Racial Equality v. Dutton (1988); the position of other travelling groups would depend on whether they satisfied the same criteria.

Squatters

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what assessment he has made of the reasons for the trend in the numbers of squatters; and what estimate he has made of the trend in the average age of squatters;

(2) if he will make a distinction in policy on squatting between privately owned properties that are squatted which are individually owned and those owned by commercial bodies; if he will give estimates for the numbers involved in both these categories in London and elsewhere; and from what sources his Department makes its estimate;

(3) what assessment has been made of the criminality of squatters relative to their neighbours.

Mr. Jack: Cases of squatting do not necessarily come to official notice and no central records are kept of the numbers and characteristics of squatters, or of which properties are squatted in. This absence of accurate statistical information, combined with the shifting nature of the squatting population, means that it is difficult to make an accurate assessment of squatters' numbers, average age, their criminal behaviour, or of the type of properties occupied.

However, the Home Office consultation paper on squatting, which was issued in November 1991, reported the 1986 London housing survey's estimate that at that time there were 12,500 squatters occupying 7,500 properties in London. It also estimated that 52 per cent. of these squatters were under 25; 40 per cent. were between 26 and 40; and 8 per cent. were over 40. The consultation paper also reported a survey of local authority housing in April 1990, when 5,200 dwellings in England were reported as being squatted in; 90 per cent. of these were in London. More recent estimates of the total number of squatters have ranged from 30,000 to 50,000.

The Home Office consultation paper on squatting suggested, as one option for changing the law, that additional protection could be extended to private individuals who own property which is squatted in, but not to commercial owners of property, on the ground that more hardship is likely to be caused in the former type of case. This distinction was not, however, supported by the majority of respondents to the consultation paper, and the Government are, in any case, committed to strengthening the law against those who squat in a range of different premises.

Charities

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will seek to amend the Charities Act 1992 to allow charities operational exclusively within Wales to refer to themselves as national charities.

Mr. Jack: Section 4 of the Charities Act 1992 empowers the Charity Commissioners to direct a charity to change its name where that name includes any word or expression for the time being specified in regulations by the Secretary of State, and the inclusion of the word is, in the opinion of the commissioners, likely to mislead the public in any respect as to the status of the charity. The word "national" has been so specified. It is therefore for the commissioners to determine whether the use of the word is misleading in any particular case.

My right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary has no plans to amend section 4 of the 1992 Act nor the regulations made by him under that section.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to seek to amend section 3(2) of the Charities Act 1992 to allow charities producing Welsh language publicity to use the words "elusen cofrestredig" either in addition to or instead of the words "registered charity" on publicity materials.

Mr. Jack: Section 3(2) requires a registered charity to include a statement indicating that it is so registered in certain publications and documents issued by or on behalf of it. The statement must be made in English. However, there is nothing to preclude a charity from also providing the same information in another language if it so wishes. The Government have no present plans for further legislation on this matter.

Wolds Prison

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many reported incidents took place at the Wolds prison during 1992.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: In 1992, 49 incidents at Wolds remand prison were reported to the incident management support unit at prison service headquarters. From 5 April 1992, when Wolds opened, until the end of 1992, a total of 13,300 incidents at all prisons were reported to the unit.

Prison Transfers

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what policy his Department adopts in respect of an inmate being moved from one prison establishment to another to ensure that there is no delay in the transfer of the moneys belonging to that inmate.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Governors of all prison service establishments have been instructed to ensure that moneys are forwarded promptly when prisoners are transferred, where possible by the day following transfer. This is not achieved in all cases, and we continue to look at ways, including computerisation of prisoners' money and earnings, to minimise delays.

Qat

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration he has given to banning the import of the qat plant from Ethiopia, Kenya and Somalia; and what advice he has received on qat from the Advisory Council on the Misuse of Drugs.

Mr. Jack: The plant is not subject to international control, and the Advisory Council on the Misuse of Drugs advised in 1988 that there was insufficient evidence to justify bringing the plant under the controls of the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971. That remains the present position, but the situation will continue to be monitored carefully.

Gambling

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to monitor the effects of excess gambling.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Government do not routinely monitor the effects of excessive gambling. Research on specific issues is commissioned as necessary, most recently into the extent and nature of amusement machine playing by young people ("Amusement Machines: Dependency and Delinquency, Home Office Research Study 101, 1988").

Sentencing

Mr. George: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average sentence for someone convicted of murder.

Mr. Jack: The mandatory sentence for murder in England and Wales is life.

The average time served under sentence in prison service establishments by those first released on licence is published annually in "Prison Statistics, England and Wales" (table 8.5 of the volume for 1990, Cm. 1800), a copy of which is in the Library.

Assaults on Women, Walsall

Mr. George: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many assaults, including rape, were committed against women in the H division of Walsall, since 1980.

Mr. Jack: The available information for H division has been provided by the West Midlands constabulary. It is in terms of notifiable offences recorded by the police, with the most appropriate offence categories being rape and indecent assault on a female. Other types of assault do not distinguish between male and female victim.

Racial Incidents, Walsall

Mr. George: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many recorded racial incidents have occurred in Walsall each year since 1985.

Mr. Jack: The information is not available centrally.

Dangerous Dogs Act

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many pit bull type dogs have been destroyed in each county or sheriff court area in the United Kingdom since the legislation permitting destruction was introduced; and what assessment he has made of whether the court procedures to identify the characteristics of the breed of dogs destroyed are proving a satisfactory and consistent basis for court procedures.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Information on the number of pit bull terriers destroyed in each county and sheriff court area in the United Kingdom as a result of proceedings under the Dangerous Dogs Act 1991 is not collected centrally.

The decision whether any particular dog is of the type known as the pit bull terrier is ultimately a matter for the courts, having regard to all relevant evidence and advice. Circulars on the Act were issued to the police, the Crown prosecution service and the courts, both at the time of coming into force of the Act and subsequently. These contained general guidance on the provisions, and on the assistance which may be available in determining whether a particular dog is of the pit bull type.

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce amendments to the Dangerous Dogs Act 1991 to provide that a dog with a pure-bred pedigree as a Staffordshire bull terrier shall not be treated as a pit bull terrier.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Section 1 of the Dangerous Dogs Act 1991 applies—amongst others—to dogs "of the type known as the pit bull terrier". It is ultimately for the courts to decide whether a particular animal falls within this definition, and they will take into account all relevant considerations. Evidence of pedigreee may in some circumstances be a factor in determining the question.

A Home Office circular containing advice about the operation of the Act, issued last August, and sent to the police, the Crown prosecution service and the courts, drew attention to a list provided by the Staffordshire Bull Terrier Breed Council of clubs and societies willing to give advice in cases where there is doubt whether the dog is a Staffordshire bull terrier.

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions under the Dangerous Dogs Act 1991 have been successful.

Mr. Jack: The Dangerous Dogs Act 1991 did not come into force until August 1991. Information on the number of prosecutions under this Act for 1992, the first full year for which information will be recorded centrally, is expected to be available around the autumn of 1993.

Civil Servants (Bicycles)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the current conditions on which civil servants in his Department are granted salary advances to enable the purchase of bicycles for home-to-office travel; if he will make a statement on the current conditions in each agency of his Department; what plans he has to change the conditions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The current conditions applying in the Department and its agencies are that there should be an operational need or other identifiable value for money improvement justifying the advance—maximum £100—and that the advance is repayable over one year. Only one such advance has so far been made to an official of my Department. Departments and agencies generally have recently been given discretion to offer a larger advance and to revise the eligibility and repayment rules. These changes are being considered in the context of a Departmental review of travel allowances, and revised rules are expected to be promulgated in the spring.

Reed Report

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will publish his response to the Reed report.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The final summary report of the Department of Health and Home Office joint review of services for mentally disordered offenders—the "Reed report"—was published on 27 November 1992. In reply to a question on that day from my hon. Friend the Member for Teignbridge (Mr. Nichols), my hon. Friend the Member for Suffolk, South (Mr. Yeo) explained how the Government intended to respond or were already responding to the review.

So far as my Department is concerned, a key objective identified and endorsed by the review is the diversion of mentally disordered offenders from the criminal justice system wherever possible. Since my hon. Friend's announcement, this has been given a further boost by the issue of an invitation to local agencies to apply for funding to support court-based duty psychiatrist schemes. We are already funding a number of other diversion projects as well as a series of regional conferences organised by the Mental Health Foundation which are intended to promote inter-agency co-operation in this field.

Police Central Computer

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any plans to privatise or contract out the operation of the police central computer in whole or in part.

Mr. Charles Wardle: As announced last year in "The Citizens' Charter: First Report" (Cm 2101), the operation of the police national computer is among the functions of the Home Department which are included in the current market testing programme.

Police Complaints

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide police complaints figures, under the headings used in the annual report of the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis, for the following police stations for each of the past five years (a) Hackney, (b) City Road and (c) Stoke Newington.

Betting Shops

Mr. Tim Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what comments and advice were received from the Association of Chief Police Officers in answer to his consultation document on the evening opening of betting shops.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Neither the Association of Chief Police Officers of England, Wales and Northern Ireland nor the Association of Chief Police Officers in Scotland were opposed to the evening opening of betting offices, though both favoured the continuation of a prescribed latest closing time.

Alcohol and Drug Misuse

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what arrangements he is making for payment in respect of treatment for alcohol or drug misuse ordered by the courts prior to 1 April 1993 but not completed by that date; and who will pay (a) for that part of the treatment prior to 1 April and (b) that part of the treatment after 1 April.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 15 December 1992]: Treatment for drug or alcohol misuse may be ordered by the courts (as an additional requirement of a probation order, under provisions introduced on 1 October 1992 by the Criminal Justice Act 1991) only if suitable treatment is available.

Alcohol and drug misusers who are receiving treatment prior to 1 April 1993 and are eligible for income support will generally have preserved rights after 1 April to their existing level of benefit.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department who will pay for residential treatment for alcohol or drug misuse ordered by the courts after 1 April 1993.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 14 December 1992]: Residential treatment for drug or alcohol abuse may be ordered by courts—as an additional requirement of a probation order, under provisions introduced on 1 October 1992 by the Criminal Justice Act 1991—only if suitable treatment is available.

From 1 April 1993 local authorities will be responsible for assessing the social care needs of alcohol and drug misusers. People who commence treatment in a residential setting after 1 April 1993 and who are eligible, will be entitled to claim ordinary income support, including premiums, and a residential allowance. The local authority will take account of these payments and any other income when assessing the individual's ability to contribute towards the cost of care. Local authorities and probation services will need to liaise to ensure that the needs of those offenders supervised by the probation service who have drug and alcohol misuse problems are considered within community care.

A special transitional grant of £539 million is being made available to local authorities in England in 1993-94 which is ring fenced for use on community care, including the provision of care for alcohol and drug misusers.

Where such residential treatment is to be provided by local authorities then, from 1 April 1993, assessment, availability and funding will be in accordance with the community care arrangements which come into effect on that date. Other residential treatment (not under community care arrangements) could also be ordered—again, provided that was available.

Police Forces

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department by how many extra police officers the police forces in Thames Valley and Nottinghamshire have been supplemented in 1993-94; if these officers are permanent augmentations; and for what duties they have been provided.

Mr. Charles Wardle: [holding answer 11 January 1993]: In common with all provincial police force, Thames Valley and Nottinghamshire have been given no increase in their permanent establishments for 1993-94. I understand that my right hon. and noble Friend has written to the hon. Member about detailed aspects of this matter.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

South Africa

42. Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what aid is being given to South Africa in the current year.

Mr. Hurd: We expect our bilateral aid to black South Africans to rise to over £11 million this financial year. Our share of EC aid will add a further £11 million. This is money well spent.

Southern Africa

43. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what percentage of aid from Her Majesty's Government to southern Africa is for educational purposes.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In 1991-92, 13 per cent. of British bilateral aid to southern Africa was for educational purposes.

Somalia

44. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much aid has so far been paid to Somalia since the present food shortage began; upon what items; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Since the beginning of the current crisis Britain has committed £45·2 million of humanitarian assistance to Somalia. So far £37·9 million has been spent on food supplies, transport and logistical support, medical supplies, water and sanitation equipment, and tools and seeds.

India

45. Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on current aid levels to India.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Aid for India in 1992-93 is expected to be £95 million.

Aid Allocation

46. Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what criteria are used to determine the proportion of overseas aid allocated (a) bilaterally and (b) multilaterally.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: A high proportion of our multilateral aid spending is determined by negotiated or assessed international commitments, including our share of the European Community's aid budget. Otherwise, our aid resources are mostly spent bilaterally.

ACP Countries

47. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action is being taken to enable ACP countries to get real increases in prices paid for primary products.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Prices for primary products are primarily determined by international markets. We participate, however, in the European Community's Stabex and Sysmin schemes under the Lomé convention to help compensate African, Caribbean and Pacific countries for falls in their commodity export earnings.

Black Rhino

48. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what allocations have been made by his Department to schemes for the protection of the black rhino.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Since 1990, Britain has committed £167,200 to projects which aim to protect the rhinoceros, including £33,600 specifically for a project in Tanzania on the black rhino. We are also supporting a number of projects, worth over £18 million, concerned with the protection and conservation of wildlife. Many of these should also benefit the rhinoceros.

Rwanda

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what attempts have been made by his Department's Overseas Development Administration to assist refugees from Rwanda.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Rwandian refugees are being assisted by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, to which Britain is a major contributor. We are, not assisting Rwandan refugees bilaterally. We are, however, funding an agricultural resettlement project run by ACORD in Sud-Gisaka, Rwanda, which has existed since 1986 and was set up following the arrival of 2,000 refugees of Rwandese origin from Uganda.

Children

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consideration his Department's Overseas Development Administration has given to the recent report by UNICEF on the state of the world's children, in regard to the effects of United Kingdom's aid policy on children abroad.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: UNICEF's annual "State of the World's Children" report is a valuable guide to issues affecting mothers and children. Staff in the ODA value its information.

Kashmir

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans there are for an aid Minister to visit Kashmir to discuss aid projects; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: There are no plans for my noble Friend the Minister for Overseas Development to visit Kashmir. Aid projects are clearly difficult in the current situation, but we would be happy to consider appropriate projects when circumstances permit.

Developing Countries

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list (i) Britain's official flows to developing countries, broken down into official development assistance and other official flows in 1991, (ii) Britain's private flows to developing countries, broken down into private export credit, direct investment, bank lending and voluntary agencies, in 1991 and (iii) the percentage shares of gross national product for net overseas development aid and total flows to developing countries in 1991.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The information is as follows:

United Kingdom net aid flows

	1991 £ million
Official development assistance (oda)	1,814
Other official flows	293
Total official flows	2,107
Guaranteed private export credits	−2
Direct investments[1]	3,000
Other bilateral securities and claims	−680
Total private flows	2,318
Net grants by private voluntary agencies	215
Total flows	4,640
Percentage share of gross national product
Net oda	0·32
Total flows	0·81

[1] The 1991 figure for direct investment is a preliminary estimate.

I also refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. and noble Friend, the Minister for Overseas Development, in another place on 25 November 1992, Official Report, column 69-70, corrected on 9 December 1992 at column 9-10, which set out revised figures for 1990 and the basis on which banking flows were calculated.

Yugoslavia (Aid)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received regarding aid to former Yugoslavia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Government have received a great many representations from many sources.

PRIME MINISTER

Engineers

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it his policy to restrict the use of the term "engineer" in official Government documents to only chartered or incorporated engineers.

The Prime Minister: In referring to engineers, Government documents should make it clear whether particular qualifications are envisaged but, in the absence of any general restriction on the use of the term "engineer", it would not be appropriate to restrict its use to specified categories of engineer which form only part of the wider engineering profession. The Fairclough initiative is, however, examining this issue and the Government will consider its recommendations when received.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Prime Minister what recent representations he has received from the Institution of Electrical Engineers.

The Prime Minister: I have recently received a letter from the institution concerning vocational qualifications and my office will respond in due course.

Travel Expenses

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his reply on 9 December 1992, Official Report, column 668, if he is now in a position to publish the total cost to the Exchequer for his travels within the European Communities since 1 July 1992.

The Prime Minister: The total cost of my travels within the European Communities between 1 July and 31 December 1992 is estimated to be £328,000.

Polling Stations (Access)

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Prime Minister what proposals he has to co-ordinate policies between Scotland and England and Wales on the operation of schemes to purchase temporary ramps to improve access to polling stations; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: None. In England and Wales and in Scotland, a grant of 50 per cent. of the cost is available towards the purchase of temporary ramps to provide access to polling stations for disabled voters.

Standards of Conduct

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Prime Minister if he will introduce legislation to require (a) political parties in advertisements, (b) lawyers in court and (c) journalists in newspapers to (i) tell the truth, (ii) provide equal length or space to a right to reply, (iii) submit controversial claims to a statutory tribunal and (iv) submit themselves to fines for transgressing or for appearing at the time of judgment to have transgressed good taste or a code of conduct.

The Prime Minister: I have no plans to do so.

Forestry

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Prime Minister if he will bring forward proposals to introduce an integrated United Kingdom policy on forestry, covering (a) consumption of forests, (b) problems caused by deforestation, (c) the links between forestry and third world debt and (d) import controls on hardwoods.

The Prime Minister: The Government are committed to working for the effective implementation of the statement of principles on the world's forests agreed at the United Nations conference on environment and development in Rio last June. As part of this process we are preparing a United Kingdom national plan for forests. Policies on the issues listed in the question need to be integrated and co-ordinated with our broader environmental aid and trade policies. Co-ordination is achieved by regular contact between the Government Departments responsible for these matters.

Office and Travel Costs

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister what is the total cost to public funds of overseas travel by himself and those accompanying him on official business since he has held his present position to the most recent available date.

The Prime Minister: The total cost of my overseas official visits undertaken between 22 November 1990 and 31 December 1992 is estimated to be £1,816,000.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister what are the total costs of running his office, including travel, in each year since 1989-90.

The Prime Minister: The costs are as follows:

1989-90	7,669,276
1991-92	8,663,758

Note: Salaries and wages, notional pension liability, administration costs, the costs of office and the grant-in-aid to the Chequers Trust are included. The Prime Minister's salary is excluded.

Jamaica

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make representations within the European Community for the suspension of all economic aid to, and favourable trade arrangements with, Jamaica until that country improves its human rights record.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 15 January 1993]: We discuss aid policy towards specific developing countries regularly with other member states and with the European Commission. Full account of human rights considerations is taken in these discussions. We have no plans to argue for the suspension of economic aid to, and favourable trade arrangements with, Jamaica.

Company Directors

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the progress made to date in his policy of encouraging company directors to voluntarily keep their wages and other remunerations at levels that do not promote wage inflation.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 15 January 1993]: As I have previously made clear, pay in the private sector is a matter for the private sector to determine. However, I am encouraged by evidence that average boardroom pay increases are now falling to more realistic levels.

Press Office

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Prime Minister how many staff were employed by his press office in each year since 1979.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 15 January 1993]: Ten people including support staff are currently employed in 10 Downing street on press and public relations activities. Detailed figures were not recorded separately prior to 1987-88, but until 1 April 1992 the complement was eight. This was then increased to 10 by the addition of one press officer and one typist, to enable the press office to respond effectively to the growing number of press inquiries.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his reply to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe on the level of value added tax on bloodstock in the United Kingdom and the rates levied in France and Ireland, Official Report, 28 October 1992, column 288, what subsequent representations he has received on the issue; what replies were made; what action has now been taken; and if he will make a statement on the Government's current policy on this issue.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 10 December 1992]: The Commissioners of Customs and Excise have just received the Jockey Club's report to the Paymaster General on this subject. It is being considered as quickly and constructively as possible.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Exports

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will set out, as a percentage of the total value of United Kingdom exports, for each year since 1979, the value of (a) manufactured goods and (b) services.

Mr. Nelson: Information on exports for manufactured goods is published regularly in the Central Statistical Office (CSO) "Monthly Review of External Trade Statistics" and is also available on the CSO database which may be accessed by the House of Commons Library. Information on services credits and exports of goods and services is available on the CSO database.

European Communities (Budget)

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what changes he will be making to the cash limit on the vote of the budget of the European Communities.

Sir John Cope: The cash limit for this vote—class XX, vote 1—will be reduced by £1,217,503,000 to £132,497,000.

Provision of £1,350,000,000 was taken on this vote to cover the difference between, on the one hand, United Kingdom contributions to the EC up to the level provided for under Community legislation, and paid direct from the Consolidated Fund under the terms of the European Communities Act 1972, and, on the other hand, those contributions sought by the EC Commission, reflecting a budget adopted by the European Parliament, but not agreed by the Council.

The council, Commission and European Parliament have subsequently adopted an amending and supplementary budget, resolving the legal uncertainty. Payments from May 1992 have reverted to full payment from the Consolidated Fund. Therefore, April's payment of some £132·5 million from this vote will be the only expenditure incurred.

EDUCATION

Teacher Training

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what assessment he has made in the last two years of the effectiveness of basic counselling skills for students in initial teacher training establishments; and how many establishments have been studied for this purpose;

(2) what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of teacher training courses in developing group management skills; and if he considers further specific measures are needed in this regard.

Mr. Forth: The Secretary of State's criteria for the approval of courses of initial teacher training (ITT) require that students should be trained both in the effective management of groups of pupils and in the pastoral skills required to interact well with individual children. All ITT courses must be approved by my right hon. Friend before they start. Courses are also monitored regularly by OFSTED to ensure that they continue to comply with the Secretary of State's criteria.

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many students successfully completed courses in the teaching of pupils with severe learning difficulties for each of the last five years (a) on initial teacher training, (b) on postgraduate certificate of education courses and (c) on in-service training courses; and what is his projection to the next five years.

Mr. Forth: The Secretary of State's criteria for the approval of courses of initial teacher training require that all courses should develop in students the ability to identify special educational needs or learning difficulties. Since 1984, it has been the Government's policy that specialist qualifications of this kind should be acquired after initial training and a period of classroom experience. The specialist courses of initial training have therefore now been phased out. Data on the final output of these courses is not readily available.

The long in-service training courses which equip teachers with such specialist qualification have been a priority for specific grant support for a number of years. For 1992-93, this is sufficient to support the training of 206 new and 90 existing students. Information on the numbers successfully completing such courses is not collected centrally. Projections beyond 1992-93 are for local determination.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of in-service training for articled teachers; and what percentage have withdrawn from the scheme since its inception.

Mr. Forth: An evaluation of the management and organisation of the articled teacher scheme, which is a two-year course of initial teacher training leading to a postgraduate certificate of education, was carried out by the National Foundation for Educational Research during the first year of the scheme's operation. Her Majesty's inspectorate has recently completed a two-year study which focused mainly on five articled teacher schemes. I understand that OFSTED will shortly be publishing a report of this study. Both of these studies focused on the articled teacher scheme in England. During the first two years of the scheme approximately 4 per cent. of students withdrew before completing their training.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) if he will make a statement about the way in which the principles of good classroom management are being implemented by teachers and their trainers; and what contribution his Department has made in this process and the extent to which implementation has been achieved;

(2) what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of those involved in the provision of teacher training in determining whether potential teachers have the ability to relate well to pupils.

Mr. Forth: The Secretary of State's criteria for the approval of initial teacher training—ITT—courses require that courses must provide satisfactory training for students in classroom management. No students can gain qualified teacher status unless they have demonstrated in the classroom both the ability to teach effectively and secure effective learning, and the ability to manage pupil behaviour. Assessment of students' ability to relate well to children is done both when the application for teacher training is submitted—by means of an interview—and also through assessment of the student's teaching practice. My right hon. Friend has not studied the effectiveness of trainers in making such assessments.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of initial teacher training establishments in introducing students to the concept of peer support and its uses.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend has not made an assessment of peer support within ITT courses.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many local education authorities provide midday supervision and other non-teaching staff with training in the management of pupils' behaviour; and what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of this training.

Mr. Forth: Information about training of this kind is not collected centrally and my right hon. Friend has made no assessment of its effectiveness.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many local education authorities provide in-service training in classroom management for supply teachers.

Mr. Forth: This information is not collected centrally.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what percentage of staff providing training in teaching skills have had at least one term's regular teaching experience in the last five years.

Mr. Forth: The Secretary of State's criteria for the approval of initial teaching training courses include the requirement that, from the beginning of the current academic year, all staff at institutions who are concerned with training students in teaching skills must have had at least one term's experience of teaching in school in the previous five years.

OFSTED monitors courses regularly to ensure that accredited courses comply with this requirement.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) how many schools counted separately in the primary, secondary and special education sectors offer pupillages to prospective initial teacher training students; and what is the percentage of schools involved;

(2) how many entrants to initial teacher training last year undertook a period of pupillage, or other work with children, before starting their courses; what percentage of all students this was; and what contribution his Department has made to encourage this practice;

(3) how long a period of pupillage in a school lasts on average; what are the longest and shortest periods of times; and what advice is given by his Department to encourage high quality student experience.

Mr. Forth: Many courses of initial teacher training—ITT—require students to spend soem time in schools prior to the start of the course. However, information about the numbers of schools and prospective students involved in such schemes of work experience, and the lengths of the schemes, is not held centrally.

The Government have given financial support to a number of taster courses providing school experience for people who are interested in teaching.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what steps have been taken in the last two years to promote multicultural awareness and equal opportunities in school and initial teacher training establishments.

Mr. Forth: In the last two years the Government have continued the phased introduction of the national curriculum, which is designed to challenge and stimulate all pupils whatever their ethnic or cultural origin. The National Curriculum Council and the Schools Examination and Assessment Council, which advise my: :right hon. Friend on the curriculum and assessment, are required in exercising their functions to take account of the ethnic and cultural diversity of British society and the importance of promoting equal opportunities for all pupils regardless of ethnic origin and gender. The Government are also proposing to strengthen religious education, which provides opportunities to study other faiths and cultures and develop greater tolerance and understanding.

The criteria for the approval of courses of initial teacher training—ITT—include a requirement that they should help student teachers to develop an awareness of individual differences, including social and cultural dimensions. The Department has encouraged the development of ITT courses for people from ethnic minority communities. The Department issued guidance in August 1992 about the design and management of such courses, drawing on conclusions from Her Majesty's Inspectorate inspections.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what steps he is taking to encourage the recruitment of teachers from minority ethnic backgrounds; and what success has been achieved in the last two years.

Mr. Forth: The Government have adopted a range of measures to encourage people from ethnic minority backgrounds to consider a career in the teaching profession. They include "Teaching as a Career"—TASC—publications, advertising, participation at careers events, stimulating the development of special access courses, and supporting relevant local projects.

The Government introduced ethnic monitoring of teachers in January 1990 following recommendation by the Swann committee, but response so far has been poor, though it is improving. As a result, it is not yet possible to draw conclusions about the percentage of teachers nationally who are from ethnic minorities, nor to identify improvements over the last two years.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of local education authority induction programmes for new teachers.

Mr. Forth: The Department published a report in March 1992 by Her Majesty's inspectorate on the induction of new teachers. A new grant to support expenditure by local education authorities on improvements in induction training was introduced, through the grants for education support and training programme—GEST—with effect from the 1992-93 financial year. Evidence about the effectiveness of local education authorities' induction arrangements is taken into account when decisions about the allocation of GEST support are made.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement about the way in which initial teacher training establishments are selecting applicants on the basis of their personal qualities for effective classroom management and for relating well to children, the way in which his Department is contributing to more effective selection procedures and the number and percentage of applicants who are not accepted for initial teacher training.

Mr. Forth: The Secretary of State's criteria for the approval of initial teacher training—ITT—courses require institutions to ensure that entrants to teacher training have the necessary personal qualities for the profession, including an ability to manage and to get on well with children. No one can be accepted on an ITT course without being interviewed.

The number of applicants not accepted for ITT courses in 1992 were, for undergraduate courses, around 9,900 (39 per cent. of applicants); and for postgraduate courses around 8,800 (35 per cent. of applicants).

School Buildings

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what advice has been published in the last two years on school building design; and what were the principal purposes of such advice in each case.

Mr. Forth: The Department has published nine documents over the past two years to assist those concerned with the provision and management of school buildings. These are: "Educational Design Initiatives in City Technology Colleges" (Building Bulletin 72); "A Guide to Energy Efficiency" (Building Bulletin 73); "A School for Armenia" (Building Bulletin 74); "Close Circuit TV Surveillance Systems in Educational Buildings" (Building Bulletin 75); "Maintenance of Electrical Systems" (Building Bulletin 76); "Designing for Pupils with Special Educational Needs (Building Bulletin 77); "Energy Efficient School Refurbishment" (Broadsheet 27); "School Glazing and Vandalism" (Broadsheet 28); "Energy Use in Educational Buildings" (Broadsheet 29). Copies are available in the Library.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the latest information available to him on the money needed to bring all school buildings into a good state of repair.

Mr. Forth: The latest information available is that contained in the "Survey of School Buildings" published by the Department in 1987. A realistic estimate of the cost of remedying the principal deficiencies identified by the survey, which covered county and voluntary controlled schools in England, is some £2 billion at 1990 prices. LEAs in England spent over £2 billion on capital expenditure on school buildings between 1986-87 and 1989-90. We estimate that between 1990-91 and 1993-94 LEAs will spend some £2·5 billion on their schools. Much of this will go on remedying deficiencies.

Education matters in Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland are the responsibility of my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales and for Scotland and of my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Personal and Social Education Programmes

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what assessment he has made of the effective provision of personal and social education programmes in schools in the last two years.

Mr. Forth: During the last two years Her Majesty's inspectors of schools have published a number of reports focusing specifically on aspects of personal and social education; and have also addressed the subject, as appropriate, in their reports on individual schools. OFSTED is now responsible for providing my right hon. Friend with information and advice about all aspects of school education, which includes personal and social education.

Examinations

Mr. George: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what percentage of (a) Walsall and (b) west midlands school children of GCSE age take the exams; and what proportion carry on from GCSE to A-level.

Mr. Forth: It is estimated that 91·8 per cent. of pupils, who were 15 years old at the beginning of the 1991-92 academic year in Walsall schools, were entered for GCSE examinations compared with 91·7 per cent. in the whole of the west midlands. Information on the proportion who carry on from GCSE to A-level is not available centrally for individual local authority areas.

School Discipline

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many local education authorities have used their powers of intervention under section 28 of the Education (No. 2) Act 1986; and on how many occasions.

Mr. Forth: This information is not collected centrally.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the latest information he has concerning the number of indefinite exclusions of pupils from (a) local education authority maintained schools and (b) grant-maintained schools.

Mr. Forth: Information on indefinite exclusions is not collected centrally.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of local education authority serious incident reporting systems.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend has made no assessment of the effectiveness of local education authority serious incident reporting systems.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what action he has taken on recommendations (a) 68 and (b) 69.1 of the Elton report on discipline in schools.

Mr. Forth: Recommendation 68 deals with the importance of positive parental influence. The Government's stance on this is well known: parents should instil the values of responsible citizenship into their children. Recommendation 69.1 concerns education for parenthood. The National Curriculum Council has issued guidance to schools on the content of family life education, including education for parenthood, and its place in the wider curriculum.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what steps have been taken by his Department to overcome bullying and racial harassment in schools.

Mr. Forth: The Government expect schools to deal firmly with bullying and racial harassment. Copies of the pack "Action against Bullying" were sent to all schools in England in July 1992. The Department is also funding research to develop and test a range of intervention strategies against bullying in schools and further guidance will be issued in due course. Guidance on responses to racial harassment was given to chief education officers in 1989 and 1992. OFSTED has been asked to ensure that all inspecting teams appointed under the Schools Act 1992 pay particular attention to the arrangements for securing good discipline and behaviour.

Records of Achievement

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of records of achievement in giving due weight to a wide range of pupil achievements and personal qualities.

Mr. Forth: Records of achievement are a valuable means of recording and reporting pupils' achievements. The national record of achievement is an effective summary for school-leavers to take forward to further education and working life. Recent evaluation has shown that take up of the NRA among schools has been high. New regulations governing reports on pupils' achievements require schools to use the format as part of the NRA to provide a specified minimum of information for school-leavers. Copies of the regulations and the explanatory circular have been placed in the Library.

Management Training

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of management training programmes for head teachers and other senior staff.

Mr. Forth: It is for individual schools and teachers to decide which training programmes can most effectively meet their particular needs. The Department has helped by supporting the development and assessment of a number of new management training initiatives in recent years. We also commissioned a survey of overall provision for school management training in February 1989 to guide and support the work of the school management task force, the body we established to lever up standards of provision in this field. The Office for Standards in Education has responsibility for inspecting the training of teachers including management training programmes.

Articled Teachers

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many people have become articled teachers since the inception of the scheme; and in what sectors and subjects.

Mr. Forth: Around 1,200 primary and secondary phase students have been recruited to the articled teacher scheme in England since its inception in 1990. Secondary training has been in the subjects of business studies, design and technology, English, modern foreign languages, mathematics, science and religious education.

Pupil Behaviour

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the provision that local education authorities make for their most difficult pupils; and how many local education authorities have been studied in this regard.

Mr. Forth: As part of its detailed enquiry into discipline in schools, the Elton committee asked LEAs about their provision for pupils whose behaviour teachers found most difficult to manage. Its report commented on both the nature and quality of the provision made. For the future inspecting teams appointed under the Schools Act 1992 will pay particular attention to schools' arrangements for securing good discipline and behaviour.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of local education authorities in promoting better co-ordination between various local agencies dealing with pupils with behaviour or attendance problems and their families.

Mr. Forth: The importance of effective co-ordination with other agencies is stressed in much of the guidance produced by the Department of Health on the Children Act 1989 and in the guide to the Act for the education service which the Department of Education commissioned from the Open university. Where school attendance is concerned, the education welfare service has a long history of close collaboration with social services and other agencies. The importance of these contacts was stressed in the Department's circular 2/86 "School Attendance and Education Welfare Services".

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many cases of bullying have been reported in each local education authority in the primary, secondary and special education sectors in each of the last three years; and what percentage of those cases were racially motivated.

Mr. Forth: This information is not collected centrally.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what research his Department has sponsored in the last two years on the implications for pupil behaviour of arranging pupils in groups for teaching purposes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: No such research has been commissioned in the last two years. The behavioural implications of grouping pupils for teaching purposes were however discussed in Her Majesty's inspectorate's 1987 publication "Good Behaviour and Discipline in Schools" and in "Discipline in Schools", the report of the committee of inquiry into discipline in schools chaired by Lord Elton, published in 1989.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education, how much money under the grants for education support and training scheme has been allocated since 1990-91 for programmes dealing with the management of pupil behaviour; and what percentage of overall funding this is.

Mr. Forth: Some £7·6 million of expenditure has been supported over the three years from 1990-91 to improve support services for the most difficult pupils through approved projects in 24 local education authorities (LEAs). A further £3·5 million was supported over the two years from 1990-91 to help improve teachers' practical skills in managing pupil behaviour. Together, these grants supported £4·2 million in 1990-91 (1·2 per cent. of the overall education support grants and LEA training grants programmes in that year); £4·2 million in 1991-92 (1·2 per cent. of the overall grants for education support and training—GEST—programme); and are supporting £2·7 million in 1992-93 (0·7 per cent. of the overall GEST programme).

Education Welfare Officers

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many education welfare officers are employed by each local education authority; what is the ratio of officers to pupils in each local education authority and if he will make a statement about the adequacy of this provision.

Mr. Forth: This information is not collected centrally. It is for each individual local education authority to determine whether the number of education welfare officers employed is sufficient to enable it to meet its statutory responsibilities.

Special Educational Needs

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what assessment he has made of the number of educational psychologists, physiotherapists, speech therapists, qualified specialists in hearing and visual impairments and other specialist support staff needed to ensure that all statements of special educational needs are prepared within six months while work with other children with special needs is maintained at satisfactory levels.

Mr. Forth: The provision of suitable numbers of specialist staff to ensure that all statements of special educational needs are prepareed within six months is for LEAs to determine. The recent Audit Commission/HMI report on provision for pupils with SEN noted, however, that the time taken for making assessments and statements is largely a matter of effective management. In discharging their duties under the Education Act 1981, it is essential for LEAs to work closely with district health authorities and social services departments, who also have important roles to play in this process.

Civil Servants (Bicycles)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement on the current conditions on which civil servants in his Department are granted salary advances to enable the purchase of bicycles for home-to-office travel; if he will make a statement on the current conditions in each agency of his Department; what plans he has to change the conditions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Boswell: Advances of salary up to a maximum of £100 are available to junior staff for the purchase of bicycles for home-to-office travel. The conditions applying to the scheme are being reviewed in the light of the reply that my hon. Friend the Member for Loughborough (Mr. Dorrell) gave on 16 December 1992 to my hon. Friend the Member for Chelmsford (Mr. Burns) at columns 285-86.

Grant-maintained Status

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list each one-day conference in the "Going GM: A conference for Heads and Governors" series, hosted by his Department, that has been held or is planned, giving dates, venues and the speakers for each one.

Mr. Forth: The information available is as follows:

Venue	Date	Speakers/Workshop contributors GM Heads	DFE Officials
Leeds	16 November 1992	3	4
Bolton	12 December 1992	6	7
Sheffield	15 January 1993	5	5
Manchester[1]	30 January 1993	6	5

[1] Planned.

My noble Friend the Minister of State spoke at the initial conference in Leeds. A GM bursar contributed at Bolton. A representative of the GMSC has attended to run a workshop explaining the services that the GMSC can offer to schools once they are approved for GM status.

Additional DFE conferences are planned as follows:

Newcastle: 10 and 11 February
Leicester: 15 February
Nottingham: 1 and 29 March
Birmingham: 19 March

Details of contributors to these conferences have yet to be confirmed.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what are the (a) editorial, (b) design, (c) printing, (d) distribution and (e) total costs, of the conference material sent to potential participants in the series of one-day conferences called "Going GM: A conference for Heads and Governors";

(2) if he will list the total conference costs of the series of one-day conferences hosted by his Department entitled "Going GM: A conference for Heads and Governors", including staff time for civil servants within his Department; and what are the projected costs for all such conferences.

Mr. Forth: The conference material sent to potential participants includes a letter of invitation and a copy of the standard GM information pack. Printing and distribution costs for the information pack included with the invitations were approximately £18,000. The initial mailing of invitations and packs was carried out at a total cost of around £15,000. Further mailings have fallen within the terms of the contract with the departmental despatch centre and therefore costs cannot be identified separately.

The total costs to date for conference accommodation and facilities for the three conferences held at Leeds, Bolton and Sheffield are approximately £20,000. The expected cost of a further seven conferences is approximately £45,000. There is a contract for specialised support services for the conference series at a total cost of £67,000. Disaggregating the costs of civil servants' time could not be achieved other than at disproportionate cost.

Education, Enfield

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what action he will take to ensure that Enfield is able to fulfil its duty to provide full-time education to all its pupils.

Mr. Forth: There is no reason why all pupils in Enfield should not receive full-time education. Enfield council will get its fair share of the underlying 2·6 per cent. increase in education standard spending, once account has been taken of the transfer of responsibility for further education from local authorities to the new funding council.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Interpretation of Legislation

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement on the decision of the House of Lords in the case of Pepper v. Hart on references to the utterances of Ministers on the contents and intent of Bills during their passage in Parliament, when Acts are subsequently interpreted in the courts.

Mr. John M. Taylor: On 26 November 1992, the House of Lords decided by a majority that courts could look at parliamentary materials if the legislation is ambiguous or obscure or leads to an absurdity; the material that could be relied upon consists of a statement by a Minister or other promoter of the Bill; and the statements relied upon are clear.

Legal Aid

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many of the claims made by solicitors for payment by the legal aid fund were settled within one month in 1991-92.

Mr. John M. Taylor: In 1991-92 the Legal Aid Board had a general target of paying 80 per cent. of solicitors' bills within six weeks of receipt measured by its performance in March 1992. This target was surpassed, with 87 per cent. of bills being paid within that time.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many claims for payment by solicitors are awaiting payment from the London legal aid area office; and how many have been outstanding for over one month.

Mr. John M. Taylor: On 6 January 1993 the London area office had a total of 31,651 costs claims of all types in the process of being paid. Of these 2,844, or 9 per cent. had been held in the office for more than one month.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many people in (a) Pendle, (b) Lancashire and (c) England received legal aid for each year since 1987 in respect of (i) advice and assistance for divorce, (ii) road or work accidents, (iii) regaining custody of children taken into local authority care and (iv) alleged criminal acts triable at a Crown court; and what is his estimate for the total number of people eligible for legal aid in the categories mentioned for the next financial year.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The information is not available in the form requested. The following table shows the number of bills paid for advice and assistance for divorce for each of the last five years for England and Wales, for legal aid area 7 which comprises parts of Lancashire including Pendle together with Greater Manchester, and for legal aid area 15 which comprises the rest of Lancashire and Merseyside.

	England and Wales	Legal Aid Area 7	Legal Aid Area 15
1987-88	237,056	18,531	13,599
1988-89	232,494	18,005	13,412
1989-90	225,066	18,132	12,460

	England and Wales	Legal Aid Area 7	Legal Aid Area 15
1990-91	215,895	17,315	11,681
1991-92	231,065	16,867	11,770

The number of legal aid certificates for proceedings related to road and work accidents is available only for England and Wales. Figures for the last five years are:

Year	Number
1987-88	26,113
1988-89	27,745
1989-90	29,181
1990-91	30,416
1991-92	38,679

The following table shows for each of the past five calendar years the total number of criminal legal aid orders made in: (a) England and Wales; (b) the magistrates' courts in Lancashire and the Crown court centres in the northern circuit of the Lord Chancellor's Department; and (c) the Pendle magistrates' court and the Crown court at Burnley.

Year	(a) England and Wales	(b) Lancashire and Northern Circuit	(c) Pendle and Burnley
1987	496,975	12,639	670
1988	511,895	[1]—	[1]—
1989	502,675	10,303	708
1990	507,813	13,583	880
1991	517,118	10,889	737

[1]No figures available.

Figures are not available for certificates issued for proceedings for regaining children taken into local authority care. In England and Wales it is estimated that in the next financial year 48 per cent. of households will be eligible for civil legal aid and 21 per cent., for advice and assistance. There is no upper financial eligibility limit for criminal legal aid.

Commercial Court

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, pursuant to his answer of 10 December, Official Report, column 757, from what date Mr. Justice Colman will be available to commence sitting in the commercial court.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Mr. Justice Colman was eligible to sit in the commercial court immediately following his appointment. The day to day deployment of High Court judges is, however, a matter for the Lord Chief Justice, after considering the needs of the Queen's Bench Division of the High Court, the divisional court and the Court of Appeal, criminal division. In deciding where judges are to be deployed there are different questions of priority to be decided. The Lord Chancellor and the Lord Chief Justice consider a reduction of waiting times in the latter two courts to be of high priority.

Civil Servants (Bicycles)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, if he will make a statement on the current conditions on which civil servants in his Department are granted salary advances to enable the purchase of bicycles for home-to-office travel; if he will make a statement on the current conditions in each agency of his Department; what plans he has to change the conditions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: My hon. Friend the Financial Secretary to the Treasury explained in a written answer on 16 December 1992 at column 285-86 that, as part of the ongoing programme for delegating to Departments and agencies greater responsibility for managing personnel management policies, Departments and agencies have been given the freedom to determine the conditions on which advances of salary to assists civil servants in the purchase of bicycles for home-to-office travel are made. Staff in the Lord Chancellor's Department, and in the Department's executive agencies, are eligible for a salary advance to assist with the purchase of a bicycle for home-to-office travel. The maximum advance is currently £100 repayable over a period of one year. Departments and agencies will shortly have discretion to set their own limit and rules for eligibility and repayment. No decisions have yet been reached on how this discretion might be applied within the Lord Chancellor's Department and its agencies.

Court Listing

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department on what basis his Department makes available court listing information in (a) manuscript and printed form and (b) machine readable form.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Crown court centres usually distribute lists of cases to be heard, or likely to be heard, or the information they contain, to all interested parties as soon as they are available.

Lists of cases with fixed hearing dates and cases likely to be heard within a particular period are distributed at least 10 days prior to the first hearing date. These lists are usually in printed form and are posted.

A daily list is printed and published usually by 3 pm, showing the cases due to be heard on the next sitting day. However, some courts publish a provisional list earlier in the day. The information on this list is notified to parties either by the hand delivery of a copy, or by sending a copy by facsimile machine or, more commonly by means of a telephone call. The hon. Member is aware from my answer of 16 December 1992 at col. 239 that the central criminal court is distributing such lists in a machine readable form on an experimental basis.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Electricity Generation

Mr. Colvin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps he has taken to quantify the external costs of each form of electricity generation.

Mr. Eggar: Last December my Department published an independent report on environmental and other social costs of different methods of electricity generation.

The report, commissioned by the former Department of Energy and entitled "The Social Costs of Fuel Cycles" is the work of a team from the Centre for Social and Economic Research on the Global Environment (CSERGE), led by Professor David Pearce of University college London. I am arranging for copies to be placed in the Library of the House.

My Department is also currently supporting the participation of the Energy Technology Support Unit in a joint European Community/USA study to develop a methodology for assessing the external costs of fuel cycles. Phase I of this study is nearing completion: phase II is expected to commence during 1993.

Electricity Generation

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what was the cost per tonne of British coal used in producing electricity in 1991; what estimates his Department has for the cost per tonne in 1995; and if he will make a statement.;

(2) what was the cost per tonne of imported coal used in producing electricity in 1991; what estimates his Department has for the cost per tonne in 1995; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 13 January 1993]: The average cost of coal, both home produced and imported, used by the major generating companies in producing electricity in 1991 was £43·47 per tonne. The cost of British coal used in power stations is a commercial matter for the companies concerned. My Department has not produced forecasts of future energy costs since 1982.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the cost, in coal equivalent tonnes, of natural gas used to produce electricity in 1991; what estimates his Department has for the cost in 1995; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 13 January 1993]: The cost of natural gas used to produce electricity is a commercial matter for the two major generating companies concerned. My Department has not produced forecasts of future energy costs since 1982.

Electricity Supply

Mr. Spellar: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment his Department has made of interruptions to electricity supply to consumers since 1990.

Mr. Eggar: The Office of Electricity Regulation—OFFER—includes an assessment of interruptions of electricity supply to consumers in their annual "Report on Distribution and Transmission System Performance". The latest edition of this report (for the year 1991-92), covers the last 10 years and is available from OFFER's library.

Inward Investment

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many inward investment projects in Northumberland and Blyth valley were begun in each year since 1990.

Mr. Sainsbury: In 1990, 13 overseas companies decided to invest in Northumberland with one of those investments being made in Blyth. The figures for 1991 are five and one respectively. Figures for 1992 are not yet available. These figures do not include relocations from other regions of the United Kingdom.

These figures are based on information provided by the companies at the time of the announcement of the decision to invest. There is no requirement to notify the Department and so the figures include only those projects where the Department's Invest In Britain Bureau and its regional partners were involved or, which have come to their notice. They take no account of subsequent developments.

Betws Colliery

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received from companies expressing an interest in taking over production of coal at the Betws colliery in Ammanford; when he received these representations; and if he will ensure that the pit is maintained whilst these representations are being considered.

Mr. Eggar: Since the announcement of the proposed closures in October 1992, my Department has received three representations from companies which may be interested in taking over the operation of Betws. British Coal has given assurances that the fabric of the pit will be maintained so that if, following the consultation process at present under way, it is decided to keep it open, that will be possible. We will need to consider the position again once the outcome of the consultations is known.

Newspapers

Mr. Beggs: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the exclusive arrangements for the supply and distribution of newspapers.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The Director General of Fair Trading referred the supply of newspapers from publishers to wholesalers and wholesalers to retailers in England and Wales to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission on 19 August 1992. The commission was asked to report back to the President of the Board of Trade within 12 months.

The terms of reference exclude Scotland and Northern Ireland primarily because their newspaper distribution arrangements are different. The Office of Fair Trading continues to keep the market for the supply of newspapers in Scotland and Northern Ireland under review.

Offshore Exploration

Mr. Ainger: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make it his policy to impose on discharges from exploration rigs in the Celtic sea, the same standards that are applied by the United States of America, Holland and Norway; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Offshore environmental standards are established on the basis of regional agreements. The standards imposed on discharges from exploration rigs in the Celtic sea are consistent with those agreed in the Paris Commission (PARCOM), which administers the Paris convention for the prevention of marine pollution. This covers the whole of the north east Atlantic area. In appropriate cases more stringent requirements can be imposed under licence conditions. The Netherlands and Norway are members of the Paris Commission and their standards similarly reflect those agreed in the Paris Commission.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what advice he received from the Joint Nature

Conservation Committee and the Countryside Council for Wales prior to the issuing of licences for exploration in blocks 103/2, 103/3, 103/6, 103/7, 106/25, 106/29, 107/21, 104/16, 104/17, 104/18, 104/19 and 104/21; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what is the shortest distance in nautical miles between the eastern extremity of block 103/3 and Romsey Island;

(3) what is the shortest distance in nautical miles between the eastern extremity of block 103/7 and Grassholm;

(4) what is the shortest distance in nautical miles between the Pembrokeshire Coast national park and (a) the eastern extremity of block 106/29, (b) the southern and eastern extremities of block 107/21, (c) the northern extremity of block 103/19, (d) the northern extremity of block 103/20, (e) the northern extremity of block 104/16 and (f) the northern extremity of block 104/17;

(5) what is the shortest distance in nautical miles between the Skomer marine nature reserve and (a) the eastern extremity of block 103/7 and (b) the northern extremity of block 103/19.

Mr. Eggar: The shortest distance in nautical miles—nm—between the eastern extremity of block 103/3 and Romsey Island is 5·4 nm and between the eastern extremity of block 103/7 and Grassholm is 6·1 nm. The shortest distance in nautical miles between the Pembrokeshire coastal national park and (a) the eastern extremity of block 106/29 is 3 nm, (b) the southern and eastern extremities of block 107/21 is 3·6 nm, (c) the northern extremity of block 103/19 is 8·6 nm, (d) the northern extremity of block 103/20 is 6·4 nm, (e) the northern extremity of block 104/16 is 5·7 nm and (f) the northern extremity of block 104/17 is 7·7 nm. The shortest distance in nautical miles between Skomer marine nature reserve and (a) the eastern extremity of block 103/7 is 10·0 nm and (b) the northern extremity of block 103/19 is 12·7 nm. These figures are accurate to within 0·1 nm.

No licences have been issued for exploration in blocks 103/2, 103/3, 103/6, 103/7, 106/25, 106/29, 107/21, 104/16, 104/17, 104/18, 104/19 and 104/21.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make it his policy to order independent environmental impact assessments before any new drilling begins in the Celtic sea.

Mr. Eggar: Prior to offering blocks for licence the Department consults relevant environmental organisations. Where appropriate special conditions, which may include a requirement for an environmental impact assessment, are attached to licences which take into account the environmental sensitivity of each block. These conditions are agreed with the consultees.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what environmental monitoring on the impact of offshore drilling in the Celtic sea has been carried out by his Department or the Department of Energy since 1973.

Mr. Eggar: The Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food carries out general monitoring of the coast of England and Wales to establish background levels of marine pollutants. At the completion of the latest well in the Celtic sea, the University of Bangor will be carrying out a survey to assess any effects of drilling on the marine environment.

Civil Servants (Bicycles)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the current conditions on which civil servants in his Department are granted salary advances to enable the purchase of bicycles for home-to-office travel; if he will make a statement on the current conditions in each agency of his Department; what plans he has to change the conditions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: DTI offers advances of salary for this pupose to all staff—including those in its agencies—other than casuals. Advances are subject to a £100 maximum repayable over 12 months and to proof of purchase being made available. The conditions will be reviewed from time to time within overall rules established by HM Treasury.

Chemical Weapons

Mr. Flynn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what arrangement his Department has made to ensure that the inspectors of the Organisation for Chemical Weapons, following the ratification of the chemical weapons convention, will be admitted to any site in the United Kingdom for which inspection has been requested;

(2) what further United Kingdom legislation will be necessary to enable the inspectors and the national authority to carry out its duties following the ratification of the chemical weapons convention.

Mr. Sainsbury: Primary legislation will be required to provide the necessary powers to ensure that the United Kingdom fulfils its obligations under the chemical weapons convention.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what arrangement his Department has made to ensure that information will be made available to the public by the national authority, following the ratification of the chemical weapons convention, on the United Kingdom's compliance with the convention.

Mr. Sainsbury: No decision has been taken about the information to be made available to the public by the national authority. We will consult interested bodies. Information received by the national authority will be subject to the terms of the annex to the chemical weapons convention dealing with the protection of confidential information.

Assisted Areas

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he intends to publish his review of the assisted areas map; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: Our intention is to announce the results of the assisted areas map review as early as possible, taking account of the outcome of the coal review and after the necessary clearance of the European Commission.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects to announce the decision on the bid for assisted area status lodged by Waveney district council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: Consideration is now being given to bids received, including that from Waveney district council. Our intention is to announce the results of the assisted areas map review as early as possible, taking account of the outcome of the coal review and after the necessary clearance of the European Commission.

Cashmere

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement outlining the steps that have been taken to prevent Chinese attempts to circumvent the quota of cashmere goods allowed into the Community under the existing bilateral agreement.

Mr. Needham: Following representations from the United Kingdom, the EC has introduced a separate tariff line exclusively for cashmere sweaters. As a result of the completion of the single market the quota for cashmere sweaters has now been established on an EC basis. Both of these measures, which took effect on 1 January 1993, will enable import levels to be monitored more effectively than in previous years.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

European Cultural Festival

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what benefits accrued to the arts in Wales from the European cultural festival organised during the United Kingdom Presidency of the European Council; what proportion of the total financial allocation was dedicated to Wales; and how many permanent jobs were created.

Mr. Brooke: During the European arts festival some 70 events were held across the Principality in every art form —dance, theatre, classical music, jazz, opera, the visual arts and film. Approximately £320,000 was allocated to enable these events to take place. In addition, the festival planned and supported extensive education and community programmes involving some 100 schools in Wales. The festival has provided a good deal of additional short-term work for artists in Wales through the initiation of a wide range of new projects.

Gambling

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what estimate he has of (a) the net level of gambling each week, (b) the proportion of national lottery stakes that might go to good causes or in taxation and (c) the level of spending on the national lottery that would be required to produce £20 million for good causes and taxation.

Mr. Brooke: Overall responsibility for gambling, excluding the national lottery, rests with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department. On question (a), I refer to the answer given to the hon. Member for Cunninghame, North (Mr. Wilson) on 9 November 1992 at cols. 632-33.

(b) The proportion available for good causes will depend on the exact level of prizes considered appropriate, on the projected costs of operating the lottery, and on the level of tax. Taxation is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

(c) The turnover required to produce any given amount for taxation and good causes will depend on (b).

British Library (Yorkshire)

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Natonal Heritage if he will make a statement on the plans of the British Library with regard to its buildings and services in Yorkshire.

Mr. Key: The British Library's policy is to provide a service to users from its sites in London and Boston Spa, Yorkshire. The document supply centre will continue to operate from Boston Spa. In addition, during the last two years, the Library has relocated to Yorkshire its acquisition processing and cataloguing, its bibliographic services, computing and telecommunications and a substantial part of its administration.

The British Library Board will continue to review the needs of its users, including long-term requirements.

Football Ground Safety

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what financial provision will be made for implementing the football ground safety measures proposed by the Taylor report following decreases in the funding by pools company revenue.

Mr. Brooke: In the 1990 Budget, pool betting duty was reduced from 42·5 per cent. to 40 per cent. for five years to help finance the implementation of the Taylor report and in particular the achievement of all-seating. My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer has since made clear the conditions under which he would be prepared to extend the reduction for a further five years: he would need to be satisfied that the football leagues and football clubs had gone ahead with planning for their own contribution to implementing the required ground improvements. I am not aware of any plans by the pools companies to reduce their funding of Taylor-related work at football grounds.

Manchester Olympics Bid

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when he plans to meet the chairman of the North West tourist board to discuss Merseyside's share in the Manchester 2000 Olympics bid.

Mr. Brooke: I have no plans to do so.

Civil Servants (Bicycles)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will make a statement on the current conditions on which civil servants in his Department are granted salary advances to enable the purchase of bicycles for home-to-office travel; if he will make a statement on the current conditions in each agency of his Department; what plans he has to change the conditions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: The Department and its agency, the Historic Royal Palaces Agency, are able to provide advances of salary to assist staff with the purchase of bicycles for home to office travel. Advances currently up to a maximum of £100 are available to non-industrial staff who have served in the civil service for at least two months. Advances are not available to staff employed on a casual basis. The advances are interest-free and are repayable over one year. Immediate repayment is required should the member of staff cease to be a civil servant or dispose of the bicycle.

The Department has no plans to change eligibility or repayment rules, or to raise the maximum amount of loan.

Indian Subcontinent

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage, pursuant to his answer of the 14 December 1992, Official Report, column 14, on flights to and from the Indian sub-continent, what assessment he has made of the reasons for (a) the difference between the number of arrivals and departures in each year and (b) the trend in the difference.

Mr. Key: Reliable conclusions cannot necessarily be drawn from the differences between the data on passengers arriving and departing on flights from or to the Indian sub-continent. This is because the data relate to all such passengers irrespective of where they joined or left the flights, and also because the data include passengers who changed flights in the United Kingdom without passing through immigration control.

Information up to 1990 on international migration to and from the Indian sub-continent is given in the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys' annual reference volume "International Migration 1990". Information up to 1991 on citizens of Indian sub-continent countries who were accepted for settlement, that is, allowed to stay indefinitely in the United Kingdom, is given in the Home Office Command Paper "Control of Immigration: Statistics, United Kingdom, 1991". Both of these publications are available in the Library of the House.

Television Licences

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage (1) if he will set out the reasons used by the National TV Licence Records Office for withdrawing a full concessionary TV licence entitlement from Richmond Row sheltered housing complex in Jedburgh; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what recent representations he has received about the operation of the current rules governing eligibility for full concessionary TV licence schemes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: Under section 180 and schedule 18 of the Broadcasting Act 1990, responsibility for the administration of the television licensing system, including determining eligibility for concessionary licences in individual cases, passed to the BBC with effect from 1 April 1991. Any questions about specific schemes should therefore now be directed to the secretary of the BBC, and it would be inappropriate for me to comment on particular cases. Since the establishment of the Department of National Heritage in April last year, we have received 107 letters from hon. Members and 178 letters from members of the public about the operation of the concessionary licence scheme.

Dulwich Picture Gallery

Ms. Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what representations he has received on behalf of Dulwich picture gallery; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key [holding answer 15 January 1993]: I have received no representations on behalf of the Dulwich picture gallery. However my right hon. Friend met representatives from the gallery and the arts community at Christie's on Thursday 7 January.

Bletchley Park

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will make a statement on the future of Bletchley park as a museum dedicated to the cryptographers of world war two.

Mr. Key [holding answer 14 January 1993]: The Bletchley park site is owned by Property Holdings and British Telecom. I understand that the Government and British Telecom are planning to dispose of Bletchley park, and that a decision on its future is one for my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment to take.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Expenditure Plans

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are his spending plans for 1993-94 for Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mates: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which my right hon. and learned Friend gave to the hon. Member for Londonderry, East (Mr. Ross) on 8 December 1992 at column 601. That covered expenditure plans for the years 1993/94 – 1995/96. Further details will be given in the Northern Ireland report "Public Expenditure and Priorities 1993/94 – 1995/96" which will be published on 12 February, and the 1993-94 estimates which will be laid before the House in due course.

Human Rights

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many recommendations have been made by the Standing Advisory Committee on Human Rights since it was set up; and how many of these have been accepted by Government and implemented.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: The Commission has made many valuable recommendations, for example on fair employment, education, race relations and other human rights issues, which the Government have been pleased to accept. To identify all the recommendations made by the Commission and accepted by the Government since it was created in 1973 could be done only at disproportionate cost. But all the Commission's reports are published, and the Government's response to each report is laid in the Library of the House at the same time.

Ambulance Service

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the percentage of ambulances in each service in Northern Ireland that responded within (a) eight minutes and (b) 14 to 20 minutes to emergency calls in 1991-92.

Mr. Hanley: The available information is as follows:

Ambulance Service	Percentage responded within (a) eight minutes	(b) twenty minutes
Northern Health and Social Services Board	54·87	95·69
Southern Health and Social Services Board	55·97	90·43
Eastern Health and Social Services Board	59·09	92·87
Western Health and Social Services Board	51·73	92·62
Overall figure for Northern Ireland	56·80	93·15

Separate figures on the percentage of calls responded to between 14 and 20 minutes are not available.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the number of ambulance staff in Northern Ireland employed by the NHS in 1987, 1988, 1989, 1990 and 1991, using whole-time equivalents.

Mr. Hanley: The number of whole-time equivalent ambulance staff employed by the Northern Ireland health and personal social services was as follows:

	Number
1987	584·75
1988	573·50
1989	575·47
1990	581·52
1991	587·04

Seamus McElwaine

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a further statement on his discussions with the Government of the Republic of Ireland concerning the use of lethal force by the security forces in Northern Ireland, following the verdict of the jury in the inquest into the death of Seamus McElwaine.

Mr. Mates: A range of security-related issues, including the use of force by the security forces in Northern Ireland, is regularly discussed with the Irish Government at meetings of the intergovernmental conference.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps he is taking to deal with the issues raised by the verdict of the jury in the inquest into the death of Seamus McElwaine.

Mr. Mates: The Director of Public Prosecutions for Northern Ireland, who is the holder of an independent statutory office, has asked for a full report from the police in the light of the inquest jury's findings. It would therefore be inappropriate for me to comment further.

St. Mary's College of Education

Mr. Stott: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether the changes from 85 per cent. to 100 per cent. grant status for the maintained sector of education in Northern Ireland will apply to St. Mary's college of education.

Mr. Hanley: St. Mary's college is a teacher training establishment and therefore the new arrangements for grant for schools do not apply.

Absent Parents

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) in how many cases in each of the past five years court action has successfully resulted in an absent parent paying maintenance;

(2) in how many cases in each of the past five years an absent parent has failed to pay maintenance.

Mr. John M. Taylor: I have been asked to reply.

I regret that this information could not be made available except at disproportionate cost.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Ozone Depletion

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will implement a refrigerant recycling and reclaim policy covering all departmental equipment currently using chlorofluorocarbons and hydrochlorofluorocarbons; if he will publish targets for departmental reuse and recycling; if he will implement an equipment conversion and replacement programme for all departmental uses of chlorofluorocarbons and hydrochlorofluorocarbons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert Jackson: The Office of Public Service and Science is committed to the Government's policy for reducing the use of substances controlled under the Montreal protocol. The use of chlorofluorocarbons and hydrochlorofluorocarbons within the department continues to be reduced, with the aim of total elimination within the time scale of the protocol. Due attention is paid to the proper disposal of ozone-depleting chemicals.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will introduce a leakage prevention programme for all refrigeration and air conditioning equipment owned and operated by his Department; if he will publish targets for reductions in leakages; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert Jackson: Air conditioning plant in use within the Office of Public Service and Science is regularly checked for leaks as part of the ongoing maintenance programme. A stipulation of any new installation of air conditioning equipment is the use of ozone-friendly refrigerants.

Civil Servants (Bicycles)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the current conditions on which civil servants in his Department are granted salary advances to enable the purchase of bicycles for home-to-office travel; if he will make a statement on the current conditions in each agency of his Department; what plans he has to change the conditions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert Jackson: On 16 December, my hon. Friend the Financial Secretary announced that Departments and agencies had been given the freedom to determine the conditions on which advances of salary to assist civil servants in the purchase of bicycles for home-to-office travel are made. The Office of Public Service and Science and its agencies are considering how to proceed with this matter. I will write to the hon. Member in due course.

Oil Spillages

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what analysis has been undertaken by the research councils of the nature and effect of chemical dispersants when used to treat large spillages of oil.

Mr. Robert Jackson: None, but I will draw their attention to the hon. Member's question.

EMPLOYMENT

Civil Servants (Bicycles)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will make a statement on the current conditions on which civil servants in her Department are granted salary advances to enable the purchase of bicycles for home-to-office travel; if she will make a statement on the current conditions in each agency of her Department; what plans she has to change the conditions; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: The conditions are as follows. Staff must be able to demonstrate an operational case justifying the advance or some other identifiable value-for-money improvement that can be achieved by the advance; applications for advances must be reasonable in relation to the amount of expenditure and the individual's grade; advances must be repaid over 12 months; and any outstanding balance must be repaid immediately if the individual leaves the Department or sells or otherwise disposes of the bicycle. There are no plans to change these conditions.

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will instruct the manager of the Cardiff adjudication sector to report the number of unemployment benefit disqualification decisions made by adjudicating officers in that sector under each paragraph of section 28(1) of the Social Security Contributions and Benefits Act 1992, and the periods for which disqualification was imposed, in a convenient week before the end of January; and if she will place this information in the Library.

Mr. McLoughlin: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. Fogden to Mr. Paul Flynn, dated 18 January 1993:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to write to you direct to respond to your Parliamentary Question to her about unemployment benefit disqualifications under Section 28(1) of the Social Security Contributions and Benefits Act 1992. This is something which falls within the responsibilities she has delegated to me as the Chief Executive of the Agency.

You may recall that, during my absence, Mr. Johnson wrote to you in June 1992 in response to a similar question. To assemble information about the length of the periods of disqualifications imposed by the adjudication officers at the Cardiff sector during a specific week we would need to identify and examine each case in which disqualification was imposed. As mentioned previously this could only be done at disproportionate cost to public funds.

We do not collect or publish the type of information you have requested because the period of disqualification is decided in the light of the circumstances of each individual case and, without knowledge of those circumstances, no meaningful interpretation could be placed on it. Quality assurance of the adjudication process includes scrutiny of the evidence taken into account by adjudication officers in exercising their discretion in setting disqualification periods. This is carried out by adjudication management at local level and by the Central Adjudication Service as part of their statutory function to report on the standard of adjudication on benefit claims.

I am sorry that I cannot help you further in this matter.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

Unemployment

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to her answer of 16 December, Official Report, columns 250-51, if she will list the numbers of people represented by the unemployment rates given.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 12 January 1993]: Only unemployment rates are published on a monthly basis and these were given in my answer to the hon. Member of 16 December, Official Report, columns 250-51. The corresponding numbers of unemployed represented by the rates given in my earlier answere are not available as such figures are only produced on the basis of annual averages. The latest annual data relates to 1991 and is as follows:

Estimates of the number of unemployed—annual averages[1]

Country	[1]Number of unemployed
Belgium	303,000
Denmark	259,000
France	2,308,000
Germany[2]	1,346,000
Greece[3]	303,000
Ireland	219,000
Italy	2,436,000
Luxembourg	3,000
Netherlands	485,000
Portugal	204,000
Spain	2,450,000
United Kingdom	2,627,000

DEFENCE

British Aerospace Space Division

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the effect on the United Kingdom defence procurement programme of the takeover of the BAe Space Division by Matra-Marconi.

Mr. Aitken: While I understand that there has been a dialogue between the two companies, I am advised that no current discussions are taking place. There are therefore no implications for defence procurement.

Civil Servants (Bicycles)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the current conditions on which civil servants in his Department are granted salary advances to enable the purchase of bicycles for home-to-office travel; if he will make a statement on the current conditions in each agency of his Department; what plans he has to change the conditions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Staff in junior grades throughout the Ministry of Defence and its agencies are eligible to apply for an advance of salary of up to £100 to assist with the purchase of a bicycle for use in travelling between home and office, provided they have been in post for at least two months and are not employed in a casual capacity. The definition of "junior staff" is staff in grades which are entitled to class 3 rates of subsistence, ie. higher executive officer and below.

My Department and its agencies are considering whether to alter the scheme in light of the recent changes notified by Treasury and announced by my hon. Friend the Financial Secretary to the Treasury on 16 December 1992, Official Report, cols. 285-86.

Infantry Battalions

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the annual running cost of each type of United Kingdom infantry battalion, including the further battalions based in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I will write to the hon. Member.

Nuclear Tests

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the National Radiological Protection Board study into British nuclear test participants will be concluded; and how many participants are projected to be living by this date.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I understand that the National Radiological Protection Board study will be concluded as soon as is practically possible consistent with the maintenance of the highest standards of scientific rigour. It is not possible to predict how many participants will be alive at the time of publication of the report.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what compensation payments have been issued to foreign personnel as a result of British nuclear tests in the south Pacific.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: None.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will release details of radiation dosage levels to all living British nuclear test participants and, in the event of death, to the deceased participant's next of kin.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The recorded radiation exposure is provided on request to the individual test participant or, in the event of death, to the next of kin.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the maximum possible distance between locations on mainland Christmas island and the Grapple Y nuclear test.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The mustering location at the greatest distance from the Grapple Y test was 43km away.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if all dosage levels for radiation contamination have been released to the National Radiological Protection Board for their study into possible illness in British nuclear test participants.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: All recorded radiation exposures of participants in the United Kingdom atmospheric nuclear weapons tests and experimental programmes were passed to the National Radiological Protection Board at the time of its first study.

Pulheems Tests

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how Pulheems tests are carried out; and how such information is passed on to service personnel general practitioners.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Pulheems tests are used to assess and categorise medical fitness. They are carried out on a regular basis by qualified medical personnel in accordance with standard tri-service regulations. All service general practitioners have access to these regulations. Pulheems ratings for individual personnel are recorded on personal records.

Air-to-surface Missile

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his oral answer of 27 October 1992 to the hon. Member for Wyre (Mr. Mans), Official Report, columns 861-62, when he will be able to announce a choice of system to meet the United Kingdom's sub-strategic requirements for nuclear capability.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have nothing to add to the answer given by my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State to the hon. Member for Wyre (Mr. Mans) on 27 October 1992, Official Report, column 862, that we expect to reach a decision early this year.

Frigates (Pakistan)

Sir Keith Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions are taking place with the Pakistan Government about the sale or lease of frigates or other warships to Pakistan.

Mr. Aitken: Discussions with the Pakistan Navy, which has expressed interest in acquiring a range of Royal Navy and Royal Fleet Auxiliary vessels when these ships leave service over the next year or so, are at an early stage.

Medical Records

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will release all medical records for service men and women for the purposes of pensions appeals.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Disability pensions are the responsibility of the Benefits Agency. Where ex-service personnel make application, medical records are passed to the agency and released to the claimants as necessary for the conduct of the case.

Radioactive Contamination

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if every person with a blue book entry was subjected to some level of radioactive contamination; and what the term "gamma" refers to in such entries.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No; the term "gamma" refers to external exposures to gamma radiation.

Seamus McElwaine

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many of the soldiers involved in the incident leading to the death of Seamus McElwaine are still serving in the Army; whether any of these soldiers are still serving in Northern Ireland or have served there since the incident; and what disciplinary procedures the Army intends to initiate following the verdict of the jury.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is not our practice to comment on the deployment of individual soldiers. The Director of Public Prosecution for Northern Ireland has asked for a full report from the police in the light of the inquest jury's finding. It would therefore be inappropriate for me to comment further.

Korea

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has for the future of United Kingdom forces stationed in Korea; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The requirement for the continued deployment of a platoon of British troops for the UN honour guard in Korea has been reviewed in the light of the gradual withdrawal of the garrison from Hong Kong, "Options for Change", and the considerably changed global commitments which British armed forces now face in the 1990s. With these considerations in mind, and in view also of the progress which has been made in easing links between the Republic of Korea and North Korea, it has been decided that the British contingent of the UN honour guard, currently comprising one officer and 36 men, drawn from the Hong Kong garrison, will be withdrawn by 15 March 1993. The four British personnel who form part of the Commonwealth liaison mission in Seoul will follow within approximately two months.

The United Kingdom has consistently supported efforts to bring about reconciliation on the Korean peninsula; we continue to do so and have welcomed the moves which both sides have made to this end since prime ministerial talks began in September 1991. Notwithstanding the withdrawal of these troops, our membership of the United Nations Command, and of the Military Armistice Commission in Korea remains unchanged. This move does not imply any lessening of our efforts to urge the government of North Korea to take further steps towards a peaceful reconciliaton with South Korea, including full co-operation with the International Atomic Energy Authority and the full implementation of a bilateral north-south inspection regime.

WALES

Rate Support Allocations

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will meet a deputation of Clwyd county councillors and officials and hon. Members to discuss the rate support allocations.

Mr. David Hunt: No. The Welsh Consultative Council on Local Government Finance (WCCLGF) is the appropriate forum for discussion of the distribution of revenue resources between local authorities in Wales. I chaired a meeting of WCCLGF on 12 January at which the position for 1993-94 was discussed.

Assisted Area Status

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement concerning the designation of assisted area status in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: The representations received about the review of assisted areas are currently being considered. The Government hope to be able to make an announcement on the outcome of the review in the near future.

Parenthood

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he has taken to develop a post-school education strategy aimed at promoting socially responsible parenthood.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Welsh Office is funding training and initial resource material costs to support district health authorities' introduction of the child development programme in Wales—a parent support programme of targeted health visiting which encourages parenting skills in all areas of early child development. So far the programme has been introduced by Pembrokeshire, South Glamorgan, West Glamorgan, Powys and Gwynedd health authorities.

In addition, the Health Promotion Authority for Wales' "Health for All in Wales" strategy defines the major health promotional challenges facing Wales. Parenting is identified as one of the areas to be developed in pursuit of this strategy.

Search and Rescue

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what assessment has been made by his Department of the impact of a withdrawal of the search and rescue helicopter squadron from RAF Brawdy upon response times in dealing with coastal and offshore emergencies in and around the Ceredigion and Pembroke North constituency;

(2) what has been the average response time taken by Sea-king helicopters from RAF Brawdy to reach the scene of a coastal or offshore emergency in and around the Ceredigion and Pembroke North constituency in each of the last three years; and if he will publish estimated response times for helicopters from (a) RAF Chivenor and (b) RAF Valley to reach future coastal or offshore emergencies in or near the constituency;

(3) what research has been conducted by his Department on the effect of withdrawing the search and rescue helicopter squadron from RAF Brawdy upon established contingency plans drawn up by the Dyfed fire brigade to deal with offshore emergencies;

(4) what estimate he has made of how many lives have been saved in and around the Ceredigion and Pembroke North constituency in each of the last five years, due specifically to the swift response of the search and rescue helicopter squadron at RAF Brawdy.

Mr. David Hunt: This is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Minister of State for the Armed Forces.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will meet representatives of the Dyfed county fire brigade to discuss the implications of withdrawing the search and rescue helicopter squadron from RAF Brawdy upon responses to coastal and offshore emergencies in and around the county.

Mr. David Hunt: Such discussions would be, in the first instance, for my right hon. Friend the Minister of State for the Armed Forces.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment has been made by his Department into the effect of withdrawing the search and rescue helicopter squadron from RAF Brawdy upon the training needs of local county firefighters in tackling offshore emergencies.

Mr. David Hunt: Such matters would be, in the first instance, for my right hon. Friends the Secretary of State for the Home Department and the Minister of State for the Armed Forces.

Assisted Areas

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what has been the amount of (a) Government grants and (b) European Community grants given to each of the assisted areas in Wales in each of the last five years.

Mr. David Hunt: The information is not readily available in the form requested and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Drugs and Alcohol

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the establishments in Wales which provide residential facilities for (a) those with alcohol problems and (b) those with drug problems; if he will show for each establishment (i) the capital grant and (ii) the total revenue grant provided by his Department in each of the last five years; and if he will provide estimated figures for 1992-93 and 1993-94.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The names of residential facilities in Wales for drug and alcohol misusers are not held centrally. Those which have received funding from the Department since 1987-88 and the amounts they have received are listed in the following table. With the exception of Dyfrig house, which provides facilities only for alcohol misusers, they cater for both drug and alcohol misusers. It is not possible at this stage to estimate figures for 1993-94.

Treatment Centres

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what reasons underlay the timing of the notification to health authorities of their allocation of places at the treatment centres.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Since 1989-90 when the treatment centre initiative was launched there have been a number of changes to the arrangements under which the Department has allocated places at the centres to health authorities in order to ensure the best possible usage of the centres. The exact timing of the allocations was therefore affected by a variety of factors in each year.

Hill Farmers

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many producers are entitled to hill livestock compensatory allowances in Wales; and what proportion of those are located in (a) severely disadvantaged and (b) disadvantaged areas.

Mr. David Hunt: About 15,000 claimants currently receive hill livestock compensatory allowances in Wales. Of these some 11,000 (73 per cent.) are located in the severely disadvantaged areas and 4,000 (27 per cent.) in the disadvantaged areas.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the average incomes of (a) all farms and (b) farms which presently receive hill livestock compensatory allowance payments in (a) disadvantaged areas, (b) severely disadvantaged areas and (c) less-favoured areas in each year since 1979.

Mr. David Hunt: Separate incomes data is only available in this form since 1985-86 from when the information requested is given in the table:

	(a) All farms		(b) All farms which presently receive hill livestock compensatory allowance payments
	All dairy and livestock farms income		Seriously disadvantaged area income		Disadvantaged areas income		Less favoured area income

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the number and proportion of farms, together with farms which presently receive hill livestock compensatory allowance payments in total and broken down by (a) disadvantaged areas, (b) severely disadvantaged areas and (c) less favoured areas.

Mr. David Hunt: In 1991 there were 6,594 main agricultural holdings in Wales with land in the disadvantaged areas but not in the severely disadvantaged areas, and a further 13,901 holdings with land in the severely disadvantaged areas making a total of 20,495 main holdings with land in the less favoured areas. These figures represent 22 per cent. 47 per cent. and 69 per cent. of all main holdings in Wales respectively.

Four thousand claimants currently receive hill livestock compensatory allowances in the disadvantaged areas only and a further 11,000 in the severely disadvantaged areas making a total of 15,000 claimants in the less favoured areas. These figures represent 13 per cent. 37 per cent. and 50 per cent. of all main holdings in Wales respectively.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the hill livestock compensatory allowance rates in cash terms and real terms in each year since 1982.

Mr. David Hunt: The information requested is at table 17 of the statistical tables prepared in connection with last year's autumn review of hill livestock compensatory allowances. A copy is available in the Library of the House.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what hectarage of land in Wales is in (a) less-favoured areas, (b) severely disadvantaged areas and (c) disadvantaged areas; what proportion of land in Wales each figure represents; and how many farmers are involved.

Mr. David Hunt: There are estimated to be 1,644,000 hectares of land in Wales in the less favoured areas, of which 1,158,000 hectares are in the severely disadvantaged areas and 486,000 hectares in the disadvantaged areas. These figures represent 79 per cent., 56 per cent. and 23 per cent. of the total land area of Wales respectively. In 1991 there were 20,495 main agricultural holdings in Wales with land in the less favoured areas, of which 13,901 holdings had land in the severely disadvantaged areas and 10,357 holdings had land in the disadvantaged areas.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the number of (a) nursing and midwifery staff, (b) managerial staff and (c) clerical and administrative staff in the NHS in each year since 1989.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information, which relates to whole-time equivalents of staff employed by the NHS as at 30 September each year, is given in the following table:

	Nursing and midwifery staff	[1]Managerial staff	Clerical and administrative staff
1989	28,037	187	7,378
1990	28,093	416	7,653
1991	27,991	686	8,047
1992[2]	27,519	848	8,238

[1] General managers, senior managers and managers in the administrative and clerical staff group. The growth in the number of senior managers arises from the extension in 1989 of senior managers terms and conditions of service to second and third level managers.

[2] The implementation of the Project 2000 nursing education reforms in 1992 has led to the reclassification of some student nurses as students. Precise estimates of this effect are not readily available centrally. But overall in 1992 about 1,000 nurses have been reclassified. Those in the student intakes prior to 30 September 1992 have been excluded from the 1992 count.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the percentage of ambulances in each service in Wales that responded within (a) eight minutes and (b) 14 to 20 minutes to emergency calls in 1991-92.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The ambulance service classifications in Wales and their standard response times are:

	50 per cent. minutes	95 per cent. minutes
Urban areas	7	14
Rural areas	8	18

Mr. David Hunt: The information requested is not available as it is commercial in confidence.

Cardiff Bay Development Corporation

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to announce the budget for the Cardiff Bay development corporation for the next financial year, both as to gross expenditure and net of receipts from land sales and other income.

Mr. David Hunt: I expect to announce the grant-in-aid for Cardiff Bay development corporation shortly.

Land Authority for Wales

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what targets he has set for gross expenditure and receipts from sales of land from the Land Authority for Wales in the year 1993-94.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: None, yet.

Butetown Link Road

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the Cardiff Bay development corporation concerning its grant to South Glamorgan county council towards the cost of constructing the Butetown link road; how such a grant should be adjusted for inflation and design changes; what representations he has received from South Glamorgan county council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Stuart Williams ARICS
Mrs. Carole Maureen Hyde

In making appointments I aim to strike an appropriate balance between continuity and the introduction of new members. Both Mr. Davies and Mr. Williams have health service experience acquired since they were first appointed to the FHSA in 1990. Mrs. Hyde is a new member.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Telephone System

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee (1) if he will conduct a survey to establish the proportion of outgoing calls through the House of Commons telephone system which connect; (2) what recent changes have been made in the operation of the House of Commons telephone system; and what assessment has been made of its present operation.

Mr. Michael Martin: In accordance with a resolution of the former Services Committee, and with the agreement of the other place, the Palace of Westminster telecommunications exchange was improved during the 1992 summer recess to provide additional abbreviated dialling facilities and a "least-cost-routing" package which enables outgoing calls to be directed automatically by the cheapest supplier. Some problems with routing have been identified, but have all been rectified. A survey is therefore not considered necessary. Anyone experiencing difficulty with an outgoing call should report the fact to extension 4444. An immediate investigation of the problem will be made and the result notified to the caller. Any Member with a query about the telecommunications system itself should contact the Serjeant at Arms, who has administrative responsibility for these matters.

Mr. Lang: All permanent non-industrial staff in the Scottish Office with at least two months service are eligible to receive a salary advance of up to £100 to assist with the purchase of a bicycle for home-to-office travel. This provision also extends to staff in all the Scottish Office agencies. The arrangements are currently subject to review.

Sir Hector Monro: The research project referred to by the hon. Member is in fact two separate research projects, funded from different sources. The research study carried out by Glasgow university into seabird breeding success in the Shetland Isles is funded principally by the Natural Environment Research Council (NERC).

The second project, into the biology of sandeels in the vicinity of seabird colonies in Shetland has been running parallel to the University of Glasgow study and is funded jointly by The Scottish Office Agriculture and Fisheries Department, Department of the Environment, Scottish National Heritage, Royal Society for the Protection of Birds, Worldwide Fund for Nature, and Cadbury Ltd. While this project is due to come to an end in March we are currently considering possible extension in the light of the recent developments. We are anxious to ensure that any extension is consistent with the strategy for future studies into the Shetland environment which will be developed by the ecological steering group, the establishment of which was announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on 11 January.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 14 January 1993]: No certificates have been signed under section 27 of the Data Protection Act 1984.

Seed Potatoes

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the importance for Scotland of light grade regions for seed potatoes in the European Community.

Sir Hector Monro: I very much welcome the successful conclusion of negotiations in Brussels with agreement that high grade seed regions should be established in the European Community. The protection provided by this agreement is of great significance to the Scottish seed potato industry and will help to maintain its worldwide reputation for the protection of high quality potatoes.

It is proposed to give effect to the measures around the middle of the year. This means current arrangements for planting and entry of crops to the seed potato classification scheme will be unchanged for the start of the 1993 season. To comply with the measures some legislative and procedural changes will be necessary later in the year in preparation for the marketing stage of the 1993 crop. The Scottish Office Agriculture and Fisheries Department will provide further details and consult the industry about these changes in due course.

Lockerbie Air Crash

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has had from Dr. Jim Swire of the Lockerbie relatives about the need for baggage reconciliation rules among airlines.

Motorways

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many miles of motorway in England are currently (a) open, (b) under construction and (c) planned.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: There are 1,664 miles of trunk road motorway and a further 28 miles of non-trunk motorway controlled by local authorities.

Two motorway schemes are under construction—M3 Bar End to Compton and the M4 second Severn crossing. They will add seven miles to the network.

A further 250 miles of motorway are planned, including the upgrading to motorway of the A1 from London to Newcastle.

Car Bumpers

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to bring forward regulations to standardise the height of car bumpers.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Current car designs with deep plastic bumpers allow compatibility over a wide range of heights. We have no intention to regulate for a specific height as this would be unnecessarily design restrictive. However, the International Standard Organisation recommends in ISO2598 that the height for car bumper tests be 445 mm, and we are working with our European partners to ensure that truck bumpers are of a compatible height compared with car bumpers, and that car bumpers are pedestrian friendly.

A19

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he intends to authorise the funding for the installation of lighting along the A19 through Peterlee; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: There are no current plans to install lighting on the A19 through Peterlee.

Road Accidents, Greenwich

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 9 June 1992, Official Report, columns 113-14 on road traffic accidents in Greenwich, if he will now make available comparable accident and injury statistics for 1991 and 1992.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The table shows the number of injury accidents in Greenwich town centre in 1991, and the resulting number of casualties. Data for 1992 are not yet available.

Year	Injury Accidents	Casualties
		Vehicle users		Pedestrians
1991	22	0	16	0	8

Greenwich town centre is defined as the one-way system where Creek road, Romney road and Greenwich High road meet, together with the adjacent section of Greenwich High road.

Drink Driving

Mr. George: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the number of (a) deaths and (b) pedestrian injuries caused by drivers under the influence of drink in (i) the west midlands and (ii) Walsall in 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The most recent available information relates to 1990 and is shown in the following table.

Casualties in accidents where at least one driver is over the legal blood or breach alchohol limit

	Total deaths 1990	Pedestrian deaths 1990	Pedestrian injuries 1990
West Midlands	33	8	67
Walsall	3	0	8

[1] Accidents where a driver was positively breath tested or where coroners reports showed a blood alcohol level over the limit. No assumption is made of the cause of the accident.

Salvage Industry

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will consider measures to revive the British salvage industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: The salvage industry depends on the amount of salvage work available (which varies with the level of world shipping and the number of casualties requiring salvage assistance). The industry also depends on the level of the awards paid after salvage has taken place. Both of these commercial realities are largely beyond the Government's control and influence. However, by negotiating the terms of the 1989 salvage convention, which are already applied through Lloyd's open forum 1990, we have sought to allow increased awards when salvors' efforts have prevented or mitigated a major marine pollution incident.

Aircraft Incidents

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the Civil Aviation Authority's investigations into the incidents on 7 December 1992 when a carbon aerial from an aircraft crashed into a house at Watchfield, Oxfordshire; and what compensation is available to the property owner.

Mr. Norris: There was no such incident on 7 December. However, at approximately 11.30 am on 25 November 1992 an object, later identified as a static wick, which discharges static electricity from the wings of aircraft, fell through the bathroom roof of a property in Watchfield, Oxfordshire. Although it caused a two inch hole in the roof no one was injured.

On being informed, the Civil Aviation Authority initiated an investigation into the incident. Despite a thorough investigation, they were unable to identify the aircraft from which the object had fallen. Stringent design and maintenance requirements for United Kingdom aircraft ensure that incidents such as this are rare.

However, when they do occur the Civil Aviation Act 1982 clearly places the legal liability upon the aircraft operator to indemnify the third party who suffers a material loss or damage. As it has not proven possible to indentify the aircraft operator involved, the CAA cannot take the matter any further.

Rail Timetables

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will initiate and publish a study of the procedures that would be necessary after privatisation, prior to the publication of a comprehensive all-line timetable for a future Christmas or new year holiday period, that would provide equivalent information to that contained in the supplementary timetable published by the British Railways Board.

Mr. Freeman: Such a study would be inappropriate. At present it is for British Rail to determine and publish timetables for the services it runs. After privatisation, RailTrack will be responsible for drawing up the timetable, and we are confident that the private sector will see a commercial opportunity in publishing it.

Traffic Congestion

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment his Department has made of methods used in North American cities to reduce traffic congestion in urban areas.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: My Department keeps in touch with the methods used overseas, both in North America and elsewhere. Conditions overseas are not necessarily the same as in this country, and techniques—for example, the width and layout of roads—may need to be modified considerably before they can be used here.

Ships (Safety)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if Her Majesty's Government will now make an additional response to the second report 1991-92 from the Lords Select Committee on Science and Technology, on safety aspects of ship design and technology (HL 30-1).

Mr. Norris: No.

Public Transport (Disabled Access)

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress he achieved during the United Kingdom presidency of the EC to make public transport accessible to disabled people across Europe; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: In December 1991 the Transport Council asked the Commission to draw up an action programme on the accessibility of transport to people with reduced mobility. This action plan was expected to be ready during the United Kingdom presidency. The Council is still awaiting this document which it will wish to consider carefully before taking further action.

This is an area where much can and is being achieved at national and local level and my Department continues to work towards improving access to public transport for people with disabilities. A significant number of low floor, fully accessible buses will be introduced in London as a demonstration project shortly. This will be followed later this year with a similar trial outside London with funding support from my Department.

Helicopter Coverage Group

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to amend the helicopter coverage group criteria to secure a speedier recommended response time to emergencies at night and in bad weather.

Mr. Norris: My Department has no plans to amend the existing all weather-night response time established under the helicopter coverage criteria, which continue to prove operationally acceptable, nor will they be amended under the MOD's future provision of military helicopters for search and rescue. However, under these provisions, all weather-night coverage in the west will be improved in the first half of 1996 by the re-equipping of RAF Valley with Sea King aircraft.

Motorways

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how many schemes, including dual 14 to 16-lane motorways, are planned in (a) Yorkshire and Humberside and (b) in England;

(2) if he will list the conurbations in England where 14 to 16-lane motorways travel through or near residential and school properties; and if he will make a statement;

(3) how many miles of dual motorways creating a 14 to 16-lane system of traffic there are in (a) Yorkshire and Humberside and (b) in England.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: None.

Heathrow Rail Link

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will set out the reasons for the delay in constructing the proposed rail service between Heathrow and Paddington; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will make it his policy to ensure that a fast main line is built between Heathrow airport and London city centre as soon as possible.

Mr. Freeman: Discussions between BAA plc and British Rail about the funding of the Heathrow express project are continuing. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I met Sir John Egan and Sir Bob Reid on 10 December to review progress. I am hopeful that agreement on terms for funding the railway will be reached soon.

Heathrow Underground Link

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has made an official visit on the Piccadilly line to Heathrow since April 1992.

Mr. Norris: No. However, I am kept fully informed of service performance on all underground lines, and I am pleased to say that the Piccadilly line has been one of the Underground's most consistently reliable lines since April 1992.

West Coast Main Line

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what effect his plans to commercialise British Rail will have on the future development of rail services on the west coast main line; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: We believe that our proposals for privatising British Rail, with the operation of passenger services by private sector franchisees, will lead to an improvement of services on the west coast main line, since private sector operators should be more efficient and more responsive to passengers' wishes.

Nuclear Fuel (Transport)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what approaches he has had from the International Maritime Organisation in regard to stricter regulations for the carriage of irradiated nuclear fuel.

Mr. Norris: None. The IMO provides the machinery through which member states can develop international regulations and codes relating to maritime matters including those for the safety of life at sea and the prevention of marine pollution. These regulations are then implemented nationally by parties to the convention.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on his role in relation to transport of nuclear fuel by BNFL transport division and the Power Reactor and Nuclear Fuel Development Corporation of Japan.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The Department of Transport has to be satisfied that containers carrying such material comply with International Atomic Energy Agency standards, and that they are transported in ships complying with the Merchant Shipping (Dangerous Goods and Marine Pollutants) Regulations 1990 and international coventions and codes for safety and pollution prevention.

Railway Crossings

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to examine (a) the criteria and (b) the specific railway crossings where incidents show the effectiveness of the hazard warning lights to be reduced by fog; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: A review of the safety of automatic open level crossings was carried out in 1986 by Professor P. F. Stott. His report recommended a number of improvements including revisions to the advance warning signs to reduce sign clutter, and to the backing boards of the "STOP" traffic signs to increase their conspicuity. British Rail has adopted these recommendations and is implementing them.

Advice on driving in fog is contained in the highway code. Drivers should be driving at a speed which enables them to stop within the limits of their vision.

Transport Organisations

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list each organisation with transportation responsibilities in London; and which of them have formal liaison arrangements with his Department.

Mr. Norris: The main organisations with transport responsibilities in the transport field in London are:

British Rail
British Waterways Board
City of London Police
Civil Aviation Authority
Corporation of London
London Boroughs and their respective associations
London Boroughs Transport Committee
London Docklands Development Corporation
London Planning Advisory Committee
London Regional Passengers Committee
London Transport
Metropolitan Police
Parking Committee for London
Port of London Authority
Traffic Commissioner for the South East and London
Traffic Director for London

The Department has formal liaison arrangements with all of these. It also maintains close contact with consumer groups, private sector transport operators (either directly or through their representative bodies), and with the other organisations concerned with transport in London including the south east regional planning conference, the London tourist board and the motoring organisations.

Cars

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what range of forecasts have been made by his Department on the number of cars normally kept in Greater London in (a) 1995, (b) 2000 and (c) 2025.

Mr. Norris: The Department's current forecasts of the number of cars normally kept in Greater London are as follows:

(a) in 1995, 2·57 to 2·66 million cars.

(b) in 2000, 2·78 to 2·99 million cars.

(c) National forecasts are produced for years up to 2025, but the local projections produced are more short-term and only cover years to 2011. The forecast for 2011 is 3·20 to 3·61 million cars.

These are based on an estimate of 2·38 million cars in 1991.

Road Works, London

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list each organisation which has a statutory right to carry out works on London roads.

Mr. Norris: No list of all such organisations is held centrally, but it would be very extensive. The main organisations with rights to carry out work on highways are the highway authorities and the utilities, such as gas, water, electricity and cable TV.

Civil Servants (Bicycles)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the current conditions on which civil servants in his Department are granted salary advances to enable the purchase of bicycles for home-to-office travel; if he will make a statement on the current conditions in each agency of his Department; what plans he has to change the conditions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Until recently the authority for Departments to make advances for these purposes was subject to justifying them on value for money or operational grounds.

Three agencies of my Department—the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency, the Transport Research Laboratory and the Vehicle Certification Agency—have been prepared to consider requests. No applications have been made to date.

Advances have not been available to staff in the remaining agencies or elsewhere in the Department.

As a result of recent changes in the scope of the delegation my Department will be looking again at the case for making such advances.

Abandoned Vehicles

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will allow local authorities to have direct access to computer records at the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency offices in connection with the removal of abandoned vehicles.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Direct access to the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency's computer records raised important questions of data protection and security of personal information, as well as cost. There are no plans at present to offer this service to local authorities.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the average time taken at the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency office in Swansea to process VQ4 requests from local authorities for details of abandoned vehicles; and what is the current number of outstanding VQ4 requests.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The average time taken by DVLA to process postal VQ4 inquiries is eight working days. Enquiries received on magnetic tape are replied to within four days. There is currently no backlog.

Hoskins Data Services

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what level of co-operation exists between the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency offices and Hoskins Data Services.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Hoskyns Group plc provides an agency service for a number of local authorities for enquiries to DVLA on magnetic tape. DVLA co-operates closely with Hoskyns on this service.

Pedestrian Deaths

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proportion of pedestrians who were killed in road crashes were above the age of 60 years in the most recent available year.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Data for the most recent available year (1991) show that there were 1,496 pedestrian fatalities in road crashes of which 736, or 49·2 per cent., were over the age of 60.

Transport Services, London

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport to what extent the £270 million public spending on transport, detailed in the Chancellor of the Exchequer's autumn statement will be spent on transport services in London.

Mr. Norris: In his autumn statement, the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced that the Department of Transport would be spending £6·4 billion next year. Of this, £1 billion will go to London Transport. As many projects relate both to inside and outside London, it is not possible to identify exactly how much of the remaining £5·4 billion will be spent on transport services in London.

Moss Roads

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will introduce an investigation into the means of correcting the deteriorating condition of moss roads in Lancashire and in other areas.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 15 January 1993]: This is a matter for the local highway authority.

Bridge Closures, London

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he was consulted on the closures of Waterloo, Hammersmith and Battersea bridges; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 15 January 1993]: These bridges are all on roads which have been designated under paragraph 5, schedule 5 of the Local Government Act 1985. London boroughs are required to give notice of proposals to exercise, on designated roads, certain powers under the Highways Act 1980 or the Road Traffic Regulation Act 1984. The circumstances requiring notification are described in the 1985 Act. On 1 September 1992, the traffic director for London became responsible for dealing with designated road notifications.

My Department received notifications relating to the closure of Battersea bridge. I understand that the traffic director for London was consulted about the proposal to close Waterloo bridge. The work on Hammersmith bridge does not require notification.

MV Braer

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the dispersants currently stockpiled in Shetland which are available to the marine pollution control unit, but have not yet been used to disperse oil from MV Braer.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 14 January 1993]: The dispersants currently stockpiled by and available to the marine pollution control unit in Shetland are:

370 tonnes Dasic LTSW
135 tonnes Finasol
26 tonnes Dispolene 34S

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the dispersants that have been used to date to disperse oil from the MV Braer, the quantity of each dispersant which has been used, and the date on which it was used.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 14 January 1993]: The dispersants used to disperse oil from the MV Braer were:

6 January
75 tonnes Dasic LTSW
10 tonnes BP Enersperse 1037
15 tonnes Dispolene 34S
7 January
1 tonne Dasic LTSW
9 January
20 tonnes Dasic LTSW

Salvage Tugs

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will consider measures to encourage the building and/or provision of high-powered ocean-going salvage tugs to be on station around the coasts of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 14 January 1993]: The EC Commission is undertaking a comprehensive study of the availability of salvage facilities (tugs) in the North sea. We have made our contribution to that work.

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the targets set by his Department for roadside tests of vehicles for 1992-93 and 1993-94; and if he will list the number and category of vehicles tested.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 14 January 1993]: Targets for roadworthiness checks at the roadside during 1992-93 are as follows:

	Number
Public Service Vehicles	23,900
Goods Vehicles exceeding 3,500 kg design gross weight	130,000
Cars and Goods Vehicles not exceeding 3,500 kg design in gross weight	72,000
Total	225,900

No targets have yet been set for 1993-94, but the inspectorate is planning on the basis that enforcement levels will be similar to 1992-93 for the first two categories.

The 1992-93 target for cars and light goods vehicles was exceptionally high because of the additional work monitoring and change in testing regime for vehicles between 3,000 and 3,500 kg. So the inspectorate is planning only 55,972 checks in 1993-94. Further information on 1992-93 can be found in the inspectorate's business plan.

Cargo Transfers

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the current arrangements for the storage and maintenance of specialist equipment needed for the ship-to-ship transfer of cargo from vessels in distress; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 14 January 1993]: The Department of Transport's ship-to-ship transfer equipment is currently stored by contractors at Milford Haven and is subject to regular maintenance, exercise and review. I am satisfied with these arrangements.

Vehicle Inspectorate

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many inspectors and examiners were on the payroll of the Vehicle Inspectorate Agency in each of the past five years.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 14 January 1993]: The staff numbers and grades directly involved in vehicle inspection and enforcement are as follows:

	March 1989	March 1990	March 1991	March 1992	October 1992
Tester	391	370	306	271	263
Assistant Vehicle Examiner	0	0	62	86	91
Professional and Technical Officer[1]	480	474	477	465	449
Senior Traffic Examiner[2]	—	—	—	38	31
Traffic Examiner[2]	—	—	—	175	172

[1] A limited amount of Inspection work is done by more senior management staff.
[2] Traffic Examiner grades were not part of the Vehicle Inspectorate until April 1991.

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much capital has been invested in the Vehicle Inspectorate Agency in each of the past five years.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 14 January 1993]: The following capital expenditure has been invested in the Vehicle Inspectorate in fixed assets in each of the past five years.

£000's cash

	Capital Spend
1988-89	2,443
1989-90	2,258
1990-91	3,476
1992-93[1]	3,276

[1] Forecast.

Roadside Tests

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many vehicles and what types have been prohibited after a roadside test in each of the last two years.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 14 January 1993]: The numbers of vehicles prohibited by the vehicle inspectorate following roadworthiness checks at the roadside during 1990-91 and 1991-92 are as follows:

	1990-91	1991-92
Public Service Vehicles	1,955	1,744
Goods Vehicles exceeding 3,500 kg design gross weight	7,363	7,628
Goods Vehicles not exceeding 3,500 kg design gross weight	1,141	4,680
Total	10,459	14,052

Departmental Employees

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many employees of his Department are based in offices in Wales; which agencies or other parts of his Department they work for; and what plans he has for their continuing employment in Wales.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 14 January 1993]: There are 4,268 employees of my Department based in offices in Wales. Of these, 163 belong to the central Department and work in the Marine Directorate, the general register and records office of shipping and seamen, the south Wales traffic area office, internal audit and personnel management. A total of 3,312 work for the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency, 102 for the Driving Standards Agency, 224 for the Vehicle Inspectorate Executive Agency and 467 for the DVOIT Agency. The level of employment in these activities depends on demand for the services concerned, and on the consequences of any privatisation, market testing or contracting out of services currently provided directly by the Department and its agencies.

Oil Pollution

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what emergency response plans exist in respect of possible oil pollution around the south coast of England.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 14 January 1993]: The Department of Transport maintains the Government's national contingency plan through the marine pollution control unit. This plan is complemented by the appropriate local authority contingency plans and port plans.

Salvage Personnel

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the adequacy of the numbers of fully trained and experienced salvage personnel in the United Kingdom to deal with future pollution incidents caused by maritime casualties.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 14 January 1993]: The Department of Transport maintains, under contract, response teams with specific responsibility for deploying equipment for dealing with chemical and oil tanker incidents. In addition, liaison is maintained with leading salvors and their capability. I am satisfied with these arrangements.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Fisheries Inspectors

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many fisheries inspectors are employed by his Department.

Mr. Curry: The current total number of land-based British sea fisheries officers employed by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food is 79, of which 68 are based in the coastal district offices and 11 in the London headquarters. A further 14 officers carry out fisheries protection duties under contract through aerial and surface surveillance operations.

Dairy Inspection Charges

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether dairy inspection charges are the same across the United Kingdom.

Mr. Curry: Dairy inspections are charged at the same rates in England and Wales. In Scotland and Northern Ireland, however, the enforcement regime is different and there is no charge for inspection visits.

Horticulture

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on his promotion of the British horticultural industry during the United Kingdom Presidency of the EC.

Mr. Curry: We promoted our horticultural industry during the United Kingdom presidency as vigorously as ever, especially during the informal agricultural council in Cambridge. The British horticulture industry will also directly benefit from Community measures adopted under the United Kingdom presidency including the single market arrangements for plant health, bee health and the fruit and vegetable regime and the extension of the hops conversion aid scheme. In addition, the sector will have the advantage of the whole range of measures on the single market adopted during the United Kingdom presidency.

Fishing Vessels

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many men are employed on vessels of 12 m length and under; and what percentage of total employment in the fishing industry this represents.

Mr. Curry: This information is not available.

EC Land (Expenditure)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish expenditure figures in ecus paid by EC member states on agriculture per hectare of land in agricultural use over the past five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Curry: The table shows expenditure on CAP market support measures from the guarantee section of the European agricultural guidance and guarantee fund by member state.

Folic Acid

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what steps he is taking to ensure that daily dietary supplements of folic acid remain available under the terms of the forthcoming European directive on dietary supplements to those women who are at risk of bearing children with neural tube defects;

(2) what assessment he has made of the impact of the forthcoming European directive on dietary supplements on the availability of those folic acid supplements which the chief medical officer's expert advisory group has recommended should be taken daily by women at risk of bearing children with neural tube defects.

Mr. Soames: No proposals for a directive on dietary supplements have yet been made by the Commission. However, our policy is to ensure the continued availability of safe and properly labelled products, including folic acid supplements.

Pig Disease

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what contingency plans he has made to compensate farmers for any outbreak of Aujeszky's disease coming from free movement of pigs within the single market; and what funds he has available for this purpose.

Mr. Soames: Stringent safeguard controls relating to the import of pigs have been negotiated. If, in spite of these, there is an outbreak of Aujeszky's disease, legislative powers remain to reactivate the levy.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects the directors of the Pig Disease Eradication Fund Ltd. to comply with his request to make available to his Ministry remaining funds in its account; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: Our officials are discussing this matter with industry representatives.

Rabbits

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received from organisations representing rabbit breeders on myxomatosis vaccine.

Mr. Soames: A number of representations have been received from organisations representing rabbit breeders, and from individuals owning rabbits, expressing concern that no myxomatosis vaccine is currently available in the United Kingdom. I share this concern and can confirm that applications to licence such vaccines, including one received recently, will be assessed as rapidly as possible.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether suitable vaccines can be imported for myxomatosis and viral haemorrhagic disease in rabbits; and what steps his Department has taken to assist in making such vaccines available to vets.

Mr. Soames: No veterinary vaccine may be imported into or marketed in the United Kingdom without a product licence. The veterinary medicines directorate will assess any applications for such licences for myxomatosis or viral haemorrhagic disease vaccines as rapidly as possible.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will establish a fund to compensate owners for loss or damage to domestic and show rabbits as a consequence of myxomatosis.

Mr. Soames: It is not Government policy to offer compensation in such circumstances.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Faversham (Sir R. Moate) of 8 June 1992, Official Report, column 15, if he will make a statement on the current position on myxomatosis vaccine.

Mr. Soames: No myxomatosis vaccine is currently licensed in the United Kingdom. However, the veterinary medicines directorate has recently received from Intervet (UK) Ltd. an application to licence such a vaccine. The data supporting the applications are being assessed as rapidly as possible against the standard Medicines Act criteria of safety, quality and efficacy.

Badgers

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will ensure that no licence is given to allow hunts to enter dogs into badger setts during the breeding period of December to June.

Mr. Soames: The badgers' breeding season is one of the factors which will be taken into account when considering an application to interfere with a badger sett. However, each application will be considered on its merits.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his proposed budget for badger culling and live tests in 1993-94.

Mr. Soames: The adoption of the live test as part of this Department's badger control strategy is currently under consideration. However, provisional estimates indicate that the direct running costs of a pre-emptive strategy based on such a test could be approximately £900,000 in 1993-94.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to ensure lactating badgers are not kept from their cubs when caught in live traps for the proposed bovine TB brocktest.

Mr. Soames: Written instructions are provided to field staff on the operation of the current badger control strategy. Staff must visit traps as early as possible in the day following the night of capture and sows showing signs of being recently suckled must be marked and released.

No decision has yet been made about the introducing of a new strategy based on a live test.

Hens

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the most recent report his Department has produced on the efficiency of methods used for the automated slaughter of hens; and whether each method meets the standards laid down by the Farm Animal Welfare Council.

Mr. Soames: There is no specific report on the efficiency of methods used for the automated slaughter of hens, but the Ministry's veterinary officers regularly monitor the welfare conditions of poultry at slaughter, including the methods used for the automated slaughter of hens. Automated slaughtering methods appear to be working effectively and any problems detected are dealt with speedily. The welfare of poultry at slaughter is covered by primary and secondary legislation and a statutory code of practice. A list of these, and details of implementation of the Farm Animal Welfare Council's recommendations on the subject, is in the Library of the House.

Bovine Tuberculosis

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many cattle were infected with bovine tuberculosis for the last five years in each affected county.

Mr. Soames: The numbers of confirmed cattle tuberculosis breakdowns in each affected county in England and Wales for the years 1988-91 were as follows:

Genetically Modified Organisms

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many and what forms of genetically modified organisms have currently been (a) approved for use in the United Kingdom and (b) pending approval for use in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Soames: All genetically modified organisms are subject, in addition to general controls on genetic modification, to any specific legislation controlling the uses for which they are intended. My Department is responsible for giving approval—whether statutory or not—for the use of a number of commodities, which may contain or consist of genetically modified organisms, notably:

veterinary medicines agricultural pesticides novel foods
crop varieties.

Statutory approval has been given for seven vaccines for use in treating pigs, and non-statutory clearance for the food use of a genetically modified yeast. Approval has been sought for marketing, throughout the EC, four genetically modified chrysanthemum varieties, and an application for non-statutory clearance for the use in this country of a further yeast has also been received.

In addition, one experimental permit for a genetically modified pesticidal virus has been issued and a further permit has been applied for.

Until 1 February, general control over the use of genetically modified organisms lies with my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Employment.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will set up an ethical committee to examine proposals for genetically modified animals with the power to examine proposals before they are submitted for patent, and to control the importation and use of any such animal, or product derived for any such animal developed outside the United Kingdom and the EC; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: I refer the hon. Member to my answer to him on 11 January at column 622. I do not propose to anticipate any advice that we may receive from that ethical committee, whose work will cover genetically modified animals as well as other animals bred by advanced techniques.

Habitats

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what preparations his Department is making in terms of the impact of the EC habitats directive and its effect on agriculture in this country; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: While the implementation of the EC habitats directive is primarily a matter for the Secretary of State for the Environment, the consultations between our Departments will ensure that the implications for agriculture are taken into account. There will be full public consultation on the Government's proposals.

Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowances

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the hill livestock compensatory allowance rates in cash terms and real terms in each year since 1982.

Mr. Curry: The information requested is contained at tables 16 and 17 of the statistical data prepared for the 1992 "Autumn Review of the Economic Conditions in the Hills and Uplands", a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many producers are entitled to hill livestock compensatory allowances in England; and what proportion of those are located in (a) severely disadvantaged and (b) disadvantaged areas.

Mr. Gummer: Some 15,000 producers in England are currently entitled to claim hill livestock compensatory allowances; of these about 11,000 are in the severely disadvantaged area and 4,000 in the disadvantaged area.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the number and proportion of farmers in England who receive hill livestock compensatory allowance payments.

Mr. Curry: Around 15,000 farmers in England receive payments under the hill livestock compensatory allowances scheme representing about 11 per cent. of the total number of farmers in England.

Farm Land

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what hectarage of land in England is in (a) less favoured areas, (b) severely disadvantaged areas and (c) disadvantaged areas; what proportion of land in England each figure represents; and how many farmers are involved.

Mr. Curry: The figures requested are as follows:

	Hectares (million)	Percentage of English land area	[1] Number of farms in less favoured areas
All less favoured areas	1·805	14	21,300
Of which:
Severely disadvantaged	1·405	11	14,500
Disadvantaged	0·401	3	6,800

[1] In whole or in part (main holdings June 1991).

Civil Servants (Bicycles)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the current conditions on which civil servants in his Department are granted salary advances to enable the purchase of bicycles for home-to-office travel; if he will make a statement on the current conditions in each agency of his Department; what plans he has to change the conditions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: The Department and agencies offer advances of salary of £50-£100 to permanent, non-industrial staff in executive officer or equivalent grades and below, for the purchase of bicycles for home-to-office travel. One application is permitted every five years.

Potatoes

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he considered comments made to him in response to the consultation letter from his Department of 26 November 1992 on potatoes which arrived at his Department after the deadline of 7 December 1992.

Mr. Gummer: Yes. We are considering all replies received to date.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many of the responses to the consultation letter of 26 November 1992 concerning an EC potato regime were supportive of the principle behind the present potato marketing scheme establishing both high quality standards and a stable market for potatoes as being more appropriate than the proposals set out in Com(92) 185 final.

Mr. Gummer: Eight.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received from interested parties about the proposed changes in the Potato Marketing Board aid scheme; and how many have supported the proposals to abolish the Potato Marketing Board aid scheme.

Mr. Curry: Since the publication of the proposals for an EC potato regime which as drafted do not make provision for the area (quota) controls and support buying arrangements of our potato marketing scheme, we have received a number of representations, mainly from growers or their representatives, the majority of which are in support of the continuation of the scheme.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list those outstanding recommendations contained in any of the reviews of the Potato Marketing Board aid scheme conducted by Government over the past 10 years which have yet to be fully implemented.

Mr. Curry: Following the 1988 review of the potato marketing scheme the Government announced their intention to abolish the guarantee arrangements as soon as parliamentary time permitted. The Agriculture Bill currently in another place contains the necessary provisions. All other recommendations have already been implemented.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to ensure that potato producers in the United Kingdom will be competing fairly with EC competitors in other member states under the regulations provided for in the proposed draft EC potato scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given on 12 January 1993 to the hon. Member for Lancashire, West (Mr. Pickthall) at column 721.

Fish Merchants

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to assist with grants those small business fish merchants who are now required to pay just below £30,000 to bring handling facilities up to the hygiene standards now demanded; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: EC grants were, until recently, available under regulation 4042/89 to investments involving the marketing and processing of fisheries and aquaculture produce. This scheme was aimed at fish processors and projects involving the upgrading of hygiene standards were eligible. However, the limited EC funding available to it meant that competition for grants was intense and not all eligible projects could be warded aid. The scheme closed to applications in the United Kingdom on 31 December 1992. Proposals to replace it are to be considered by the EC as part of the general review of its structural funds this year.

Wool

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will consider introducing a fall-back system of support available to low volume producers to enable higher returns than farmgate prices to be paid for wool to ensure the national flock is clipped annually.

Mr. Curry: No.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent representations he has received from integrated parties about the proposal to terminate the guaranteed price for wool; and how many supported the proposed change.

Mr. Curry: I have received a small number of representations to the effect that the wool guarantee should be retained.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will estimate the cost to United Kingdom sheep producers of the proposal to terminate the guaranteed price for wool; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: The wool guarantee is intended to operate as a means of price stabilisation, not continuous support. However, there will be some short term impact on producers' returns, of the order of £26 million in relation to the 1993 clip. Total direct subsidies payable to sheep farmers in respect of 1992 are estimated to amount to about £480 million.

Milk

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish figures for the annual consumption of whole and low fat liquid milks since 1974, and figures for the total quantity of milk going for liquid sales and manufacture in each year.

Mr. Gummer: The following table gives the annual volume of sales for liquid consumption and for manufacture through MMB schemes in the United Kingdom since 1974. The sales for liquid consumption of whole milk, semi skimmed milk and skimmed milk are then combined with the net volume of trade in each to provide estimates of consumption. Consumption estimates on a comparable basis are not readily available for the years 1974 to 1981.

Farm Incomes

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish figures of average farm incomes for all farms and mostly sheep farms, distinguishing between severely disadvantaged and disadvantaged areas, for the most recent available year.

Mr. Gummer: Details of farm incomes in 1990-91 for all types of farm are contained at table 4.2 in "Farm Incomes in the United Kingdom" (1992 edition). Details of incomes for sheep farms during 1990-91 and the two subsequent years in the less favoured areas are contained in table 21 of the statistical data prepared for the 1992 autumn review of the economic conditions in the hills and uplands. Copies of both the sources referred to are in the Library of the House.

HEALTH

Management Consultants

Mr. George: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much has been spent by the West Midlands regional health authority on the services of management consultants in 1990, 1991 and 1992, respectively.

Dr. Mawhinney: Decisions to employ management consultants are matters for individual health authorities and details of any expenditure incurred are not separately identifiable in their annual accounts or otherwise collected centrally.

Hospital Admissions

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment has been made of (a) the number of hospital admissions postponed or denied by the yellow warning issued by the London emergency bed service at 3 pm on 7 January and (b) the extent of the related increased demand for emergency admissions.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the reasons why hospitals in various health districts in the North East Thames region were unable to cope with demand for treatment at the beginning of the year and so issued a yellow warning; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The yellow alert issued recently by the London emergency bed service was occasioned by an unexpectedly sharp rise in demand for emergency admissions to hospitals in north and east London and in west Essex. The yellow alert affected 11 hospitals which were thereby encouraged to take appropriate action on elective admissions to make room for the increased emergency admissions that were mostly occurring outside London. No patient requiring urgent treatment has had that treatment cancelled. Careful and flexible bed management and proper planning of elective workload levels helps hospitals to manage unexpected demands for their services while minimising disruption of elective work.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the statistical basis she is using to evaluate the impact of the implementation of the proposals of the Tomlinson report on the mechanism of the London emergency bed service, stating the current proportion of beds within the area of the service kept vacant for emergency admissions.

Dr. Mawhinney: The emergency bed service and its status reports on the availability of emergency beds are for use when there are unexpected demands. The Tomlinson report does not recommend any change in this system.

Nicotine Patches

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment has been made by her Department of the safety of nicotine patches; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Licensing Authority and its advisory body the Committee on Safety of Medicines (CSM), in assessing applications for product licences for nicotine patches, considered all the available evidence which included clinical trials; data from usage in other countries published or unpublished, whether or not favourable to the drug. The CSM has to be satisfied that the drug is safe and efficacious for the indication proposed, in this case treatment of nicotine withdrawal symptoms associated with smoking cessation in nicotine dependant persons, and that it is of good quality. These are the only criteria which can be considered under the Medicines Act.

Ritodrine

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment her Department has made of the drug ritodrine; what guidance she has issued on its use; and what plans she has to review its usage.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Committee on Safety of Medicines has recently conducted a full investigation into the safety and efficacy of ritodrine. This review was prompted by a publication in the medical literature which expressed concern about the risks and benefits of ritodrine and by two recent deaths in the United Kingdom following treatment with the drug. The committee concluded that the drug was effective and safe when administered correctly. They recommended a number of changes to the prescribing information which are currently being implemented. The manufacturer of ritodrine has written to all doctors emphasising the measures which should be adopted to ensure that the drug is administered safely. As with all medicines licensed for use in the United Kingdom, the safety of ritodrine is being kept under constant review by the Medicines Control Agency.

Intensive Therapy Units

Sir Patrick McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the number and location of the intensive therapy units in England and Wales; and how many organ donors have arisen in each during the past 12 months.

Mr. Sackville: Not all intensive therapy units in England and Wales can be identified from information collected centrally. According to information provided by the United Kingdom Transplant Support Service Authority (UKTSSA) organs were retrieved from 732 donors in 216 units in England and Wales in 1992. The table gives the regional distribution:

Region	Number of Units	Number of Donors
Northern	15	51
Yorkshire	9	59
Trent	16	67
East Anglian	10	33
North West Thames	13	32
North East Thames	20	55
South East and South West Thames	34	110
Wessex	10	34
Oxford	10	38
South Western	12	48
West Midlands	22	70
Mersey	14	37
North Western	18	61
Wales	13	37

Reports from UKTSSA showing the names of all these units, the number of donors in each of them and the names of all hospitals that have retrieved organs during the past ten years have been placed in the Library.

West Midlands Regional Health Authority

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the findings of Sir Roy Griffiths in relation to the operation of the West Midlands regional health authority.

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make public the reports she has received from Sir Roy Griffiths in respect of the West Midlands regional health authority.

Dr. Mawhinney: Sir Roy Griffiths was asked to work with West Midlands regional health authority in looking at its management systems to enable the authority to discharge its functions more effectively in the future. Sir Roy has been keeping the Department and region in touch with progress and a number of changes have now been made. As indicated at the outset there are no plans for a formal report on his work to be published.

Mr. Purchase: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the actions of Sir James Ackers, former chair of the West Midlands regional health authority, in respect of financial losses to the health services in the west midlands; and when she proposes to make good these losses.

Dr. Mawhinney: Sir James Ackers was chairman of West Midlands regional health authority for over 10 years, during which time many excellent developments in health care took place. Recently, the region has faced a number of difficulties arising from management of its regionally managed services. When Sir James became aware of the problems he instigated remedial action, including changes in managerial structures, lines of accountability, the limits of authority and the standing and financial orders together with a number of senior management changes. Management of the West Midlands regional health authority and the provision of health services for the people of the west midlands is the responsibility of the regional health authority. Allocation and use of resources to meet these objectives are therefore matters for them.

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will order the publication of the report by the district auditor into the West Midlands regional health authority currently in the hands of senior management of that authority.

Dr. Mawhinney: The district auditor's report on the West Midlands supplies division was published on 10 September 1992. No other reports are currently complete.

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what financial settlement was made in respect of the resignation of Sir James Ackers as chair of the West Midlands regional health authority.

Dr. Mawhinney: No decision has been made.

Family Health Service Authorities

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has for reorganising the family health service authorities; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: Circular EL(92)47, priorities and planning guidance 1993/94, copies of which are available in the Library, sets out the Government's position on the organisation of family health service authorities. It states that "the full benefits of current arrangements have yet to be realised".

We believe that FHSAs have a major role to play in the further development of primary care.

Doncaster Health Services

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will dismiss those of her appointees to the Doncaster healthcare trust who neither reside nor work in south Yorkshire.

Dr. Mawhinney: No.

Health Authority Appointments

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health who is consulted when candidates for appointment as chairman or non-executive directors of health authorities are selected; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Mawhinney: Nominations for appointment as chairmen of district health authorities are made by regional health authority chairmen, and I make the appointments on behalf of the Secretary of State. The appointment of non-executive members of district health authorities is the responsibility of the regional health authority chairmen. There is no requirement to consult anyone in making such appointments. However, in making these public appointments I take into account local views, including those of hon. Members.

European Year of the Elderly

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures she is taking in connection with the European year of the elderly.

Mr. Yeo: The Department, in co-operation with the Department of Social Security, has overall co-ordinating responsibility for the European Year of Older People and Solidarity between Generations in the United Kingdom and we are now well advanced with our plans. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health launched the Year in the United Kingdom at the age resource awards, which were presented in London on 17 December 1992 by HRH The Prince of Wales.

Following consultation with a wide range of national voluntary and professional bodies, statutory authorities and other relevant Government Departments, we have set up a group to advise on the conduct, promotion and evaluation of the programme of events to celebrate the year. The group involves representatives of organisations reflecting the interests of older people, including the National Pensioners' Convention, and will take direct account wherever possible of the views and preferences of older people themselves. The programme in the United Kingdom will focus on four major themes:

Combating "ageism" and promoting positive images of ageing;

Volunteering;

Health promotion and active leisure, including remaining mentally active;

Social integration, including problems of isolation and loneliness, information needs, housing, transport and community care issues.

Four task groups have also been set up to examine each of these themes and put forward specific proposals.

There will be two elements to the year in the United Kingdom: a core programme involving national events focusing on the four themes, including cultural and sporting events, exhibitions and conferences; and a general programme, consisting of activities organised by individual groups and voluntary bodies.

The Department has committed £81,000 in the current financial year for the costs of a secretariat—based at Age Concern England headquarters—to co-ordinate the core programme and to disseminate news and information.

Midwives

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what plans she has to review the current clinical grading system for midwives; and if she will make a statement;

(2) if she will establish an expert committee to review the pay conditions and grading structures for midwives in the NHS; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: We have no plans to review the current clinical grading system for midwives. These are matters for the Nursing and Midwifery Staffs Negotiating Council.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has had recently regarding the pay and conditions of midwives working within the NHS.

Mr. Sackville: We receive representations periodically about pay and conditions from a variety of sources including midwives and their representative organisations.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what response the Government made to the recommendations by the House of Commons Select Committee on the changes needed in the clinical grading and pay structure for midwives.

Mr. Sackville: The Health Committee did not make any specific recommendations about clinical grading and the pay structure of midwives.

Alcohol and Drugs

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the establishments in England which provide residential facilities for (a) those with alcohol problems and (b) those with drug problems; if he will show for each establishment (i) the capital grant and (ii) the total revenue grant provided by his Department in each of the last five years; and if he will provide estimated figures for 1992-93 and 1993-94.

Mr. Yeo: Information on residential and non residential facilities for drug misusers is available in the SCODA directory and for alcohol misusers in the Alcohol Concern directory, copies of which are in the Library. Funding for drug and alcohol projects are provided directly and indirectly by the Department from a number of sources. In part grants are from small centrally administered budgets such as the specific grant for alcohol and drug misusers. Other funds are provided locally by health authorities, either from money specifically allocated to them for drug misuse services, which totals £20 million in 1992-93, or from their general allocations. Details of projects funded from all these sources could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Killingbeck Hospital

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will make a statement on the discussions between her Department and Yorkshire regional health authority about the decision to transfer the management of Killingbeck hospital to the United Leeds Teaching hospital trust;

(2) what assessment she made of the process of consultation between the Yorkshire regional health authority and (a) Leeds community health council, (b) employees of Killingbeck hospital and (c) local hon. Members before the decision was announced to transfer the management of Killingbeck hospital to the United Leeds Teaching hospital trust; and if she will make a statement;

(3) if she will make a statement on the future management of Killingbeck hospital in Leeds.

Dr. Mawhinney: I will write to the hon. Member with full details.

Interleukin-6

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) whether she will set out the cost to the United Leeds Teaching Hospital Trust of the further investigation currently being undertaken by Coopers and Lybrand into the Interleukin-6 research project; and if she will make a statement.

(2) whether her Department will instruct the United Leeds Teaching Hospital Trust to publish the Coopers and Lybrand report on the cost of the Interleukin-6 research project; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: I understand that the investigations by Coopers and Lybrand into the Interleukin-6 research project on behalf of the United Leeds teaching hospitals national health service trust are not yet complete. The costs of any investigation and decisions about publication of any report will be matters for the trust.

Civil Servants (Bicycles)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the current conditions on which civil servants in her Department are granted salary advances to enable the purchase of bicycles for home-to-office travel; if she will make a statement on the current conditions in each agency of her Department; what plans she has to change the conditions; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: All permanent staff with at least two months' service in the Department of Health and its agencies are able to apply for an advance of salary to enable the purchase of bicycles for home-to-office travel. The maximum advance for purchase of a bicycle is £100. This provision was introduced in the Department in June 1992. We have no immediate plans to change these conditions.

Birth Defects

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, (1) pursuant to her answer of 17 December 1992, Official Report, column 420, what steps she is taking to ensure that women at risk of bearing children with neural tube defects are aware of the benefits which would accrue from taking a daily dietary supplement of folic acid;

(2) when the potential benefits of dietary supplementation with folic acid by women at risk of bearing children with neural tube defects were first drawn to her or her predecessor's attention.

Mr. Sackville: It was not until July 1991, when the first results of a Medical Research Council study were published, that it was concluded that a daily dietary supplement of folic acid could significantly reduce the risk of recurrence of neural tube defects.

Guidance was issued at once to doctors, senior nurses, midwives and health visitors. The subsequent 1992 report of the Chief Medical Officer's Expert Advisory Group endorsed the earlier guidance and extended it to include also women with no history of neural tube defects. There has been widespread publicity and action is in hand to ensure the public are fully aware of this important advice.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 17 December 1992, Official Report, column 420, whether she will consider claims for ex gratia payments from those women who may have delivered or who have had aborted babies suffering from neural tube defects, and who had been given placebos in earlier studies involving folic acid supplementation.

Mr. Sackville: We do not consider that it would be appropriate to make payments to women for not being given a treatment which at the time was unproven.

Abortion

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information she has concerning the average cost of a national health service abortion performed (a) in a national health service hospital and (b) in a private clinic under agency arrangements.

Mr. Sackville: The estimated average cost of a surgical abortion in a national health service hospital is £270 for a straightforward in-patient case and £140 for a day case (at 1990-91 figures). Some two thirds of abortions performed in national health service hospitals are carried out on a day case basis (i.e. the patient does not stay overnight). No information is held centrally about the cost of abortions performed in the private sector under agency arrangements.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what has been the total number of abortions performed under the terms of the Abortion Act 1967; how many of these were performed in national health service hospitals; and what was the total estimated cost at current prices;

(2) how many of the total number of abortions so far performed under the Abortion Act 1967 were performed in private clinics under national health service agency arrangements; and what was the total cost of those abortions at current prices.

Mr. Sackville: Of the 3,546,681 abortions performed in England and Wales since the Abortion Act 1967 came into effect, and up to 31 December 1991, 1,387,829 were performed in national health service hospitals. Since 1981, when information was first collected about agency arrangements between NHS authorities and the private sector, a total of 74,680 abortions have been so provided. The total cost of these is not known centrally. Information is not available centrally to enable the total cost of all abortions to be estimated.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information she has concerning the average cost to patients of abortions performed in private abortion clinics; and how many such abortions in total have now been performed under the provisions of the Abortion Act 1967.

Mr. Sackville: The total number of abortions performed in private abortion clinics and hospitals under the Abortion Act 1967 since it came into effect, and up to 31 December 1991, is 2,158,852. We do not collect centrally information about fees charged by all private clinics.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will indicate, without revealing the names of the doctors concerned, how many and what percentage of all abortions on babies of 18 or more weeks gestation in the latest year for which figures are available were carried out by each of the 10 doctors who have performed the greatest number of such abortions.

Mr. Sackville: This information is available only from the abortion notification forms submitted to the Chief Medical Officer under regulation 4 of the Abortion Regulations 1991, and cannot be disclosed because of restrictions set out in regulation 5.

Hospitals, Birmingham

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on what dates in the last six months she visited hospitals in Birmingham; and if she will give details of her visits.

Dr. Mawhinney: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has not visited any hospitals in Birmingham in the last six months. However, the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State—my hon. Friend the Member for Bolton, West (Mr. Sackville)—and I have visited hospitals in and around Birmingham on a number of occasions since July.

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she expects to make a decision regarding the proposal from the West Midlands regional health authority to close the accident and royal orthopaedic hospitals in Birmingham.

Dr. Mawhinney: My right hon. Friend has received proposals from the regional health authority to close the Accident and Royal Orthopaedic hospitals and transfer the services to the Birmingham general hospital. An announcement will be made once the consideration of the proposal is complete.

Philip Lyndon

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the total cost so far to the Yorkshire health authority of the Philip Lyndon inquiry including the costs of his suspension.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not available centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact Sir Bryan Askew, the chairman of Yorkshire regional health authority for details.

Medical Treatment Abroad

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assistance is available for parents whose children contract a medical condition, treatment for which cannot be obtained in the United Kingdom, to receive treatment in (a) another EC country, (b) the United States of America, (c) Japan and (d) any other country.

Dr. Mawhinney: There are no general powers under national health service legislation allowing purchase of treatment outside the EC for patients resident in England. There are powers under EC legislation for individual patients to be referred elsewhere in the Community for treatment with the prior authorisation of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State.

Capital Programmes

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether, in granting approvals in to the capital programmes of NHS trusts, it is her policy to act in accordance with the previous outline capital programmes of regional health authorities or any undertakings regional health authorities may have given relating thereto.

Dr. Mawhinney: With the introduction of capital charges all capital developments, whether in trusts or directly managed units, have revenue consequences for purchasers. The national health service management executive requires all new capital developments to be supported by a business case which demonstrates that the scheme meets purchaser requirements, has their support, and can be afforded by them. Schemes in regional health authorities previous outline programmes are subject to these criteria in the same way that any new proposals are. The NHS management executive's outposts are responsible for recommending major capital schemes for inclusion in trust capital programmes and work closely with regional health authorities in drawing up their proposals.

Merseyside Regional Health Authority

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will establish an independent inquiry into the Merseyside regional health authority.

Dr. Mawhinney: We have no plans to do so.

Ambulance Service

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the percentage of ambulances in each service in England that responded within (a) eight minutes and (b) 14 to 20 minutes to emergency calls in 1991-92.

Mr. Sackville: The available information is in the table. In 1991-92 ambulance authorities had the option to return information on either the basis of emergency telephone calls received or of emergency patient journeys, with consequent variation in the basis of calculation. It is not considered that this has any significant impact on comparisons. The data are provisional.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the number of ambulance staff in England employed by the NHS in 991, using whole-time equivalents.

Mr. Sackville: As at 30 September 1991, there were some 18,190 whole-time equivalent ambulance staff employed by the national health service (including those in NHS trusts).

Engagements

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list her engagements for 4, 5 and 6 December 1992.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: My official engagements were as follows:

Friday 4 December: Meeting with Departmental officials and attendance at the Service for the Citizen Conference at the QEII conference centre.

Saturday 5 December: Meeting with the Guildford and Godalming Branch of National Asthma Campaign.

Domiciliary Services

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many health visitors and district nurses providing domiciliary services to elderly people were employed in England on the most recent date for which this information is available.

Mr. Sackville: The Department collects information about the numbers of health visitors and district nurses, but data on their type of work (e.g. domiciliary services to elderly people) is not separately identifiable.

Community Care

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what arrangements are being made to monitor the community care policy from April.

Mr. Yeo: We are currently considering how best to do this.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the assessment of the community care needs of London boroughs in 1993-94.

Mr. Yeo: Standard spending assessments provide the Government's view of appropriate expenditure. Within each SSA there are components for adult social services. Authorities also have available the special transitional grant for community care and other relevant specific grants. However, it is for each authority to decide within its available resources how much it is appropriate to spend in the light of their own judgments.

Varicose Veins

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many varicose vein surgical operations are undertaken by the national health service annually for males under 40 years of age.

Mr. Sackville: The number of hospital episodes in England 1989-90, the latest year for which figures are available, involving surgical operations under the national health service for varicose veins on males under 40 years of age, are estimated to be 4,200.

Residential Care

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action is being taken to improve the provision of residential care places in the London area.

Mr. Yeo: It is for each local authority to determine how best to meet the need for social services, including residential care, in their area. The local authorities in London are, like all social services authorities throughout the country, currently considering this in working towards the introduction of the new community care arrangements in April.

Unwanted Pregnancies

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the impact on the number of unwanted pregnancies and the cost of associated social problems of the changes to the selected list.

Dr. Mawhinney: Changes to the range of contraceptives available on national health service prescription will be made only on the recommendation of the Advisory Committee on NHS Drugs. The committee will ensure that all the real clinical needs of patients continue to be met.

Special Hospitals

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is (a) the normal capacity and (b) maximum capacity of each of the special hospitals in England and Wales;

(2) what was the population for each of the three special hospitals in England and Wales for the latest date available.

Mr. Yeo: The available information is in the table.

Hospital	Current number of beds	Number of patients 31 December 1992
Ashworth	658	624
Broadmoor	495	493
Rampton	600	540
TOTAL	1,753	1,532

Total patient numbers include 123 on trial leave.

Neo-natal Units

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish a table showing NHS expenditure on neo-natal units in cash and real terms in each year since 1979-80; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Managerial Staff

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consultations she has had with the NHS Trusts Association concerning the application of the Government's pay guidelines for the public sector to the pay of chief executives and other senior staff of new NHS trusts coming into being on 1 April; and where those chief executives and senior staff are presently in post in analogous jobs.

Dr. Mawhinney: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State met the National Health Service Trust Federation on 10 December 1992 and discussed with them the application of public sector pay restraint. My right hon. Friend emphasised that the need for restraint applied to the salaries of chief executives as well as other NHS staff.

Dentistry

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she has received the Bloomfield report; and if she will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I am pleased to announce that Sir Kenneth Bloomfield has now submitted his report reviewing the current dental remuneration system and identifying options for change. I am today publishing his report and beginning a period of consultation on it to identify how we might improve the system. Copies have been placed in the Library.

I should like to record my thanks to Sir Kenneth for a comprehensive and valuable report. The next step is to consider the views of all the interests—profession, public, national health service—to develop a better system. I know the Health Select Committee has an enquiry into this subject. Many dentists have made clear their concern about the current remuneration system which has remained largely unchanged since 1948. Now is the time to work with us to improve it.

The Government will consider carefully all views expressed over the coming months.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she expects the Bloomfield report on dental remuneration to be made public.

Dr. Mawhinney: Today.

Hospitals, Wolverhampton

Mr. Purchase: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many times Wolverhampton hospitals have been closed for admissions during the 12-month period ended 31 December 1992; and how many patients have been affected by the closures.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not held centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact to Sir Donald Wilson, chairman of West Midlands regional health authority.

NHS Charges

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in which cases a loan is treated as reckonable income in determining eligibility for NHS charges.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Morley and Leeds, South (Mr. Gunnell) on Friday 23 October 1992 at column 395.

Voluntary Organisations

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the awards given to voluntary organisations under the section 64 procedure for the financial year 1991-92; what awards he plans to make in the financial year 1992-93; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 14 January 1993]: Grants totalling over £15·8 million were awarded to voluntary organisations in England during 1991-92 under the section 64 general scheme. Details have been placed in the Library.

For 1992-93 grant approval letters had been issued by 13 January 1993 to various organisations. A list of them has also been placed in the Library. In addition further approval letters up to the total provision of £17·8 million will be issued during the remainder of the year where payment is dependent for example on work starting on a project in the near future. The organisations in question are aware of the position.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Pensioners

2. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he next intends to meet representatives of pensioner groups to discuss the level of the state pension.

Mr. Lilley: My ministerial colleagues and I regularly meet representatives of pensioner groups.

10. Mr. Garnier: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what has been the increase in real terms in benefits for pensioners since 1989.

15. Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the total value of extra help which has been directed to less well off pensioners since 1989.

21. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security by how much more than inflation benefits for less well off pensioners have been increased since 1989.

Miss Widdecombe: As a result of improvements in income-related benefits, since 1989 expenditure for the year beginning April 1993 will be £1 billion higher.

14. Mr. Congdon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of the average pensioner's income comes from occupational pensions, savings and earnings.

Miss Widdecombe: Of pensioners' gross average income 23 per cent. from occupational pensions, 17 per cent. from savings income and 8 per cent. from earnings.

Pensions

26. Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many officially retired persons were in receipt of an occupational pension for the latest date for which figures are available, and on 1 April 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: We estimate that between 1979 and 1988, the most recent year for which information is available, the number of people over state pension age in receipt of income from an occupational pension rose from around 3 million to around 4·5 million. These estimates are based upon data from the 1979 and 1988 family expenditure surveys, and the 1979 and 1987 surveys of occupational pension schemes carried out by the Government Actuary.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish such comparable figures as he has available on provision for old age pensions in the United Kingdom and other EC countries, including health costs.

Miss Widdecombe: Direct comparison of pension rates is not possible because most EC states unlike the United Kingdom, have wholly earnings-related pension schemes. Meaningful comparisons can only be made when comparing whole benefit packages available to pensioners.

The Department recently completed a comparative exercise of six member states using data supplied by an independent firm of actuaries. The exercise indicated, that when factors such as safety net provision and health care are taken into account, British pensioners who previously had been on low earnings are better off than those in Germany, France, Italy and Spain, and only just behind those in the Netherlands.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the income of pensioners.

Miss Widdecombe: The total average income of pensioners has increased by about one third since 1979. This is over five times as fast as it increased between 1974 and 1979.

Family Credit

16. Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the range of net income over which families are eligible for family credit.

Mr. Burt: There is no minimum qualifying level of income for family credit. The upper limit will vary with the number and age of the children. A family with one child under 11 can get family credit if their net weekly income is less than £139 a week. A family with four children aged three, eight 11 and 16 could be eligible with a net income of £209 a week.

Fraud

17. Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what extra investment his Department is making in anti-fraud work.

Miss Widdecombe: An extra £10 million has been allocated for each of the next three financial years to help the Benefits Agency step up the fight against fraud and abuse. Financial incentives are also being introduced to encourage local authorities to combat housing benefit and council tax benefit fraud.

Child Support Agency

18. Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement as to what progress he has made in setting up the Child Support Agency.

Mr. Burt: I am pleased to report excellent progress has been made. The Child Support Agency will begin operations on 5 April as planned. Operating within the framework of the Child Support Act the agency will provide a clear focus for the assessment, collection and enforcement of maintenance payments, and ensure that many more parents meet their responsibility to maintain their children.

Citizens Advice Bureaux

19. Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the level of co-operation between social security officers and local citizens advice bureaux.

Mr. Burt: There is a high level of co-operation. Locally staff in many of our district offices regularly meet bureaux staff who have been involved in service planning exercises. Visits to local citizens advice bureaux also take place in many parts of the country. Nationally, the Department enjoys good relations with the National Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux which is for example, involved in several research projects.

Lone Parents

20. Mr. Coe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the latest available figures for the proportion of lone parents who receive maintenance.

Mr. Burt: The latest available estimates show that only 29 per cent. of lone parents receive regular maintenance payments. The corresponding figure for lone parents receiving income support is 22 per cent.

Disability Allowances

22. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects to clear up the backlog of claims for disability living allowance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: Claim levels for disability living allowance have stabilised and work on hand has now reduced to normal levels.

I have expressed my regret for the delays which occurred following the introduction of disability living allowance, which was a massive task, resulting in over one million claims to disability living allowance and attendence allowance within a period of 10 months.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many staff have been allocated to the home visiting service; and how many home visits by Benefits Agency staff in connection with disability living allowance and attendance allowance have been made to date since February 1992 in total and by disability benefit centre;

(2) how many claims to date for the disability living allowance have been completed (a) with the assistance of telephone calls and (b) with the assistance of visits made by the forms completion service staff in the disability benefits centre.

Mr. Scott: The administration of disability living allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Paul Flynn, dated 15 January 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary of State for Social Security.

You asked about the number of staff allocated to the home visiting service, and how many home visits by Benefits Agency staff in connection with Disability Living Allowance (DLA) and Attendance Allowance (AA) have been made to date since February 1992 in total and by Disability Benefit Centre. You also asked how many claims have been completed with the assistance of telephone calls and with the assistance of visits made by the forms completion staff in the Disability Benefit Centres (DBCs).

The staff in the Customer Service Sections of the DBCs are involved in general duties to help customers, including forms completion work for both benefits. This may involve telephoning the customer to help in completing a claim form or it may involve a visit. There are around 200 Customer Service staff in the DBCs whose duties would include home visits. Since February 1992 to the end of December, over 2,500 home visits have been made to assist in the completion of claim forms. Over 63,000 DLA and AA claims have been completed with the assistance of telephone calls. The number of visits made by each DBC is shown below.

Benefits Agency

23. Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the system of handling answers to parliamentary questions referred to the chief executive of the Benefits Agency.

Mr. Burt: When Members ask written parliamentary questions which concern day-to-day operational matters delegated to the Benefits Agency, my right hon. Friend and his Ministers will normally arrange for the chief executive to write to the Member, and will reply to that effect. The aim is to provide as full and helpful a response as possible on a timescale similar to that for a ministerial response to a parliamentary question. As the Lord President of the Council announced on 20 October Official Report, column 288 all such letters from chief executives arising from written questions, except for those concerning personal or confidential matters, are now printed in the Official Report. My right hon. Friend remains fully accountable to Parliament for the work of the Department of Social Security, including its executive agencies and we will continue to answer all oral questions.

25. Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what changes there have been in the service provided to claimants since the Benefits Agency came into operation in 1991.

Mr. Burt: Overall the Benefits Agency is providing a more efficient service to the public. Performance in most key service delivery areas has improved significantly since 1991. Significant progress has been made towards making the service more accessible, accountable and responsible to customer needs and expectations. The aims in the citizens charter have been expanded and are clearly laid out in the agency's own customer charter. In consultation with their customer's local units are setting up and publicising their own customer service standards.

Housing Benefit

24. Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what consideration he has given to the introduction of a universal housing benefit scheme covering both rent and mortgage interest payments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: We have considered carefully the proposals that have been made for such a scheme. We have yet to be convinced that they would represent good value for the taxpayer, given the substantial extra cost.

Invalid Care Allowance

27. Mr. Kynoch: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many more people receive invalid care allowance currently than in 1979.

Mr. Scott: The number of people receiving invalid care allowance increased from 5,000 in December 1979 to 180,000 in September 1992.

Social Fund

28. Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he intends to review the social fund provision.

Mr. Scott: The level of social fund provision is kept under constant review. As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced on 12 November, the gross budget for social fund discretionary payments for 1993-94 will be around £340 million. That is a 50 per cent. increase in two years—a clear indication of our commitment to ensuring that adequate help is provided. As far as this year is concerned, I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend to the hon. Member for Gateshead, East (Ms. Quin), earlier today.

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what was, for each social security office in the United Kingdom, the total amount of money applied for in cases in the current financial year where an application for a social fund loan met the criteria but the loan was refused because of budgetary constraints;

(2) what was, for each social security office in the United Kingdom, the total amount of money applied for in cases during the current financial year where an application for a community care grant met the criteria but the grant was refused because of budgetary constraints.

Mr. Scott: Information on the amount of money in cases where an application was refused on grounds of priority is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was, for each social security office in the United Kingdom, the amount of money allocated to the social fund for (a) loans and (b) grants for the current financial year and the amount so far unspent in each category at the latest available date.

Mr. Scott: Details of social fund allocations for the current financial year and outstanding allocations at the latest available date, by Benefit Agency district are in the Library.

Mortgage Interest

29. Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many households are having their mortgage interest payments met by his Department; and what the cost will be of these payments in 1992-93.

Mr. Burt: The latest available information indicates a total of 411,000 income support recipients receiving help with mortgage interest payments at a cost of £949 million. This is derived from the May 1991 income support annual statistical enquiry, a copy of which is in the Library. Estimates on the cost to the Department of these payments in 1992-93 are not yet available.

Invalidity Benefit

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what criteria are used by the Benefits Agency to decide whether to call an invalidity benefit claimant for a medical examination.

Mr. Scott: The administration of benefits is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Hugh Bayley, dated 15 January 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking what criteria are used by the Benefits Agency to decide whether to call an Invalidity Benefit claimant for a medical examination.

All claims for Invalidity Benefit are subject to scrutiny which may take the form of a reference to the Benefits Agency Medical Services to obtain a second opinion on incapacity for work. The selection of customers for reference is made impartially on the basis of standing instructions. The main considerations are the diagnosis or disorder causing incapacity for work and the length of time the person has been away from work as a result.

Cases received by Medical Services are scrutinised by a doctor who decides whether or not to call a customer for a medical examination. That decision is based on the doctor's experience of the likely effects of the particular medical condition on a person's capacity for work, information that has been provided by the doctor who has signed the statement of incapacity and any information from previous references that is relevant.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report. A copy will also be placed in the Library.

Income Support

Mr. Ashdown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, how many applications for income support were made by 16 and 17 year-olds in south Somerset during 1992; how many of these applications were refused; and on what grounds.

Mr. Burt: The administration of income support is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Paddy Ashdown, dated 15 January 1993

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking how many applications for Income Support were made by 16 and 17 year olds in South Somerset during 1992; how many of these applications were refused; and on what grounds.

The complete range of information you requested is not fully available except at disproportionate cost. This is because the reasons for refusal of benefit are not routinely collected and could be obtained only by examining individually each claim where benefit was refused.

The information I have outlined below is for offices in Taunton, Yeovil and Bridgwater which make up the Benefits Agency Somerset District. The total applications received will include some made under the severe hardship provisions.

Applications from 16 and 17 year olds January—December 1992

1,179	991	188

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report. A copy will also be placed in the Library.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will amend social security regulations so that the lower rate of incomes support is only applicable to those aged 18 to 24 years who live with their parents.

Mr. Burt: We have no plans to do so.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the cost of increasing the level of income support personal allowances for claimants under the age of 25 years to the rate of allowances currently paid to claimants over the age of 25 years.

Mr. Burt: The estimated cost of increasing the rate of income support for single claimants under 25 years to that payable to those aged 25 and over is £460 million in a full year. This figure includes the consequential increases in housing benefit and community charge benefit.

Notes:

1. The figure is rounded to the nearest £10 million.
2. Modelled at 1992-93 prices and benefit levels using data drawn from the 1987-88-89 Family Expenditure Surveys, the 1991 Annual Statistical Enquiry, the 1991 Labour Force Survey and the May 1991 estimate of the Youth Training caseload.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will review the current levels of personal allowances payable to income supportclaimants under the age of 25 years.

Mr. Burt: Income-related benefits are under continuous review. We have no plans to amend the under 25 rate of income support.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will make a statement on the reason for freezing the income support payments for the terminally ill in residential homes for the financial year 1993-94;

(2) if he will list (a) the value of income support payments payable to the terminally ill in residential homes at the date when it was first introduced, (b) the current value and (c) the value recently fixed for 1993, at constant 1992 prices, together with the equivalent figures valorised to take account of rises in the retail price index since the year the terminally ill payment was introduced;

(3) if he will estimate the annual additional money it would cost to uprate the terminally ill income support grant in 1993 by the same amount as the retail prices index.

Mr. Burt: The terminal illness limit was intended to meet the costs of the extra care provided to people who are terminally ill. However, the limit can also be paid where an adjudication officer is satisfied that a home is able to provide this type of care and the claimant is receiving it regardless of the nature of their condition. As a consequence the limit is often helping those who are not terminally ill within the accepted definition of this term.

The real values of the maximum payments to people claiming the terminal illness limit in nursing homes under the supplementary benefit and income support schemes, in constant April 1992 prices, are:

(a) at the time the system of national limits was introduced in April 1985, £291;

(b) at the last uprating in April 1992, £280.

Corresponding figures for the value in April 1993 cannot be calculated until the RPI for April 1993 becomes available.

Had the terminally ill limit been uprated by the same amount as the retail price index, it is estimated that would have cost of the order of £15 million to £20 million in 1993-94. This estimate is subject to considerable uncertainly because of difficulties in projecting reliably the number of people claiming the terminally ill limit, following the introduction of the new arrangements for those entering homes from April 1993.

We considered that an increase to this limit was not the best use of resources which could be better directed at the other income support limits. It was the policy intention to remove the differential between this limit and the basic elderly limit.

From April 1993 responsibility for all patients in hospices falls to the national health service. Funds have been transferred to the national health service as part of the community care package for this new responsibility. In addition £1 million has been transferred from the Social Security budget to the Department of Health for 1993-94 to ensure additional funds are directed specifically to those who are terminally ill. This is an addition to the £1 million transferred for each of the three survey years that was announced the previous year.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will commission research to investigate the adequacy of income support available to claimants under the age of 25 years.

Mr. Burt: There is already a wide range of published information which bears on this issue. We have no plans to commission any further research.

Water Charges

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many representations he has received from income support claimants regarding direct payments to water companies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: In the year ending 31 December 1992 we have received three letters from income support beneficiaries concerning direct payments for water charges.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans there are to introduce a benefit to help with water charges.

Mr. Burt: There are no such plans.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to amend paragraph 7 of schedule 9 of the Claims and Payments Regulations 1987 to allow more people to claim direct water payments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on 14 December 1992 at column 72.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applications under paragraph 7 of schedule 9 of the Claims and Payments Regulations 1987 for direct payments to water companies have been made to each regional DSS office; how many have been turned down; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on 14 December at columns 71-72.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he next expects to meet the chairmen of the regional water companies to discuss direct payments by DSS offices to the water companies.

Mr. Burt: We have no plans to meet the chairman of the regional water companies and have received no requests to do so. Departmental officials hold regular meetings with representatives of the water companies, and have done so recently.

Cohabitation Rule

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many claimants in (a) North Yorkshire and (b) England had a benefit withdrawn because they were thought to be living together with another person in each quarter for the last two years; and what proportion of these claimants subsequently had their benefit reinstated;

(2) how many York claimants had a benefit withdrawn (a) by the York Benefits Agency office and (b) by the agency's area fraud office because they were thought to be living together with another person in each quarter for the last two years; and what proportion of these claimants subsequently had their benefit reinstated.

Miss Widdecombe: I understand from Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency that the information is not available and could be obtained only at a disproportionate cost.

Ex-service Men

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the amount of benefits payable (a) weekly and (b) on any other basis to limbless ex-service men specifically because they have had (i) one, (ii) two, (iii) three and (iv) four limbs amputated; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: The amount of war disablement pension payable in respect of disablement due to service varies according to the degree of disablement which is assessed on a percentage basis, 100 per cent. being the maximum. For amputees the assessment is determined by the site of the amputation. Details are given in the table together with the corresponding weekly and yearly pension rates for privates/non-commissioned officers, and officers respectively.

For multiple amputations, other than those mentioned in the table, a composite assessment of the degree of disablement is made, by reference to the combined effects of such injuries (subject to the maximum of 100 per cent.)

Additional allowances may be awarded in respect of, for instance, unemployability and need for attendance. Mobility supplement (currently £33·70 a week, £1,757 a year) is also available; amputation of both legs at levels which are either through or above the ankle results in automatic entitlement.

Maternity Pay

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what pay will be provided for employees by central Government during the 14 weeks of maternity leave laid down under section 20 of the Trade Union Reform and Employment Rights Bill;

(2) what will the employer's financial responsibility be for maternity pay for the 14 weeks of maternity leave laid down under section 20 of the Trade Union Reform and Employment Rights Bill.

Mr. Scott: Section 20 of the Trade Union Reform and Employment Rights Bill implements the maternity leave provisions of the EC directive on the protection of pregnant women at work. We are considering the directive's implications for maternity benefits and will make an announcement in due course.

Grants and Loans

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many grants and how many loans were made by his Department in Doncaster in 1991-92; how many applications were refused; and what were the total sums involved.

Mr. Scott: Information on the number of grants and loans awarded and refused, by each Benefit Agency district, is in the Library. Information on the amount of grant and loan awards is also in the Library. Information on the amount of grant and loan refusals is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Unemployed People (Benefits)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the total amount of money paid to people who were unemployed and their dependants during 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: The information requested is not available. The estimated total benefit paid to people and their dependants on account of unemployment for the financial year 1991-92 is £7,360 million.

Note:

Benefits for unemployed people include unemployment benefit, income support, housing benefit, community charge benefit and payments from the social fund to unemployed people and their families.

The figure does not include child benefit, one parent benefit, maternity benefits, widows' benefits or any of the sickness or disability benefits to which unemployed people may also be entitled.

ENVIRONMENT

Homelessness, Walsall

Mr. George: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what is the average cost per unit of accommodation in (a) bed-and-breakfast accommodation and (b) hostel accommodation in the west midlands and Walsall;

(2) what was the cost to Walsall metropolitan borough council of providing bed-and-breakfast accommodation for those families officially registered as homeless for each year since 1987.

Mr. Baldry: Walsall has provided no information to the Department on the cost of bed-and-breakfast and hostel accommodation although it does make use of such accommodation to temporarily house homeless households.

Corresponding information for the other authorities in the west midlands is also incomplete and my Department has no estimates.

Mr. George: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many (a) families and (b) single people were accepted by Walsall metropolitan borough authority as homeless in the last year for which figures were available; and what is the estimate for the end of 1992.

Mr. Baldry: Local authorities report, in part E of their quarterly P1 return, the number of households for whom they accept responsibility to secure permanent accommodation under the homelessness provisions of the 1985 Housing Act.

Information for Walsall for the year ending September 1992 is as follows:

	Total households accepted	of which Families and pregnant women	of which Young single people
Walsall	1,956	1,381	90

The Department has no estimates for the end of 1992.

Tarmac Construction

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will make a statement on the risk-sharing scheme agreed with Tarmac Construction as part of the sale of PSA Projects;

(2) how much Tarmac Construction was paid as part of a risk-sharing scheme in addition to the £54·9 million paid as negative liability.

Mr. Redwood: No risk-sharing scheme was agreed with Tarmac Construction as part of the sale of PSA Projects. The full details of the financial aspects of the sale were set out in the answer given to the member for Welwyn, Hatfield (Mr. Evans) on 25 November 1992.

Caravan Sites

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what level of grant aid is available for capital works projects for caravan site provision for the traditional travelling community and for on-site units.

Mr. Baldry: For the current financial year £12·5 million has been allocated in England for capital works by local authorities to provide new gipsy caravan sites and to improve existing sites.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of the traditional travelling people in England will be provided for by (a) existing caravan sites, (b) those planned and (c) those under construction for those people.

Mr. Baldry: The Department does not hold information in the form requested. In January 1992, English local authorities counted a total of 12,777 gipsy caravans: 43 per cent. of these were parked on authorised council sites; a further 23 per cent. were on authorised private caravan sites; the remainder were on unauthorised sites.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a list of the locations or addresses of designated gipsy sites in England; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Plymouth, Devonport (Mr. Jamieson) on 23 November 1992 at column 536.

Housing Subsidies

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing the total amount of housing revenue account subsidy payable to local housing authorities in England in each of the years for 1990-91 to 1992-93, and his estimate for 1993-94, indicating separately the housing and the housing benefit components, and showing the difference between the actual subsidy payable and the amount which would have been payable if housing benefit expenditure on rent rebates had qualified in full for subsidy.

Mr. Baldry: The information requested is shown in the table. The estimated figures for 1993-94 reflect the guideline rents and management and maintenance allowances determined by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on 17 December 1992.

Housing Associations

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he received a copy of the report prepared by Hambros for the Housing Corporation on the private financing of housing associations; and if he will place a copy in the Library.

Mr. Baldry: Hambros presented its report to the Department on 31 January 1992. It contains commercially sensitive information and we have no plans to publish it.

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) when he was informed of the proposals being considered by the Housing Corporation for a new approach to the allocation of housing association grant to developing housing associations; when he received a copy of the white paper "Revised Housing Association Funding Regime"; and if he will place a copy in the Library;

(2) if he will list the housing associations which would qualify for housing association grant under the criteria being considered by the Housing Corporation in the paper "Revised Housing Association Funding Regime", indicating (a) the size of each association, (b) any black and ethnic minority associations, (c) co-operatives and (d) associations which have taken over local authority housing under large-scale voluntary transfer procedures.

Mr. Baldry: I understand that the document to which the hon. Gentleman refers was a draft of a working paper being prepared by officials at the Housing Corporation. Ministers were informed of the existence of the paper when it was referred to in the press. Should there be any change in the corporation's policy towards the funding of housing associations, the corporation will no doubt make appropriate information available.

PSA Building Management

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many non-industrial and industrial staff work for each PSA Building Management division; and in what parliamentary constituencies they work.

Local Government Finance

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out the calculations behind his Department's forecast of the amount to be made available for local authorities arising from the proposed partial release of receipts of council house sales and other capital assets.

Mr. Baldry: As a result of the temporary relaxation of the regulations on the use of capital receipts announced by the Chancellor of the Exchequer in the autumn statement, it is estimated that local authorities in England will have some £1¼ billion of extra usable capital receipts. This estimate was based largely on authorities' own forecasts of their receipts in 1992-93. It was assumed that, had there been no relaxation in the rules, receipts would have continued at broadly the same rate. As a result of the relaxation, authorities will be able to use 100 per cent. of virtually all receipts obtained during the period 13 November 1992 to 31 December 1993. This implies extra usable receipts of about £1¼ billion. It was also assumed that the relaxation would itself stimulate extra disposals, and hence extra receipts, which would not otherwise have arisen in that period. This accounts for the balance of the estimate.

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the revenue raised by local authorities (a) by the sale of capital assets other than council houses and (b) by the sale of council houses, in each financial year since 1979, including information on the current financial year.

Mr. Baldry: The information is as follows:

Local Authority sales of fixed assets: England

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the local authorities which are currently debt free.

Mr. Robin Squire: Returns to the Department indicate that the following authorities were debt free at 31 March 1992:

Bedford
Bracknell
Chiltern
Christchurch
City of London
Dorset
Lincolnshire
Mid Sussex
Ryedale
St. Edmondsbury
Sevenoaks
South Bucks
Suffolk
Swale
West Sussex

Other authorities may have become debt free as result of the commutation of grants for debt charges which took place on 1 October 1992. These are likely to include the following:

Broadland
Bromley
East Cambridgeshire
Hove
Mid Bedfordshire
North Shropshire
South Northamptonshire
South Wight
Tandridge
Torbay
Wansdyke

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are his proposals for the appropriate level of aggregate local authority spending in 1993-94 and the level of central support for that spending.

Mr. Redwood: [pursuant to the reply, 12 November 1993, col. 962]: I am today placing in the Library a table of illustrative relevant notional amounts for each local authority.

Air Pollution

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the reasons for the air pollution alert issued on 30 December 1992; and how many callers took advantage of the departmental 0800-freephone public information line.

Mr. Maclean: Poor air quality was reported in bulletins on 30 December 1992 for London on the basis of nitrogen dioxide levels, derived from vehicle exhaust emissions and for Belfast and Sunderland on the basis of sulphur dioxide levels derived from domestic coal burning. Cold, still weather conditions hampered disperal of the pollutants.

The number of calls registered on the FREEphone number was 191 on 30 December. This increased to 330 on 31 December.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assistance has been afforded to project Silesia in Poland to mitigate air pollution from industry under (a) the PHARE scheme and (b) European bank for reconstruction and development programmes.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I have been asked to reply. Assistance to the environmental sector in Poland under the PHARE programme includes a regional programme in upper Silesia (around £12 million) which encompasses a project on abatement of low-level air pollution emission directed particularly at heating systems. Environmental programmes funded through the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development do not at present include specific assistance to Silesia.

Air Quality Monitoring Station

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will indicate the location within Greenwich of the air quality monitoring station operated by Warren Spring Laboratory, referred to in his answer of 9 June 1992, Official Report, column 154.

Mr. Maclean: The study of nitrogen dioxide levels in 1991 referred to in the earlier answer of 9 June 1992 contained two sites in the Greenwich area. These are located at :

West Greenwich Branch Library, Greenwich High Road, London SE10.

Shrewsbury House, Bushmoor Crescent, Plumstead, London SE18.

Black smoke is also measured annually at these sites.

Community Charge

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the level of collection of the community charge in Essex in each year in which the charge has been in force.

Mr. Robin Squire: The latest information available to the Department on the level of collection of the community charge for the local authorities in the county of Essex is as follows:

Vehicle Emissions

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what further information has subsequently become available on pollution attributable to vehicle emissions in the Greenwich area, in particular from the monitoring of nitrogen oxide and black smoke emissions, since his answer of 9 June 1992, Official Report, column 154.

Mr. Maclean: Since the earlier answer of 9 June 1992 no further data are available on nitrogen oxides. For black smoke, a further year's data have been obtained from the national monitoring network, for two sites in the Greenwich area. The annual average black smoke concentrations (in microgrammes per cubic metre) for the last five years are as follows:

1988-89	14	11
1989-90	18	9
1990-91	20	11
1991-92	12	9

Site 1 is at West Greenwich branch library, Greenwich High road, London SE10; site 2 is at Shrewsbury house, Bushmoor crescent, Plumstead, London SE18.

Council Tax

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he is making of the percentage levels of collection by local authorities of the council tax in its first year.

Mr. Robin Squire: The council tax should be significantly easier to collect than the community charge, though community charge collection levels have improved in 1992-93 with authorities collecting on average 50 per cent. of their budgeted yield by the end of September. We shall be monitoring collection of the council tax in 1993-94.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment in what circumstances tenants under the age of 18 years in council properties and living alone are required to pay council tax.

Mr. Robin Squire: Where all the people living in a council property are under 18, the local authority will be liable for the council tax, subject to a discount of 50 per cent.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many A band council tax valued properties have been identified for each local authority in England.

Mr. Robin Squire: I am arranging for the available information to be placed in the Library of the House.

Rented Properties

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing the total number of homes for renting by housing associations which have been approved by the Housing Corporation under its approved development programme in each of the years for 1987-88 to 1992-93, and his estimate of approvals in financial year 1993-94.

Mr. Baldry: The total number of homes for renting approved under the Housing Corporation's approved development programme since 1987-88, and the Housing Corporation's estimates for 1992-93 and 1993-94, are as follows:

	Number
1987-88	16,518
1988-89	19,959
1989-90	16,198
1990-91	13,751
1991-92	43,583

The reduction in approvals in 1993-94 is partly the result of the corporation's response to requests from housing associations for a higher proportion of cash-backing for projects in the year in which they are approved.

In addition to the provision of new homes for rent, the corporation also funds tenants incentive (TIS) grants and do-it-yourself home ownership (DIYSO) schemes which release existing rental accommodation for reletting to the homeless. All of TIS and 60 per cent. of DIYSO is targeted in this way. The figures for TIS and DIYSO are as follows:

	TIS	DIYSO
1990-91	1,654	—
1991-92	3,241	116
1992-93	3,400	3,800
1993-94	5,400	4,400

In addition to the above figures, the housing market package announced in the Chancellor's autumn statement is expected to produce over 17,000 homes for rent and up to 2,000 TIS grants.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the Housing Corporation's rented housing programme by London borough for each year since 1964 in actual prices and in 1993 prices.

Mr. Baldry: This information cannot be provided other than at disproportionate cost.

Victoria Street Premises

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 27 October 1992, Official Report, columns 539-40, what has been the total cost incurred, including rent, insurance, maintenance and security, on the former DTI premises in Victoria street, between the date they were vacated in September 1991 and the present; when he expects the building contract on these premises to commence; and what is his estimate of the costs to be met for the duration of the building contract.

Mr. Baldry: In my answer of 27 October last at column 539-40, I advised that the property was vacated in September 1991 and that the weekly cost of holding it vacant is £40,000. It is a relatively simple calculation to determine that this totals £2·6 million to the end of 1992.

Negotiations have still to be finalised and it is not possible to say when the building contract will commence or what the costs will be during the programme of 24 months for the refurbishment.

Rates

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the percentage level of collection of general rates in Essex in the last three years before the community charge system was introduced.

Mr. Robin Squire: The information requested is not available.

Poll Tax Debts

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to allow councils to write off poll tax debts after April 1992 for people in hardship and where the cost of recovery exceeds the money owing or likely to be collected; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: No. It is for local authorities to decide their own policies on write-offs in line with good financial practice and with the approval of their external auditor.

Opencast Mining

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those planning decisions relating to opencast mining applications in Northumberland and Durham which have been called in by his Department in each of the last five years for the Secretary of State's ruling, indicating in each case whether premission was given or refused.

Mr. Baldry: No opencast coal mining applications in Northumberland and Durham have been called in by my Department in the last five years.

Bed-and-breakfast Accommodation

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many homeless families are currently living in bed-and-breakfast accommodation for each housing authority together with the average cost per week per family for each housing authority area.

Mr. Baldry: Information on homeless households who were being dealt with under the homelessness provisions of the Housing Act 1985 and who were placed in bed-and-breakfast accommodation can be found in "Local authorities' action under the homelessness provisions of the 1985 Housing Act. England. Results for the third quarter of 1992. Supplementary Table", a copy of which is in the Library.

Annual costs for bed-and-breakfast accommodation used, together with the related numbers of household days provided, for authorities which provided the information to the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy (CIPFA), are published by CIPFA in its "Homelessness Statistics 1990-91 Actuals", a copy of which is also in the Library.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate the change in the number of families housed by local authority housing departments in bed-and-breakfast accommodation over the next 12 months.

Mr. Baldry: The Department does not make such estimates.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to reduce the number of families in bed-and-breakfast accommodation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: The Government encourage local authorities to seek alternatives to bed-and-breakfast hotels wherever possible when they place homeless families in temporary accommodation. At 30 September 1992 the use of bed-and-breakfast accommodation in England was 23 per cent. lower than a year earlier. New concessions on the arrangements for financing short-term leasing announced by my hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Planning on 21 December will extend the stock of temporary accommodation available for housing homeless families.

Residential Homes

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 29 October 1992, Official Report, column 850, if he is now in a position to announce if residential homes will be totally exempt from the council tax; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: We have considered representations from care homes about council tax and considered the arguments put forward by the Joint Care Committee. We believe it is right that care homes should contribute towards the many local services from which they benefit. However, as I explained in my answer to the hon. Member for Dulwich (Ms. Jowell) 30 November 1992 at column 13, council tax bills for care homes will generally be modest.

Urban Programme

Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many urban programme funded economic development projects will end in each of the financial years 1992-93, 1993-94, 1994-95 and 1995-96; what is the financial value of these projects in each year; and what are the figures in each case for (a) those targeted at ethnic minority communities and (b) those run by voluntary organisations.

Mr. Robin Squire: This information can only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many urban programme projects are scheduled to end in the financial years 1992-93, 1993-94, 1994-95 and 1995-96; what is the financial value of these projects in each year; and what are the figures in each case for (a) those targeted at ethnic minority communities and (b) those run by voluntary organisations;

(2) how many urban programme funded environmental projects will end in each of the financial years 1992-93, 1993-94, 1994-95 and 1995-96; what is the financial value of these projects in each year; and what are the figures in each case for (a) those targeted at ethnic minority communities and (b) those run by voluntary organisations.

Mr. Robin Squire: This information can only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment his Department has made of the effect of changes in urban programme funding on urban wildlife projects.

Mr. Robin Squire: Urban wildlife and other projects already approved for three or four years will continue to be funded as urban programme commitments. There are a number of other sources of funding for urban wildlife projects.

Local Government Commission

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table of the names of consultants employed by local authorities in making proposals to the Local Government Commission, the authority that employs them and the cost to the local authority.

Mr. Robin Squire: This is a matter for individual local authorities.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total cost to the Exchequer in 1992-93 of the Local Government Commission; what estimates he has for future costs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: The cost of the Local Government Commission for 1992-93 is estimated at £2·630 million, and at £3·259 million, £3·300 million and £3·439 million for the three following years.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many people are employed by the Local Government Commission; what is the cost to the Exchequer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: The Local Government Commission currently has 28 staff in post and estimates its annual expenditure on pay and related costs will be of the order of £0·9 million for 1993-94.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what opinion polling has been conducted by the Local Government Commission to ascertain the popularity of proposed boundaries; what is the total cost; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: This is a matter for the Local Government Commission and I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Housing Corporation

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list the expenditure by the Housing Corporation on administration and accommodation in each year since 1964;

(2) how many staff were employed by the Housing Corporation in each year since 1964.

Mr. Baldry: The information requested is as follows:

1965	4·9	16·0	—

1992	4,500·0	20,700·0	734

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the proposed percentage change in the Housing Corporation's annual development programme for rented housing for 1993-94 compared with the approval development programme for 1992-93.

Mr. Baldry: The figures are as follows:

1992-93	1,584

In addition to the annual development programme for 1992-93, £577 million was allocated to the Housing Corporation in the Chancellor's autumn statement to enable housing associations to purchase new, empty and repossessed properties by 31 March 1993, providing around 17,000 extra units of social housing.

Under this housing market package, £20 million has also been provided to the corporation this year for additional tenants' incentive scheme grants to housing association tenants. This will enable up to 2,000 new first-time buyers to enter the housing market, releasing the same number of units of social housing for reletting.

Land Designation

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much land nationally, and in London, is designated for office development, for industrial development and for housing development.

Mr. Baldry: In 1990-91 local planning authorities reported having 33,600 hectares of land with outstanding planning permission for private housing development. This information is contained in the Department's publication "Development Control Statistics: England, 1990-91", which is available in the Library.

The Department does not collect information on land designated for public housing, for office development or for industrial development.

Local Authority Accommodation

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many families were living in local authority accommodation in each year since 1979.

Mr. Baldry: The available estimates for numbers of families living in local authority accommodation in England are:

Year	Million
1984	2·99
1991	2·30

The figures are from labour force survey housing trailers and families are defined as couple households with or without children, and lone parent households. The labour force survey is a sample survey and so the estimates are subject to sampling error.

Homelessness

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment for how many households local authorities accepted responsibility for securing permanent accommodation under the homeless provisions of the Housing (Homeless Persons) Act 1977 in each year since 1979.

Mr. Baldry: The information for local authorities in England is as follows:

Year	Households accepted
1979	55,530
1980	60,400
1981	66,990
1982	71,620
1983	75,470
1984	80,500
1985	91,010
1986	100,490
1987	109,170
1988	113,770
1989	122,180

A new reporting system was introduced for non-metropolitan districts from the fourth quarter of 1980 and for the other authorities from the third quarter of 1982. As a result, figures for 1979 to 1982 are not strictly comparable with those for later periods.

From the second quarter of 1991 the definition of acceptances was altered to exclude intentionally homeless and all the figures have been adjusted to the new basis.

Empty Properties

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to allow local authorities to use money from accumulated capital receipts from sale of council properties for purchase and renovation of empty properties.

Mr. Baldry: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced in his autumn statement a significant relaxation of the rules governing the use of local authorities of capital receipts. Authorities are thus able to spend 100 per cent. of almost all capital receipts received between 13 November 1992 and 31 December 1993. This represents a substantial increase in authorities' spending power.

The Government have no plans to allow authorities to spend accumulated receipts. These receipts are available to redeem debt and thus to reduce the cost of that debt. Also, many authorities have used these resources in this way, rather than accumulating the receipts, and they should not be disadvantaged for having followed Government policy.

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many empty privately-owned properties there were in each year since 1979.

Mr. Baldry: Estimates of empty private dwellings reported by English local authorities in their annual housing investment programme (HIP1) returns are as follows:

Year	Empty private properties (thousands)
1979	485
1980	504
1981	503
1982	539
1983	541
1984	548
1985	545
1986	552
1987	570
1988	580
1989	589
1990	587
1991	638
1992	706

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many local authority properties were sold in each year since 1979.

Mr. Baldry: Details of sales and transfers of local authority dwellings in England in the years 1979 to 1991 are given in the table.

	To owner occupiers	To housing associations[1]	Other sales and transfers[1]
1979	40,533	—	—

[1] Includes block transfers to housing associations and the private sector. Transfers to housing action trusts are excluded.
[2] Provisional.

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of housing associations he expects to be engaged on grant-aided development programmes in 1994-95 and 1995-96.

Mr. Baldry: These are matters which will be determined by the nature of bids put forward by housing associations themselves and by the detailed criteria applied by the Housing Corporation in assessing those bids. The corporation's decisions on allocations for 1994-95 will not be finalised until the early part of 1994.

Councillors

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will consider introducing legislation to prohibit qualification for local election candidacy for those whose principal or only work in the relevant district is as sitting councillors.

Mr. Robin Squire: We are currently considering the position in the light of the recent Court of Appeal judgment.

London Docklands Development Corporation

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the social affairs and social housing budget of the London Docklands development corporation for each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Robin Squire: The London Docklands development corporation's actual expenditure on these two items is given in the table. In 1992-93, the corporation has budgeted £6 million for social housing and £3 million for social affairs.

Fulmer Main Drainage

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 30 October, Official Report, column 864, when he now expects to make a decision on Fulmer main drainage.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 11 December 1992]: I have written to my hon. Friend.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of the low-level radioactive waste destined for the planned Nirex depository will originate from the reprocessing of imported foreign nuclear fuel.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 11 January 1993]: I understand that the proportion of low-level radioactive waste (LLW) originating from the reprocessing of foreign spent fuel, during the period 2007-2018, is predicted to be 5 per cent. of the total United Kingdom LLW arisings in that period. This waste could be returned to the country of origin or, if BNFL's request to substitute equivalent waste is accepted, disposed of either to the existing Drigg LLW disposal site or in the Nirex deep disposal facility.

Departmental Property

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list (a) the total number of residential properties owned by his Department, (b) the number of such properties which are empty and (c), (b) as a percentage of (a).

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 11 January 1993]: Property Holdings, part of the Department of the Environment, owns and manages 93 residential properties, as distinct from those held and managed by other Departments as part of their departmental estate. Of this total, 17 (18·3 per cent.) are empty.

Government Car Service

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans the Government have to privatise or franchise the administration of the Government car service, wholly or in part.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 13 January 1993]: The Government car service is planning to market test its accounts support and office cleaning services in 1993.

Waste Disposal

Mr. Alison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what scope exists for his intervention, other than on appeal from an applicant, to consider important environmental issues raised by an individual application for a waste disposal licence, such as those arising from the Gale Common stage II ash disposal application, details of which have been referred to him.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 14 January 1993]: The Control of Pollution Act 1974 provides that waste disposal operations may be carried out only in accordance with a licence issued by a waste regulation authority. Before a licence is issued, an authority must consult the National Rivers Authority. In the event of disagreement between the regulation authority and the National Rivers Authority, either party may refer the matter to the Secretary of State. The Secretary of State may also become involved in a licensing issue if the matter is referred to him by an applicant for a licence, or the holder of a licence, on appeal.

These arrangements will continue when the present provisions in the 1974 Act are replaced by the licensing provisions of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 on 1 April this year. A waste regulation authority will have to be satisfied that any applicant for a waste management licence is a fit and proper person. Grounds for rejecting a licence have been widened to include the prevention of pollution of the environment and serious detriment to the amenities of the locality. In addition, the 1990 Act provides that the Secretary of State may direct a waste regulation authority as to the terms and conditions to be included in a licence for which an application has been made to an authority.

The Secretary of State is aware of local concerns about the Gale Common stage II site and has asked the waste regulation authority to consider them before any licence is issued.

Nitrogen Dioxide Levels

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many times in 1992 nitrogen dioxide levels in London exceeded the safety limits; and how many testing sites currently operate in Greater London.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 15 January 1993]: The limit value in the EC directive on nitrogen dioxide (85/203/EEC) was not exceeded at any of the sites in London in 1992. There are currently two sites monitoring for compliance with the EC directive at Bridge place, Victoria and in Warwick road, Earl's Court. Two other sites also measure nitrogen dioxide in London. These are at Russell square, Bloomsbury, which forms part of the recently established enhanced monitoring network, and at Cromwell road, Kensington, a kerbside site on a busy road.

The EC directive contains two non-mandatory guide values and in 1992, on the basis of provisional data, both were exceeded at three sites, with only one of the guide values exceeded at the Warwick road (Earl's Court) site.

Press Office

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many staff were employed by his Department's press office in each year since 1979.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 15 January 1993]: The staff in post for the information directorate since 1 April 1989 are as follows:

	Number
1 April 1989	47
1 April 1990	43
1 April 1991	45
1 April 1992	43

Before 1989, the information directorate of this Department was part of the common services of DOE and Department of Transport and separate figures for the resources for each Department are not available. Global information for this period is published each year in the form of a management information system for Ministers (MINIS) dating back to 1979 and is available in the House of Commons Library.

Street Lighting

Ms. Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what studies his Department has carried out into the effectiveness at crime prevention of the new white street lights relative to conventional sodium yellow lights; and if he will publish the results.

Mr. Jack: I have been asked to reply.

The most recent Home Office research on the relationship between street lighting and crime and the fear of crime was published in August 1991 (Crime Prevention Unit Paper, 28, "The Influence of the Street Lighting on Crime and Fear of Crime" and CPU Paper, 29, "The Effect of Better Street Lighting on Crime and Fear: a Review"). Copies of both are in the Library of the House. These studies did not specifically examine the differential effects on crime of white and yellow street lights.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Children's Play

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what effect he expects his decision to withdraw central support for the children's play and recreation unit to have on research currently being undertaken in Nottingham; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: The Sports Council will be taking over direct responsibility for a number of the play unit's functions after 31 March 1993. I am not aware that this will effect any research currently being undertaken in Nottingham.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list the representations he has received concerning future funding for the children's play and recreation unit.

Mr. Brooke: Between 3 December 1992, when I made my announcement about future funding for the national children's play and recreation unit (Official Report, column 325) and 15 January 1993, my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State and I have received 21 letters from hon. Members, 20 from local authorities, 24 from voluntary sector play organisations, eight from other organisations and nine from members of the public.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what money will be available from grant aid through the Sports Council in 1993-94 for children's play.

Mr. Brooke: The Sports Council has agreed to allocate £220,000 to children's play in 1993-94. Further discussions are now taking place between my Department and the council on this basis.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what discussions he has had to ensure that there is a national strategy for children's play.

Mr. Brooke: None. Decisions on play provision are best taken at local level.

Mr. Brooke: I meet the chairman of the Sports Council from time to time to discuss issues of mutual interest and look to the council for advice on all sports-related issues. The council's advice is that both weight lifting and weight training are acceptable for those under 18 provided that they are carried out in a controlled environment under the supervision of suitably qualified coaches.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Legal Aid

Mr. Byers: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department which are the three legal aid area boards with the highest and lowest grant rates in percentage terms in respect of legal aid applications made to magistrates courts by defendants charged with (a) causing actual bodily harm, (b) shoplifting, (c) drink-driving, (d) criminal damage and (e) possession of an offensive weapon; and what was the percentage in each case.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The information is not available in the form requested. Between April 1991 and March 1992, the area committees of the Legal Aid Board with the highest approval rates in respect of criminal legal aid were: East Midlands (91·7 per cent.), South Western (82·1 per cent.) and North Western (70·7 per cent.). The three area committees with the lowest approval rates were: Northern (46·5 per cent.), Merseyside (47 per cent.) and West Midlands (49·4 per cent.). Renewed applications may also be made to the courts. The area committees deal only with applications which have previously been rejected by the courts. Statistics reflecting the nature of the offence are not kept.

Law Students

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many complaints the Lord Chancellor has received from students who have been failed on the Bar vocational course; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: As of 11 January 1992 the Lord Chancellor had received four representations from students.

The Lord Chancellor takes a keen interest in legal education and equality of opportunity in the profession. However, the independence of the legal profession precludes him from intervening in the administration of the Bar vocational examination by the Council for Legal Education. The Commission for Racial Equality is shortly to conduct an investigation into the results, with which the Council for Legal Education will be co-operating fully. In addition, the Lord Chancellor's advisory committee on legal education and conduct, which is a statutory body independent of the Lord Chancellor's Department, has received 17 representations and will be addressing this question as part of its review of legal education.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what review the Lord Chancellor has undertaken of the number of complaints from students dissatisfied with the way the Council of Legal Education has been conducting the course and its assessment procedures.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The legal profession is independent of Government and it would therefore not be appropriate for the Lord Chancellor to conduct any such review.

The Lord Chancellor's advisory committee on legal education and conduct, which was established by the Courts and Legal Services Act 1990 as an independent body, has a duty to assist in the maintenance and development of standards in legal education, and has to have regard to the desirability of equality of opportunity when doing so. The committee is obliged under the Act to keep legal education and training under review; it launched a major review on 25 November 1992, which will address this question among others. However, the statutory independence of the committee precludes the Lord Chancellor from directing how it should discharge its duties.

Trade Union Reform and Employment Rights Bill

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Prime Minister what representations he has received on the Trade Union Reform and Employment Rights Bill.

The Prime Minister: I have received a number of representations since the Bill was published on 5 November.

The Bill will increase the rights of trade union members, enhance the rights of individual employees, provide new protection for the community against the effects of unlawful industrial action, and improve the operation of the labour market.

Electrical Engineering

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Prime Minister (1) if he will make a statement on Government support for electrical engineering;

(2) what steps the Government have taken to reward excellence in the field of electrical engineering.

The Prime Minister: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade has set up sectoral divisions, including electrical engineering, leading to a closer dialogue to promote the recognition and importance of electrical engineering within the United Kingdom economy. The Government acknowledge the importance of electrical engineering and fully support the industry through a range of assistance that includes overseas trade, research and development, regional support and promoting awareness.

Excellence in the industry is acknowledged through the Queen's awards including those for technology and exports, where electrical engineering is well represented. Additionally there are, of course, a number of people of eminence in the field of electrical engineering whose achievements have been recognised in the usual ways.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prison Visits

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what checks are make by the prison service on identity, name and address of people visiting convicted prisoners; how it establishes the purpose of each visit; and how it records this information.

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much was spent on advertising electoral registration in North Tyneside, Wansbeck and Blyth Valley in each year since 1990, and how much will be spent in the current year.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The amount spent by the Government on electoral registration advertising in England and Wales in each year since 1990 was as follows. Figures are rounded to the nearest £1,000.

Electoral registration advertising

Year	£'000
1990	923,000
1992	617,000

The proportion of this total spent in each individual district council area is not available centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The 1993 budget figure is not yet available.

Arms Amnesty

Mr. James Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will sanction a further arms amnesty in Hampshire on the lines of the one held in 1988 to cover firearms, knives and other weapons.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Firearms amnesties require the agreement of the Attorney-General not to bring prosecutions for certain offences. They are, therefore, exceptional events which are held only on a national basis.

No such agreement is required in respect of knives and other offensive weapons. It is, therefore, open to individual police forces to hold a campaign for the surrender of such items at any time.

Correspondence

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will now reply to the letter sent to his Minister of State on 9 November 1992 by the hon. Member for Gower regarding a constituent residing in Gorseinon, Swansea.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I wrote to the hon. Member on 12 January.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he received the decision of the European Parliamentary Commission on electoral systems; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I have received no such decision.

Police Authorities

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for each police authority the approved establishment and budget for 1992-93 and for 1993-94.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information requested is set out in the table. Information on 1993-94 budgets is not available.

KPMG Management Consultants

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the contracts awarded by his Department to KPMG Management Consultants over the past 12 months.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: KPMG Management Consultants have been awarded one contract by my Department over the past 12 months—it is a contract to review the work and organisation of the Police National Computer Organisation.

Prison Transfers

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what proportion of those entitled to apply for temporary transfers from prisons in Britain to Northern Ireland have actually applied, distinguishing between (a) loyalist prisoners, (b) republican prisoners, (c) men and (d) women;

(2) how many applications have been received for transfers from prisons in Britain to Northern Ireland, from (a) loyalist prisoners, (b) republican prisoners, (c) men and (d) women; and how many of each have been accepted.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Revised criteria governing transfers between United Kingdom jurisdictions were announced on 23 November 1992. It is open to any prisoner to make a request for such a transfer; 39 male and two female prisoners who were previously known to have expressed an interest in transferring to Northern Ireland have been specifically invited to submit requests for transfer under these criteria.

Of these, 15 male prisoners and two female prisoners have submitted requests for permanent or extended temporary transfer which are under consideration. Two male prisoners have requested permanent transfers only.

Statistics on the political background of prisoners seeking transfers to Northern Ireland are not kept.

Criminal Injuries Compensation

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many payments were made to individuals by the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board for each year since 1979;

(2) what was the total sum paid to victims of crime by the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board for each year since 1979 (a) in current prices and (b) in 1979 prices.

Mr. Jack: The information requested is given in the table. It has been taken from CICB's published annual reports, copies of which are held in the Library of the House. Revaluation of the compensation paid in year to current and to 1979 prices has been made using the GDP deflator.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information is not available centrally in the form requested. However, the psychiatric profile study of the sentenced population carried out by Professor John Gunn and published in October 1992 estimated the prevalence of psychiatric disorders as 38·8 per cent. of which substance dependency or abuse accounted for 19·6 per cent.

Press (Unauthorised Disclosures)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what disciplinary action has been taken against officials in his Department (a) generally and (b) in the press office for unauthorised disclosures to the press in the last 12 months.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: No Home Office official, either generally or in the press office, has been subject to disciplinary action for unauthorised disclosures to the press in the last 12 months.

Citizenship Applications

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 9 December to the hon. Member for Sedgefield (Mr. Blair), Official Report, column 662-64, if he will make a statement on his review of the procedure for handling inquiries on individual citizenship applications.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Rochdale (Ms. Lynne) on 14 January at columns 793-94, to which I have nothing to add.

Betting Offices

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to extend the evening opening hours of licensed betting offices.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: In October 1991, the Government issued a consultation document inviting the views of all interested parties on whether licensed betting offices should be open in the evening and, if so, at what times. Over 800 representations and a number of petitions have since been received. The views expressed fully reflected the arguments for and against evening opening. In the light of that consultation process, I have decided that evening opening should be allowed until 10 pm on Mondays to Saturdays between April and August inclusive.

Government policy on gambling is that there should be adequate properly regulated facilities available for those who wish to gamble. It is clear that the growth in the number of evening horseraces has created increased consumer demand for evening opening of licensed betting offices during the summer months. In those circumstances, the Government believe that there are no public interest or policy reasons to object to evening opening.

I know that many bookmakers, their staff and the greyhound racing industry are concerned about the effect which evening opening may have on them. I have taken account of those concerns and I believe that the approach now proposed achieves a sensible and reasonable balance between the various interests.

My decision is broadly in line with the recommendations of the Home Affairs Select Committee of the House of Commons following its inquiries into the funding of horseracing and greyhound racing. However, as some horseraces are run after 9 pm and to allow time for payment of any winnings, I propose that the latest closing time should be 10 pm rather than the 9 pm recommended by the Committee. This will be a standard latest closing time throughout April to August. A variable closing time, perhaps linked to the last horserace, would have created enforcement difficulties.

The Government are committed to removing unnecessary regulations on business and extending consumer choice where possible. Evening opening represents a further important measure of deregulation and will give bookmakers greater freedom to adjust their opening hours to suit the needs of their customers.

The opening hours of licensed betting offices are prescribed by regulation, subject to the negative resolution procedure. I have today laid an order before parliament which will permit evening opening with effect from 1 April 1993. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland will lay a similar order to permit the same evening opening hours in Scotland.

Prevention of Terrorism

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how observations from interested persons or organisations should be submitted for consideration by Lord Colville in his report on the operation in 1992 of the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Written observations should be submitted to Lord Colville c/o Room 647, Home Office, 50 Queen Anne's Gate, London SW1H 9AT no later than Friday 5 February 1993.

Metropolitan Police Property

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 11 January, Official Report, column 601, if he will list the total number of residential properties owned by the Metropolitan police and the number and percentage of the total of these which are empty.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 15 January 1993]: The information requested is contained in the table:

Type of property	Number in MPS estate	Vacant	Percentage	Available for disposal	Percentage
Houses	1,271	68	5·3	45	3·5
Flats	1,215	196	16·0	151	12·4
Section houses	26	3	11·5	1	3·8
Bed spaces in section houses	2,981	714	23·9	373	12·5

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

The Queen (Income)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what income Her Majesty the Queen receives in right of her Duchy of Lancaster; whether it is liable to income tax; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: Payments are made to the Keeper of the Privy Purse from revenues of the Duchy of Lancaster for Her Majesty's use. The sovereign is entitled to these revenues in right of her Duchy of Lancaster.

Payments to the privy purse are detailed in the Duchy accounts which are placed in the Library of the House. In the year to 29 September 1991 the sum of £3,100,000 was paid to the privy purse. Duchy accounts for 1992 will be in the Library by mid-February.

Duchy revenues are not subject to income tax. On the tax question I have nothing to add to the statement made by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 26 November 1992, at column 982.

Sir Charles Powell

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what steps were taken under the rules relating to business appointments for former civil servants in connection with the appointment of Sir Charles Powell as a director of Jardine Matheson.

Mr. Jackson: Staff at Sir Charles Powell's grade are required to seek approval for any paid outside appointment they wish to accept within two years of leaving the civil service. Applications are referred to the head of the home civil service, who advises the appropriate departmental Minister whether any conditions should be applied. Individual applications are treated in confidence.

NATIONAL FINANCE

National Insurance

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the estimated full-year revenue effect in 1992-93 and 1993-94 of (a) abolishing the upper earnings limit for employee's national insurance contributions; (b) allowing personal allowances against such contributions and (c) both (a) and (b).

Mr. Dorrell: The estimated effects in a full year are shown in the table. For (b) and (c) it has been assumed that the levels of earnings used to calculate National Insurance contributions are gross earnings less the personal allowance. For the 1993-94 calculations, personal allowances have been increased by the autumn statement assumption of 3·25 per cent. over 1992-93 levels. No account has been taken of possible behavioural changes which might result from the measures.

	Cost(—)/Yield(+) 1992-93 £ million	1993-94 £ million
(a) Abolishing the upper earnings limit for employees national insurance contributions	2,700	2,900
(b) Allowing personal allowances against employees' national insurance contributions	−5,100	−5,300
(c) Part b with upper earnings limit for employee's national insurance contribution abolished	−3,500	−3,500

Whisky

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the consumption and the revenue elasticities of duty on whisky and whiskey.

Sir John Cope: We do not have details of elasticities for individual spirits products. We estimate that the price elasticity of demand for spirits consumption is −1·1. The impact of changes in the duty rate on consumption, and hence revenue, will depend on the duty content of the retail price.

ECOFIN Council

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proposals he plans to put forward at the ECOFIN Council in Brussels on 18 January.

Mr. Nelson: The Council will discuss the economic situation in the Community as part of its regular exercises in multilateral surveillance and the package of measures to promote economic recovery which was agreed at the European Council in Edinburgh. I have no plans to put forward other proposals.

Income Tax

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people are employed by his Departments specifically to investigate avoidance of income tax.

Mr. Dorrell: In excess of 1,000 staff in the Inland Revenue are involved in the investigation of errors, differences of legal interpretation and avoidance which they discover in the tax returns and accounts of individuals and trusts. Information is not available about the proportion of their time which is spent specifically investigating avoidance of income tax. The figure given excludes those investigating tax evasion.

Trading Expenses

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the Government's present policy with regard to the setting of pre-production expenses against tax liability as they are incurred; and what proposals he has to allow this in all areas of economic activity.

Mr. Dorrell: When calculating trading profits for tax purposes, revenue expenditure incurred in the five years before a trade commences is treated as if incurred when the trade starts, provided the expenditure would have qualified as a deduction had the trade commenced. Qualifying capital expenditure which is incurred for the purposes of a trade prior to its commencement is also deemed to have been incurred on the first day of trade.

These are general rules which apply to all trades.

Business Expansion Scheme

Mr. Battle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was (a) the total amount invested in the business expansion scheme for each year since the scheme's inception, (b) the amount invested in private rented housing, for each year since the scheme was extended to housing, (c) the total cost of tax relief for each year and (d) the amount of tax relief in respect of investment in private rented housing, for each year from 1988-89 to 1992-93.

Mr. Dorrell: The latest estimates for years up to 1991-92 were given in my reply on 21 October 1992, Official Report, columns 313-14. Estimates for 1992-93 are not yet available.

Public Expenditure

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement indicating the nature of the over-provision in respect of Wales indicated in footnote 2 to table 2B.3 and footnote 2 to table 2B.4 in the 1992 "Autumn Statement".

Mr. Portillo: The sums relate to the correction of a miscalculation of housing revenue account subsidy for Wales in the 1991 public expenditure survey.

Invalidity Benefit

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the Government intend to tax invalidity benefits.

Mr. Dorrell: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Garscadden (Mr. Dewar) on 19 October 1992, Official Report, col. 190.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the estimated yield from taxing invalidity benefits.

Mr. Dorrell: Available information is given in my reply to the hon. Members for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) and for Glasgow, Garscadden (Mr. Dewar) on 27 October 1992, at column 572.

Exchange Rates

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the average value of the pound sterling in European currency units in each year since 1987.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 15 January 1993]: The average annual value of the pound sterling in European currency units since 1987 is as follows:

	ECU/£ [1]
1987	1·4200
1988	1·5060
1989	1·4886
1990	1·4000
1991	1·4284
1992	1·3620

[1] Based on market exchange rates.

Press Office

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many staff were employed by his Department's press office in each year since 1979.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 15 January 1993]: The number of press and public relations staff employed in my Department was as follows:

	Staff
1986-87	10
1987-88	10
1988-89	10
1989-90	10
1990-91	10
1991-92	9

Information for the years 1979-85 could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Inland Revenue

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much has been spent up to 31 December 1992 on preparation for privatisation of parts and the whole of the Inland Revenue's operation.

Mr. Dorrell: In the present financial year, the costs to date of market testing activities in the Inland Revenue are around £1·3 million. Estimates of the costs for earlier years are not readily available, but would be much smaller.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement outlining Her Majesty's Government's detailed plans for reform of the Inland Revenue and the time scale over which any changes are expected to occur.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 18 January 1993]: The Revenue's change programme was first announced by the Chancellor in his statement of 6 March 1992 Official Report, column 323-25, and further details appeared in the Board of Inland Revenue's report for the year ending 31 March 1992 (Cm. 2086) and the first report of the citizens charter (Cm. 2101). The Revenue's management plan, due for publication in the spring, will set out the Department's main aims and objectives over the period to 1996-97.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate Her Majesty's Government have made of the reduction in the number of smaller and more rural Inland Revenue offices in the event of changes being made in the way the Inland Revenue conducts its duties.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 18 January 1993]: The Inland Revenue is reviewing the organisation and structure of its local offices with the aim of increasing the quality of service to taxpayers and the efficiency of the operations. Any changes would take place over a number of years, following consultation with staff, and no estimate has yet been made of the number of smaller and more rural offices needed.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what consideration has been given to the need to maintain the guarantee of confidentiality in the course of any changes in the way the work of the Inland Revenue is conducted.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 18 January 1993]: We recognise the importance of this issue. If work is contracted out, there are two safeguards. The first is that all relevant contracts contain provisions obliging contractors to make all necessary arrangements to protect the privacy of personal information. The second is that contractors and their employees are subject, in the same way as Revenue employees, to the criminal sanctions—a fine, or imprisonment, or both—provided by section 182 of the Finance Act 1989, for unauthorised disclosure of personal tax information.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what representations he has received on the Government's intention to subject the work currently undertaken by the Inland Revenue to market testing;

(2) what consultations he has had with interested parties regarding plans to introduce market testing to the work currently undertaken by the Inland Revenue.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 18 January 1993]: We have received a number of representations about the market testing of services in the Inland Revenue; officials have held discussions with trade unions representing staff in the Department and with other interested parties.

Value Added Tax

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement outlining the discretionary powers available to local Customs and Excise officers; and what steps he takes to monitor the differences in enforcement and interpretation of VAT rules from one part of the country to another.

Sir John Cope [holding answer 18 January 1993]: Local VAT officers have certain limited discretionary powers in relation to tax control, compliance and debt management. These are contained primarily in the Customs and Excise Management Act 1979, the VAT Act 1983 and the Finance Act 1985.

The care and maintenance of VAT is the statutory responsibility of the Commissioners of Customs and Excise. This includes ensuring consistency of treatment for all taxpayers and is achieved by giving local VAT officers specialist training and written guidance from headquarters. The application of this guidance is carefully monitored both locally and centrally. Departmental systems and procedures are also subject to overview by Customs and Excise's own internal auditors and by the National Audit Office.

Dr. Marek: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the effect on the annual retail prices index of a standard rate of VAT imposed on (a) newspapers, books and periodicals, (b) children's clothes, (c) domestic fuel and (d) public transport.

Sir John Cope [holding answer 18 January 1993]: The table gives our current estimate of the impact on the RPI of applying the standard rate of VAT to the categories outlined.

Category	Percentage increase in RPI
Newspapers, books and magazines	0·3
Children's clothes	0·2
Domestic fuel	0·8
Public transport	0·2

Petroleum Revenue Tax

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what he expects petroleum revenue tax to produce for the Exchequer in the current and each of the next three financial years; and if he will make it his policy to reduce it in cases where companies invest in refurbishment of existing offshore gas and oil installations in order to help the fabrication industry; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Cope [holding answer 18 January 1993]: The revenue raised by petroleum revenue tax in 1992-93 was estimated at £100 million in the autumn statement. It has been the practice to include outturn estimates, and a coming year petroleum revenue tax forecast, in the "Financial Statement and Budget Report" issued on Budget day.

The costs of refurbishing offshore installations in oil and gas fields would normally already qualify for immediate relief in full against petroleum revenue tax, where the field is within the charge to that tax.

Civil Servants (Bicycles)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the current conditions on which civil servants in his Department are granted salary advances to enable the purchase of bicycles for home-to-office travel; if he will make a statement on the current conditions in each agency of his Department; what plans he has to change the conditions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 18 January 1993]: In common with other Departments, the Treasury has arrangements under which it can make interest free advances of salary of up to £100 to assist staff with the purchase of a bicycle for home-to-office travel. Advances are repayable over one year.

It was announced on 16 December 1992, Official Report, column 285-86, that responsibility for determining the conditions on which such advances can be made has been delegated to Departments. The Treasury will be reviewing its arrangements in the light of that delegation.

Trade Sales and Management Buy-outs

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will place in the Library a copy of his Department's guidance note on trade sales and management buy-outs within the public services.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 18 January 1993]: No. The written guidance referred to is intended for internal use by Departments and vendor units engaged in, or considering, privatisation by trade sale.

Personal Taxation

Dr. Marek: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the average tax charge in the United Kingdom on a married man with two children with earnings in each of the decile groups in each financial year since 1986-87.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 18 January 1993]: Information is available only for income tax. With the introduction of independent taxation in 1990-91, comparable figures are available for the years 1990-91 and 1991-92. Information for earlier years could be provided only at disproportionate cost. In calculating decile groups it is appropriate to take account of the tax liability on total income for income tax purposes, not just earnings. Income tax liability is not affected by the number of children so the figures below include all married men who pay income tax.

Decile groups of taxpaying married men Per cent.	Average income tax liability (£ per year) 1990-91	1991-92

EDUCATION

Education Spending

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what assessment he has made of the link between education standard spending assessments and academic attainment.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend has made no such assessment, since standard spending assessments are primarily a mechanism for distributing grant and local education authorities have discretion to order their spending priorities as they wish.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what level of funding, based on secondary education standard spending assessment, an 11 to 15, 1,000-pupil school would receive in (a) Wakefield, (b) Bradford, (c) Wandsworth and (d) Westminster.

Mr. Forth: Standard spending assessments are designed to reflect the varying costs, in different areas, of providing a standard level of service, taking account of different local circumstances. They are essentially a mechanism for distributing grant: decisions on spending priorities between education and other services and within education are for individual local authorities. The funding that a school receives thus largely depends on local decisions about priorities and also on the local authority's scheme for local management of schools. Moreover, the education elements of SSAs relate to all LEA functions, including central services and the maintenance of special schools. There is no separately identifiable element relating to the funding of ordinary schools.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the standard spending assessment per post-16 education student for each metropolitan authority in 1993-94.

Mr. Forth: From 1993-94 the education of most post-16 students will be the responsibility of the Further Education Funding Council. LEAs will continue to be responsible for pupils over 16 in schools and for certain kinds of further education for adults. There is no separately identifiable element in 1993-94 SSAs for further education for adults. The post-16 element of SSAs relates to 16-plus pupils in schools, including special schools and related central services and support functions such as home-to-school transport.

Hearing Impairment

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what research has been undertaken to date by his Department to evaluate the effect of the introduction of the local management of schools regime upon specialist educational provision for hearing-impaired children.

Mr. Forth: None. The purpose of local management of schools is to ensure that funds are allocated to schools on an objective basis, taking account of local circumstances. LMS does not qualify in any way the duties of LEAs or schools regarding pupils with special educational needs, including the hearing impaired.

Nursery Education

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many three and four-year-olds were in nursery education for each local education authority at the latest available date.

Mr. Forth: The number of three and four-year-olds attending maintained nursery schools or nursery classes in maintained primary schools in each local education authority in England in January 1992 is shown in the following table.

Pupils aged 3 and 4 in maintained nursery schools and classes in England—January 1992

Under-sevens

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what are the latest available figures for the expenditure per child under seven years by each education authority and grant-maintained schools in England.

Mr. Forth: Available expenditure data cover nursery and primary schools as a whole and cannot be disaggregated between particular age ranges. The table indicates each local education authority's average school-based funding per pupil in nursery and primary schools in 1990-91, the latest year for which information on actual expenditure by LEAs is available. There were no primary grant-maintained schools in 1990-91.

Note: Figures are derived from LEAs' returns of their spending to the Department of the Environment and of their pupil numbers to the Department for Education. They include school-based spending on salaries and wages, recurrent premises costs, books, equipment and other supplies and services, and unspent balances held by schools at the year end under local management schemes. They exclude spending on home to school transport, school meals, LEAs' central administration and financing costs of capital expenditure.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make it his policy that all education authorities should receive funding for the education of under-sevens at the same level as Westminister education authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: No. Standard spending assessments, which determine the distribution of grant between authorities, are designed to reflect the varying costs, in different areas, of providing a standard level of service, taking account of different local circumstances.

Independent Residential Colleges

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how new students at independent residential colleges are to be funded as from April; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Boswell: In April responsibility for funding the long-term residential colleges in England, including the cost of student maintenance, will pass to the Further Education Funding Council for England and responsibility for funding Coleg Harlech in Wales will pass to the Further Education Funding Council for Wales. It will be for the councils to decide on the most appropriate system of funding student maintenance.

A-level Music

Ms. Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education which London boroughs provide A-level music courses for sixth form pupils.

Mr. Boswell: This information is not held centrally. It is for schools and colleges to decide which A-level courses to provide.

Education Assets Board

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many recommendations from the Education Assets Board are awaiting a decision by his Department; and if he will list these and the time they have been with his Department.

Mr. Forth: There are 12 cases awaiting final determination by my right hon. Friend. These are:

Institution	Date received
Grant maintained schools
Dartford Grammar School for Girls, Kent	December 1992
Great Barr School, Birmingham	August 1992
Hendon School and Queen Elizabeth School for Boys, Barnet	June 1992
Kingsley Park School, Northamptonshire	September 1992
Pate's Grammar School, Gloucestershire	November 1991
Rickmansworth School, Hertfordshire	June 1992
Stratford School, London	May 1992
Wymondham College, Norfolk	December 1992
Higher education institutions
University of East London	May 1991
Falmouth College of Art and Design	September 1991
University of Greenwich	September 1991
University of West of England; Bath College of Higher Education	November 1991

Higher Education

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list those higher education institutions which receive public funds from his Department by way of fees for each undergraduate above those set from time to time in the three bands of tuition fees.

Mr. Boswell: Fees, other than the tuition fees payable to universities, are paid by local education authorities for students at the constituent colleges of the universities of Cambridge, Durham, Kent, Lancaster, Oxford and York in recognition of their collegiate structure. The recurrent grant paid to these universities by the Universities Funding Council is abated in recognition of these college fee payments.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Computer Services

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Chairman of the Information Committee if he will make a statement on the range and type of (a) general and (b) computer services which may be accessed from the Library by the constituency offices of hon. Members; what advice and assistance is available in establishing links between constituency offices and the House; what plans he has to enhance such services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waller: All services of the Library are available to the constituency offices of hon. Members by telephone, fax and post. In addition, Members can request direct access to POLIS, the Parliamentary on-line information service managed by the Library, from their constituency if they have the necessary personal computer and modem. The Library provides an information sheet on establishing a telecommunications link to POLIS and will provide such support as it can, given the wide range of equipment used by Members.

A pilot project for a parliamentary data and video network is at present being undertaken in 7 Millbank. Members and staff in 7 Millbank have direct cabling to the network, but access from elsewhere is via modem. Services from the Library available now, or shortly on the system, include POLIS and the HMSO CD-ROM disks of Hansard. Other services such as CD-ROMS of national newspapers will also become available. The pilot project of the network will be reviewed by the Information Committee in the next few months.

Any plans to enhance the network services beyond those necessary for the pilot project must depend upon the Information Committee's report and the House's reaction to it.

The computer officer and his staff are available to provide advice and assistance to Members on information technology matters; a list, approved by the Information Committee, of appropriate IT equipment; and training for Members, their staff and constituency offices to access and use the pilot network.

Bicycles

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee if he will ensure provision for more bicycles within the Palace of Westminster precincts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ray Powell: I will make sure this matter is included on the agenda of the Committee for consideration at a future meeting.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

International Development Association

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the 10th replenishment of the International Development Association.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Agreement was reached on the 10th replenishment of the International Development Association at a meeting in Berne of representatives of donor Governments on 15 December. Donors pledged to provide a total of SDR13 billion, approximately $18 billion. It will enable the World Bank to offer concessional aid over the period 1993-96. Subject to parliamentary approval, the United Kingdom will contribute £620 million, a share of 6·15 per cent.

The replenishment agreement provides for greater emphasis on poverty reduction and performance by borrowers, to ensure resources are allocated to those countries where they are needed most and can be most effectively used. There will also be a stronger focus on sustainable development, in line with the agreements reached at the United Nations Conference on the Environment and Development in Rio last June. Donors also endorsed a series of measures designed to improve project quality and implementation.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Saudi Arabia

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress his Department has made to secure the return of pension moneys paid to the Saudi Government by British workers once employed in Saudi Arabia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The British embassy in Riyadh has assisted British claimants to secure refunds of personal contributions from the Saudi Arabian general social insurance scheme (GOSI). It has persuaded the Saudi authorities to ensure that the terms for obtaining a refund are clearly and widely publicised. It has continued to urge GOSI to deal with requests quickly. The embassy has followed up the cases of individuals who have experienced difficulty in obtaining their entitlement.

Gibraltar

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the future of Gibraltar.

Mr. Garel-Jones: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Wirral, South (Mr. Porter) on 6 December 1990 at col. 188.

Iran

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action has been taken by Her Majesty's Government in relation to violations of human rights by the Iranian Government against the Baha'i community; how many cases of confiscation of Baha'i property, in Yazd, Teheran and Isfahan, by the members of the Imam Khomeini Foundation, have been reported to him; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have made representations on a number of occasions to the Iranian authorities about the persecution of Baha'is in Iran, both bilaterally and together with our EC partners. We made representations in Tehran on 25 October, on behalf of all EC member states, about death sentences passed on two Baha'is following summary trials and the reports of 24 cases of confiscations of the homes and property of Baha'is. We and our EC partners co-sponsored an UNGA resolution reflecting international concern at the human rights situation in Iran. It was adopted on 18 December by a large majority. It specifically referred to the treatment of the Baha'i community.

Iraq

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the recent visit to the United Kingdom of Iraqi negotiators dealing with GEC.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We understand that eight Iraqi businessmen recently visited the United Kingdom to discuss with GPT, a partly owned subsidiary of GEC, the possibility of business once the sanctions regime is lifted. We agreed to the issue of visas—fewer than the Iraqis wanted—against the background that there is no reason why British firms should not hold such discussions with the Iraqis. But we made clear to GEC that, since Iraq is in breach of the terms of United Nations Security Council Resolution 687 setting out the terms of the formal ceasefire at the end of the Gulf war, there is no immediate prospect of sanctions being lifted and therefore no prospect of GPT being in a position to fulfil any contract with the Iraqis. We also told it that we were not therefore ready to put an application to the United Nations Sanctions Committee.

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many visas have been issued to Iraqis to visit the United Kingdom on business in the last 12 months.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Statistics according to nationality and purpose of visit are not centrally recorded and could not be provided except at disproportionate cost.

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made on behalf of the British Government on the matter of those British subjects held by the Iraqi regime; and if he will inform the Iraqi Government that any use of these people as a human shield will result in retaliation.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have made many representations to the Iraqi Government on behalf of Paul Ride and Michael Wainwright, and have taken every opportunity to press for their release. We have no reason to believe the prisoners will be used as human shields.

Mansoor Hussain Qureshi

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give details of the explanatory statement concerning the refusal by the United Kingdom to grant entry clearance to Mansoor Hussain Qureshi—Ref: K051037—sent by the post to London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The explanatory statement is in the course of preparation. On completion, it will be sent to the Independent Appellate Authority. A copy will also be sent to Mr. Qureshi or his authorised representative.

UN Commission on Sustainable Development

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which will be the lead Government Department for the newly created UN Commission on Sustainable Development.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: At present, the FCO leads within Whitehall on institutional aspects of the follow up to the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, including the establishment of the Sustainable Development Commission.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consultations he is proposing to hold with British non-governmental organisations on the creation of the UN Commission on Sustainable Development and other changes currently taking place in the UN system as a result of the UN Conference on Environment and Development.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Officials from the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and Department of Environment attended a meeting with non-governmental organisations on 15 September, chaired by the International Institute for Environment and Development. Representatives of non-governmental organisations subsequently participated in the United Kingdom delegation at the UN General Assembly discussions on Rio follow-up. The United Kingdom will host an international non-governmental organisation conference "Implementing the Rio Agenda: Partnerships for Change", in Manchester in September.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what account he has made of whether the work of the UN Commission on Sustainable Development will be adequately funded under financial arrangements recently agreed in New York.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: UN General Assembly resolution 47/191 called for the Sustainable Development Commission to be "funded from the UN regular budget and depend to the maximum extent possible upon existing budgetary resources."

We await the Secretary General's detailed proposals.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Chemical Weapons Convention

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how the proposed United Kingdom national authority will undertake its role of demonstrating to the Organisation for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons that the United Kingdom Government are fulfilling its obligations as set out in the forthcoming chemical weapons convention.

Mr. Heseltine: The United Kingdom national authority will act as a channel of communications with the Organisation for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons (OPCW), which will include transmitting declarations from United Kingdom sites. The verification regime operated by the OPCW inspectorate will ensure that the United Kingdom meets its obligations under the convention.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he plans to publish annual reports about the work of, and information collected by, the national authority under the proposed chemical weapons convention.

Mr. Heseltine: No decision has been taken yet about whether the National Authority will publish an annual report. This will be the subject of consultation with interested bodies. The information received by the authority will be subject to the terms of the annex to the convention dealing with the protection of confidential information.

Uranium

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when current supplies of stockpiled depleted uranium will be depleted from re-use.

Mr. Eggar: This is a matter for the owners of the material.

Military Exports

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Selly Oak (Dr. Jones) on 4 December 1992, Official Report, column 443, if he will publish in the Official Report his letter to the hon. Member.

Mr. Heseltine: A copy of my letter of 7 January to the hon. Member has been placed in the Library. I see no need to publish the letter in the Official Report as well.

Dounreay

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment his Department has made of the environmental benefits of the Silver II toxic waste solvent destruction rig developed by the Atomic Energy Authority research establishment at Dounreay.

Mr. Eggar: Evaluation, including consideration of the environmental implications, has been carried out by the AEA.

Colliery Pumping Operations

Mr. Cummings: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the possible pollution of waterways resulting from ceasing pumping operations at Vane Tempest and Easington collieries.

Mr. Eggar: This is an operational matter for British Coal. I understand that there is regular liaison between British Coal and the National Rivers Authority at local and regional levels on all issues relevant to the National Rivers Authority's responsibilities for regulating water pollution.

Mortgages (Payment Protection Schemes)

Mr. Conway: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received to amend the provisions to the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 with regard to exemptions for insurance companies in the provision of payment protection schemes for residential mortgages.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I have received representations including some from the trading standards department of Shropshire county council on the subject of the Unfair Contract Terms Act and insurance. Insurance contracts will be subject to the provisions of the Unfair Contract Terms Directive which is currently being negotiated.

Assisted Areas

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he now expects to make an announcement on the review of assisted area status.

Mr. Sainsbury: Our intention is to announce the results of the assisted areas map review as early as possible, taking account of the outcome of the coal review and after the necessary clearance of the European Commission.

Manufacturing Industry

Mr. Trimble: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many jobs in manufacturing industry have been created in the United Kingdom in 1992 as a result of foreign investment.

Mr. Sainsbury: The most recent figures available are for the 1991-92 financial year. In this period 42,767 jobs were associated with foreign direct investment in the manufacturing sector; 17,615 of these jobs were newly created.

These figures are based on information provided by companies at the time of the announcement of the decision to invest. There is no requirement to notify the Department and so the figures include only those projects where the Invest in Britain Bureau and its regional partners were involved or which have come to their notice. They take no account of subsequent developments.

Beer Orders

Mr. Page: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will review the operation of the Beer Orders.

Mr. Heseltine: The Beer Orders came fully into force only on 1 November last year. The Director General of Fair Trading will be keeping them under review to ensure that the national brewers comply fully with their requirements. However, I have been giving further consideration to the merits of an early full scale review of the orders. The period since the Monopolies and Mergers Commission's 1989 report on the supply of beer has seen many significant changes taken place in the brewing industry, partly due to the Beer Orders but also in response to commercial pressures. The full effect of these changes will only gradually become apparent. Moreover, it is highly desirable that both brewers and tenants alike should now have a period of stability to plan ahead within the new framework that has been created by the orders. A full-scale review later this year of the effects of the orders would further prolong uncertainty within the industry. While the director general will continue to monitor the market and will investigate fully any evidence of anti-competitive behaviour in line with his statutory duties, we have concluded that it would be wrong to ask him to carry out a further full-scale review of the market.

Pit Closures

Mr. Hardy: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the steps taken to ensure the fabric of the mines at all the collieries which he announced were to be closed have been satisfactorily maintained; and what assessment of this has been made by Her Majesty's inspectors of mines.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 18 January 1993]: British Coal, whose responsibility this is, has given frequent assurances that it is preserving the fabric of the 10 pits so that if, at the end of the period of consultation, it is decided to keep any or all of them open, that will be possible. My right hon. Friend has asked Boyds to report on whether the fabric of the 10 pits is being preserved in accordance with those assurances.

The HSE, through Her Majesty's inspectors of mines, continues to inspect these pits in accordance with its plan of work to ensure the health and safety of those working there.

Single Market

Mr. David Porter: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the directives, regulations, statutory instruments and Acts of Parliament required to create the single market, distinguishing between (a) those which have been made effective to 31 December 1992 and (b) those which remain to be implemented; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 18 January 1993]: Information about single market measures and their implementation in the United Kingdom is provided in the "Spearhead" computer database produced by my Department. The database is publicly available, and can by accessed by the Library.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate he has made of the cost (a) directly to the Exchequer, (b) to local authorities and (c) to businesses of implementing all the directives, regulations, statutory instruments and Acts of Parliament to create the single market; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 18 January 1993]: When both negotiating and subsequently implementing domestically all European Community measures, Departments do attempt to assess, and minimise unnecessary, costs to both public and private sector interests. Our objective throughout the single market programme has been to secure agreement on measures which will provide positive benefits to United Kingdom businesses and consumers.

Chemical Weapons

Mr. Flynn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the chemical weapons production facilities in the United Kingdom designed, constructed or used since 1946 that will require destruction following the ratification of the chemical weapons convention.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 18 January 1993]: Chemical weapons have not been made in the United Kingdom for almost 40 years. It is not thought that any facilities which might have been used before that date still remain but investigations are under way to confirm this.

Trade Statistics

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the value of United Kingdom (a) imports, (b) exports and (c) trade balance for manufactured goods with each member state of the European Community in 1970, 1979 and the latest available year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 18 January 1993]: Information for 1970 can be provided only at disproportionate cost. Information for 1979 and 1991 is given in my answer to the hon. Member on 14 January 1993, Official Report, col. 782.

Bankruptcy

Mr. Simpson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proportion of monies retrieved by trustees in bankruptcy proceedings during the last year have gone to trade creditors.

Mr. Neil Hamilton [holding answer 1 December 1992]: This information is not held centrally by the Department in the form requested, and could not be easily obtained.

ENVIRONMENT

Grant Allocations

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to ensure that metropolitan councils are not disadvantaged in grant allocation as a result of the basis on which population estimates take into account unenumerated people.

Mr. Robin Squire: We have considered the population figures produced by the registrar general based on 1991 census results most carefully in relation to their implications for standard spending assessments and revenue support grant. We are satisfied that the methods he has employed to produce these estimates, particularly in relation to census underenumeration, are the most appropriate in the circumstances and do not therefore disadvantage metropolitan or any other class of authorities.

Building Regulations

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has (a) to revise part L of the Building Regulations to achieve significant improvements in the energy efficiency of new buildings and (b) to extend the regulations to cover rehabilitation work on older houses.

Mr. Baldry: I intend to issue a consultation paper shortly setting out proposals to amend part L of the Building Regulations 1991 strengthening the existing provisions for energy conservation in new buildings. These will include measures for use in older houses when undertaking alteration or conversion work covered by the regulations.

Office Accommodation

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the average cost per square foot of the rental or lease of office accommodation in (a) London and (b) elsewhere for which his Department is responsible for providing to his own and other Government Departments and agencies.

Mr. Howard: The current average cost per square foot for the rental or lease of office accommodation provided by my Department is estimated to be as follows:

(a) London	15·23
(b) Elsewhere	7·22

The figures relate to the 63 per cent. of office accommodation which is leased and excludes freeholds.

Housing (Self-build)

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what further plans the Government have to encourage self-build as a housing option in the United Kingdom;

(2) what grant funding is specifically available to self-build projects to build homes in the United Kingdom.

Sir George Young: The Housing Corporation has a revolving fund of £3 million in the current financial year and the next, from which loans are advanced to self-build projects for outright ownership. Grant from the corporation is also available to self-build groups, channelled through registered housing associations, where they cannot afford the cost of full owner-occupation.

We have no further plans to encourage the development of self-build groups.

The information is for England only and similar information on Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland are matters for the respective Secretaries of State.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many self-build housing units have been completed in the United Kingdom for each year since 1987; and what comparable figures he has for other European countries.

Sir George Young: The information requested is not collected by this Department.

Noise

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will respond to the report of the noise review working party, the Batho report.

Mr. Maclean: Over half of the recommendations of the noise review working party have now been acted upon. The speech by the former Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Noise Council seminar on 15 May 1991 and that of my predecessor to the Institution of Environmental Health Officers on 10 September 1991 summarised progress to date on the Government's response to the report of the noise review working party, the Batho report. Since then, the Government have issued consultation documents on the control of aircraft noise and on proposals to extend noise nuisance to the streets. A complete draft of the planning policy guidance note "Planning and noise" was issued for consultation at the beginning of 1992. Guidance on the control of noisy parties was issued to local authorities and the police on 4 September 1992. My speech to Euronoise '92 on 14 September included a further update of the Government's progress in responding to the Batho report.

Tenant's Death

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidance he issues to local authorities concerning rent payments, where the lawful tenant has died and there is no succession to the tenancy, during the period immediately following death when the deceased's affairs are being dealt with.

Mr. Baldry: None. However, a secure tenancy does not cease on a tenant's death. Normally, the tenant's executors would be responsible for paying the rent until they and the authority terminate the tenancy. If the tenant did not leave a will, and there are no letters of administration, the tenancy vests in the president of the family division of the High Court.

Waste Disposal

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to reduce the need for landfill waste disposal and to make recycling of waste more financially attractive than disposing of waste in landfill sites.

Mr. Maclean: We have introduced, through the Environmental Protection Act 1990, tough new environmental standards for waste disposal which we expect to result in higher disposal costs. The same Act requires waste disposal authorities to divest themselves of their operations, ensuring that the full economic costs of waste disposal are reflected in prices. We have also introduced recycling credits so that the effect of higher landfill prices feeds through to those involved in recycling household waste.

We have recently published a report on "Economic Instruments and Recovery of Resources from Waste", a copy of which is in the House Library. In the light of that report, we are considering whether any further changes to the economic framework for solid waste would be justified.

Green Ministers

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to send information to central and eastern European nations on the Green Ministers structure whereby each Department has a Minister responsible for environmental policy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The Government's approach to environmental policy, including the concept of Green Ministers, was set out in the 1990 White Paper "This Common Inheritance". We have sent that document and the two subsequent annual reports which also refer to the concept to countries in central and eastern Europe and have discussed it with the Environment Ministers of several of them.

Opencast Mining

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the research relating to the health implications of living in proximity to opencast sites that he has considered in reviewing the opencast planning guidelines.

Mr. Baldry: Research into environmental health issues is carried out by the Medical Research Council (MRC), the Government's main agency for biomedical research, which is funded by the Office of Science and Technology. I am however aware that the Department of Health's medical staff have discussed with Drs Temple and Skyes their recent research on the subject of asthma and opencast mining and I understand that the Committee on the Medical Effects of Air Pollutants is also being asked for advice on this matter. I am also aware of a recent epidemiological study carried out by the Institute of Occupational Medicine on behalf of British Coal into the respiratory health of opencast coal workers, the main conclusion of which was that neither asthma nor chronic bronchitis among them was related to exposure to airborne dust.

My Department will take account of all material considerations in its review of the opencast coal planning guidelines.

Housing Investment, Lambeth

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the annual housing investment programme for Lambeth for each of the last 15 years expressed in current values.

Mr. Baldry: The information requested is given in the table. The figures for 1990-91 and subsequent years are not directly comparable with those for earlier years because of the revisions to the capital finance system introduced in April 1990.

Housing investment programme (HIP) allocations by Lambeth borough council and capital expenditure, 1978-79 to 1992-93

[1] Allocations for the years up to and including 1989-90 are final allocations, ie the initial allocation plus any increases to the initial allocation made in-year. The allocations figures for 1990-91 and subsequent years are the HIP allocations (housing annual capital guidelines plus specified capital grants) issued prior to the start of the financial year. These figures do not include any supplementary credit approvals issued during the year.

[2] Cash figures have been converted to 1992-93 price levels by excluding the effect of general inflation as measured by the GDP market prices deflator.

[3] From 1990-91, under the new capital finance system, the HIP allocation is an assessment of relative need for housing capital expenditure rather than a direct borrowing approval. Borrowing approval is now conveyed by the single, all service, basic credit approval.

One-bedroom Flats

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many one-bedroom flats have been built in county Durham since 1979; and how many are attributed to each local housing authority in the county in total.

Notes:

[1] The table shows total housebuilding activity by private enterprise, housing associations and local authorities in the respective local authority areas.

[2] The 1992 figures cover January to November only.

Housing Association Homes

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress the Government are making in fulfilling its pledges in respect of provision of housing association homes.

Mr. Baldry: The Government's election manifesto promised 153,000 housing association homes over the period 1992-93 to 1994-95. The Housing Corporation now estimates that it will be able to provide around 170,000 new homes in that period.

This includes more than 17,000 homes which the corporation expects housing associations will be able to buy with the £580 million provided for the purchase of new, empty and repossessed homes as part of the housing market package announced in the Chancellor's autumn statement. It also includes the release of up to 2,000 existing housing association homes with the additional £20 million provided by the package for grants under the tenants' incentive scheme.

Repair Grants

Ms. Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many applicants are waiting for mandatory repair grants in (a) Stockport and (b) the north-west.

Mr. Baldry: This information is not collected by the Department. Once a valid grant application has been received, an authority must approve or refuse it within six months of the date it is made.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how the grant-related expenditure assessment base to standard spending assessment introduction has affected efficient distribution of resources; and how this has been investigated.

Mr. Robin Squire: The SSA system is under constant review. Each year the SSA formulae and their implications for authorities are approved by Parliament. This follows a process of extensive discussion with local authority representatives. It was the intention in moving to SSAs that they should be easier to understand but no less fair than GREAs. It would be difficult for any investigation to establish whether this has led to a change in the efficiency with which resources are distributed—none has been carried out with this aim in view. The Audit Commission is at present carrying out a study of SSAs. As soon as its report is available we will consider it carefully.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment from what date the 1991 census results will be used for all standard spending assessments; and what transitional arrangements will be introduced for authorities with major changes.

Mr. Robin Squire: The detailed results of the 1991 census will be incorporated, as appropriate, into the calculation of the standard spending assessments for 1994-95. The need for transitional arrangements will be considered when these assessments become available in the autumn.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total level of capital receipts received by each local authority in England in the financial year 1991-92.

Mr. Maclean: Local authorities provide returns to the Department giving the capital receipts they received in 1991-92 and the receipts they are forecasting to receive in 1992-93. I have arranged for this information to be placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will undertake an independent analysis of standard spending assessments for the purpose of identifying local authority spending requirements.

Mr. Robin Squire: Standard spending assessments already reflect detailed research evidence from a wide range of sources, both within and outside Government, as well as extensive discussions with local authority representatives over a number of years. They are updated and refined to take on board new data and evidence every year. The Audit Commission is currently engaged in a special study of standard spending assessments. We shall study carefully its findings and recommendations once these are available.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the lowest shire county standard spending assessment as a proportion of the highest shire county SSA; and what is the lowest metropolitan authority SSA as a proportion of the highest metropolitan authority SSA.

Mr. Robin Squire: The information is as follows:

1993-94 provisional standard spending assessments:

		£ million
Shire counties
Highest SSA	Kent	963·077
Lowest SSA	Isle of Wight	77·498
Lowest as proportion of highest		0·080
Metropolitan districts
Highest SSA	Birmingham	879·076
Lowest SSA	Bury	104·766
Lowest as proportion of highest		0·119

A major factor affecting all standard spending assessments is the underlying population of the authority concerned.

Land Reclamation

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether land reclamation that has already received support from regional offices of his Department will continue to be supported by the urban regeneration agency when it is formed.

Mr. Redwood: Where the Department has approved derelict land grants, support will continue on the present basis. Once the urban regeneration agency has been established it will receive applications for further support. The Housing and Urban Development Bill makes provision for a new unified grant regime for the agency which will replace derelict land grant and the other grants to be transferred to it. The agency will determine its own priorities in the light of guidance the Department issues to it. The Government will take account of the current priorities for existing grants, including derelict land grant, when preparing this guidance and constructing the new unified grant regime.

Abandoned Coal Mines

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has yet placed a contract for research into problems associated with methane and other gas discharges from abandoned coal mines; and when it is planned that the study will report.

Mr. Baldry: Following a tender competition, an offer of a contract to investigate the appropriate response of the planning system to methane and other gas emissions from disused coal mines has been made to Wardell Armstrong. The details of the contract are being negotiated and it is expected that work will commence in March. The results will be reported in the spring of 1995.

Property Services Agency

Mr. Wicks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the average length of time taken to deal with complaints under the staff grievance procedure of Property Services Agency Building Maintenance south-east; what proposals he has for reducing the time taken; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: PSA Services introduced a revised procedure for dealing with complaints and grievances in April 1992. This procedure recognises that many informal cases are settled quickly and amicably between individuals and their line managers. The recommended time limit for dealing with formal complaints is four weeks, but this can vary according to the nature and seriousness of the complaint.

The only formal grievance raised in BM South East took much longer than four weeks to resolve. As a result all directors are being reminded of the need to adhere more closely to the recommended time limit.

Mr. Wicks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on what date the list of names of PSA Projects staff not chosen for secondment was finalised; on what date PSA Projects was sold to Tarmac; on what date a complete ethnic breakdown of those staff not chosen for secondment was produced; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: PSA Projects was sold to Tarmac Construction on 1 December 1992.

The Projects staff choice exercise was completed on 13 November 1992 and the full list of those staff not chosen for secondment was passed to the PSA Services equal opportunities unit on 17 November 1992. The unit carried out a detailed analysis to establish whether there had been any discrimination in the selection process. None was identified.

Mr. Wicks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the proportion of ethnic minority PSA Projects staff (a) in general and (b) of those not picked for secondment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: The proportions of ethnic minority staff in Projects are;

(a) 8·2 per cent. of the total staff in post at 20 November 1992

(b) 8·5 per cent. of those not picked for secondment

Although the difference in percentage terms is not statistically significant the PSA's equal opportunities unit examined each case individually and concluded that there had been no discrimination in the selection process.

Compulsory Competitive Tendering

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from the Association of District Councils and other local authority organisations about compulsory competitive tendering.

Mr. Robin Squire: My Department has received representations from a number of local authority organisations, including the Association of District Councils, on the operation of the current CCT regime, the planned regulations and guidance clarifying the existing statutory framework and on the proposals to extend competition to local authorities' construction related and corporate services. Copies of these representations are available through the Library of the House.

Minerals (Planning Guidance)

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the new draft minerals planning guidance note 3 will be published; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: We hope to issue draft revised guidelines for public consultation as soon as possible after the outcome of the coal review.

Superquarries

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what geological evidence he has considered relating to the potential for development of superquarries for aggregate mining; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: Geological evidence about coastal superquarries was provided to my Department by consultants who were commissioned to investigate the potential of such quarries to supply aggregates to the south-east of England. A copy of the published report "Coastal Superquarries to Supply South-East England Aggregate Requirements" is in the House of Commons Library. The work undertaken by the consultants consisted primarily of a desk study of geological maps and other published material. Their resource assessment concluded that North West Europe—particularly Norway and Scotland offered a number of good opportunities for developing coastal superquarries.

My Department has taken the views of the consultants into account in preparing revised mineral planning guidance for aggregates on the provision in England and Wales (MPG6). Public consultation on the draft revised guidelines is currently taking place and a copy of this has been placed in the House of Commons Library. I have sent a copy to the hon. Member.

The Government consider that coastal superquarries could provide an increasing contribution to aggregates supplies in the next century and is currently seeking views on the practical levels which could be expected. The Government recognise that individual applications will need very careful assessment both in respect of the proposed extraction and where the material would be landed.

Noise

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what work the Building Research Establishment has done on behalf of his Department in studying the proposals arising from the noise review working party.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 15 January 1993]: The Building Research Establishment has provided my Department with technical advice on a number of the recommendations of the noise review working party, including the current draft of the Planning Policy Guidance note on planning and noise which will replace circular 10/73 and proposals to increase controls on noise from audible intruder alarms. They have represented my Department on BSI committees responsible for the revision of BS4142 (industrial noise) and the replacement of BS4737 (alarms) by a European standard. They have also completed initial research into the use of noise abatement zones by local authorities.

Paper Recycling

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he has taken or proposes to take to encourage the recycling of newspapers and magazines within the United Kingdom; what proportion of Her Majesty's Government's target of the recycling of 25 per cent. of household waste by the year 2000 will be comprised of waste paper; what is the estimated tonnage of that proportion; and what outlets he expects there to be in place in the year 2000 to utilise this waste paper by recycling.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 15 January 1993]: We are setting an economic and legislative framework which encourages an environmentally justified level of recycling. This will affect newspapers and magazines as well as other recyclable materials. We have also agreed with the newspaper publishers and newsprint producers that they will aim to increase the proportion of recycled fibre in newsprint used in Britain to at least 40 per cent. by the year 2000. Subject to parliamentary approval, my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade proposes to offer a £20 million grant to the papermaking company SCA to invest in a major newsprint mill at Aylesford in Kent, which will produce newsprint made entirely from waste paper.

The Government have not forecast the proportion of waste paper from household sources which will be recycled in the year 2000, nor the outlets which will be available to recycle this paper.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Income Support

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table to show for each office of the Social Security Agency the number of (a) female and (b) male single persons who are in receipt of income support; and of these how many in each area and category are single parents.

Mr. Hanley: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Social Security Agency under its chief executive, Mr. Alex Wylie. However, I understand that the information is not available in the format requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Intensive Therapy Units

Sir Patrick McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the number and location of intensive therapy units in the Province; and how many donors have arisen in each in the past 12 months.

Mr. Hanley: There are eight intensive therapy units in Northern Ireland, which are listed below, together with the number of donors in each in the past 12 months.

Donating hospital	Number of cadaveric solid organ donors
Belfast City Hospital	4
Altnagelvin Hospital, Londonderry	3
Ulster Hospital, Dundonald	2
Royal Victoria Hospital, Belfast	18
Mater Infirmorum Hospital, Belfast	1
Craigavon Area Hospital	4
Mid Ulster Hospital, Magherafelt	2
Royal Belfast Hospital for Sick Children	1
TOTAL	35

Housing Benefit

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table to show for each Housing Executive district in the western region the number of (a) female and (b) male single persons who are in receipt of housing benefit; and of these how many in each category are single parents with (i) one dependent child, (ii) two dependent children, (iii) three dependent children and (iv) more than three dependent children, or as much of such information as is available to him.

Mr. Hanley: The information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Training Centres

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a further statement on the future of the training centre network and the measures which he proposes to introduce.

Mr. Atkins: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Training and Employment Agency under its chief executive, Mr. J. S. Crozier. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from J S Crozier to Mr. Andrew Hunter, dated 15 January 1993:

You have asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the future of the Training Centre network and the measures he proposes to introduce.

The development, management and administration of the Training Centre network, lies within the responsibility of the Training and Employment Agency (T&EA). As Chief Executive of the Agency I have been asked by the Secretary of State to reply on his behalf.

Training Centres are an important source of craft level training in Northern Ireland. I envisage a continuing need for the services they provide in the foreseeable future.

The Agency has been conducting an internal review of the Training Centres to identify what action should be taken to ensure they are managed efficiently and cost effectively. We are currently conducting a feasibility study on the market testing of Centres. I expect that study to be complete by April 1993 with a view to a market test being initiated shortly afterwards. Proposals concerning the future of Training Centres will be formulated when these exercises are complete.

Strip Searches

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the number of strip searches made on female prisoners at Her Majesty's prison Maghaberry monthly since July 1992; what was the number of persons involved and the number of times each person was searched; what prison contraband, smuggled items or illegal correspondence was discovered in any search; in how many cases prisoners refused to be searched and had to be restrained while the search was being conducted; and what were the reasons for each search.

Mr. Mates: The information requested is as follows:

	1992
	July	August	September	October	November	December
Number of searches
Total number of searches carried out	29	41	44	32	38	42

Number of prisoners searched once	17	19	22	12	12	2
Number of prisoners searched twice	4	7	8	5	13	15
Number of prisoners searched more than twice	1	1	2	2	0	3

Attendance at court for bail	0	0	0	0	1	2
Bail granted	0	1	0	0	2	0

No prohibited articles were found during these searches and no prisoners refused to be searched.

Prison Transfers

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many prisoners for scheduled offences have been transferred from prisons in Northern Ireland to Britain for each of the last 10 years; what was the length of their original sentence; what sentence those now released actually served; and what length of sentence those still in prison still have to serve.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: When a prisoner is transferred to Great Britain from Northern Ireland all records concerning the prisoner are passed to the receiving jurisdiction. The information requested is consequently unavailable in Northern Ireland.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many applications have been received for transfers from prisons in Northern Ireland to Britain from prisoners serving sentences for scheduled offences.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: Between 1982 and 1992 13 prisoners convicted of scheduled offences in Northern Ireland, made a total of 18 applications for permanent transfer to Great Britain but were unsuccessful in securing transfer. A further 10 prisoners transferred to Great Britain in the same period but as their records are now held in the receiving jurisdiction it is not known if they were convicted of scheduled offences. In addition, 20 prisoners convicted of scheduled offences applied for temporary transfer and of these 14 were transferred, normally for periods of between two and six weeks.

Ulster Museum

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what were the attendance figures for 1992 reported by the Ulster museum, including its outstations; and what was the percentage change compared with the attendance figures for 1991.

Mr. Hanley: In 1992 a total of 450,800 people visited the Ulster museum and the Armagh county museum—an increase of 41·9 per cent. on the attendance figures for 1991.

Civil Service

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proposals he has to introduce goals and timetables for the professional and technical grades of the Northern Ireland civil service.

Mr. Mates: The professional and technical grades of the Northern Ireland civil service comprise a wide range of occupations many of which require particular skills and specific qualifications. It is not practicable therefore to consider a single goal and timetable in respect of this group of staff as a whole. Nevertheless, the appropriateness and practicability of goals and timetables as an affirmative action measure in respect of the various disciplines which comprise the professional and technical grades of the NICS are presently under consideration and will be the subject of further discussion with the Fair Employment Commission, the Equal Opportunities Commission and the Northern Ireland civil service trade unions.

Building Regulations

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what consultation has taken place on proposals for amendment to parts E and EE of the Building Regulations (NI) 1990; what responses have been received to the consultation document; and when the revised regulations will be promulgated.

Mr. Atkins: A consultation paper setting out proposals for amendments to parts E and EE of the Building Regulations (Northern Ireland) 1990 was issued for consideration, on 31 December 1991, to a total of 115 public and private sector bodies. These proposals are based on similar requirements which have since been incorporated in the Building Regulations 1991 which apply in England and Wales.

Twenty-three responses to the consultation paper were received.

It is likely that the statutory rule amending the regulations will be made in late 1993, following consideration by the European Commission, and will come into operation in 1994.

Civil Servants (Bicycles)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the current conditions on which civil servants in his Department are granted salary advances to enable the purchase of bicycles for home-to-office travel; if he will make a statement on the current conditions in each agency of his Department; what plans he has to change the conditions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mates [holding answer 18 January 1993]: Salary advances are available to home civil service staff to assist with the purchase of bicycles for home-to-office travel, but no requests have been received since the introduction of this facility in August 1991. The advance would be required to be repaid over 12 months and the bicycle used for travel to work. Proof of purchase would be required. No changes are planned to these conditions.

There is no facility available within the departments or agencies of the Northern Ireland civil service to permit civil servants to be granted salary advances to enable the purchases of bicycles for home to office travel. There are no plans to introduce such a facility.

TRANSPORT

Motorway Service Areas

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will establish a target date by which time motorway service areas will be located at an average distance of 30 miles apart throughout the United Kingdom motorway network.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: No. Under a new policy on the provision of motorway service areas announced on 6 August, it is now for the private sector rather than the Government to identify where there is a need for further motorway services and to secure their development.

Damaged Car Tyres

Mr. Mills: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action he will take to prevent the sale of structurally damaged car tyres from accident write-off cars at car boot sales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I propose to go out to public consultation later this year on proposed safety regulations to be made under the Consumer Protection Act 1987 which will supplement that Act by making it an offence to sell or otherwise supply in the course of business any used car, motorcycle or retread tyre that is defective.

Car Ownership

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proportion of households in each local authority area do not possess a car.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Information on households car ownership for individual local authorities is provided by population censuses. The local authority area results from the 1991 census will be published soon.

Roads (Porous Ashphalt)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to secure the widespread use of porous asphalt on motorways and trunk roads in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: It is the Department's policy to use porous asphalt where it can be shown to be the most suitable and cost effective surfacing. A specification and advice note on porous asphalt are to be published shortly by the Department of Transport jointly with the Welsh Office, Scottish Office and Department of Environment (Northern Ireland). These documents will set out those situations where porous asphalt is likely to be suitable.

Railway Track, Wales

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the length of railway track open to traffic in Wales in 1979; what is the length at the most recent available date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: In 1979 British Rail had 984 route miles of track open. The figure for 1991 was 927. Other than the technical closure of the Vale of Rheidol line on its transfer to the private sector, no passenger lines were closed during this period.

Rolling Stock

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much rolling stock was in use on the railways in 1979; how much is currently in use; and what is the average age of rolling stock currently in use in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Freeman: The information for British Rail is given in the table. However, it is not possible to give a meaningful indication of the average age of all vehicles. Such a figure would vary widely according to the type of rolling stock.

Locomotives
Diesel	3,261	1,634
Electric	310	262
Sub-total locomotives	3,571	1,896
High speed trains
Power units	136	197
Coaches	533	728
Advanced passenger trains
Power units	5	—
Coaches	15	—
Diesel Multiple Units	3,284	2,074
Electric Multiple Units	7,458	6,909
Loco-hauled passenger coaches	5,885	2,114
Non-passenger coaches	4,336	1,100
Sub-total Coaching Vehicles (Excluding power units)	21,511	12,925
Sub-total power units	141	197
Freight vehicles (excluding brake vans)
Covered	11,439	1,679
Open	14,415	13,500
Others	111,735	4,698
Sub-total Freight Vehicles	137,589	19,877
Total all vehicles	162,812	34,895

Notes:

1. Figures for 1991-92 exclude 13,166 freight vehicles and 11 locomotives privately owned. 1979 figures not known, but are broadly the same for wagons, with no locomotives.
2. Reduction in locomotives follows replacement by multiple units, notably by Regional Railways, and withdrawal of lower powered units. This has also had an impact on loco-hauled coaches.
3. Reduction in diesel multiple units caused by electrification schemes, and replacement in certain cases by vehicles of higher capacity, and use of shorter train formations.
4. Reduction in number of freight vehicles and non-passenger coaches largely caused by withdrawal from certain categories of traffic, notably in the wagon load type of business.
5. In 1979 4,228 railway cars were in use on London Underground. The equivalent figure for 1991-92 was 4,146 cars.

Over the 10 London Underground lines, most of the rolling stock is aged between 20 and 30 years. The rolling stock currently in use on each line is as follows:

Bakerloo	1972 stock. Currently being refurbished.
Central	1962 stock. Currently being replaced with brand new stock as part of modernisation programme—first new train in passenger service expected spring 1993.
Circle and Hammersmith and City	1969 and 1977 stock. Currently being refurbished.
District	1969 and 1977 stock.
East London	1962 stock.
Jubilee	1983 stock.
Metropolitan	1962 stock.
Northern	1959 and 1972 stock. Currently being refurbished.
Piccadilly	1973 stock.
Victoria	1967 stock. Currently being refurbished.

Speed Control

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress is being made with the final report from the village speed control working group; and when he expects the final report to be published.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Measures have already been implemented at most of the trial sites in the working group's study. They are being monitored and the results will be analysed by the Transport Research Laboratory. The working group's final report is expected to be published in the summer.

Tanker Routes

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the crude oil-carrying tanker Aegean Sea passed through the Minch.

Mr. Norris: My Department does not hold information on the route taken by the Aegean Sea.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to renegotiate the provision of the 1958 international convention on the territorial sea and contiguous zone to change the designation of the Minch as an international strait with a right of innocent passage.

Mr. Norris: This is a matter which falls within the terms of Lord Donaldson's inquiry announced by my right hon. Friend.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will now place an exclusion order on the passage of oil tankers using (a) the Minch, (b) the Little Minch and (c) the sea off the Hebrides, and instruct oil tanker masters to use the deep-water route westward of the Outer Hebrides; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: The deep water route west of the Hebrides is the recommended route, agreed by the International Maritime Organisation for all laden tankers over 10,000 grt. My Department, with the support of the industry, takes every opportunity to encourage vessels to use this route. The waters of the Minch, although within territorial limits, have been accepted by Parliament as an international strait to which the right of innocent passage applies. Thus the deep water route is recommended and not mandatory. In poor weather the risk of an accident may be greater if a tanker goes into the open Atlantic rather than using the comparatively sheltered waters of the Minch where anchorages are available. The Department's view has been that masters must retain this option in adverse weather.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will bring forward proposals to set up an oil tanker exclusion zone around the sensitive coastal and marine areas around the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: This is a matter which falls within the terms of reference of Lord Donaldson's inquiry announced by my right hon. Friend. An exclusion zone for tankers in international waters would require international agreement. In the meantime, we are exploring the possibility and feasibility of introducing interim measures for tanker operations around the United Kingdom.

Seat Belts

Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will introduce a requirement for motor manufacturers to fit alternative fitting points for backward facing seats for pre-school children in all new cars.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: My Department has been working with manufacturers and various international organisations to find better and more convenient ways of fitting child seats to vehicles. It is intended that this work will eventually result in European legislation requiring all cars to be fitted with anchorage points suitable for securing forward or rearward-facing restraints for children of all ages.

Unadopted Roads

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to legislate on the subject of unadopted roads; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: None.

Private street works law was reviewed in 1983. Subsequently it was decided that there should be no change either in the arrangements for the adoption of unadopted roads or the principle of frontager liability for the expense of making up such roads. Some minor amendments to private street works law may be brought forward if a suitable opportunity arises.

Motorways

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many miles of motorway in England are currently being widened.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: A total of 30·4 miles.

A259 (Bypass)

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the exhibition of plans for the A259 Icklesham bypass will take place.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: A public consultation exhibition of proposals for the Guestling Thorn and Icklesham bypass is expected to be held this spring. I will announce the detailed arrangements as soon as possible.

Road Expenditure

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the proposed level of expenditure in England in 1993-94, 1994-95 and 1995-96 on (a) new road construction and improvement, (b) structural maintenance and (c) current maintenance on trunk roads.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: An announcement about national roads expenditure for 1993-94 will be made shortly. Provisional figures for the following years will appear in the 1993 departmental report, which will be published next month.

Train Driver Instruction

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to allow the private sector to establish train driver instruction schools.

Mr. Freeman: We have accepted all the Health and Safety Commission's recommendations in their report, "Ensuring Safety on Britain's Railways" which was published on 12 January. These included the recommendation that the Health and Safety Commission should be empowered to accredit other bodies including private training organisations, to carry out driver training and certification following assessment against clear standards.

English Channel

Mr. Stephen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many collisions occurred in the English channel in the last five years; and what reasons were established for them.

Mr. Norris: To establish the number of accidents in any sea area would entail a great deal of research. To add to that the task of manually listing each accident and the reason for it would entail staff time and resources at disproportionate cost.

Data for 1991 onwards is being input into a recently installed, computerised accident database in the marine accident investigation branch. This will allow information as requested to be provided for accidents which occurred during and after 1991.

Vehicle Engines

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will introduce legislation to limit the time that vehicle engines are left running while the vehicle is at a standstill.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Regulation 98 of the Road Vehicles (Construction and Use) Regulations 1986 (SI 1986 No. 1078) already provides that the driver of a vehicle shall, when the vehicle is stationary other than due to the necessities of traffic, stop the action of any machinery attached to or forming part of the vehicle so far as may be necessary for the prevention of noise.

Oil Tankers

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will make it his policy fully to inspect all non-EC registered oil tankers over 10 years old calling at United Kingdom ports;

(2) if he will make it his policy to scrutinise fully the qualifications of officers and crew on all non-EC registered oil tankers calling at United Kingdom ports.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 18 January 1993]: The criteria for inspecting ships under the memorandum of understanding on port state control (MOU) are agreed by all the signatories. They are amended from time to time in the light of experience and are continually under review.

It would not necessarily be the best use of resources to inspect all non-EC tankers over 10 years old calling at United Kingdom ports, or to make a full scrutiny of the qualifications of the officers and crew an automatic duty for a surveyor conducting such an inspection.

Inspections do include operational aspects which enables the surveyor to "look behind" the paper qualifications and make some assessment of the abilities of the officers and crew to respond to emergency operations and other duties assigned to them.

Responsibility for standards, both of a ship and a crew, lies primarily with the owner and the flag state, but where a port state inspection reveals deficiencies in crew qualifications the surveyor may detain the vessel until suitably qualified personnel are found.

The United Kingdom has been pursuing the necessity to improve standards of vessels worldwide and will continue to do so. We will be striving to raise crew qualification standards when the standards of training, certification and watchkeeping convention comes up for review at the International Maritime Organisation in March.

EMPLOYMENT

Microfabrication

14. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will estimate the number of people employed in that sector of the electricity industry related to microfabrication.

Mr. McLoughlin: The number of employees in the microfabrication sector of the electricity industry is not separately identifiable.

Young People (Nottinghamshire)

15. Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what new measures she plans to help young people in north Nottinghamshire to find employment.

Mr. McLoughlin: The local employment service and North Notts training and enterprise council deliver a wide range of employment, enterprise and training programmes to help young unemployed people in the area find the best and quickest route to employment.

Training and Enterprise Councils

16. Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the budgets of training and enterprise councils in the north in the last financial year.

Mr. McLoughlin: The budgets of training and enterprise councils in the north in the last financial year amounted to £596 million.

19. Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will increase Government support for the training and enterprise councils.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Training and enterprise councils' budgets for next year will be broadly in line in cash terms with the planned expenditure for this year. They will have sufficient resources to carry out the objectives agreed in their business plan.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations she has received regarding the level of reserves held by TECs.

Mr. McLoughlin: I have received only one previous question on the matter, from my hon. Friend himself.

Working Time

17. Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment she has made of the effect of the working time directive on jobs and economic activity in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No directive has yet been adopted. Unnecessary and complex restrictions on working time can only damage the competitive position of British employers and undermine long-term employment prospects.

Employment Service

18. Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will make a statement on the work of the employment service to help the unemployed.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The employment service provides a wide range of services to help unemployed people find work, including placing them in jobs and referring them to training and other programmes. Over a million opportunities will be available in 1993-94. It also pays unemployment benefits to people who are entitled to them.

Check-off

20. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations she has received on the rights of trade union members on check-off.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. Friend has received a number of representations on the subject of check-off. Proposals in the Trade Union Reform and Employment Rights Bill will protect the rights of trade union members by ensuring that check-off deductions cannot be made from their wages without their express knowledge and consent.

Acquired Rights

21. Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will make a statement about implementation of the EC directive on acquired rights.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The directive was implemented by the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981. The Government doubt whether the directive is compatible with the principles of subsidiarity and it will certainly be among those directives which the Government will continue to question as the subsidiarity exercise develops. In addition, the Government will press in any negotiations for the revision of the directive to make it absolutely clear that the directive does not cover the contracting out of services where no business is transferred.

As long as the directive remains in force, however, the Government must ensure that United Kingdom law implements it fully. Clause 26 of the Trade Union Reform and Employment Rights Bill, now in Committee, makes some minor amendments to the regulations to ensure this. These amendments do not change the fact that the regulations apply only if an undertaking is transferred as a going concern. This has always been, and will continue to be, the test of whether or not the regulations apply.

Labour Statistics

22. Ms. Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the current unemployment figures for the north-west.

Mr. McLoughlin: In November 1992 seasonally adjusted claimant unemployment in the north west was 329,100 or 10·8 per cent. of the work force.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was (a) the total number of people registered as unemployed in the London borough of Wandsworth and (b) the total number of job vacancies registered in the London borough of Wandsworth on 11 January.

Mr. McLoughlin: The latest available data relate to 12 November 1992 for claimant unemployment and 6 November 1992 for unfilled vacancies at jobcentres. On these respective dates there were 18,334 claimant unemployed in the London borough of Wandsworth, and 136 unfilled vacancies at jobcentres covering the Wandsworth area.

Simple comparisons between the unemployment figures for a local area and the equivalent vacancy figures can be misleading because the coverage of jobcentre vacancies can vary between different occupations and different areas. Within any one area there is not necessarily a match between the location and skills of the unemployed and the location and nature of the vacancies available.

Manufacturing Industry

23. Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will make a statement about unemployment levels in the north-west in the manufacturing sector.

Mr. McLoughlin: It is estimated from the labour force survey that in the summer of 1992, 72,000 unemployed people in the north west had last worked in manufacturing.

Weymouth and Dorchester

24. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will make a statement on work being undertaken by her Department in the Weymouth and Dorchester travel-to-work area over the next five years.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Department will continue to provide a full range of employment, training and enterprise measures to help unemployed people in the area as elsewhere.

Job Creation

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many new jobs have been created in the London area in the past five years; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: Information on job losses and job gains is not collected. Between September 1987 and September 1992 there was a net decrease in the civilian work force in employment in Greater London of 436,000 or 11·1 per cent.

Press Office

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many staff were employed by her Department's press office in each year since 1979.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 15 January 1993]: The information requested is given in the table:

	Number
1979-80 to 1985-86	Not available
1986-87	8
1987-88	9
1988-89	9
1989-90	17
1990-91	17
1991-92	14
1992-93	14

Figures for 1986-87, 1987-88 and 1988-89 are for the Department's press office only. The Department's press office was merged with the Training Agency press office in November 1989 and the figures from 1989-90 onwards reflect this.

WALES

Teacher Training

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many entrants for initial teacher training last year undertook a period of pupilage, or other work with children, before starting their courses; what percentage of all students this was; and what contribution his Department has made to encourage this practice;

(2) how many schools, counted separately, in the primary, secondary and special education sectors, offer pupilage to prospective initial teacher training students; and what is the percentage of schools involved;

(3) how long a period of pupilage in a school lasts, on average; what are the longest and shortest periods of time; and what advice is given by his Department to encourage high quality student experience.

Sir Wyn Roberts: This information is not held centrally. The Government have given financial support to a number of "taster courses" in Wales providing school experience for people who are interested in teaching.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement about the way in which initial teacher training establishments are selecting applicants on the basis of their personal qualities for effective classroom management and for relating well to children, the way in which his Department is contributing to more effective selection procedures and the number and percentage of applicants who are not accepted for initial teacher training.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The criteria for the approval of initial teacher training courses require institutions to ensure that entrants to teacher training have the necessary personal qualities for the profession, including an ability to manage and to get on well with children. No one can be accepted on to an ITT course without being interviewed.

The number of applicants not accepted on to ITT courses in England and Wales in 1992 were, for undergraduate courses, around 9,900—39 per cent. of applicants—and for postgraduate courses around 8,800 —35 per cent. of applicants.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps have been taken in the last two years to promote multicultural awareness and equal opportunities in schools and initial teacher training establishments.

Sir Wyn Roberts: In the last two years the Government have continued the phased introduction of the national curriculum, which is designed to challenge and stimulate all pupils whatever their ethnic or cultural origin. The Curriculum Council for Wales and the Schools Examination and Assessment Council, which advise my right hon. Friend on the curriculum and assessment, are required in exercising their functions to take account of the ethnic and cultural diversity of society in Wales and the importance of promoting equal opportunities for all pupils regardless of ethnic origin and gender. The Government are also proposing to strengthen religious education, which provides opportunities to study other faiths and cultures and develop greater tolerance and understanding.

The criteria for the approval of courses of initial teacher training include a requirement that they should help student teachers to develop an awareness of individual differences, including social and cultural dimensions. We have encouraged the development of ITT courses for people from ethnic minority communities.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of teacher training courses in developing group management skills; and if he considers further specific measures are needed in this regard;

(2) what assessment he has made in the last two years of the effectiveness of basic counselling skills for students in initial teacher training establishments; and how many establishments have been studied for this purpose.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The criteria for the approval of courses of initial teacher training require that students should be trained both in the effective management of groups of pupils and in the pastoral skills required to interact well with individual children. HMI, in its inspection of all ITT courses in Wales, and the Council for the Accreditation of Teacher Education in its scrutiny of all course proposals have collected evidence of the satisfactory compliance of the institutions with these criteria.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of those involved in the provision of teacher training in determining whether potential teachers have the ability to relate well to pupils.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Higher education institutions are required to interview all students they admit to courses of initial teacher training. Assessment of students' ability to relate well to children is done during that interview and as part of the assessment of the student's teaching practice. We have not made a specific assessment of how institutions undertake this task.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of initial teacher training establishments in introducing students to the concept of peer support and its uses.

Sir Wyn Roberts: We have not made an assessment of peer support within initial teacher training courses in Wales. The use of group work is a feature of all ITT courses in institutions in Wales and teaching practice guidance includes the expectation that students should employ various strategies, including group work, in their work with pupils.

Pupil Behaviour

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales since 1990-91 how much money under the grants for education support and training scheme has been allocated to programmes dealing with the management of pupil behaviour; and what percentage of overall funding this is.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The following sums have been specifically allocated to programmes within GEST aimed at improving support services for the most difficult pupils and for training to help improve teachers' practical skills in managing pupil behaviour:

	£	Percentage of total GEST funding
1990-91	280,600	1·2
1991-92	289,200	1·2
1992-93	233,000	0·8
TOTAL	802,800	1·0

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many local education authorities provide midday supervisors and other non-teaching staff with training in the management of pupils' behaviour; and what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of this training.

Sir Wyn Roberts: This information is not available centrally. No assessment of such training has been undertaken by the Department.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of local education authorities in promoting better co-ordination between various local agencies dealing with pupils with behaviour or attendance problems and their families.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Effective liaison with other agencies is an essential element in dealing with pupils with behaviour or attendance problems and its importance is stressed in much of the guidance produced on the Children Act 1989. The Department issued guidance in 1991 drawing attention to the need for statutory and non-statutory bodies to collaborate in order to secure the successful implementation of the Act.

The Department has agreed to contribute financially to a cities in schools initiative that has been established in Gwent to help combat truancy and to improve the quality of life for young people in the area.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what research his Department has sponsored in the last two years on the implications for pupil behaviour of arranging pupils in groups for teaching purposes; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: None. The behaviour implications of grouping pupils for teaching purposes were, however, discussed in the Elton report into discipline in schools.

Articled Teachers

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people have become articled teachers since the inception of the scheme; and in what sectors and subjects.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Sixteen students are currently being trained under the Clwyd local education authority articled teacher scheme. Of these 16 students, five are training to become primary teachers and the remaining 11 are being trained for the secondary phase. A breakdown of the subject specialisms of the secondary students, is as follows:

Subject	Number of Students
Mathematics	2
Chemistry	2
Biology	2
Welsh	4
English	1

The students are due to complete their training at the end of the current academic year.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of in-service training for articled teachers; and what percentage have withdrawn from the scheme since its inception.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Only one local education authority in Wales has adopted an articled teacher scheme. The students involved have yet to complete their training. OHMCI is scrutinising the scheme and will come to a conclusion on its effectiveness at the end of the period of training. Of the 17 students who started the course, one has withdrawn from the scheme.

New Teachers

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of local education authority induction programmes for new teachers.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Induction programmes are assessed within inspections carried out by Her Majesty's inspector of schools, whose reports I see.

Induction training funded under the grants for education support and training programme is assessed and taken account of in the consideration of LEA applications for GEST grant. Greater priority to improving induction training was given in the 1992-93 GEST programme. In addition I am funding a research project at University college of Wales, Swansea, aimed at developing guidance on induction programmes for schools in Wales.

Intervention Powers

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many local education authorities have used their powers of intervention under section 28 of the Education (No. 2) Act 1986; and on how many occasions.

Sir Wyn Roberts: This information is not available centrally.

Teacher Recruitment

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he is taking to encourage the recruitment of teachers from minority ethnic backgrounds; and what success has been achieved in the last two years.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The Government have adopted a range of measures to encourage people from ethnic minority backgrounds to consider a career in the teaching profession. They include teaching as a career, publications, advertising, participation at careers events, stimulating the development of special access courses, and supporting relevant local projects.

The Government introduced ethnic monitoring of teachers in January 1990 following recommendation by the Swann committee, but the quality of the response from local education authorities and grant-maintained schools so far has been poor. As a result it is not yet possible to draw conclusions about the percentage of teachers in Wales who are from ethnic minorities, nor to identify improvements over the last two years.

Management Training (Senior Teachers)

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of management training programmes for head teachers and other senior staff.

Sir Wyn Roberts: It is for individual schools and teachers to decide which training programmes can most effectively meet their particular needs.

The Department has helped by supporting the development and assessment of a number of new management training initiatives in recent years. A survey of overall provision for school management training was commissioned in 1989 to guide and support the work of the school management task force. This work is being taken forward in Wales by Wales Officers and Advisers Development, a consortium set up by Welsh local education authorities.

The office of her Majesty's chief inspector of schools in Wales has responsibility for inspecting the training of teachers including management training programmes.

Records of Achievement

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of of records of achievement in giving due weight to a wide range of pupil achievements and personal qualities.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The national record of achievement is an effective summary for school-leavers to take forward to further education and working life. Recent evaluation has shown that take-up of the NRA among schools has been high. I attach significant value to the continued use of the NRA. That is why regulations governing reports on pupils' achievements which are to be laid before Parliament shortly will require schools in Wales to use the NRA format to provide a specified minimum of information for school-leavers. Copies of the regulations and an explantory circular will be placed in the Library of the House.

Supply Teachers

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many local education authorities provide in-service training in classroom management for supply teachers.

Sir Wyn Roberts This information is not held centrally.

Teaching Skills

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of staff providing training in teaching skills have had at least one term's regular teaching experience in the last five years.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The criteria for the accreditation of initial teacher training includes the requirement that, from the beginning of the current academic year, all staff at institutions who are concerned with training students in teaching skills must have had at least one term's experience of teaching in school in the previous five years. OHMCI monitor courses regularly to ensure that institutions comply with this requirement.

School Bullying

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps have been taken by his Department to overcome bullying and racial harassment in schools.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Bullying and racial harassment are serious matters and we expect schools to deal firmly with them when they arise. While there is no evidence to suggest that racial harassment is a problem in schools in Wales, I am aware of incidents of bullying. To emphasise the importance of firm action against bullying, the Department has sent copies of the information and guidance pack "Action against Bullying" and of a booklet produced by the South Glamorgan Institute of Higher Education to all schools in Wales. In addition, the office of Her Majesty's chief inspector of schools in Wales has been asked to ensure that all inspecting teams appointed under the Education (Schools) Act 1992 pay particular attention to the arrangements for securing good discipline and behaviour.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many cases of bullying have been reported in each local education authority in the primary, secondary and special education sectors in each of the last three years; and what percentage of those cases were racially motivated.

Sir Wyn Roberts: This information is not available centrally.

Charcoal Dressings

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will ensure that pensioners at home suffering from cancer with fungating wounds can use charcoal dressings on prescription for use by district nurses in the community;

(2) if he will review the type and nature of dressings supplied on prescription for cancer sufferers living at home.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Additions to the GP prescribable list, such as new dressings, must be subject to the availability of resources. Dressings prescribed by a consultant for a patient discharged into the community, and not available on the GP prescribable list, are the responsibility of the provider unit; that is, directly managed unit or NHS trust.

Cancer Patients

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the number of people suffering from cancer receiving care in their homes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: This information is not available centrally.

One of the major strategic aims of the NHS in Wales is to bring health care closer to a patient's home. Our emphasis is on health gain and we wish to see an increase in the quality of life for people with cancer. I am pleased that health authorities are addressing these issues.

Difficult Pupils

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the provision that local education authorities make for their most difficult pupils; and how many local education authorities have been studied in this regard.

Sir Wyn Roberts: None. As part of its detailed inquiry into discipline in schools, the Elton committe asked local education authorities about their provision for pupils whose behaviour teachers found most difficult to manage. Their report commented on both the nature and quality of the provision made and has been beneficial to local authorities in helping them to devise strategies for dealing with difficult pupils.

For the future, inspecting teams appointed under the Education (Schools) Act 1992 will pay particular attention to schools' arrangements for securing good discipline and behaviour.

Pupil Exclusions

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the latest information he has concerning the number of indefinite exclusions of pupils from (a) local education authority schools and (b) grant-maintained schools.

Sir Wyn Roberts: This information is not available centrally.

Education (Serious Incident Reporting)

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of local education authorities' serious incident reporting systems.

Sir Wyn Roberts: None. It is for local education authorities to determine what arrangements are most appropriate to enable them to discharge their functions effectively.

River Dee Crossing

Mr. Barry Jones: to ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will meet a deputation of councillors and officials from county and district level concerning the building of the new River Dee crossing.

Mr. David Hunt: Yes.

Discipline in Schools Report

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what action he has taken on recommendation (a) 68 and (b) 69.1, of the Elton report on discipline in schools.

Sir Wyn Roberts: We have issued "Education: A Charter for Parents in Wales" which deals with parental responsibilities as well as their rights. It emphasises the need for parents to support the work of schools in the education of their children.

The Curriculum Council for Wales has issued guidance to schools on the content of family-life education, including education for parenthood, and its place in the wider curriculum.

Education Welfare Officers

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many education welfare officers are employed by each local authority; what is the ratio of officers to pupils in each local education authority; and if he will make a statement about the adequacy of this provision.

Sir Wyn Roberts: This information is not available centrally. It is for each local education authority to determine whether the number of education welfare officers employed is sufficient to enable it to meet its statutory responsibilities.

Classroom Management

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement about the way in which the principles of good classroom management are being implemented by teachers and their trainees; and what contribution his Department has made in this process and to the extent to which implementation has been achieved.

Sir Wyn Roberts: In February last year I launched a debate on classroom organisation and teaching methods in primary schools in Wales. Following extensive consultations with teachers in Wales, the Curriculum Council for Wales issued guidance to primary schools on these issues in November. Good classroom practice is a matter for teachers, headteachers and schools and will continue to be subject to inspection either by Her Majesty's inspectors of schools or by inspectors registered by the office of Her Majesty's chief inspectors of schools from September 1993. The criteria for the approval of courses of initial teacher training require that students should be trained in the effective management of groups of pupils.

School Buildings

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the latest information available to him on the money needed to bring all school buildings into a good state of repair.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The state of repair and management of the local authority estate was addressed in the efficiency initiative. Following the issue of the report of the "Quality Circle" on property review, the authorities were expected to provide reports on their estate holdings, including the education estate, but have not yet done so.

Road Construction and Maintenance

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many miles of motorway in Wales are currently (a) open, (b) under construction and (c) planned in Wales either (i) as completely new motorway or (ii) as existing motorway being widened.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The mileages are as follows:

(a) Open—74 miles.
(b) Under Construction—6 miles.
(c) Planned—19 miles (new motorway) and 8 miles (widening of existing motorway).

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give a breakdown of the planned expenditure on (a) new construction and improvement, (b) structural maintenance and (c) current maintenance on trunk roads by his Department for each year from 1993-94 to 1995-96.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Total planned central Government net expenditure in 1993-94 on the roads and transport programme in Wales is £201·3 million. Further details will be published in "The Government's Expenditure Plans 1993-94 to 1995-96: Departmental Report by the Welsh Office" in February. Planned net expenditure in 1994-95 and 1995-96 is £209·3 million and £219·7 million respectively.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the numbers and locations of (1) the (a) primary and (b) secondary schools in Wales which have opted out of local education authority control; and if he will make a statement;

(2) the (a) primary and (b) secondary schools in Wales which have applied to opt out of local education authority control; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Twelve schools have to date published proposals to become grant maintained. They are:

(a) PRIMARY SCHOOLS
- Cefnpennar Infants, Mid Glamorgan
- Llanerfyl, Powys
- Caergeiliog, Gwynedd
- Derwen, Clwyd
- Penybryn, Clwyd

(b) SECONDARY SCHOOLS
- Queens, Gwent
- Cwmcarn, Gwent
- Bishop Vaughan, West Glamorgan
- Brynmawr, Gwent
- Emrys ap Iwan, Clwyd
- Maelor, Clwyd
- Stanwell, South Glamorgan

Of these, the applications from Cwmcarn, Brynmawr, Bishop Vaughan, and Emrys ap Iwan schools have been approved for grant-maintained status and those from Queens and Cefnpennar have been rejected.

Proposals from the other six schools are currently before me for decision and I hope to make announcements on them soon.

River Corring (Pollution)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment has been made of the pollution caused from the spoil from the Nantewlaeth reclamation scheme discharging into the River Corring in the Aran valley following flooding.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The National Rivers Authority undertook a visual assessment following the pollution incident which affected the Rivers Corrwg and Afan on 30 November 1992. This found siltation of the river gravels and a corresponding smothering of fish spawning reeds. A survey of the effect of this incident on fish populations will be undertaken by the authority later this year.

Assisted Places Scheme

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish the amount of money given under the assisted places scheme to each of the private schools of Wales in each of the years from the schemes inception up to the latest possible year; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The information requested is as follows:

Labour Statistics

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many economically active males there were in each district in (a) 1987 and (b) 1991; what percentage those numbers represented of the population of each district; and what was the percentage change in the number of economically active males in each district between 1987 and 1991.

Mr. David Hunt: The number of economically active males and the percentage they represent of the male population of working age are given for 1986 and 1991 in the following table. Data for 1987 are not available. The percentage change between the two years is not shown as the sources used for the data are not strictly comparable.

Roads Department (Wildlife Protection)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures his Roads Department has taken and will take to minimise disturbance to badgers and other wildlife; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The provision of badger-proof fencing, badger crossings and gates, together with the relocation of setts are among steps that are, or may be, taken, depending on the particular circumstances. Mitigating measures for other wildlife are subject to the species involved.

The Department's highways directorate recognises the need to mitigate and minimise the effects of road construction on wildlife and will continue to pursue that objective.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the budget for the programme for environmentally sensitive areas in each year since 1985; and what the budget will be in each year for the next three years.

Mr. David Hunt: The first environmentally sensitive area in Wales—the Cambrian mountains (original)—was not designated until 1 March 1987. The Cambrian mountains (extension) and Lleyn peninsula ESAs were designated on 1 January 1988. I intend to designate four further ESAs—Anglesey, Radnor, Preseli and the Clwydian range—during 1993. Actual and estimated Welsh ESA payments to farmers are set out in the following table:

Year	[1]£m
1987-88	0·02 (actual)
1988-89	0·37 (actual)

Notes:
[1] The figures have been rounded.
[2] Actual 1992-93 expenditure will be published in the 1992 Appropriation Accounts.
[3] The 1993-94 provision will be published in the 1993-94 Main Supply Estimate Class XV Vote 2. The provision for 1994-95 and 1995-96 will also be published in the Main Supply Estimate for those years.

Special Education

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how special education will be regarded under the proposed system of unitary authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Special education will continue to be treated as a matter of high priority under the new structure of local government. The local education authority will retain responsibility for assessing, and making appropriate provision for, children with special education needs.

National Biodiversity Plan

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to develop a national biodiversity plan for Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The action plan on biodiversity is being prepared on a UK-wide basis, but the Welsh Office and the Countryside Council for Wales are, of course, being closely consulted.

National Museum

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what were the attendance figures for 1992 reported by the national museum of Wales, including its outstations; and what was the percentage change compared with the attendance figures for 1991.

Sir Wyn Roberts: A total of 867,943 people visited the national museum of Wales during 1992, an increase of 27 per cent. over the attendance reported for 1991.

Farm Incomes

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what has been the level of farm incomes in (a) less favoured areas, (b) disadvantaged areas and (c) severely disadvantaged areas, in cash terms and real terms in each year since 1982.

Mr. David Hunt: The information is available in this form only since 1985-86 and is as follows:

Housing

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of the Welsh housing budget was used to fund the tenants' cash incentive scheme in the last financial year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: In 1991-92, resources amounting to £200,000 were made available for tenants' cash incentive schemes. This represents 0·038 per cent. of the total Welsh Office provision for housing amounting to £527 million for that year.

Welsh Development Agency

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what account was taken of the legal action being taken against Dr. Roy Bichan in the United States when he appointed him deputy chairman of the Welsh Development Agency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I take full account of all available information in making appointments.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much of the Welsh Development Agency's technology growth fund budget—allocated funds has been spent since being set up (i) in cash terms each year, (ii) as a percentage of the Welsh Development Agency's total budget and (iii) as a percentage of Welsh Development Agency's international budget.

Mr. David Hunt: This is a matter for the Welsh Development Agency. I have arranged for the chief executive of the agency to write to the hon. Gentleman and for a copy of his response to be printed in the Official Report.

Letter from Philip J. Head to Mr. Ron Davies, dated 7 January 1993:

In response to the above question I am pleased to enclose the information you requested concerning the Agency's Technology Growth Fund.

The Agency is, of course, involved in promoting the use of technology and technology related investment through both its Business Services and Welsh Development International divisions. In the Business Services Division alone some £1·3 million of expenditure was directly related to these activities in the 1991-92 financial year.

Please let me know if you require any further information.

Cereal Crop

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the level of cereal crop production in Wales in 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: According to the cereal production survey conducted during September 1992, the production of cereal crops in Wales for the 1992 harvest was as follows:

Wheat	80 thousand tonnes
Winter barley	90 thousand tonnes
Spring barley	80 thousand tonnes
Oats	20 thousand tonnes
Triticale	1 thousand tonnes

Roads

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when work to improve the A483 Welshpool to Shropshire borders road is due to commence; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The A483 Pant-Llanymynech bypass scheme is expected to start in the medium term, between April 1995 and March 1998.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when the consultants for the Newton bypass will be appointed; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Consultants are expected to be appointed in spring 1993.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received in relation to the possibility of trunking the South Glamorgan peripheral distributor road; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: I am aware of no such representations.

Council Rents

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the average rent of council homes in Wales for each year since 1979 adjusted for rises in inflation.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The average rents of council homes set by local authorities are given in the following table:

Farm Incomes

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the average income of hill sheep farmers in Wales in each of the past five years; and what are the projected levels for the present and the coming financial years, taking into account any changes to the grant system.

Mr. David Hunt: Average incomes of hill and upland sheep farms for each of the years 1987-88, 1988-89 and 1989-90 are as follows:

1987-88	9,380
1988-89	15,283
1989-90	9,468

Figures for 1990-91 and 1991-92 together with income forecast for 1992-93 are at table 14 of the statistical tables prepared in connection with the 1992 autumn review of hill livestock compensatory allowances. A copy is available in the Library of the House. Forecasts are not yet available for the coming financial year but it is presently estimated that the net effect of the increase in sheep annual premium payments, including the less-favoured area supplement, as the result of green pound devaluations, together with HLCA payment reductions will represent an enhancement of about £10·0 million in total Welsh LFA sheep producer incomes.

Operation Wizard

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 14 January, Official Report, column 771, under what statutory powers the Operation Wizard consultancy exercise was authorised; if prior authorisation was agreed by his Department before each of the consultants was engaged; if the choice of consultants followed an open advertisement and competition relating to a published brief; if he will publish a full list of the consultancy companies and partnerships engaged; and on what date each of them started and completed their work.

Mr. David Hunt: The agency has wide-ranging powers under the Welsh Development Agency Act 1975 which includes powers to commission studies in relation to the discharge of its functions. Within the guidelines set out in the financial memorandum, day-to-day management, including the use of consultants, is a matter for the agency. In awarding contracts, the agency is required to have regard to best practice and value for money.

Cardiff Bay Barrage

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what negotiations he has had with his counterparts in the European Commission concerning the principle of and level of European regional development fund grant for the proposed Cardiff bay barrage.

Mr. David Hunt: None.

Welsh Council for Voluntary Action

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the Welsh Council for Voluntary Action concerning the grant aid for volunteering in the next financial year; what evaluation he has made of the consequences of grant aid settlement on the level and quality of volunteering activity; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Welsh Office officials are in regular contact with the Wales Council for Voluntary Action about many matters concerning the voluntary sector, but there has been no specific consultation concerning grant-aid for volunteering in 1993-94. The WCVA has responsibility for administering the volunteering in Wales fund and were awarded £215,000 by the Department in 1992-93 for distribution to eligible projects which promote volunteering. Resources for the VIWF, along with all other applications from Welsh generalist intermediary bodies, including the WCVA itself, are being considered in the light of the total resources available for 1993-94. I expect to be in a position to make an announcement in February 1993.

Search and Rescue

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on how many occasions during each of the last five years the search and rescue helicopter squadron has been called out to deal with reported emergencies in and around the Ceredigion and Pembroke North constituency.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have been asked to reply. Statistical data are not recorded in the form requested.

DEFENCE

Search and Rescue

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many offshore emergency incidents have been dealt with by the search and rescue helicopter squadron at RAF Brawdy in each of the last five years; and how many such incidents have involved the winching of firefighters to stricken vessels.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The table gives the number of offshore emergency incidents dealt with by the search and rescue flight at RAF Brawdy over the past five years. Statistical data are not held on the number of incidents involving the winching of firefighters.

Year	Callouts	Persons Rescued
1988	71	53
1989	66	38
1990	62	97
1992	63	15

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the bases for search and rescue helicopter squadrons within the United Kingdom which have closed during the last 10 years, indicating the average response time to coastal and offshore emergencies (a) within a radius of 25 miles, (b) 50 miles, (c) 75 miles, (d) 100 miles and (e) 150 miles from the base both (i) prior to and (ii) following the removal of the service from the vicinity.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No bases with search and rescue helicopters have closed in the last 10 years.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what research has been undertaken by his Department to date concerning the effect of the removal of search and rescue helicopter squadrons upon localised emergency rescue arrangements.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The new basing structure for the RAF search and rescue helicopter force took into account, and will very largely meet, the established civil SAR criteria.

Western European Union

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations his Department had at the most recent part-session of the Assembly of Western European Union.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence gave an address to the Western European Union assembly on 1 December 1992, during the second part of its 38th ordinary session. Officials from my Department attended for part of the session.

Chemical and Biological Weapons

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will set out the reason for withholding papers on chemical and biological weapons, and the authority of command of nuclear weapons, beyond 30 years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Those Ministry of Defence papers which are not already open continue to be withheld from the public domain under the criteria of the Public Records Acts for reasons such as national security. They will be progressively released as their sensitivity lapses.

Nuclear Proliferation

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list (a) all measures taken by his Department in the last 12 months to prevent nuclear proliferation, (b) the number of personnel in his Department working to prevent nuclear proliferation and (c) his Department's total expenditure on control of nuclear proliferation in each of the last three years for which figures are available.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is Government policy to meet all our obligations under the nuclear non-proliferation treaty and our commitments under the nuclear suppliers group regime. My Department supports fully the Government's efforts to promote effective international controls on nuclear weapon-related and nuclear dual-use exports to help prevent proliferation. A wide range of personnel within my Department work on nuclear non-proliferation-related matters; the direct costs of pursuing this policy are not separately identifiable.

AWRE Aldermaston

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what projects are currently under way at the atomic weapons research establishment, Aldermaston; what work is planned to finish within the next year; what new projects are planned for the establishment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: We are committed to maintaining the United Kingdom's minimum nuclear deterrent. The atomic weapons establishment has a complex and continuing programme of work in fulfilment of this policy, including support for in-service weapons, the Trident programme, and preliminary work towards a possible replacement for the WE177 free-fall nuclear bomb.

Bosnia

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to strengthen the rules of engagement for the British troops in Bosnia; and if he will make it his policy that they will have the means to protect themselves with all the appropriate light weapons and radar-seeking missiles being made available on HMS Ark Royal.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Rules of engagement governing the use of force by the British battalion group carrying out its humanitarian role in Bosnia already provide satisfactorily for our troops to respond in self-defence, with the means available to them, to any attacks. In his statement on 14 January, Official Report, columns 1057-58, my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence said that the forces which are being currently deployed to the Adriatic have been sent as a contingency, to be available to provide additional protection for the battalion group should that be required.

RAF Pilot Training

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proposals he has to review levels of RAF pilot training; whether the future viability of RAF Chivenor is contingent upon a review; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: While there are currently no plans to review RAF training, all aspects of my Department's activities are examined to see what scope exists for making savings on the defence budget. This is done through the annual process of re-costing the defence programme. It would not be appropriate for me to comment on what the results of this or subsequent years' examinations may be for individual capabilities or establishments.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowances

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the net effect on Exmoor farming incomes of changes he proposes to hill livestock compensatory allowances for the next year.

Mr. Curry: The conditions of the HLCA scheme are determined on the basis of national statistical data and it is not possible to measure the impact on different localities. I have no reason to believe conditions for farmers in Exmoor are materially different from those obtaining elsewhere in the less favoured areas in England. The HLCA reductions were taken in the light of increased incomes in the hill sheep sector and will in any case be more than offset by increases in ewe premium payments next April resulting from green pound devaluations and decisions taken at the December Agriculture Council.

Farm Income

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will estimate the level of average net farm income at constant prices for (a) England, (b) Wales, (c) Scotland and (d) Northern Ireland in 1992, 1993 and 1994.

Mr. Curry: Provisional estimates of net farm income in 1992 will be published shortly. Estimates for 1993 and 1994 income levels are not available.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the level of farm incomes in (a) less-favoured areas, (b) disadvantaged areas and (c) severely disadvantaged areas, in cash terms and real terms in each year since 1982.

Mr. Curry: Year by year comparisons can best be made by reference to results from a constant sample of farms. The following table shows indices of net farm income in nominal and real terms for each year from 1982-83 to 1992-93 on farms in the United Kingdom's less favoured areas and estimated income levels for the latest available constant sample. The information given takes no account of the impact of the recent green pound devaluations. Sheep farmers in the less favoured areas can expect an additional total subsidy of at least £1·80 per ewe in respect of 1992.

Advisory Committees

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the organisations represented on each of his Department's advisory committees.

Mr. Gummer: The following table lists the organisations which have formal representation on each advisory body given in the annual "Public Bodies" publication, the latest edition of which relates to 1991 and is available from the Library of the House.

However for the majority of the bodies' members are appointed on the basis of their personal expertise rather than because of the organisation by which they are employed.

Wild-caught Birds

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will introduce limits on consignment size for the importation of wild-caught birds to fewer than 100 birds into the United Kingdom; and if he will press for this limit to be applied in the new EC transport directive.

Mr. Soames: We are pursuing proposals for limiting the size of consignments of wild birds with the International Air Transport Association, whose Live Animal Regulations are now mandatory under Community law. We are also pressing the European Commission to introduce proposals for further specific measures on wild birds under the directive on the protection of animals during transport.

Fisheries Inspectors

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what access British fisheries inspectors have to all ships registered in Britain; and when they last inspected the British-registered fishing fleet based in La Coruna in northern Spain.

Mr. Curry: British sea fisheries officers have powers to inspect all United Kingdom and foreign-registered fishing vessels in British ports and at sea within British fishery limits.

United Kingdom-registered ships that are over 10 m in length and land less than 50 per cent. of their catch in the United Kingdom are required to make at least four pre-notified visits to British ports in each six month period (January-June and July-December). Subject to other priority work, British sea fisheries officers check such vessels on these visits. In addition, they are subject to inspections at sea by the United Kingdom fisheries protection service.

Milk Quotas

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what restrictions exist in the market in milk quotas across the United Kingdom.

Mr. Curry: Under the EC milk quota regulations the permanent transfer of quota is linked to land transactions. Detailed rules governing the transfer of quota are contained in the Dairy Produce Quotas Regulations 1991. Under these regulations wholesale quota which accounts for about 97 per cent. of milk produced in the United Kingdom is managed on a regional basis in the United Kingdom. This means that it may be transferred only within each of the eight regions which are defined under the regulations. England and Wales and the Scilly Isles are defined as one region; so too is Northern Ireland; and there are six regions in Scotland. Direct sales quota is required by EC rules to be managed on a national basis, so transfers are not subject to similar regional restrictions.

New EC regulations will govern milk quota administration from 1 April 1993. We will be revising the United Kingdom DPQR once the new EC detailed rules have been agreed.

Poultry Meat Inspection Charges

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether poultry meat inspection charges are levied at the same rate across the United Kingdom.

Mr. Soames: The Fresh Meat and Poultry Meat (Hygiene, Inspection and Examinations for Residues) (Charges) Regulations 1990 (SI 1990 No. 2494) require local authorities to charge for health inspection at poultry meat plants. Subject to compliance with the detailed provisions of the regulations, local authorities are entitled to recover the real costs incurred in carrying out the inspection.

The Department carried out a detailed review of meat inspection charges in early 1992 which revealed that inspection charges varied considerably across the country. My right hon. Friend the Minister placed summary statistics collected during this review in the Library of the House in June 1992. (Hansard cols. 16-17, 8 June 1992.)

Bovine Tuberculosis

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what scientific evidence he has concerning the spread of bovine TB from badgers to cattle.

Mr. Soames: Experimental control areas in Dorset and Gloucestershire, set up in 1975, provided evidence of the causal link between infection in badgers and cattle herds. Two independent reports, by Lord Zuckerman in 1980 and Professor Dunnet in 1986, concluded from the evidence obtained under laboratory conditions at the central veterinary laboratory and from the field that badgers can and do harbour bovine tuberculosis and represent a potential threat to cattle. All cattle tuberculosis breakdowns are the subject of detailed epidemiological investigation by MAFF veterinary staff. These show that badgers are implicated in at least three-quarters of cattle herd tuberculosis breakdowns in the south-west of England.

Farm Support

Mr. Jopling: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many farmers are in receipt of support in the less favoured areas, split into those in the severely disadvantaged areas and those in the disadvantaged areas; and what is the average amount of support which each receive under each form of support from public funds.

Mr. Curry: The information requested in respect of livestock subsidies in the United Kingdom is as follows:

Type of support	Number of claimants (thousands)		Average payment at 1992 rates
	SDA	DA	SDA	DA
Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowances Scheme	51	16	£2,250	£690
Sheep Annual Premium Scheme		51		£5,900
Suckler Cow Premium Scheme		35		£2,600

The number of claimants does not equate precisely with the number of farmers receiving support because some claims are submitted by groups of farmers. For the sheep annual premium scheme and the suckler cow premium scheme information is available only for the less favoured areas: it is not possible to distinguish between payments made in relation to the severely disadvantaged areas and the disadvantaged areas.

Myxomatosis

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the availability of vaccine against myxomatosis in pet and commercially farmed rabbits.

Mr. Soames: In April 1992 the only United Kingdom product licence for a myxomatosis vaccine was surrendered by its holder. As a result no further supplies of vaccine were available once existing stocks held by veterinary practitioners were used up. Following informal discussions between the veterinary medicines directorate and vaccine manufacturers, and representations by rabbit keepers to the pharmaceutical industry, an application has recently been received from Intervet (UK) Ltd to licence a replacement vaccine. The data supporting the application are being assessed as rapidly as possible against the standard Medicines Act criteria of safety, quality and efficacy.

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the effect of the abolition of monetary compensatory amounts on inflation in British food prices; and what consideration has been given to phasing in the subsequent green pound devaluation.

Mr. Curry: The 7 per cent. devaluation of the green pound agreed at the Agriculture Council in November and three smaller automatic devaluations resulting from realignments within the exchange rate mechanism (ERM) were followed by a 4·4 per cent. devaluation of the United Kingdom green rate on 1 January 1993, to take it within two points of the prevailing market exchange rate in line with the rules of the new agrimonetary system. These green rate changes effectively phased in the adjustment to the new arrangements under which monetary compensatory amounts (MCAs) were abolished. It is estimated that these green pound devaluations may increase food prices by about 2 per cent. once the effects of the increases in common agricultural policy support prices have worked through.

Under the rules of the new system, green rate devaluations (and revaluations) will take place automatically in order to keep green rates closely aligned with market rates. The market exchange rates of the currencies outside the narrow band of the ERM (currently the pound sterling, the lira, the peseta, the escudo and the drachma) will be monitored during three 10-day reference periods each month. A member state's green rate will be adjusted whenever there is a gap of more than two percentage points between green and market rates during the final reference period in a month. There will also be adjustments when the difference between the monetary gaps for any two currencies exceeds four points in any of the three reference periods in a month. Finally, more frequent adjustments can be made to green rates when exchange rates are very volatile.

Agriculture Council

Mr. Peter Atkinson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Agriculture Council held on 18 and 19 January.

Mr. Gummer: I represented the United Kingdom at this quiet meeting of the Council which followed that in December under the United Kingdom presidency when decisions were taken on most outstanding issues.

Discussion concentrated on detailed issues. It was agreed that officials would conduct a technical appraisal of the compatibility of common agriculture policy reform with the draft Uruguay round agreement.

SOCIAL SECURITY

National Insurance

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish figures showing (a) the level of the upper earnings limit for national insurance contributions as a percentage of average earnings in 1978-79, 1992-93 and his projection for 1993-94, (b) the number of additional people with earnings above the national insurance contribution ceiling in 1992-93 and 1993-94 as a result of increases in the upper earnings limit by the level of prices rather than average earnings since 1978-79 and (c) the effect on national insurance revenues in 1992-93 and 1993-94 of increases in the upper earnings limit by the level of prices rather than average earnings since 1978-79.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is in the table.

[4] The estimated effect on NI revenue had the increases in the UEL since 1978-79 been by the level of earnings rather than prices. Includes effects on both employers' and employees' NICs.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish figures showing (a) the level of the lower earnings limit for national insurance contributions as a percentage of average earnings in 1978-79, 1992-93 and his projection for 1993-94, (b) the number of additional people who will pay national insurance contributions in 1992-93 and 1993-94 as a result of increases in the lower earnings limit by the level of prices rather than average earnings since 1978-79 and (c) the effect on national insurance revenues in 1992-93 and 1993-94 of increases in the lower earnings limit by the level of prices rather than average earnings since 1978-79.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is in the table.

War Pensions

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will reconsider his decision to stop awards of war pension for noise-induced hearing loss resulting in under 20 per cent. disablement; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: No, as announced in the reply to the hon. Member for Harlow (Mr. Hayes), 17 December at columns 369-70, full and careful consideration was given to all representations before the decision was taken to proceed with the package of changes which included the introduction of a minimum level of disablement for noise-induced hearing loss.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what information he has on the time taken by local authorities to process housing benefit applications from council and privately renting tenants; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: Regulations provide that authorities should process claims to housing benefit within 14 days of all the necessary information becoming available. If authorities are unable to do this they should make interim payments. Many authorities achieve the target in full. Nationally, in 1991-92, 71 per cent. of new claims from council tenants and 70 per cent. of claims from private tenants were processed within 14 days. For repeat claims the percentages were 83 per cent. and 73 per cent. respectively. All figures are an improvement on the overall figure of two thirds of claims processed within 14 days achieved in 1990-91.

Ms. Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the level of housing benefit to the private sector in (a) 1990-91, (b) 1991-92 and (c) to date in the current year; and what was the average level of benefit in (i) the private sector, (ii) the council sector and (iii) the housing association sector.

Mr. Burt: The available information is set out in the table:

	Amount of rent allowance paid or estimated (£ thousand)	Rent allowance	Average amount (£/week) of rent rebate
1990-91	1,757,071	25·45	19·80
1991-92	2,353,942	32·57	22·76
1992-93	2,883,389	39·02	26·73
	—[1]		—[2]

Notes: Separate information in respect of Housing Associations is not available.

Rent allowance is Housing Benefit paid to the private sector and includes that paid to the housing association sector.
Rent rebate is Housing Benefit paid to the council sector.

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will announce how housing benefit transitional payments will be treated in April.

Mr. Burt: We have always made it clear that housing benefit transitional payments which were introduced in 1988 will be reduced as increases in other benefits make them less necessary. We have, therefore, decided on a flat rate reduction of £1·50 per week in these payments for the year from April 1993. As a result, the vast majority of recipients will still gain overall in cash terms from the April uprating of other social security benefits.

Myalgic Encephalomyelitis

Ms. Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what guidelines have been issued to deal with applicants suffering from myalgic encephalomyelitis applying for disability living allowance.

Mr. Scott: The disability handbook, which helps adjudicating authorities to assess medical evidence, provides information on the likely effects of myalgic encephalomyelitis on a person's care and/or mobility needs.

Income Support

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list by date for the last 12 months, the number of times his Benefit Agency's income support computer has malfunctioned.

Mr. Burt: The administration of income support is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 18 January 1993.

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking if he will list by date for the last 12 months, the number of times his Benefits Agency's Income Support Computer system has malfunctioned.

I am pleased to advise you that the time lost through computer malfunction is minimal. The Income Support Computer Service is available for 122,400 hours a year. Only 0·72 per cent. of computer time was lost in the year ended December 1992. This was a total of 882 hours and 57 minutes.

I have appended, in chronological order, information on the incidents where there has been a loss of the Income Support computer service. The time lost on any date shown is a cumulative total for the number of incidents shown and may represent one or more offices.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report. A copy will also be placed in the Library.

Social Fund

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what was, for each social security office in the United Kingdom, the number of cases in the current financial year where an application for a community care grant met the criteria but the grant was refused because of budgetary constraints;

(2) what was, for each social security office in the United Kingdom, the number of cases in the current financial year where an application for a social fund loan met the criteria but the loan was refused because of budgetary constraints.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Dennis Canavan, dated 18 January 1993:

I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary of State for Social Security about Social Fund applications refused on grounds of budgetary constraints.

Details of loans and grants refused on grounds of insufficient priority by each Benefit Agency District are in the attached annex. The figures are for the period 1 April to 30 November 1992 and are the latest available.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report. A copy will also be placed in the Library.

Disability Allowances

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects the target clearance rates for new claims and reviews of disability living allowance and attendance allowance to be met.

Mr. Scott: The administration of disability living allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Paul Flynn, dated 18 January 1993.

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking when we expect the target clearance rates for new claims and reviews of Disability Living Allowance (DLA) and Attendance Allowance (AA) to be met.

The most recent clearance performances during the month of December are 55 per cent. (DLA) and 54·4 per cent. (AA65+) against targets of 60 per cent. cleared in 30 and 35 days respectively. The numbers of new claims on hand is reducing month by month and we will continue to give detailed management attention to achievement of targets during the remainder of the current financial year.

As far as DLA and AA65+ reviews are concerned, we are recruiting and deploying additional staff at Fylde and elsewhere to deal with the arrears. A profiling exercise is in progress to establish the effect of these extra staff against the backlog of work and expected intake and we will soon be able to predict a date for achievement of clearance targets. I will continue to take a close personal interest in the progress of performance.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report. A copy will also be placed in the Library.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will provide details of the training provided to (a) benefits inquiry line staff and (b) adjudication officers working on disability living allowance and attendance allowance, including the dates and duration of training courses provided on these benefits; what percentage of the annual training budget for these benefits has already been spent; and what plans he has to increase this budget in real terms in the financial year 1993-94 and in subsequent years.

Mr. Scott: The administration of disability living allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Paul Flynn, dated 18 January 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security. You asked for details of training provided to (a) Benefits Inquiry Line staff and (b) adjudication officers working on Disability Living Allowance and Attendance Allowance, including the dates and duration of training courses provided on these benefits; what percentage of the annual training budget for these benefits has already been spent; and what plans he has to increase this budget in real terms in the financial year 1993-94 and in subsequent years.

Initial training for Benefits Inquiry Line staff is covered within a period of 6 weeks. In this time all trainees are given a basic awareness of all Social Security benefits. Further benefits training is given which enables the trainees to calculate comfortably various Social Security benefits, and how to use these calculations. I shall write to you again with details of the dates of these training courses.

In addition to the basic benefits training the advisers training also incorporates:

Disability awareness

Listening in—(trainees listen to calls with an experienced adviser)

Supervised calls—(trainees take first calls with experienced advisers)

Telephone techniques.

A visit to a District office.

Training for Adjudication Officers based on the Fylde DLA Unit began in November 1991. There were approximately 7 courses running at any one time with 12 people on each course between November 1991 and March 1992. The duration of each course is 22 days.

At the Fylde Attendance Allowance Unit (AAU) seven courses were held and were attended by 70 adjudication officers. Six courses of 4 weeks duration were held for existing staff and one course lasting 6 weeks for new entrants. The dates of these courses were

6 January 1992 to 31 January 1992 (2 courses)
17 February 1992 to 13 March 1992
17 February 1992 to 27 March 1992
27 April 1992 to 25 May 1992
7 September 1992 to 2 October 1992
5 October 1992 to 30 October 1992.

Training for adjudication staff for both benefits in the DBCs was mainly undertaken during January, February and March 1992. The courses were held on different dates and locations but were all approximately five weeks in length.

On the question of training budgets, for DLA 73 per cent. of the annual training budget has been spent as at the end of December. For AA this figure is 88 per cent. It is too early to say what the training budget will be for the financial year 1993-94 and subsequent years.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report. A copy will also be placed in the Library.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what is the average number of inquiries received each day on applications for disability living allowance by (a) the hotline established to serve hon. Members and (b) other units of his Department since the benefit was introduced; what is the current backlog of applications for the allowance; what is his target date for clearing this backlog; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what is (a) the target and (b) the average length of time taken to determine an application for the disability living allowance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The administration of disability living allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Paul Flynn, dated 18 January 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security. You asked what is the average number of enquiries received each day on applications Disability Living Allowance by (a) the hotline established to serve honourable Members and (b) other units of his Department since the benefit was introduced; what is the current backlog of applications for the allowance what is his target date for clearing this backlog. You also asked what is (a) the target and (b) the average length of time taken to determine an application for the Disability Living Allowance (DLA).

Significant numbers of individual customers have contacted offices of the Benefits Agency concerning the delay in their payments. Information is not available on the precise number of representations received but I can assure you that we endeavour to answer enquiries as quickly as possible. The average daily number of enquiries received on the hotline established for honourable Members to use is 35. This is over the period 6 July 1992 to 8 January 1993.

On the question of target clearance times I should explain that the Benefits Agency introduced a standard performance measure across benefits some time ago. This is expressed in terms of clearance targets by x per cent. of claims cleared in y days rather than average clearance times as was previously the case. The most recent clearance performances during the month of December are 55 per cent. for DLA and 54·4 per cent. for AA65+ against targets of 60 per cent. cleared in 30 and 35 days respectively.

The numbers of new claims on hand is reducing month by month and we will continue to give detailed management attention to achievement of targets during the remainder of the current financial year. I have expressed my regret for the delays which occurred following the introduction of this new benefit. I am pleased to say that claim levels for Disability Living Allowance have stabilised and work on hand has now reduced to normal levels.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report. A copy will also be placed in the Library.

Fraud Investigators

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people are employed by his Department specifically to investigate fraudulent claims.

Miss Widdecombe: The investigation of social security fraud is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Gordon McMaster, dated 18 January 1993.

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking how many people are employed by his Department specifically to investigate fraudulent claims.

The complement for 1992-93 for staff specifically to investigate fraudulent claims is 2,853, however all staff are expected to identify fraudulent claims and may be involved in an investigation.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report. A copy will also be placed in the Library.

HEALTH

Hospital Closures

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the legal provisions regarding consultations by health authorities and trusts with elected representatives and members of the public on proposals to close hospitals or reduce the numbers of beds in hospitals.

Dr. Mawhinney: Health authorities are required to consult their local community health council (CHC) or councils when substantial changes in local services are under consideration. There is no similar requirement for national health service trusts to consult CHCs. However, as a matter of course, NHS trusts discuss proposed service changes with their purchasers. If appropriate, the health authority would then consult the relevant CHC.

Skin and Allergic Disorders

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will estimate the annual cost to the national health service for prescribed drugs in the categories (a) drugs acting on the skin and (b) drugs for allergic disorders;

(2) how many people were using national health service prescribed drugs as (a) drugs acting on the skin and (b) drugs for allergic reactions.

Dr. Mawhinney: Information is not available on the number of people using national health service prescribed drugs which act on the skin and for allergic disorders. The number of prescriptions dispensed in England in 1991 for drugs in these categories and the relevant net ingredient cost is as shown.

	Prescriptions (thousands)	Net ingredient cost (£ thousands)
Drugs acting on the skin	28,255	108,383
Drugs for allergic disorders	5,519	22,637

The figures include prescriptions dispensed by community pharmacists and dispensing doctors and prescriptions submitted by prescribing doctors for items personally administered.

Community Supervision Orders

Ms. Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people she expects to become subject to a community supervision order in 1993.

Mr. Yeo: No decision has been taken to introduce a community supervision order for psychiatric patients. The case for this is one of the issues to be considered by the official team referred to in the reply my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State gave my hon. Friend the Member for Canterbury (Mr. Brazier) on 13 January at column 731.

Mental Illness

Ms. Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her estimate of the timing and costs of full implementation of the care programme policy for mentally ill people, including the costs of necessary psychiatric services.

Mr. Yeo: We required all district health authorities to implement fully the care programme approach from 1 April 1991 and we have received assurances from regional health authorities that this has been done. The Department and the regional health authorities are monitoring progress.

The introduction of the care programme approach in itself imposed no new costs on either health or local authorities as it embodied existing good professional practice.

Ms. Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what steps she is taking to monitor the application of section 117 of the Mental Health Act 1983;

(2) how many people are subject to the provisions of section 117 of the Mental Health Act 1983; and what is the current cost of its implementation for each regional health authority.

Mr. Yeo: The implementation of section 117 of the Act is reviewed by the Mental Health Act Commission as part of its programme of visits to health and social services. In its fourth biennial report, published in December 1991, the commission reported that most health authorities and social services departments had completed their policies and procedures for the implementation of section 117.

The services which this section of the Act requries authorities to provide for formerly detained patients form part of the general provision of services for mentally ill people in the community and we do not collect separate figures about them. Under the care programme approach introduced in April 1991 all patients using these services, whether or not they have been detained in hospitals, are required to have an individual care programme and a named key worker.

Blyth Valley (Patient Numbers)

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the number of patients per general practice in Blyth Valley.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information requested is shown in the table.

Practice	List size
1	12,656
2	12,645
3	12,356
4	8,822
5	6,867

Creutzfeldt Jakob Disease

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessments have been undertaken of the number of patients potentially contaminated with Creutzfeldt Jakob disease as a result of surgery within the NHS.

Mr. Yeo: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 23 November 1992 at column 504.

Mental Health Task Force

Ms. Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the names, qualifications and experience of the members of the mental health task force.

Mr. Yeo: The membership of the mental health task force and its support group is in the process of being finalised. A copy of the full list of members of the group will be placed in the Library when it has been completed.

NHS Trusts

Ms. Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which hospital trusts had by 31 December 1992 completed their contracts for the period to 31 March for elective treatments in (a) orthopaedic surgery, (b) ENT, (c) general medicine and (d) general surgery.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information requested is not available centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Drug Prescribing

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much money will be saved by expanding the selected list of drugs that cannot be prescribed under the national health service to her proposed new categories.

Dr. Mawhinney: The savings from extending the selected list scheme will depend on the specific changes made to the list of drugs which cannot be prescribed under the national health service. These will be made only on the recommendation of the independent Advisory Committee on NHS Drugs and cannot be predicted in advance.

Supported Lodgings

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people (a) in Nottinghamshire and (b) nationally were classified as being looked after in supported lodgings by reason of being cared for by the carer in the carer's own home on (i) 1 January 1991 and (ii) the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Yeo: This information is not available centrally.

Community Care

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients are expected to be discharged into the community from Winterton and Kyhope Cherry Knowle hospitals in the coming year; how many were discharged in 1990, 1991 and 1992; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: This information is not available centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact the Northern Regional health authority, for details.

Doncaster Health Services

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the chairmen and non-executive directors of health authorities and trusts in Doncaster in 1991-92; how much each received as salary and expenses; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: The chairmen of health authorities and national health service trusts and the non-executive directors of NHS trusts in Doncaster are as follows:

Body	Chairman	Non-executive directors
Doncaster DHA	Mr. J. G. Smith
Doncaster FHSA	Mr. K. Jones
Doncaster Royal Infirmary and Montagu Hospital Trust	Mr. C. Bryant	Mr. G. A. Brown Mr. M. A. Mitchell Mr. J. H. Pickup Mrs. R. M. Cottrell Mrs. E. Sparrow
Doncaster Healthcare Trust	Mr. P. Horsburgh	Mr. L. Lucas Mr. J. Millar Miss C. Fleming Mrs. M. Spencer Mr. J. Liversedge

District health authority and family health service authority members are appointed by regional health authority chairmen.

All health authority members and NHS trust non-executive directors receive remuneration of £5,000 per annum.

DHA, FHSA and trust chairmen are remunerated annually according to a banding system as follows:

1 April 1991:
Band 1—£18,935
Band 2—£16,835
Band 3—£14,850

1 December 1991:
Band 1—£19,285
Band 2—£17,145
Band 3—£15,125

Health authority chairmen and members and trust chairmen and non-executive directors are entitled to have, where appropriate, expenses refunded, but details are not held centrally.

Unemployment and Ill Health

Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what studies she has made on the association between unemployment and ill health.

Dr. Mawhinney: We are fully aware of the extensive research literature about the association between unemployment and ill-health. This literature includes analysis of the respective contributions of unemployment itself and of the related variables of social class, poverty, age and pre-existing ill-health. Studies also indicate the value of preventive health care and of social support of unemployed people and their families.

Anabolic Steroids

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research she has commissioned into the risks to the health of persons under the age of 18 years of the indiscriminate use of anabolic steroids.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Department has commissioned no research specifically into the risks to the health of persons under the age of 18 years of the use of anabolic steriods. However, in October 1991 we commissioned Professor G. V. Stimson, Director of the Centre for Research on Drugs and Health Behaviour, to undertake a study into the extent of misuse of anabolic steriods. The report of this study has just been received by this Department and is currently being considered.

Weight Training

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research she has commissioned into the risks to the health of persons under the age of 18 years of (a) weight lifting and (b) weight training; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: None.

Health Centres

Ms. Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the report of the Hambros bank into the funding of health centres is to be published.

Dr. Mawhinney: The report has been received by the Department and its recommendations are now being considered. We shall announce our proposals for action in due course.

Azapropazone

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment has been made of the side effects of azapropazone; how many cases of such side effects have come to her attention; what consideration the Committee on Safety of Medicines is giving to this matter; and what central guidance on the side effects has been given to general practitioners.

Dr. Mawhinney: The safety of all licensed medicines, including azapropazone, is constantly monitored by the Medicines Control Agency. As part of this process, the Committee on Safety of Medicines (CSM) operates a yellow card scheme for physicians to report suspected adverse reactions to drugs. Under this scheme, CSM has received 2,041 reports of adverse reactions which may be associated with azapropazone. A report of a suspected reaction in association with a drug does not necessarily mean that the drug caused the effect reported. Azapropazone belongs to a group of non-steroidal anti-inflammatory drugs (NSAIDs) used in the treatment of rheumatic disease and other musculoskeletal disorders. More reports of suspected adverse reactions are received in association with this group of drugs than any others, reflecting their wide usage.

A number of studies are being conducted comparing the relative safety of different NSAIDs. CSM will be reviewing these studies when the results become available and, if necessary, will issue advice to prescribers. It has been recognised for some years that NSAIDs can cause serious gastrointestinal reactions such as bleeding and perforation of ulcers. This problem was drawn to the attention of doctors by the CSM in articles in the British Medical Journal in March and May 1986 and in its bulletin "Current Problems No. 16" issued in 1986. No specific guidance has been issued by CSM regarding the side effects of azapropazone. Information is available to physicians in the British National Formulary, which the Department issues free of charge to all prescribers, and in the data sheet for products, which are produced by the manufacturers and authorised by the licensing authority.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the expenditure on azapropazone in cash terms, and as expenditure per 1,000 population in each NHS region and health district in 1991-92.

Dr. Mawhinney: I shall let the hon. Member have such information as is available as soon as possible.

Special Hospitals

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Health for what percentage of patients currently residing in special hospitals in England and Wales an assessment has shown that they could more appropriately be dealt with in gaols or other forms of accommodation.

Mr. Yeo: Information is not readily available in the form requested. One hundred and fourteen special hospital patients, or 7·5 per cent. of the total, were awaiting transfer to other facilities on 31 December 1992. Six of these were awaiting transfer to prison.

Mentally Disordered Offenders

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what provision under the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990 she requires to be made by local authorities and health departments for mentally disordered offenders.

Mr. Yeo: Section 46 of the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990 requires local authorities, in consultation with health authorities, to prepare and publish plans for the provision of community care. Section 47 of the Act requires local authorities to involve district health authorities in the assessment of need for those people in their areas who are identified as requiring community care services. These would include services for mentally disordered offenders who require them.

Disabled People

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what maximum figure she intends to set for the combined total public funding available after April to individual disabled people to live in their own homes.

Mr. Yeo: I do not intend to set a maximum figure for the amount that health and local authorities may spend in helping people live in their own homes.

Dentists

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many dentists went bankrupt during 1992; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not held centrally. However, the Dental Practice Board has confirmed that during 1992 it received notices of bankruptcy in respect of nine dentists.

Health Authority Meetings

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will require health authorities to publish the agenda for matters to be considered in private; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: No. Whether and when to exclude the press and general public is a matter for the authorities themselves to decide. However, authorities are expected to conduct their business in as open a manner as possible.

SCOTLAND

Prison Transfers

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many applications have been received for transfers from prisons in Scotland to Northern Ireland, from (a) loyalist prisoners, (b) republican prisoners, (c) men and (d) women; and how many of each of these applications have been accepted.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information available is as follows:

	Number of requests (no women applied)	Agreed
1986	1	1
1987	3	—
1988	2	1
1989	1	—
1990	[1]5	2
1991	[2]4	1
1992	5	[3]3

[1] One withdrawn.
[2] Two withdrawn.
[3] One still under consideration.

Prisoners in Scotland are not classified by reference to the political or other motivation of their offences.

Revised criteria for interjurisdiction transfers were announced in the Official Report, 23 November 1992, columns 476-77.

Legal Aid

Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what amount he expects to be saved from the current civil legal aid budget resulting from the Government's proposals for each of the next five financial years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The purpose of the proposed changes announced on 16 November is to ensure the continuation of reasonable access to legal aid for the most needy, while at the same time taking action to control the rate of growth in legal aid expenditure. The proposed changes are expected to reduce forecast expenditure on civil legal aid by between £2 million and £3 million in 1993-94 rising to around £5 million in 1997-98. Total expenditure on legal aid will, however, continue to increase and in financial year 1995-96 it is expected to be 40 per cent. higher than the planned expenditure for the current year.

Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if, under the Government's new legal aid proposals, applicants will be required to make continuous contributions over the full life of the case.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Under the Government's proposals a person granted civil legal aid in Scotland after 1 April 1993 will not be required to make continuous contributions over the full life of the case.

Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he will publish detailed proposals regarding changes in civil legal aid and civil advice and assistance schemes in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Draft regulations will be laid before the House in the spring.

Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what level of contributions will be required in civil legal aid cases under the Government's new legal aid proposals.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Under the Government's proposals a person receiving civil legal aid will be required to make a maximum contribution of up to one third of the amount by which his disposable income exceeds the lower free limit for civil legal aid.

Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what will be the maximum income level for obtaining free advice and assistance for legal aid applicants from April 1993.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The maximum disposable income level for obtaining free advice and assistance has yet to be determined.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what is his estimate of the proportion of the adult population of Scotland which after 1 April will be eligible for (a) legal advice and assistance and (b) legal aid, for civil purposes on a nil contribution;

(2) what is his estimate of the proportion of the adult population of Scotland which after 1 April will be eligible for (a) legal advice and assistance and (b) legal aid for civil purposes irrespective of the level of contribution;

(3) what is the proportion of the adult population of Scotland currently eligible for (a) legal advice and assistance and (b) legal aid for civil purposes on a nil contribution;

(4) what proportion of the adult population of scotland is currently eligible for (a) legal advice and assistance and (b) legal aid, for civil purposes irrespective of the level of contribution.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 18 January 1993]: Given the variations over time in individuals' circumstances it is not possible to estimate with any precision the proportion of the adult population eligible for legal aid.

Analyses of data from the family expenditure survey suggest that in Scotland the percentage of households which would be eligible for civil legal aid under the proposed changes to eligibility criteria would be in the range of 45 to 55 per cent. with between 20 and 30 per cent. free of contributions. Similar figures would apply to advice and assistance. This represents a reduction of between 5 and 10 per cent. of the households currently eligible in financial terms.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consultations he had with relevant parties and bodies prior to his announcement of 16 November 1992 of reduced access to civil legal aid and legal advice and assistance in Scotland; and how many legal applicants are likely to be affected by the announced changes after 1 April.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 18 January 1993]: No detailed consultations were held before the announcement on 16 November 1992, but discussions have since taken place with the Scottish Legal Aid Board and the Law Society of Scotland.

Given the variations over time in individuals' circumstances it is not possible to estimate with any accuracy how many legal aid applicants are likely to be affected after 1 April by the proposed changes but I refer the hon. Member to my reply today to the questions by the hon. and learned Member for Fife, North-East (Mr. Campbell).

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each of the last five years for which figures are available the number of civil legal cases which occurred in sheriff courts in Scotland by category of case, indicating the percentage increase over the period for each category.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 18 January 1993]: Figures for the number of ordinary cause, summary cause and small claim actions disposed of in sheriff courts in Scotland are set out in the table. The percentage increase or decrease between 1987 and 1991 is also shown except for small claims where the figure relates to the period 1989 to 1991.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the average cost per case to the civil legal aid budget in each category of civil legal actions occurring in sheriff courts in Scotland over the past five years for which figures are available.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 18 January 1993]: The information is as follows:

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much Her Majesty's Government expects to save in civil legal aid expenditure in Scotland from 1 April as a result of the changes announced on 16 November 1992 in financial eligibility; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 18 January 1993]: The purpose of the proposed changes announced on 16 November 1992 is to ensure the continuation of reasonable access to legal aid for the most needy, while at the same time taking action to control the rate of growth in legal aid expenditure. Depending on the detailed circumstances of the individual cases involved, the proposed changes are expected to reduce forecast expenditure on civil legal aid in future years by between £2 million and £3 million. Total expenditure on legal aid will, however, continue to increase and in financial year 1995-96 is expected to be 40 per cent. higher than the planned expenditure for the current financial year.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the average contribution paid by legal aid recipients in each category of civil legal action over the past five years for which figures are available.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 18 January 1993]: The information is not readily available in the form requested.

Over 80 per cent. of those receiving civil legal aid are not required to pay any contribution. The average contribution paid by recipients of civil legal aid falling within the contributory band in the financial years 1987-88 to 1991-92 is set out in the following table:

Year	Average contribution £
1987-88	486·46
1988-89	342·88
1989-90	262·50
1990-91	228·95
1991-92	321·12

Skye Bridge

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he intends to take in the light of the absence of the lodging of the geographical survey, relevant to the Skye bridge contract, with the British Geological Survey; what legal force is ascribed to the relevant section of his Department's "Road's Directorate Invitation to Tender" document in this respect; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The arrangments for the various tenderers to undertake a joint geological investigation and ultimately to lodge the factual results of their survey with the British Geological Survey is a roads directorate contractual requirement not a legal requirement. This practice is undertaken on trunk road projects whereby the information provided by public expenditure is made available for general use. There is no prescribed time limit for the lodging of such information and it is done at an appropriate time, often at the conclusion of the construction works.

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what allowance he has made for the extent of public subsidy to Caledonian Macbrayne Ltd. after the loss of Kyle of Lochalsh-Kyleakin ferry fares income to the company when the Skye bridge opens; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The company's corporate plan for 1992-95 contains assumptions on cost savings and loss of revenue which are likely to occur upon the discontinuation of the Kyle of Lochalsh-Kyleakin ferry service. My right hon. Friend has taken these assumptions into account in making provision for deficit subsidy for the company within the planning period. My right hon. Friend does not consider it desirable to make public such commercially-sensitive information.

Caledonian Macbrayne Ltd.

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the public subsidy given in each of the last 10 financial years to Caledonian Macbrayne Ltd.; what proportion this subsidy represented of the total income of the company; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is set out in the table:

Year	Deficit subsidy	Turnover	Deficit subsidy as percentage of turnover
1981-82	5·800	17·5	33·1
1982-83	6·115	17·6	34·7
1983-84	6·650	19·2	34·6
1984-85	6·987	21·0	33·3
1985-86	7·500	22·3	33·6
1986-87	7·400	23·1	32·0
1987-88	6·900	23·8	29·0
1988-89	6·540	25·4	25·8
1989-90	6·280	26·9	23·3
1990-91	5·722	28·6	20·0
1991-92	5·800	31·7	18·3

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information is made available to him by Caledonian Macbrayne Ltd as to (a) the profitability of individual ferry routes and (b) the extent to which there is cross subsidisation of fares within the network; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The scale fare system which has been operated by Caledonian MacBrayne since 1975 generalises costs across the network as a whole and produces network-based information about costs, fares income and deficit subsidy requirements. The new CFARES fares setting system which the company is in process of introducing will be based upon route-specific infomation about costs, surpluses and deficits.

As a consequence of this change from network-based information to route-specific information, Caledonian MacBrayne makes available to my right hon. Friend an increasing amount of information about costs, surpluses and deficits incurred on individual routes. Since deficit subsidy is paid to meet the operating loss incurred by the company in providing a network of approved services, there is some cross subsidisation of services within this arrangement.

However, the overall deficit of £6,050,000 likely to be incurred by the company this year in operating the network indicates that the majority of the company's routes are unprofitable. My right hon. Friend does not consider it desirable to make public commercially-sensitive information about operating costs, surpluses or deficits incurred on individual routes.

Correspondence

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his target timespan for responding to letters received from hon. Members; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Harwich (Mr. Sproat) on 2 December 1992 at col. 183.

Justices of the Peace

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the names and addresses of justices of peace serving the district of Renfrew; and what plans he has to make further appointments.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: As for other commission areas, my right hon. Friend is advised on the need for new appointments as justices of the peace for the commission area of Renfrew by the Advisory Committee on Justices of the Peace for that area. I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible about the further information he requests.

Homelessness

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the number of household units (a) making application for and (b) being awarded homeless persons status in each year since 1980.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The latest complete information is published in table 1 of "The Scottish Office Statistical Bulletin 'Operation of the Homeless Persons Legislation in Scotland 1980/81 to 1991/92, Housing/ 1992/6'," which is available in the House Library.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the aims and objectives of the competition on measures to deal with homelessness referred to by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State with responsibility for housing on 16 December 1992; if he will list the likely competitors; and what criteria he will apply in judging any submissions.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: All local housing authorities in Scotland were invited to submit proposals by 11 December for the additional £7·5 million housing capital allocations in 1992-93 for projects to tackle homelessness which I announced in November. When proposals were invited, it was made clear that priority would be given to projects assisting homeless one-parent f amilies and those housed in bed-and-breakfast accommodation. Forty-eight local authorities submitted proposals and I announced the successful projects on 23 December. The extra £7·5 million will fund 59 projects in 48 local authorities to provide accommodation for over 470 homeless people.

City Status

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what criteria are applied in determining applications by Scottish towns for city status; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: City status in Scotland, which has no statutory significance, derives from royal charters granted by the Monarch. There are no formal criteria. No such charter has been granted for over a century.

Rights of Way

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on rights of way in Scotland.

Sir Hector Monro: Neither my right hon. Friend nor I have any plans to make a statement on rights of way in Scotland at present.

Scottish Natural Heritage issued on 13 January a consultation paper entitled "Enjoying the Outdoors" which considers arrangements for access to the countryside in Scotland, including rights of way. It will report the results of its consultation exercise to me in due course and I shall consider then any recommendations which it may make.

Polling Stations (Access)

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will make available resources for the purchase of (a) static and (b) portable ramps to improve access to polling stations;

(2) what resources he made available in the last financial year for (a) static and (b) portable ramps to improve access to polling stations.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Finance is available from the consolidated fund to meet 50 per cent. of the cost of providing temporary ramps for polling stations to assist access by disabled voters. As elections are held only infrequently in comparison with the other uses made of buildings designated as polling stations, there is no justification for central Government to meet the full cost of providing either permanent ramps or the full cost of temporary ramps from election funds.

The Secretary of State assumed responsibility for financing parliamentary elections in Scotland on 22 August 1991. No applications for support towards the cost of providing ramps at polling stations were made by Scottish returning officers in the remainder of that financial year; one such application has been made, successfully, in the current financial year.

Water and Sewerage Services

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many representations he has received about the future of water and sewerage services in Scotland since July 1992; how many of these were letters from (a) individuals and (b) organisations or institutions; what is his estimate of the number of signatures appended to any petitions he has so far received; how many representations were (i) for and (ii) against taking these services out of the control of local authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: To date, a total of 6,311 representations has been received. This includes 5,154 pre-printed postcards, 142 responses to the consultation paper and 1,015 other representations. There have been 1,056 letters from individuals and 101 from organisations or institutions and 23 petitions carrying 5,372 names.

An analysis of responses to the consultation paper will be made after the end of the consultation period.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many responses to representations about the future of water and sewerage services in Scotland have been issued since July 1992 (a) by him, (b) by Ministers, (c) by the engineering, water and waste directorate of the Environment Department and (d) by other representatives of the Scottish Office; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: To date, 5,703 responses have been issued. Ministerial replies have been given to 112 representations; the engineerin, water and waste directorate of the Scottish Office environment Department has replied to 5,528; and 13 which dealt with matters in addition to the future of water and sewerage services have received replies from other parts of the Scottish Office.

"Investing in our Future"

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will instruct the engineering, water and waste directorate of the Environment Department to advise where copies of the consultation paper "Investing In Our Future" may be obtained free of charge when it is responding to representations from members of the public.

Sir Hector Monro: The consultation paper is issued to everyone who expresses an interest in receiving it or in participating in the consultation process.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland where copies of his consultation paper "Investing In Our Future" may be obtained free of charge by members of the general public.

Sir Hector Monro: The consultation paper can be obtained from the Scottish Office environment department, water restructuring division, room 203A, 27 Perth street, Edinburgh EH3 5RB.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, if he will instruct the engineering, water and waste directorate of the Environment Department to advise where copies of the consultation paper "Investing in our Future" may be obtained free of charge when it is responding to representation from members of the public.

Sir Hector Monro: It is standard practice in replying to representations to draw attention to the availability of the consultation paper. The address from which copies of the consultation paper may be obtained has been given wide publicity, and all letters informing the public that the paper is available carry that address and telephone number.

Argyll and Clyde Health Board

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 9 June 1992, Official Report, column 133, when he plans to announce the appointments made to vacancies which will arise on Argyll and Clyde health board on 31 March; what consultations he is undertaking or has undertaken prior to his decisions; what plans he has to consult hon. Members representing constituencies within the health board area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: My right hon. Friend expects to announce shortly appointments to fill vacancies arising in Argyll and Clyde health board. The consultation required by the National Health Service (Scotland) Act 1978 has been carried out and the views of the health board chairman have been taken. There are no plans to consult hon. Members representing constituencies within the health board area; it is open to hon. Members, as some indeed have done, to suggest names for possible appointment to health boards.

Public Housing (Windows)

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what studies he has available on the need to replace metal-framed windows in public sector housing in Scotland; what financial provision he has made for the programme in the current and future financial year; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I have received no reports specifically on the need to replace metal-framed windows.

Local authorities and other public sector housing landlords can carry out the replacement of metal-framed windows as part of their capital programmes if they see this as a priority in comparison with other housing needs. Gross capital expenditure resources available for public sector housing in Scotland in 1992-93 are estimated to be £549 million. An equivalent estimate for 1993-94 will not be available until decisions are taken on the allocation of Scottish Homes' budget and final capital allocations to local authorities are announced in March.

Scottish Homes

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the (a) name, (b) occupation, (c) honoraria, salary or allowance and (d) estimated time commitment of each member of the board of Scottish Homes.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is set out in the following table:

Name	Occupation	Salary	Estimated Time Commitment
Sir James Mellon KCMG (Chairman)	Former Diplomat	£35,330	3 days per week
John Richards CBE, PPRIAS (Deputy Chairman)	Architect with John Richards Associates	£16,055	1½ days per week
Norman Lessels CA	Partner in Chiene and Tait, also non-executive Chairman of Standard Life Assurance Company	£6,140	½ day per week

Cameron Parker	Non-executive Vice-Chairman of Lithgows Ltd	£6,140	½ day per week

In addition the chief executive, Peter McKinlay, is an ex-officio member of the board. His salary is linked to civil service grade 2.

Paisley (City Status)

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to award the burgh of Paisley city status.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: There are no such plans.

Wheel Clamping

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on his plans to consider the wheel clamping of vehicles in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Appeal Court judgment of 12 June 1992 determined that wheel-clamping a vehicle on private land and demanding money for its release is a crime. There are statutory provisions which would authorise the police and parking attendants to clamp vehicles illegally parked on public roads. The power in relation to the police is exercisable by statutory instrument made by the Secretary of State at the request of a regional or islands council. The power has not so far been exercised in Scotland. The power in respect of parking attendants will not be brought into force until the operation of similar powers in London has been evaluated.

Health Service

Sir Patrick McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number and location of intensive therapy units in Scotland; and how many organ donors have arisen in each during the past 12 months.

Mr. Stewart: At 30 September 1992 there were 24 NHS intensive therapy units in Scotland. These are as listed.

Weapons Control

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to introduce legislation on the control of offensive and lethal weapons; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: As I indicated in my response to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Shettleston (Mr. Marshall) on 16 December at columns 423-24, we shall be consulting shortly on this issue with a view to legislating at the first available opportunity.

Smoke Alarms

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what resources he made available in the last financial year to enable (a) local authorities, (b) Scottish Homes, (c) housing associations, (d) housing co-operatives, (e) owner-occupiers, (f) tenants in the private-rented sector, (g) universities and colleges and (h) other housing providers to finance the installation of smoke alarms; if he will issue a circular to the providers of public housing encouraging the installation of smoke alarms; if he will introduce legislation to require smoke alarms to be fitted in all homes; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Resources are not earmarked to finance the installation of smoke alarms. Local authorities and other housing providers have substantial capital resources available to them which can be used for smoke alarms where they see this as a priority compared with other needs. The Scottish Office Environment Department wrote to all local housing authorities in 1991 and 1992 highlighting the contribution which smoke alarms can make to the saving of lives, and encouraging authorities which have not already completed a smoke alarm installation programme to include this in their forthcoming capital programmes.

We intend shortly to lay before Parliament an amendment to the Building Standards (Scotland) Regulations 1990 and the technical standards for compliance with these regulations which will require all new dwellings to be provided with mains-operated smoke alarms.

Mr. Thomas Adleigh

Mrs. Adams: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if the Scottish ambulance service is to hold a disciplinary inquiry into the circumstances surrounding the death of Mr. Thomas Adleigh of 27 Glencairn road, Paisley; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 14 January 1993]: No. Disciplinary matters are for the management of the Scottish ambulance service in the first instance and thereafter by the Board of the Common Services Agency as the statutory employer. The report prepared by the general manager of the Scottish ambulance service on the ambulance response to this patient does not indicate any grounds for disciplinary action against any member of staff. I have arranged for a copy of this report to be sent to the hon. Member.

Mrs. Adams: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will hold a full public inquiry into the circumstances surrounding the death of Mr. Thomas Adleigh of 27 Glencairn road, Paisley, to include the general effectiveness of ambulance services in the Argyll and Clyde health board area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 14 January 1993]: Until my right hon. and learned Friend the Lord Advocate has reached a decision as to whether a fatal accident inquiry into the death of Mr. Adleigh should be held, it is not appropriate to consider whether any other form of formal inquiry should be undertaken into the service within Argyll and Clyde health board area.

Ambulance Service

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how the emergency response time of ambulance crews is calculated by the Scottish ambulance service; what changes there have been to the method of calculation during the last 15 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 14 January 1993]: The calculation of the response time of ambulance crews is made on the basis that the time begins from the moment the 999 call is answered by the control officer until the ambulance crew arrives at the side of the patient. Previously the calculation began when the vehicle started the journey to the patient.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make available for public inspection the logged, written and audio records for emergency calls and consequent responses from depots of the Scottish ambulance service controlled from within the Argyll and Clyde health board area from 1 November 1992 until 31 December 1992.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 14 January 1993]: On request, the general manager of the Scottish ambulance service will make available all written and audio records of emergency calls and responses from ambulance stations to legitimate inquirers, subject to appropriate safeguards to protect the privacy and confidentiality of patients. If the hon. Member contacts the general manager he will make the appropriate records available.

Mrs. Adams: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make it his policy for the Scottish ambulance service to restore the shift patterns operating in the Argyll and Clyde health board area prior to October 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 14 January 1993]: Shift patterns are an operational matter and are the responsibility of the management team led by the general manager of the Scottish ambulance service. I understand that these are based on historical level of demand at different times of the day and night. They are kept under review and are adjusted to take account of new patterns of demand. Revised shift arrangements were introduced in October following a careful assessment of the likely demand at various times of the day.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the number of ambulance staff in Scotland employed by the NHS in the years 1987, 1988, 1989, 1990 and 1991, using whole-time equivalents.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 18 January 1993]: The number of ambulance staff was as follows:

Year	Ambulancemen/ women	Ambulance officers and control assistants	Total
1987	1,751·0	181·0	1,932·0
1988	1,789·7	188·0	1,977·0
1989	1,793·2	220·0	2,013·2
1990	1,802·7	220·0	2,022·7
1991	1,963·0	223·0	2,186·9

The figures exclude administrative and clerical staff and other support staff employed by the Scottish ambulance service.

Royal Alexandra Hospital

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what salary, allowance or honorarium will be paid to (a) the chairman and (b) the members of the trust board of the Royal Alexandra hospital in Paisley; what budget these will be drawn from; which services are covered by that budget; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 14 January 1993]: The chairman of the trust board of the Royal Alexandra hospital will receive remuneration of £17,145 per annum and non-executive directors will receive £5,000. In addition the chairman and members are entitled to claim travelling and subsistence allowances at rates set for members of public bodies. These costs will be met from the trust's contract income.

Dentistry

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate the reduction in turnover experienced by dental practices in Scotland as a result of the Government's recent changes in method of remuneration.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 18 January 1993]: There have been no recent changes in the method of dentists' remuneration. Since the introduction of the new dental fee scale in July 1992, turnover as reflected in gross income received by dentists in Scotland, which includes fees paid to dentists by health boards and charges collected by dentists from patients, has been at a higher level than in the comparable period for the previous year. From July to November 1992—the latest month for which figures are available—the total gross fees authorised to dentists (which include the value of charges paid by patients) were £56,379,000, compared with £56,316,000 for the same period in 1991.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the amount paid to dental practitioners in Scotland over the past three years at constant prices together with the planned level of expenditure for the next three years.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 18 January 1993]: The remuneration received by dentists in Scotland for provision of NHS services as reflected in the total gross fees authorised for payment to dentists (which include the value of charges paid by patients) is shown in the table for the last three financial years. Estimates of expenditure for future years are not yet available.

Year	Gross payments to dentists £ million	Gross payments to dentists at 1991-92 prices £ million
1989-90	94·393	108·971
1990-91	111·463	119·165
[1]1991-92	132·822	132·822

[1] Figures for 1991-92 reflect the fact that dentists' average gross earnings for NHS work were significantly higher than the target average gross income (TAGI) set for that year.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the assumptions used by his Department when seeking to estimate the fixed costs of a dental practice.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 18 January 1993]: No such estimate is made by the Department. Average national health service dental practice expenses in Great Britain are estimated each year by the dental rates study group and full reimbursement of these costs to dentists on an average basis is included in dental fees.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many courses of dental treatment were undertaken in each of the past five years.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 18 January 1993]: The figures for 1991 and the preceding four years are contained in the table. The figures from 1 October 1990 are for adults only as under the new dental contract introduced from that date children are now treated under capitation arrangements to provide continuing care, and information is not recorded on individual courses of treatment. The number of children registered with a dentist under these arrangements at the end of the calendar years since October 1990 is shown separately in the table. The number of courses of dental treatment undertaken in Scotland for 1992 is not yet available. To the end of November 1992 —the latest month for which figures are available—a total of 2·357 million courses of adult treatment had been undertaken, and a total of 0·72 million children were registered with dentists.

[1] New contract for General Dental Services introduced on 1 October 1990.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the method of arriving at payments for courses of dental treatment, materials and laboratory fees.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 18 January 1993]: Dentists' remuneration for national health service work is set by a process of several stages. The Review Body on Doctors' and Dentists' Remuneration (DDRB) recommends a target average net income (TANI) which it considers dentists should earn from providing national health service general dental services, and the Government decide to accept or amend the recommendation and sets the TANI. The dental rates study group (DRSG) then forecasts the level of dentists' expenses (including materials and laboratory costs) for the coming year and adds this figure to the TANI to produce the target average gross income (TAGI).

The DRSG then applies a balancing mechanism to the TAGI figure to correct for any over or underpayments to dentists in previous years as a result of differences between forecast expenses and earnings and actual figures, and produces the amount due to the average dentist. Finally the DRSG forecasts the amount of national health service work that dentists will undertake in the coming year and sets the scale of individual payments and fees at a level that, taking account of the forecast amount of work, will deliver the TAGI due to the average dentist.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent representations he has received from dentists in Scotland regarding the current system of remuneration; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 18 January 1993]: My right hon. Friend has received a wide range of representations from dentists. The Government recognised the concern about the current system of dental remuneration and therefore commissioned Sir Kenneth Bloomfield to undertake his fundamental review of that system. Dentists were invited to contribute to the review.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many dental practices in each health board area have opted out of national health service dental treatment in the last 12 month period for which figures are available.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 18 January 1993]: According to information held by health boards, in the last 12 months one general dental practitioner in Fife health board area and one in Tayside health board area have left their dental lists because they no longer wish to provide national health service dental treatment.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland in which towns in the Borders health board area dental practices have gone private in the last 12 months for which figures are available.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 18 January 1993]: According to information held by Borders health board, in the last 12 months no general dental practitioner has left the Borders health board dental list in order to provide private treatment only.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects the Bloomfield review committee to report on the future system of remuneration for dentists.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 18 January 1993]: Ministers have now received Sir Kenneth Bloomfield's report on his fundamental review of dental remuneration.

Drugs and Alcohol

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the establishments in Scotland which provide residential facilities for (a) those with alcohol problems and (b) those with drug problems; if he will show for each establishment (i) the capital grant and (ii) the total revenue grant provided by his Department in each of the last five years; and if he will provide estimated figures for 1992-93 and 1993-94.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 18 January 1993]: Information on residential facilities for alcohol misusers is contained in The Scottish Council on Alcohol publication, "Alcohol Services in Scotland" and for drug misusers is contained in the Scottish Drugs Forum/Health Education Board for Scotland's "Register of Helping Agencies", copies of which I am arranging to place in the Library.

Funding for residential establishments is provided directly and indirectly by the Scottish Office from a number of sources. Most funding for residential establishments is provided locally by local authorities and health boards either from funds specifically allocated for drug misuse or from their general allocations. Details of funding from all these sources could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

It is possible to provide information on the limited funding which is available from the Scottish Office for alcohol and drugs projects, including residential facilities, undertaken by voluntary sector organisations working in the social care field under section 10(1) of The Social Work (Scotland) Act 1968 and of the funding which is available under the urban programme. Details of the residential establishments benefiting under these schemes are set out in the tables.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number of (a) nursing and midwifery staff, (b) managerial staff and (c) clerical and administrative staff in the NHS in each year since 1989.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 18 January 1993]: The information requested is as follows:

(a) Headcount
Nursing and midwifery[3]	74,949	74,573	75,068	73,625

Administrative and clerical[5]	14,425·3	14,859·3	15,282·8	15,850·7

[1] 1991 and 1992 figures include staff of the State Hospital.
[2] Data for September 1992 are provisional.
[3] Nursing and midwifery includes qualified, unqualified and in-training staff. The decrease in numbers between 1991 and 1992 is largely accounted for by Project 2000 student nurses who are not included in the figures.
[4] The 1989 figure includes administrative and clerical staff on grade 18 and above; the 1990-92 figures include grade 7 and above.
[5] Includes control assistants and ambulance officers.
[6] Part of the increase in numbers in this group is accounted for by the transfer of some professional staff to senior manager grades.

Ardrossan-Saltcoats-Stevenston Bypass

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received from Messrs Wimpey on the proposed Ardrossan-Saltcoats-Stevenston bypass.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 18 January 1993]: Until such time as a public inquiry is held for a scheme, it is not the Department's practice to make public representations received by parties affected by the scheme. However, Wimpey Homes Ltd is not an objector to the published bypass proposals.

Scottish Natural Heritage

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland pursuant to his answers of 15 December 1992, Official Report, columns 169-70, when Scottish Natural Heritage will write to the hon. Member for Glanford and Scunthorpe.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer, 18 January 1993]: Scottish Natural Heritage will write to the hon. Member by the end of January. Work related to the MV Braer incident in Shetland has delayed the collection of relevant information.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which fox and deer hunts have been issued with licences or permits to hunt live quarry on Forestry Commission land.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when an application for a permit to hunt on Forestry Commission land was last refused.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 12 January 1993]: In November 1990 the Forestry Commission refused an application for a permit to hunt deer in Buckland wood in Devon, as this is an area where deer hunting is not a traditional activity.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when a permit to hunt on Forestry Commission land was last withdrawn.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 12 January 1993]: The Forestry Commission has no record of a permit to hunt being withdrawn.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what charge is made for a permit to hunt on Forestry Commission land.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 12 January 1993]: No charge is made for a permit to hunt on Forestry Commission land.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many vehicle permit applications to the Forestry Commission to follow hunts have been (a) refused and (b) withdrawn in the latest period for which figures are available; and what are the terms and conditions of such vehicle permits.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 12 January 1993] The Forestry Commission only issues vehicle permits to follow three hunts in Yorkshire and two hunts in south-east England. The conditions are listed in the permits, an example of which has been placed in the Library. Some permits to hunt also give authority for a specified number of vehicles to follow the hunt. No record is kept of applications which have been refused or not renewed; the Forestry Commission has no record of a permit being withdrawn.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what charge is made for a vehicle permit from the Forestry Commission to follow a hunt.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 12 January 1993]: The Forestry Commission makes no charge for a vehicle permit to follow a hunt.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what monitoring procedures are in force to ensure the conditions of vehicle permission from the Forestry Commission to follow hunts are adhered to.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 12 January 1993]: Some hunts provide vehicle stewards who are responsible for ensuring that only authorised vehicles enter Forestry Commission land. In addition, Forestry Commission staff carry out random checks on hunt days to ensure that the conditions of the permits are being followed.

Forestry

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress he is making in preparing (a) draft national or regional programmes and (b) zonal plans under Council Regulation (EEC) No. 2080/92 instituting an aid scheme for forestry measures in agriculture; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 15 January 1993]: To receive Community part-financing of forestry grant-aid under Council Regulation No. 2080/92, member states have to submit national or regional programmes describing their forestry aid schemes to the European Commission, which will decide whether they comply with the objectives and conditions of the regulation. Preparation of zonal plans is entirely optional.

The Forestry Commission is currently preparing a draft national programme for the United Kingdom, in consultation with the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the Scottish and Welsh Office Agriculture Departments, and this is expected to be submitted to the European Commission in the spring. We will not be producing either regional or zonal plans.

Fluoridation

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will issue a statement clarifying the chief medical officer's statement to the Evening Times (Glasgow) on fluoridation.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 15 January 1993]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave on 17 December at column 457 to his two earlier questions on this matter.

Heritage Coastline

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many kilometres have been designated as heritage coasts; and what proportions this represents of the total Scottish coastline.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 11 January 1993]: The designation of heritage coast is not used in Scotland. Important coastal areas are protected by other landscape and conservation designations and through development plans.

Smokers

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate the total number of habitual smokers in Scotland by regional and island council area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 18 January 1993]: In 1990 —the latest year for which information is available—the general household survey conducted by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys (OPCS) indicated that 34 per cent. of the Scottish population aged 16 or over were cigarette smokers. Information broken down by region or island council is not available.

Smoking is the single most important contributor to ill-health in Scotland. It is a high priority for health education and last autumn the Health Education Board for Scotland launched major campaigns directed at young people and adults. My right hon. Friend also announced a number of other steps to combat smoking in the policy statement "Scotland's Health—a Challenge To Us All" which he published last July.

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his estimate of the number of offences committed by juveniles in England while on bail in each of the last five years.

Mr. Jack: Information is not currently available nationally. However, my Department is presently examining with the police ways in which the extent of offending on bail can be effectively monitored at a national level.

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will consult the police authorities on the reform of legislation to permit custodial sentences to be imposed on juvenile offenders.

Mr. Jack: We intend to consult widely, including representative organisations of the police service, before bringing any firm legislative proposals before Parliament.

Mr. George Pai

Mr. Dickens: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration is being given to the deportation of Mr. George Pai of Manchester.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Mr. Chan Yee Yau, also known as Georgie Pai, last entered the United Kingdom in breach of an extant deportation order. He was arrested on 9 December 1991 and detained as an illegal entrant with a view to his removal. On 19 December 1991 an application on Mr. Yau's behalf to the divisional court for leave to move for judicial review of the decision to remove him was granted. The case was adjourned pending the outcome of a relevant case then before the European Court of Justice. On 24 December 1991 the court granted an application for bail, and Mr. Yau was released. His case is still pending before the divisional court.

Triads, Manchester

Mr. Dickens: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Manchester on the progress of the investigations into Triad gangs in Greater Manchester.

Mr. Charles Wardle: No. These are operational matters and the responsibility of the chief officer of the Greater Manchester police.

Stabbings

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many incidents of stabbing there have been in each of the last three years in which the perpetrator has been aged (a) under 16, (b) 16 to 20, (c) 21 to 24 years or (d) other.

Mr. Jack: Information is not collected centrally on the age of the perpetrator in all incidents of stabbing. However, the number of currently recorded homicides in England and Wales where the method of killing was by a sharp instrument is shown by age of suspect for the years 1989, 1990 and 1991 in the following table:

Betting Offices

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) when he expects to publish the Licensed Betting Office Regulation 1986 (Amendment) Regulations;

(2) what consideration is being given to allowing betting offices to open during evening hours.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to the reply my right hon. and learned Friend gave to a question from my right hon. Friend the Member for Westminster, North (Sir J. Wheeler) on 19 January 1993, at column 141.

Surveillance Equipment

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce restrictions on the manufacture, use and sale of equipment that can be used to eavesdrop on the activities of private individuals.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We have no present plans to impose restrictions on the manufacture and sale of equipment that can be used to receive and amplify sound.

As part of their response to the Calcutt review of press self-regulation—Official Report, 14 January, columns 1067-69—the Government have accepted the case for restrictions on the use of surveillance devices in certain circumstances. We have also accepted the Calcutt recommendations that further consideration should be given to legislation covering the interception of telecommunications, with a view to identifying all significant gaps and determining whether further legislation is needed, and that further consideration should be given to the introduction of a new tort of infringement of privacy.

Mental Illness

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of persons currently under the supervision of the probation service in England and Wales are considered to be mentally disordered or mentally ill.

Mr. Jack: In 1991, 147 persons conditionally discharged from psychiatric hospitals were under probation service supervision and a total of 911 persons commenced probation orders with a requirement of psychiatric treatment—784 non-residential, 119 residential, eight juvenile non-residential. Information on mental disorder and mental illness in respect of the total probation caseload is not collected centrally.

Mr. Sodigar Hussain

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will arrange for the post in Islamabad to refer the latest entry clearance application by Mr. Sodigar Hussain, date of birth 21 July 1959, to join his wife in the United Kingdom to him for consideration under the review concerning couples with children separated for more than five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Any further application by Mr. Hussain will be considered by the entry clearance officer under the immigration rules taking account of relevant policy guidance.

Karimjit Singh Chahal

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will now release Karimjit Singh Chahal from Bedford prison; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: We hope to reach a decision shortly, and I will then write to the hon. Member.

Juvenile Crime

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the impact of the decision of the magistrates court in Leeds to impose a fine on Leeds city council after a child in its care committed a burglary on (a) crime prevention and reduction and (b) the resources available for diverting young people from criminal activity.

Mr. Jack: It would not be appropriate to comment on, or assess the impact of, a decision of the courts in an individual case. Nevertheless, we intend to monitor carefully the effect of the new powers for courts introduced by the Criminal Justice Act 1991 which, inter alia, allow them to make local authorities liable to pay fines and compensation when children in their care commit offences. The purpose of these new provisions, which parallel those which apply to parents, is to ensure that local authorities do all in their power to ensure that children in their care do not commit offences. Local authorities are under a separate duty under the Children Act 1989 to encourage children in their areas not to commit criminal offences.

KPMG Management Consultants

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the contracts awarded by his Department to KPMG Management Consultants over the past 12 months.

Mr. Portillo: HM Treasury has awarded two contracts to KPMG Management Consultants over the past 12 months, one for staff appraisal training and a research project.

Third World Debt

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the cost to public funds in (a) 1990, (b) 1991 and (c) 1992 of granting banks tax relief on setting money aside in case of default on debts by third world countries.

Mr. Dorrell: The available information is given in my reply to the hon. Member for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher) on 7 December 1992, at columns 471-72.

Child Care

Ms. Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the cost to the Treasury of tax relief on employer-provided child care in (a) 1990-91, (b) 1991-92 and (c) 1992-93; and what are his estimates for the cost in 1993-94.

Mr. Dorrell: The revenue cost of exempting employer-provided child care is estimated to be about £10 million for each of the years 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93. The revenue cost for 1993-94 would depend on the level of provision.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the effect on Treasury revenue in 1993-94 of extending tax relief on employer-provided child care to (a) employer-provided cheques and vouchers for child care and (b) all forms of employer assistance for child care.

Mr. Dorrell: Exempting all existing employer assistance for child care would have a revenue cost, at 1992-93 levels of provision and subsidies, of approximately £5 million. There is insufficient information to subdivide this estimate. We expect that if such a measure were introduced there would be substantial behavioural effects.

"Made in UK" Labels (Textile Imports)

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what investigations he is intending to make into the production of "Made in UK" labels in Serbia and Macedonia which were supplied to Messrs. Dewhursts of Driffield, North Humberside;

(2) what proposals he has for the examination of tachographs in establishing the source of textile products imported by Dewhursts of Driffield, North Humberside;

(3) whether he intends to arrange for the interview of vehicle drivers employed or formerly employed by Burlington Ocean Express so as to secure statements on their involvement in the transportation of textile products from Serbia to an Otex-owned factory in Macedonia;

(4) what information he has as to the relationship between Otex of Macedonia and Genex of Serbia;

(5) what proportion of textile imports for Messrs. Dewhursts held at port in December 1992 were subject to individual examination.

Sir John Cope [holding answer 19 January 1993]: Customs tell me that they have almost completed inquiries in this case and so far there is no evidence to suggest any breaches of sanctions against Serbia and Montenegro. As the case is not yet finalised, it would be inappropriate to comment further.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Disabled People

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many disabled people below the pensionable age are living in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Mates: Estimates derived from the surveys of disability undertaken by the policy planning and research unit of the Department of Finance and Personnel in 1989-90 indicate that, according to the definition used in the survey, there were 96,000 disabled people under pension age in Northern Ireland.

Forestry (Public Access)

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many public access agreements have been concluded in Northern Ireland in each of the past three years in respect of Forestry Commission holdings sold to the private sector; and what percentage of total sales these figures represent.

Mr. Hanley: The Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland is responsible for state forestry in Northern Ireland. It has not entered into any public access arrangements in respect of woodland areas disposed of in the past three years. All such disposals during this period were in isolated localities, were small in size and were of no recreational significance.

Local Authorities

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to seek to allow local authorities in Northern Ireland additional powers and responsibilities; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Patrick Mayhew [holding answer 11 January 1993]: I have no such plans. However, the Government believe that there is considerable scope to transfer greater power, authority and responsibility to locally elected representatives in Northern Ireland and would be willing to give serious consideration to any proposals regarding future arrangements for regional or local government in Northern Ireland which seemed likely to prove widely acceptable. These issues are best considered in the comprehensive context of further political talks.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Legal Aid

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will estimate the total expenditure on (a) green form assistance, (b) legal aid for civil cases and (c) legal aid for criminal cases that will be authorised in 1993-94 (i) in England and (ii) in the Yorkshire region on the assumption that the current eligibility rules continue to apply and also on the assumption that the new eligibility criteria which were proposed at the time of the autumn statement are introduced on 1 April.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The only estimates available for 1993-94 are those for England and Wales as a whole. For England and Wales it is estimated that following the abolition of contributory green form assistance, £138·7 million will be spent on legal advice and assistance in 1993-94; £142·4 million would be spent if there were no changes to financial eligibility. It is estimated that £508·7 million will be spent on civil legal aid in 1993-94 and that £548·2 million would be spent if there were no changes to financial eligibility. The changes will have little effect on total expenditure on criminal legal aid which it is estimated will be £570 million in 1993-94.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will estimate for England and for the Yorkshire region the number of applications for (a) green form assistance and (b) civil legal aid that will be approved in 1992-93; and how many would be eligible under the new rules.

Mr. John M. Taylor: For England and Wales as a whole it is estimated that in 1992-93, a total of 1,461,000 bills will be paid for legal advice and assistance under the green form scheme and that 413,000 civil legal aid certificates will be issued. For the Yorkshire and Humberside region, not including Hambledon, Richmond, Ryedale or Scarborough, it is estimated that in 1992-93, 120,000 bills will be paid for advice and assistance under the green form scheme and that 40,000 civil legal aid certificates will be issued. It is not possible to estimate how many of these green form bills would have been paid, or these civil legal aid certificates issued, had the new eligibility limits been in force.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will estimate for England and for the Yorkshire region the number of applications for (a) green form assistance and (b) civil legal aid that will be approved in 1993-94 (i) on the assumption that the current eligibility rules are unchanged and (ii) on the assumption that the new eligibility criteria proposed at the time of the autumn statement are introduced on 1 April; and if he will estimate how many of those receiving legal aid under the new criteria would receive less aid in cash terms than they would have received under the old rules.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The only estimates available for 1993-94 are those for England and Wales as a whole. It is estimated that in 1993-94 under the current financial eligibility regulations, 1,548,000 bills for legal advice and assistance under the green form scheme would have been paid, and that 452,000 civil legal aid certificates would have been issued. Under the new regulations it is estimated that around 1,400,000 green form bills will be paid and 333,000 civil legal aid certificates will be issued. It is not possible to estimate the number of people who will receive less aid in cash terms under the new criteria.

Public Record Office

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many papers withheld at the Public Record Office have been subsequently released after review by the Lord Chancellor's advisory council in each year since 1979.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Advisory Council on Public Records has a role in considering and commenting on applications to the Lord Chancellor by Departments for the extended closure of public records, that is, beyond the statutory period of 30 years after their creation. It has never reviewed records after they have been closed.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Physics Departments

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what response he has made to the representations made to him by the Institute of Physics concerning the maintenance of the dual support system for physics departments not currently considered to be in the top rank.

Mr. Robert Jackson: The president of the Institute of Physics wrote to the chief scientific adviser on 17 November with the institute's views on the forthcoming science and technology White Paper. These included comments on the operation of the dual support system. The chief scientific adviser replied on 27 November thanking him for the institute's comments, which will be considered in preparing the White Paper.

Copies of the institute's comments were placed in the Library of the House on 18 December.

ENVIRONMENT

Lead Shot

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress his Department is making in discussions with interested parties concerning development of alternatives to lead shot; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: My Department set up a working group with interested parties on 31 October 1991 to develop a programme for introducing non-toxic shot and phasing-out lead shot in wetland areas.

The group has concluded that a target for commercial quantities of non-toxic shot for 12-bore shotguns to be available by September 1995 is feasible. The group intends that the majority of lead shooting over wetlands should be phased-out by September 1997; a ban on lead shot could operate from that date. The group will continue to pursue these objectives.

Rough Sleeping

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what criteria are used in assessing applications for grants under the rough sleeping initiative.

Mr. Baldry: Grants under the rough sleepers initiative in central London are given at the discretion of the Secretary of State. Projects are assessed against their value in meeting the policy objectives of the initiative. Capital projects comply with the standards laid down in the Housing Corporation's published schemework procedure guide and the value for money criteria published in the corporation's total cost indicator and grant rate circular.

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the amount of grant received by each organisation under the rough sleeping initiative.

Mr. Baldry: I will write to my hon. Friend about this shortly.

Parliamentary Alternative Energy Group

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent meetings he has had with the parliamentary alternative energy group; and what meetings he has planned with the parliamentary alternative energy group in the current year.

Mr. Maclean: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment attended a reception organised by the parliamentary alternative energy group at the House of Commons on Monday 14 December 1992. He has no plans at present to meet the group this year.

Peatlands

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to bring forward new measures to safeguard lowland peatlands of nature conservation importance in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Maclean: A working group on peat extraction comprising representatives of the main interested parties is preparing advice for my right hon. and learned Friend. The Government strategy for peatlands will be announced after receiving the working group's advice and considering all other relevant information.

Environmental Inspectorates

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to propose that a meeting of each EC nation's environmental inspectorate will also include the environmental authorities of central and eastern European nations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The Government attach importance to improving the quality of inspection through, inter alia, exchanging information and experience. To this end, in November last year, the United Kingdom presidency launched the network of EC environmental enforcement agencies. The value of participation in the network by central and east European countries can be assessed in due course when we have had more experience of how the network is working and taking account of other options that may be available. The Department is already providing some advice and assistance to central and east European inspectorates through the environmental know-how fund.

Contaminated Land

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment in what form he intends to publish the responses received from the first consultation exercise on contaminated land; if he will place a copy of all responses in the Library; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: We are still considering the way forward on proposals for registers of land which may be contaminated which have been the subject of two consultation exercises. Copies of responses to both consultation exercises will be placed in the Library when we have announced our decisions.

Homelessness

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what criteria are used in assessing applications for grants under section 73 of the Housing Act 1985.

Mr. Baldry: Grant under section 73 of the Housing Act 1985 is given at the discretion of the Secretary of State against criteria set out each year in notes for the guidance of applicants. I have today placed in the Library a copy of the guidance notes for 1993-94.

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the amount of grant received by each organisation under section 73 of the Housing Act 1985 in each of the past three years.

Mr. Baldry: I have today placed in the Library a list showing grants to homelessness voluntary organisations in England under the main section 73 grant programme in 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93.

Drinking Water (Lead)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has to introduce World Health Organisation standards for lead in drinking water; and if he will take steps to eradicate lead from drinking water supplies.

Mr. Maclean: We are considering whether any changes are needed in the light of the revised guidelines that the World Health Organisation is expected to publish later in the year.

Housing, Sandwell

Mr. Snape: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many new homes will be provided by Sandwell metropolitan borough authority in 1993-94; what is the total provision from central funds which will be received by the authority in support of capital expenditure on housing; and what capital expenditure he expects the authority to incur next year.

Mr. Baldry: The level of local authority housing capital expenditure in Sandwell in 1993-94, and priorities within the capital programme for that year, are matters for the council to decide in the light of available resources. Sandwell's housing investment programme allocation for 1993-94 is £21,554,000. Further resources for 1993-94 could be made available to Sandwell from housing special programmes.

Car Boot Sales

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to review the planning laws relating to car boot sales.

Mr. Baldry: My Department issued a public consultation paper—"Temporary Uses of Land, External Lighting and Miscellaneous Amendments to the Town and Country Planning General Development Order 1988" —in August last year inviting views on the proper scope of permitted development rights for the temporary use of land, including the use of land for markets and car boot sales.

More than 1,250 responses to the consultation paper have been received and are currently under consideration.

Environmental Disasters

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidance he gives to local authorities seeking to provide financial and other assistance to those whose homes are affected by environmental disasters of any kind.

Mr. Robin Squire: Guidance issued by my Department and others covering a wide range of local authority functions may be relevant, depending on the circumstances. Local authorities have a general power to incur expenditure which is in the interests of and will bring direct benefit to their area or its inhabitants, and we expect them to make appropriate use of that discretion.

Local Government Employment, Hampshire

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many people were employed (a) full time and (b) part time in local government in Hampshire in each year since 1987.

Mr. Robin Squire: The information is given in the table for each authority in Hampshire. Totals have not been given because data for some authorities are not available centrally.

Thermal Oxide Reprocessing Plant

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consideration he is giving to the holding of a public inquiry before coming to a decision on whether the THORP at Sellafield should proceed.

Mr. Maclean: The regulatory authorities' consultation on their proposed draft authorisations for the Sellafield site, including THORP, ends on 25 January. The chief inspector of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution and my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food will then consider whether there is a need to make changes to the draft authorisations in the light of comments received. Once they have decided whether, and if so how, the authorisations should be amended, my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State and my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food will consider whether to afford a hearing in accordance with the terms of the legislation.

Environment Council

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will report on the achievements of the United Kingdom's presidency of the Environment Council.

Mr. Howard: At the outset of our presidency I set a number of objectives. The first was to follow through the agreement reached at Rio and to begin to formulate the Community's response to them. This was to carried forward in many ways. Environment Ministers discussed the way forward at their informal meeting at Gleneagles in September following the lead given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister in the eight-point strategy that he put to the Lisbon European Council in June. Development Ministers have also given priority to UNCED follow-up in their declaration on the future of development policy. Much of the work in Brussels over the last six months has also been about measures to help put into practice the agreements reached at Rio. Foremost among these has been the consideration and endorsement by the Council of the fifth environmental action programme, which will not only provide the blueprint for the Community's environmental policy up to the end of the century, but will constitute the basis for the Community's response to "Agenda 21".

The second objective was to improve the integration of environmental considerations into other policy areas as the key to sustainable development. This is also a central theme of the fifth action programme, and reflects the strengthened text we had successfully negotiated into the Maastricht treaty.

Improved integration is a long-term objective, but good progress was made over the last six months. The Government commissioned a widely acclaimed report from the Institute for European Environmental Policy and made the subject the centrepiece for ministerial discussion at the Informal Council, where useful ideas for improving integration at Community level were generated. These were reflected not only in the conclusions of that meeting, but in the Council resolution on the fifth action programme. The Department of the Environment also collaborated with other Departments to influence and monitor the activities of other EC policy areas. Environmental issues were discussed in eight different Councils during the United Kingdom presidency, and a number of special conferences linked to the integration theme were organised or supported.

The third objective was to secure improvements in the implementation and enforcement of environmental legislation across the Community. The Government secured significant achievements here. We hosted the first meeting of the network of environmental enforcement authorities, securing participation from all member states and agreeing terms of reference and a programme of work for the future. This should ensure that the network is now firmly established as a mechanism for improving standards across the Community through exchanges of information, personnel and ideas between environmental regulators. The Government also secured an undertaking from the Commission to produce regular reports for the Council of Ministers on the application of existing Community legislation in the member states, held a first formal debate on this subject at the December Council meeting, and obtained the Council's agreement that such debates should take place annually in future. The Government have continued to press the Commission to bring forward proposals for a Community body to audit the application of EC environmental legislation, and have secured growing support from other member states for this idea.

The Government also made progress on a broad range of detailed measures in the Council.

Waste: agreement was finally reached on a regulation controlling the movement of waste within, into and out of the Community. This important and hard-won agreement opens the way for Community ratification of the Basel convention on trade in hazardous waste.

Ozone layer : a regulation was agreed accelerating the phase-out dates for the production and consumption within the Community of CFCs and other ozone-depleting substances.

Vehicle emissions: agreement was reached on stringent emission standards for vans and other light-duty vehicles to fill the gap between those already agreed for cars and for heavy-duty vehicles.

Fifth action programme: the Council agreed a resolution setting out its response to the Commission's fifth environmental action programme, which maps out a broad strategy for the Community's environment policy until the end of the century. The resolution included a passage taking account of the Edinburgh European Council conclusions on subsidiarity which will now guide Community environment policy.

Eco-Audit Scheme: broad agreement was reached on a Community eco-management and audit scheme, the aim of which is to encourage effective environmental management of industrial sites and regular public reporting of their environmental impacts.

Climate change: discussions were taken forward on all elements of the Commission's proposals for Community action. The proposed carbon/energy tax was discussed by Finance Ministers and remitted to experts for further work on a number of specific questions. The Energy Council discussed the draft directive on energy-saving measures and agreed new measures on the exploitation of renewable energy sources. Environment Ministers made good progress towards agreement on a mechanism for monitoring national programmes on greenhouse gas emissions.

Endangered species: good progress was made towards agreeing a workable basis for strict new Community controls on the wildlife trade. Member states' concerns about the complexity of the Commission's original proposals have largely been overcome.

Packaging: a good start was made in discussions on new Commission proposals for a directive on packaging and packaging waste.

Air pollution: the Council formally adopted a directive on air pollution by ozone, and work was started on two new measures concerning emissions from hazardous waste incineration and evaporative emissions from petrol distribution.

In addition, the Government made strenous efforts to overcome the blockages which have prevented the establishment of the European Environment Agency. Although it proved impossible to obtain agreement on a site during the course of the presidency, there is every indication that the main obstacles have now been removed, and that agreement should be possible under the Danish presidency. In the meantime, we worked closely with the Commission to identify tasks which could usefully be set in hand in the interim to anticipate the future work and needs of the agency.

My hon. Friend the Minister of State for the Environment and Countryside and I also represented the Community as presidency at several international meetings such as the UN general assembly in October and the Copenhagen meeting of the parties to the Montreal protocol in November. Officials from my Department also spoke for the Community and chaired Community co-ordination meetings as appropriate at various international meetings held at official level.

This represents a substantial record of achievement during the six months of our presidency. We achieved the objectives which we set ourselves at the outset, and worked hard to carry forward the environmental protection policies of the Community efficiently and effectively during our term of office. The Government look forward to further progress under the Danish presidency.

PRIME MINISTER

Security Service

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to the oral answer of 14 January by the Secretary of State for National Heritage to the hon. Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner), Official Report, columns 1075-76, to what categories of questions regarding the security service Ministers are now willing to provide substantive replies.

The Prime Minister: As I said in my statement to the House on 6 May last year, at column 65, successive Governments have not commented on matters relating to security and intelligence. The reason for that is clear: it is difficult to comment without revealing, by what is said or not said, information that can have a bearing on the effectiveness of these services and the safety of their staff.

Nevertheless, from time to time there will be matters of public concern on which it is desirable and possible to make a considered statement. There are precedents under successive Administrations when such statements have been made without prejudice to the general convention. An example is the assurance which I gave hon. Members on 29 June 1992, Official Report, column 37, about postal and telephone interception.

UN Aims Register

Mr. Alton: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on progress with setting up a United Nations arms register.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 19 January 1993]: The register was established by a UN general assembly resolution in December 1991. In December 1992 the general assembly approved by consensus a report by technical experts on the register's implementation. Participating countries are required to provide their first returns of information by 30 April 1993 covering arms imports and exports in the calendar year 1992. The Secretary-General will produce an annual report containing the information registered which will be available for consultation by member states.

Royal Family (Telephone Tapping)

Mr. Alton: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement concerning Her Majesty's Government's policy regarding the tapping of telephones of members of the royal family or their personal friends.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 19 January 1993]: The interception of communications during their transmission by means of a public telephone system is subject to the provisions of the Interception of Communications Act 1985. The Government have accepted Sir David Calcutt's recommendation to consider whether the legislation adequately protects private telephone calls. As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for National Heritage assured the House in his statement on 14 January, there is no substance to rumours about the involvement of the security and intelligence agencies in interception of the communications of the royal family.

Intergovernmental Binding Decisions

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his oral answer of 14 December 1992, Official Report, column 37, what are the criteria distinguishing an intergovernmental binding decision and treaty if both are justiciable in the International Court of Justice.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 19 January 1993]: I refer the hon. Member to my answer of 15 January, at column 822.

TRANSPORT

English Channel

Mr. Stephen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what action is taken at the time, or subsequently, if a vessel is observed to be violating the rules for preventing collisions in the English channel;

(2) what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the rules for preventing collisions in the English channel and the policing of the rules by radar or otherwise.

Mr. Norris: The channel traffic separation scheme, coupled with radar surveillance by the United Kingdom and France of traffic in the Dover strait, has been effective in reducing the level of accidents in the area by over 85 per cent. Where there is evidence of a contravention of the rules, appropriate follow-up action will be taken by the Department which may include prosecution.

Speed Limits

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many responses have been received to date on his Department's consultation paper on speed limits; and how many such representations have advocated the fitting of speed limiters on cars.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: A total of 142 responses were received and six advocated the fitting of speed limiters to cars.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will invite Steve Wright of BBC Radio 1 to assist the campaign to raise awareness of the effect of greater speed on pedestrian fatalities.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: My Department always looks to enlist the media's support for its publicity campaigns to reduce road casualties. Radio 1 has been particularly helpful in pressing home the messages of recent Christmas drink-drive campaigns. We are currently drawing up our campaign plans for 1993 and look forward to their continuing support.

Transport Links

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make available copies of all papers presented to the Council of Ministers and European Commission and the individual directorates general by his Department relating to the development of (a) transport link projects between Wales and Ireland, (b) the trans-European transport network and (c) the INTERREG programme.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Over a period of many years my Department and others have contributed to the EC Commission's work on transport links between Wales and Ireland and on trans-European networks in the context of the European regional development fund, the series of EC transport infrastructure programmes and, more recently, the development of networks guidelines for transport. It would not be possible at reasonable cost to identify all the papers in question: there is also the difficulty that in some cases the material may contain commercially sensitive information. INTERREG, an EC initiative on cross-border co-operation under the structural funds, is a matter for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for the Environment and for Northern Ireland.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement outlining his Department's policy on the establishment of trans-European networks; and what representations he has made to the European Community concerning prioritisation for the development of such routes.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: As one of the signatories to that treaty, the Government support the provisions of Maastricht, including the articles on trans-European networks for transport, energy and telecommunications. With other member states, we are now contributing to the Commission's work in drafting network guidelines for various transport modes.

British Rail (Concessionary Travel)

Sir Giles Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what arrangements he intends to make to safeguard concessionary travel arrangements for employees, and their dependants, and for retired staff on the privatisation of British Rail.

Mr. Freeman: We intend to take powers in the forthcoming Railways Bill to ensure that future passenger service operators may be compelled to provide travel facilities so as to protect the benefits currently enjoyed by BR staff, pensioners and their dependants. The regulator will be enabled to impose conditions in operators' licences requiring them to honour these existing travel facilities. Successor employers of present BR staff will be under an obligation to secure such facilities because the obligation will be preserved when those staff transfer from BR. Pensioners and their dependants, and others with preserved facilities, will continue to enjoy the travel facilities which they have now.

Railway Pensions

Sir Anthony Durant: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to publish the paper on railway pensions to which he referred on 12 January, Official Report, column 794.

Mr. Freeman: I am publishing the paper today and have placed copies in the Library. It confirms that there should be a joint industry pension scheme to succeed the present BR open scheme; that there should be arrangements to ensure that pensions to which present railway staff are now entitled are safeguarded; and that their future pension benefits should be no less favourable than in the present BR scheme. It also invites comments on two alternative arrangements proposed to secure the rights of railway pensioners and on other proposals made in the paper.

Hereford Bypass

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received from (a) English Nature, (b) the Herefordshire nature trust and (c) the Council for the Protection of Rural England regarding the environmental impact of the published route for the A49-465 Hereford bypass; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: All three bodies submitted written representations concerning the environmental impact of the scheme, in particular on the Lugg meadows site of special scientific interest.

In addition, the Herefordshire nature trust and the CPRE appeared at the public inquiry which opened in 1991. Both these groups put forward alternative routes to that proposed by the Department.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what total area of farmland would suffer from severance under (a) the published route for the A49-465 Hereford bypass and (b) the western alternative route 1C; what proportion of the area in each case would be (i) grade 1, (ii) grade 2 and (iii) grade 3*a*; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The total area of farmland to be severed is not readily available. MAFF's evidence to the public inquiry gave as the prime reason for their support of the eastern route the view that the western route options traverse more of the best quality land than the eastern options and the former would also result in the isolation of significant pockets of very high quality land inside the western bypass line.

The areas of farmland required for the scheme, in the grades requested are:

	Published Route hectares	Alternative 1C hectares
Grade 1	1·1	5·2
Grade 2	22·6	20·0
Grade 3*a*	29·2	15·8

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the lengths of (a) the published route for the A49-465 Hereford bypass and (b) the western alternative route 1C; what are the (i) estimated construction costs and (ii) vehicle travelling times for both HGV and other vehicles, of each of the two routes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The length of the published route is 13·6 km, 8·4 miles. The length of the alternative route 1C is 9·15 km, 5·7 miles.

The estimated construction cost, excluding land, at Q2/1992 prices for the published route is £28·2 million. The cost of alternative route 1C is £21·1 million.

Vehicle travelling times are:

	HGVs minutes	Other vehicles minutes
Published Route	11·10	9·04
Alternative 1C	7·84	6·36

These times are based on speeds for HGVs of 64 kph, 40 mph, on single carriageways and 80 kph, 50 mph, on dual carriageways. Speeds for other vehicles are 80 kph, 50 mph, on single carriageways and 97 kph, 60 mph, on dual carriageways.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the distances and travelling times expected for (a) HGV vehicles and (b) other vehicles starting from a common point on the A49 north and ending at a common point on the A465 south (South Wales) along (i) the inner ring road through Hereford, (ii) the published route for the A49-A465 Hereford bypass and (iii) the western alternative route 1C; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The distances and travelling times are as follows:

	Length	HGV times (minutes)	Other vehicle times (minutes)
(i) Inner Ring Road	8·61 km (5·3 m)		11·78
(ii) Published route	14·48 km (9·0 m)	12·13	9·85
(iii) Alternative 1C	8·15 km (5·0 m)	6·91	5·73

Journey times for HGVs on the existing road are not available as surveys were not undertaken. However, in general terms in an urban area these can be expected to be considerably longer than for other vehicles.

Chicago (Ministerial Visit)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the total cost of the recent ministerial visit to Chicago; who went; and what was studied.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 15 January 1993]: I am grateful to the hon. Member for giving me the opportunity to confirm that the total cost of the recent visit to Chicago was not £25,000 as reported by the Evening Standard, but just under £7,000. I can only assume the £25,000 estimate was based on at least one journalist's attempt to justify his own expenses.

I visited Chicago to look at the city's system of parking enforcement and adjudication prior to a new system being introduced in London. I also took the opportunity to see traffic control and information systems, incident management on freeways and an in-vehicle route guidance system, and held meetings with the mayor, the city aviation commissioner and the head of the regional transit authority.

I was accompanied by my private secretary and three other officials from the Department.

WALES

River Dee Crossing

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the completion date of the third River Dee crossing; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Transport grant approval has been given for a start to be made in 1994-95. The scheme is expected to take approximately two and a half years to complete. The precise start date will be a matter for Clwyd county council to determine following the transport grant settlement for 1994-95 which will be announced towards the end of the year.

Forestry Commission (Asset Sales)

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list each area of Forestry Commission land in Wales by county hectarage and location sold to the private sector during each of the last five years and the total receipts, by county, accruing to the commission from such sales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Lists giving details of the areas of forest land sold by the Forestry Commission in the four years from 1988 to 1991 are held in the Library of the House. A similar list is being prepared of the areas of forest land sold in 1992 and I shall arrange for a copy to be placed in the Library of the House as soon as possible.

The receipts from sales of forest land are not recorded by county, but the total receipts for Wales in each of the last five financial years are as follows:

1988	871
1989	1,527
1990	1,786
1991	1,956
1992	2,179

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his current policy in respect of the sale of Forestry Commission assets in Wales; and if he will list those forest areas currently available for sale to the private sector.

Sir Wyn Roberts: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer given by my right hon. and learned Friend the then Secretary of State for Scotland on 16 June 1989.

The following areas of forest land in Wales are at present being offered for sale on the open market:

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what evidence he has that a public access requirement diminishes the market value of Forestry Commission assets in Wales on offer of sale to the public sector;

(2) if he will list each area of Forestry Commission land in Wales sold to the private sector over the last five years in respect of which public access agreements have been made.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The arrangements for securing continued public access to woodland sold by the Forestry Commission were introduced in October 1991. They have not been in operation long enough to assess what effect they might have on market values. Only five of the woodland areas considered under these arrangements have been sold so far. None of the sales was subject to an access agreement.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his policy in respect of the maintenance of public access to Forestry Commission land sold to the private sector; what steps he has taken to ensure the implementation of this policy; and what assessment he has made of its efficacy.

Sir Wyn Roberts: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer given by my right hon. and learned Friend the then Secretary of State for Scotland on 21 November 1990, columns 164-66. The arrangements to implement the policy were introduced in October 1991 and are scheduled to be reviewed at the end of this year.

Tuberculosis

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has concerning the incidence of TB in humans, by county in Wales for each of the last five years.

Alcohol and Drugs

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will publish a table showing the total grant paid by his Department (a) in total, (b) in revenue and (c) in capital towards the provision of (1) residential facilities and (2) non-residential facilities for (i) people with alcohol problems and (ii) people with drug problems in each of the past five years;

(2) if he will publish a table showing the total grant available from his Department (a) in total, (b) in revenue and (c) in capital towards the provision of (1) residential facilities and (2) non-residential facilities for (i) people with alcohol problems and (ii) people with drug problems in 1992-93 and 1993-94.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Funds for drug and alcohol projects are provided directly and indirectly from the Welsh Office from a number of sources. In part they are provided from small specific budgets: others are disbursed by health authorities, either from moneys specifically allocated—some £3 million in 1992-93—or from their general allocations. Details of individual allocations funded from all these sources could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Public Bodies

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the bodies in Wales to which (a) he nominates members at present and (b) to which he nominated members in 1979.

Mr. David Hunt: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Don Valley (Mr. Redmond) on 30 October 1992, column 866-905, listing current appointments I have made to public bodies in Wales. Comparable information for 1979 is not available.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will place in the Library a copy of the guidance sent to the chairmen of national health service trusts in relation to the salaries of directors of trusts and increases thereof in 1993.

Mr. David Hunt: I have placed in the Library of the House copies of the two guidance letters sent to trust chairmen in November.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what discussions he has had with representatives of the football pools industry and the Union of Shop, Distributive and Allied Workers about the proposed national lottery; and what conclusions were reached.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 15 January 1993]: I met representatives of the Pools Promoters Association on 9 December 1992, when they put forward a list of changes that they would like to see to their regulatory regime. I look forward to continuing the debate as the Bill progresses. I am not conscious of any approach for a meeting from the Union of Shop, Distributive and Allied Workers.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee if he has considered an application for an exhibition relating to the Police Complaints Authority to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Michael J. Martin: I understand that, under procedures agreed by the Administration Committee, arrangements have been made for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from 1 to 5 February 1993.

Testicular Cancer

Mr. Michael J. Martin: I understand that, under procedures agreed by the Administration Committee, arrangements have been made for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from 22 to 26 February 1993.

EDUCATION

Higher Education

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what proposals he has to ensure that, after 1993, Her Majesty's inspectorate will inspect all institutions funded by the Higher Education Funding Council in the same way.

Mr. Boswell: Her Majesty's inspectorate ceased to have responsibility for inspection in higher education in England on 1 September 1992. That responsibility, extended to the established universities, now rests with the Higher Education Funding Council for England which plans shortly to issue a circular on its approach to the assessment of teaching quality.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list, for the latest full year for which figures are available, for all institutions funded for taught courses by the Universities Funding Council (a) the number of full-time equivalent students enrolled upon degree-level courses, (b) the total funding for teaching received from the Universities Funding Council, (c) the proportion of that institution's total public funding received from the Universities Funding Council and (d) the proportion of full-time equivalent students at the institution following non-degree courses.

Mr. Boswell: Statistics on funding and enrolments of higher education courses are contained in "Funding and Enrolments 1991-92", an information document published by PCFC in November 1992, a copy of which is in the Library. For the first time, in respect of 1991-92, all PCFC institutions will be completing a finance return. This will indicate the public funds received from the council and from other public sources. Results from this survey will be available during the next three months and will be published this summer.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list, for the latest full year for which figures are available, all institutions funded for taught courses by the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council (a) the number of full-time equivalent students enrolled upon degree-level courses, (b) the total funding for teaching received from the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council, (c) the proportion of that institution's total public funding received from the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council and (d) the proportion of full-time equivalent students at the institution following non-degree courses.

Mr. Boswell: Statistics on funding and enrolments on higher education courses are contained in "Funding and Enrolments 1991-92", an information document published by PCFC in November 1992, a copy of which is in the Library. For the first time, in respect of 1991-92, all PCFC institutions will be completing a finance return. This will indicate the public funds received from the council and from other public sources. Results from this survey will be available during the next three months and will be published this summer.

Degree-level Education

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what measures he will take to ensure that, under the proposed arrangements after April, the validation and quality of degree-level education provided will be assessed in precisely the same way for all institutions funded by the Higher Education Funding Council.

Mr. Boswell: The Higher Education Quality Council is undertaking a programme of academic audits of all degree awarding institutions. These audits will scrutinise the quality assurance systems of institutions, including any validation arrangements for non-degree awarding institutions, and report on their operation. The council will also advise the Secretary of State on applications from non-degree awarding institutions for degree awarding powers. The Higher Education Funding Council for England will be undertaking a programme of quality assessments. All these activities will be undertaken in a way which ensures comparability.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list, for the latest year available and for every institution funded by the Universities Funding Council or the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council, the proportion of students admitted to degree-level courses who have successfully completed that course.

Mr. Boswell: Details of leavers from the old universities are given in table 10 of "University Management Statistics and Performance indicators", 1992 edition, published by the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals and the University Funding Council, a copy of which is in the Library. Aggregate data for the former polytechnics and colleges are shown in the Department for Education statistical bulletin 9/92, which is also in the Library. The next Department for Education departmental report will contain a table showing that approximately 15 per cent. of all full-time and sandwich first degree students did not successfully complete their course.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) if he will list the authorities authorised to award degrees for the taught courses which commenced in September 1992 at each of the institutions funded by the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council or the Universities Funding Council;

(2) if he will list the authorities authorised to award degrees for the research courses which commenced in September 1992 at each of the institutions funded by the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council or the Universities Funding Council.

Mr. Boswell: The following institutions, funded by the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council or the Universities Funding Council, are authorised to award both taught course and research degrees:

West Surrey College of Art and Design

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list those official publications in which potential undergraduate and research students may inform themselves of the list of colleges in receipt of funding from the Higher Education Funding Council, together with associated relevant information about degree-level courses.

Mr. Boswell: The Department published last year a leaflet, "Higher Education: A New Framework", which lists all higher education colleges which are to be funded by the Higher Education Funding Council for England. Information on courses is available in the "Guide for Applicants" available from the polytechnics central admission system and a number of commercially published compendia. Copies of both named publications are available in the Library.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list, for the latest year available and for every institution funded by the Universities Funding Council or the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council, the proportion of mature students admitted to degree-level courses funded by those institutions.

Mr. Boswell: The numbers of mature students in United Kingdom universities and in other higher education institutions in England are shown in volume 1—students and staff—of "University Statistics 1990-91" published by the Universities Statistical Record, and statistical bulletin 19/92, "Students in Higher Education, England 1990", published by the Department. Copies of both publications are in the Library.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what steps he intends to take this year to ensure that prospective students entering degree-level courses in September 1993 are fully aware that the quality of degree courses offered by institutions which are not permitted to designate themselves as universities is comparable to that provided by institutions which are.

Mr. Boswell: All institutions that offer degrees have appropriate quality assurance mechanisms in place irrespective of whether they have "university" in their title. The Department's leaflet, "Higher Education: A New Framework", sets this out.

Truancy

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement regarding his policy on (a) parents removing children from school during term time for reasons other than illness or bereavement and (b) his plans to reduce truancy levels in schools.

Mr. Forth: It is for individual schools to determine whether a given absence should be treated as authorised or unauthorised in the light of the particular circumstances of each case. My right hon. Friend attaches particular importance to maintaining high levels of attendance in our schools. To this end, schools are now required to publish their rates of unauthorised absence in their prospectuses and annual reports and this information will also be figuring in local comparative tables of school performance from this year onwards. To improve attendance at schools with high truancy levels, we have recently announced support for projects in 64 English local education authorities to a total value of £8·6 million under the "Reducing Truancy" programme of the grants for education support and training scheme for 1993-94.

Colleges

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list all those institutions of which he is aware which now designate themselves colleges of further and higher education.

Mr. Boswell: On the basis of the list of institutions which have been incorporated under sections 15 and 16 of the Further and Higher Education Act 1992, the information requested is as follows:

Bromley College of Further and Higher Education
Havering College of Further and Higher Education
Matthew Boulton College of Further and Higher Education, Birmingham
Norwich City College of Further and Higher Education
Sandwell College of Further and Higher Education
Stockport College of Further and Higher Education
York College of Further and Higher Education
Yorkshire Coast College of Further and Higher Education, Scarborough

Research Courses

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list, for the latest full year for which figures are available, for all institutions funded for research from the research councils, Government Departments and other public sources (a) the number of researchers at the college, (b) the total public research funding received by the institution and (c) the proportion of that institution's total research funding received from public sources.

Mr. Boswell: The latest details of research income received by each university in the United Kingdom were shown by source in "University Statistics 1989-90—

Volume 3 (Finance)", published by the Universities' Statistical Record in February 1992. The latest details of the number of staff engaged in research only at each university were shown in "University Statistics 1990-91 —Volume 1 (Students and staff)", published in November 1992. Copies of both are available in the Library. Comparable information is not available for the former polytechnics and colleges funded by the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council.

KPMG Management Consultants

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list the contracts awarded by his Department to KPMG Management Consultants over the past 12 months.

Mr. Boswell: Six contracts were awarded by the Department for Education to KPMG Management Consulting in the 12 months to 31 December 1992:

Youth Organisations

Mr. Bill Walker : To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will give details of the names and addresses of the organisations which are on his register of voluntary youth organisations eligible for grants under a special London scheme; if he will give details of the grants given to each organisation in the years (a) 1990-91, (b) 1991-92 and (c) 1992-93; and what has been achieved by the grants.

Mr. Boswell: The Londonwide education voluntary organisations that benefited from the Department's three-year interim scheme, and the levels of grant awarded are listed in the table; their addresses have been placed in the Library. These special grants enabled the organisations concerned to sustain their work during a three-year transition period following the abolition of the ILEA.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Bosnia (No-fly Zone)

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has received about Croatian air force activity in the no-fly zone over Bosnia-Herzegovina in breach of UN resolution 781; what evidence exists that Croat flights are engaged in the smuggling of arms in breach of the international arms embargo; what representations have been made to the Government of Croatia on this subject; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The UN Secretary-General has issued regular reports to the Security Council giving details of violations of the no-fly zone established by resolution 781 of 9 October and 786 of 11 November. It is clear from these that, to varying degrees, all parties in Bosnia Herzegovina, including the Croats, have conducted flights outside the terms permitted in the resolutions, some of which may have been used to smuggle arms. The total of unauthorised flights to 14 January was 377. The United Kingdom and other members of the Security Council have made a démarche to the Croatian Government representative at the United Nations.

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the extent to which Bosnian-Serb aircraft have observed the provisions of UN Security Council resolution 781; and if he will support calls for enforcement of the no-fly zone.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The UN Secretary-General has issued regular reports to the Security Council giving details of violations of the no-fly zone established by resolutions 781 of 9 October and 786 of 11 November. It is clear from these that, to varying degrees, all parties in Bosnia Herzegovina, including the Bosnian Serbs, have conducted flights outside the terms permitted in the resolutions. The total of unauthorised flights to 14 January was 377. Members of the Security Council, including the United Kingdom, are currently considering a resolution on enforcement of the no-fly zone which will apply to all parties.

Religious Freedom

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps the Government are taking to persuade nations with which the United Kingdom trades and maintains diplomatic relations to allow freedom of religious expression and cease persecuting religious minorities.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We take regular action on the question of religious intolerance, both on a bilateral basis and in conjunction with EC partners. We believe that action in international bodies is particularly effective on such matters. We are therefore active within the United Nations in ensuring that the international community continues to concentrate on these issues.

CSCE

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the CSCE Council meeting in Stockholm of 15 and 16 December.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [pursuant to the reply, 11 January 1993, c. 561]: The complete text of the answer to my hon. Friend is as follows:

My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary represented the United Kingdom at the Council meeting of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe which took place on 14 and 15 December in Stockholm.

The Stockholm meeting marked a further stage in the transition of the CSCE from an organisation primarily involved with setting standards of behaviour in the fields of human rights and international security to one whose task is also to prevent and if necessary end conflicts.

The Council endorsed the work of the international conference of former Yugoslavia. It agreed a detailed policy intended to help prevent the spread of the fighting into other parts of the former Yugoslavia and to tighten sanctions. The CSCE missions in Kosova, Sandjak and Vojvodina will be reinforced.

The Council took steps to promote long-term solutions to the conflict in Moldova. The CSCE will continue to press for agreements to be concluded on the early and complete withdrawal of foreign troops from the territories of the Baltic states and will also dispatch a mission to Estonia to address human rights issues between the different communities in Estonia.

Despite intensive negotiations on Nagorno Karabakh, no progress was made on the declaration of a ceasefire, the dispatch of a CSCE monitoring mission or the convening of the Minsk conference.

The Council strengthened the institutions and procedures of the CSCE in order to help deal with conflict in Europe. Following the Prime Minister's initiative at the Helsinki summit, it established the post of Secretary General, to be filled in 1993. Mr. Max van der Stoel was appointed high commissioner on national minorities. The chairman in office will take steps to ensure co-ordination of CSCE activities with those of the United Nations.

The CSCE's role as one of Europe's security institutions is now better defined and its organisation is evolving to enable it to meet its responsibilities more effectively. It will concentrate on standard setting and monitoring in the fields of human rights and relations between states and also on preventive diplomacy and action to end conflict in Europe. Together with our European partners, we shall continue to support it and work to make it more effective.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Eggs

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what consideration has been given to the marketing of eggs produced in the United Kingdom with a British produce label.

Mr. Curry: There is specific provision in the EC Egg Marketing Standards Regulations for eggs and egg packs to carry terms or symbols which refer to a member state or a region of origin. It is for individual egg packers and retailers to decide whether to mark their eggs as British, but many of them do.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the total volume of eggs imported into the United Kingdom in each of the last 12 months; and from which countries.

Mr. Curry: The volume, in metric tonnes, of eggs, including eggs not in shells, imported into the United Kingdom is shown on the table by country of dispatch. Figures are given for the months November 1991 to October 1992, the most recent 12 months for which data are available.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what checks exist to ensure that imported eggs sold in the United Kingdom in pre-labelled packaging meet United Kingdom standards of size and quality marking.

Mr. Curry: Quality and size standards for eggs are laid down in the EC Egg Marketing Standards Regulations. These require all eggs, including eggs imported from other member states, to be subject to checking by means of random sampling at all stages of marketing. These checks are carried out by the egg marketing inspectorate in England and Wales and equivalent bodies in Scotland and Northern Ireland or, at retail, by the trading standards departments of local authorities. Eggs imported from the Netherlands would also be subject to inspection by the Dutch authorities.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he is taking to ensure that imported eggs into the United Kingdom are not sold as fresh farm eggs.

Mr. Curry: Eggs can be sold at retail as "farm fresh" only if they meet the standards for class A eggs laid down by the EC Egg Marketing Standards Regulations. Compliance with the standards is checked by the egg marketing inspectorate in England and Wales and equivalent bodies in Scotland and Northern Ireland and, at retail, by the trading standards departments of local authorities. These arrangements apply to both home-produced and imported eggs.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he has taken to ensure that eggs from egg sale co-operatives in Holland are not being dumped on the United Kingdom market; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: A small proportion of eggs sold and processed in the United Kingdom come from other member states and they are generally priced competitively. There is no evidence that any significant volume of eggs is being imported at very low prices.

Oil Dispersants

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what tests have been carried out to simulate toxicity in beach and rocky foreshore cleaning for each of the oil dispersants (a) Dispolene 345, (b) Dasic Slickgone LTSW and (c) BP Enersperse 1037; what results were obtained; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: Before an oil dispersant is approved for use in United Kingdom waters it is required to meet stringent standards for efficacy, viscosity, storage stability and toxicity. Tests are carried out by the Warren Spring Laboratory and this Ministry's directorate of fisheries research.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to state that the Enersperse dispersant used in the Shetlands incident was Enersperse 1583, and not, as previously indicated, Enersperse 1037.

The test for toxicity in sea water and beach conditions compares a suspension of oil in sea water with a similar suspension to which the candidate dispersant has been added. To pass, the suspension containing the dispersant must be no more toxic than that containing oil and sea water alone. Dispolene 34S, Dasic Slickgone LTSW and Enersperse 1583 all passed this test.

The test for toxicity in rocky shore conditions similarly involves a comparative assessment of the toxicity of the oil and of the dispersant. Enersperse 1583 passed this test. Dispolene 34S did not. Slickgone LTSW was not proposed for use on rocky shores and was accordingly not subject to the test.

Further technical details of our toxicity testing procedures are given in fisheries research technical report No. 39, a copy of which is available in the Library of the House.

Bananas

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether the proceeds of the tariff on bananas will be redistributed to Africa, Caribbean and Pacific area suppliers of bananas.

Mr. Curry: The Commission has proposed new aid measures to assist ACP banana producers. No decisions have yet been taken on these, but they would not be funded specifically from the proceeds of the tariff on bananas. Tariff revenues from all commodities are treated for budgetary purposes as Community own resources.

Industrial Discharges

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will conduct a survey of dioxin pollution of farmland by industrial discharges.

Mr. Soames: The analysis of milk for contaminants provides a good indication of environmental contamination. The Ministry has therefore undertaken a survey of milk from farms in several rural and urban/industrial areas in the United Kingdom and published the results in food surveillance paper No. 31. The surveillance programme of dioxins in milk from farms in areas near to potential sources of dioxins is planned to continue.

Rape Seed

Sir Patrick McNair-Wilson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans the Government have for encouraging the cultivation of rape seed for use as a fuel for motor vehicles.

Mr. Curry: Rape seed may be grown for non-food use (including for motor vehicle fuel) on arable land, with the benefit of the oil seed area payment, or on set-aside land with the benefit of the lower set-aside payment.

Whisky

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the export record of the Scotch whisky industry for the last five years.

Mr. Curry: The volume and value of Scotch whisky exports for the last five years are as follows:

	Volume (million litres of pure alcohol)	Value (£ billion)
1987	240·17	1·14
1988	245·98	1·29
1989	242·49	1·47
1990	238·30	1·71
1991	227·75	1·83

Fishing Vessels

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many fishing vessels 12 m long and under are registered in the north-east; and what is their total horse power.

Mr. Norris: I have been asked to reply.

The information requested is as follows:

Fishing vessels 12 m or less	Total horsepower
551	43,794

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what percentage of total horse power for all vessels is accounted for by boats of 12 m length and under.

Mr. Norris: I have been asked to reply.

Vessels of 12 m or less represent 42 per cent. of the total fishing vessel horsepower.

SCOTLAND

Housing

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing (a) the assessed need and (b) the current provision of (a) sheltered and (b) special needs housing in (i) Scotland, (ii) Strathclyde, (iii) Renfrew district, (iv) Paisley, (v) Johnstone and (vi) Elderslie; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Guidance on the provision of sheltered housing and housing for the disabled were issued to local authorities on 28 March 1991 in the circular "Housing and Community Care" (Env. 8/91). The guidelines give only a general indication and authorities were advised to set targets in the light of local circumstances.

The latest available information for provision compared to the guidelines is set out in the following table. Information for Paisley, Johnstone and Elderslie is not available centrally.

Ambulance Service

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next plans to meet the controller of the Scottish ambulance service to discuss the efficient operation of services within (a) the Argyll and Clyde health board area and (b) Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: My right hon. Friend the Minister of State meets the general manager of the Scottish ambulance service from time to time. He is accountable to the Common Services Agency for the performance of the Scottish ambulance service. Officials of the Scottish Office Home and Health Department regularly meet senior staff of the Common Services Agency and discuss measures aimed at improving response rates having regard to the resources made available.

Homelessness

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish details of which local authorities have benefited during 1991-92 and 1992-93 from the additional £15 million capital allocation made to enable local authorities to tackle homelessness; and if he will detail the homelessness initiatives which the allocation has led to with a breakdown of how the allocation has been distributed between (a) the local authorities and (b) the specific homelessness initiatives.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 17 December 1992]: A table setting out the additional resources made available to local authorities in 1991-92 and so far in 1992-93 to support homelessness projects has been placed in the House Library.

Acid Rain

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the sites of special scientific interest damaged by acid rain in the latest year for which figures are available and give the hectarage of each site of special scientific interest affected.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 12 January 1993]: The information is not available in the form requested. Research between 1988 and 1991 funded by the former Nature Conservancy Council examined fresh waters within sites of special scientific interest which were considered to be vulnerable to the effects of acid rain. Of 89 sites in Scotland which were examined, the 44 listed in the table showed evidence of acidification beyond natural background levels of one or more fresh water features for which acid rain is the presumed cause.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many parliamentary questions in (a) the last and (b) the current Session of Parliament have been referred to the chief executive of the Benefits Agency; what percentage this is of the total number of parliamentary questions tabled in each of these Sessions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: The information is in the table:

Session	Total	Benefits Agency	Percentage
[1]1991-92	1,270	110	7
[2]1992-93	1,822	283	16

[1]31 October 1991 to 16 March 1992.
[2]27 April 1992 to current date.

Disability Allowances

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many claimants in (a) York, (b) North Yorkshire and (c) England who were in receipt of mobility allowance or attendance allowance before April 1992 are still waiting for a decision on (i) claims and (ii) appeals for disability living allowance;

(2) how many claimants in (a) York, (b) North Yorkshire and (c) England have been waiting (i) less than three months, (ii) three to six months, (iii) six to 12 months and (iv) more than 12 months for a decision on (1) claims and (2) appeals for disability living allowance.

Mr. Scott: The information requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give (a) the number of applications for disability living allowance and attendance allowances referred to the ministerial hotline since it was opened and (b) the number of those which have been cleared, together with the average waiting time.

Mr. Scott: The administration of disability living allowance and attendance allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from M. Bichard to Mr. Jim Cousins, dated 17 January 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the number of applications for Disability Living Allowance (DLA) and Attendance Allowance (AA) referred to the ministerial hotline since it began and the number of those which have been cleared, together with the average waiting time.

As you are aware an unprecedented number of letters had been received from MPs as a consequence of the large number of claims following the successful launch of DLA. The DLA hotline was set up to alleviate problems experienced when MPs were unable to contact the DLA Unit via the main switchboard and to provide up to date information about a specific claim with the minimum of delay.

Up to 8 January 1993, 4,607 calls have been received. All the cases have had some action taken and an update provided to the enquirer. The aim is to provide an update to the enquirer within 48 hours of the initial call and this target has been met on average in 97 per cent. of cases. Of the calls received 4,197 have been finally cleared and the remaining calls will be finally cleared when the operational areas have processed the cases. I can assure you that these cases are being monitored to ensure they are cleared as quickly as possible. These calls are not necessarily about new DLA claims, some refer to existing awards of AA and Mobility Allowance (MobA) transferred to the DLA Unit and DLA reviews and appeals. Statistics are not held in a format that enables me to provide an average clearance time.

There is no dedicated hotline for AA but calls are treated in the same way and the DLA hotline liaise with the special correspondence section in the AA Unit who are then responsible for responding directly to the MP. Up to 8 January 1993, 483 of the 4,607 calls have been referred to the AA Unit and 13 have not yet been cleared. The target 48 hour update has been met in all cases by the AA Unit.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report. A copy will also be placed in the Library.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claims to date for the disability living allowance have been completed (a) with the assistance of telephone calls and (b) with the assistance of visits made by the forms completion service staff in the disability benefits centres.

Mr. Scott [pursuant to his reply, 27 October 1992, Official Report, columns 751-52]: The chief executive has written further to the hon. Member.

Carers

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the effect of the registration of a supported lodging as a small residential home, pursuant to the Registered Homes (Amendment) Act 1991 on the benefit entitlement of a typical carer previously in receipt of housing benefit, disability living allowance (care) and the income support severe disability premium and now receiving the residential allowance in their place.

Mr. Burt: The operation of the Registered Homes Act is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health. However, I understand that from 1 April 1993, under an amendment to that Act, proprietors of residential care homes for fewer than four people—small homes—which are judged by their local authority as providing both board and personal care, will be required to register with that authority. Homes providing board and personal care for four residents or more are already required to register.

The residential allowance will be introduced from 1 April as part of the new community care arrangements and will be paid to residents who enter a registered home as part of their normal income support entitlement.

People resident at 31 March in small homes, which are subsequently required to register, and who are receiving housing benefit to help with the home fees will have their entitlement to housing benefit transitionally protected for as long as they remain in the same home and otherwise remain entitled to that benefit.

Only those residents in small homes at 31 March 1993, which are subsequently required to register, who are already receiving higher levels of income support will have preserved rights to those higher levels.

Where a resident has a preserved right to income support, they will also have a preserved right to attendance allowance or the care component of disability living allowance and any associated income support premium.

Benefit Entitlement

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the principal provisions governing entitlement to social security benefits of unemployed people involved in self-build projects.

Mr. Burt: People receiving benefits for unemployment involved in self-build projects are subject to the normal conditions of entitlement to benefit; in particular they must continue to actively seek work each week and be prepared to take a job offer or attend a job interview immediately the opportunity arises.

Independent Living Fund

Sir John Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how the limit for establishing the cost of a placement in a residential or nursing home will be set under the proposed arrangements for the replacement of the independent living fund; who will assess the needs of a disabled person requiring personal assistance over the level; whether the cash payment from the new fund will be claimed by the individual or the local authority; and whether the expertise required by the administrators of the new fund will be the same as that required by the administrators of the fund continuing for existing ILF claimants.

Mr. Scott: The means by which the costs of a placement in residential or nursing care will be assessed for the purposes of the body that will replace the independent living fund are still being considered. An announcement will be made in due course.

The needs of a disabled person who applies to the new body will be assessed and agreed by the local authority, by social workers employed by the successor body, and by the disabled person themselves.

The cash payment from the new body will be paid to the individual. The question of whether the individual or the local authority should make the application is under consideration.

The expertise required by the administrators of the new body will be broadly similar to that required by those administering the fund for existing cases because both bodies have the same fundamental aims. Operational details of the new body are still under discussion.

Sir John Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what provision will be made between now and April for people who would previously have been eligible for funding from the independent living fund who require funding over the level provided by the local authority; and what provision there is for people whose local authority is unable to make appropriate personal assistance provision between now and April.

Mr. Scott: Those people should approach their local authorities, whose duties to provide services to disabled people are unchanged.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will bring forward proposals to extend the payment of housing benefit following the death of the claimant to cover a period when the deceased's affairs are being dealt with by family or representatives.

Mr. Burt: The purpose of housing benefit is to help claimants to meet their liability to pay rent. We therefore have no plans to extend payment of housing benefit to cover a period after a claimant's death.

Cold Weather Payments

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the areas in which cold weather payments have been triggered since 1 November 1991, the national climatological message stations involved, the dates in each case between which payments were made, the numbers of people who have received such payments in each of those areas and the total sum paid out during each such period.

Mr. Scott: So far this winter more than 2·6 million people have been sent cold weather payments worth in total more than £16 million. The specific information requested on weather stations, trigger dates and the number of payments made is made available in the Library.

Homelessness

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what relationship exists between the living expenses of homeless families in bed-and-breakfast accommodation paid through income support and the hotel charges paid to landlords by local authorities.

Mr. Burt: Income support provides help with day-to-day living expenses. Housing benefit is available to people in bed-and-breakfast accommodation to help with reasonable charges. Arrangements made between landlords and local authorities are a matter for them.

Care Homes

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is total expenditure on (a) private residential homes and (b) private nursing homes by his Department in 1991-92 (i) in Doncaster and (ii) for Doncaster residents.

Mr. Burt: I understand from Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency, that the information is not available and could be obtained only at a disproportionate cost.

War Pensions

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many war pensioners currently reside within the area of Barnsley metropolitan borough council.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is not available. It is estmated that in 1991 6,784 war disablement pensioners and 1,771 war widows were resident in the South Yorkshire and Humberside area.

Pensioners Living Overseas

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the cost of uprating all pensions currently received by British state pensioners living in (a) Canada, (b) Australia, (c) New Zealand, (d) South Africa and (e) other EC countries.

Miss Widdecombe: The estimated additional cost, at 1992 rates, would be as follows:

		£ million
(a)	Canada	70
(b)	Australia	120
(c)	New Zealand	30
(d)	South Africa	25

United Kingdom pensions are already paid at full United Kingdom rates to beneficiaries living in EC countries.

EMPLOYMENT

KPMG Management Consultants

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will list the contracts awarded by her Department to KPMG Management Consultants over the past 12 months.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Contracts for consultancies awarded to KPMG Management Consultants in the current financial year (1992-93) were as follows:

A review of the training development arrangements in the Department's training, enterprise and education directorate.

A feasibility study on output related funding for TECs.

A workshop on market testing for managers in the Department's business services division.

An assessment of the scope for market testing in the Department's economics, research and evaluation division.

A study into the distribution of HSE publications.

A review of the roles and functions of SEOs/business managers in the Department.

To produce and disseminate (in two contracts) extensions of manuals on key skills for the training of trainers.

The office of manpower economics also awarded the following contracts to KPMG Management Consultants in 1992-93;

Work relating to the civil service grades 5 to 7 pay levels survey. Work associated with the schoolteachers' pay review body (two contracts).

Labour Statistics

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the actual and percentage figures for the numbers of adult males (a) registered unemployed, (b) receiving income support and (c) economically inactive for each standard planning region.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 17 December 1992]: The extent of the latest available information is given in the following tables.

DEFENCE

PSA Projects

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many contracts between the pre-privatised PSA Projects and his Department were amended to ensure a greater proportion of (a) contract costs and (b) fee income became due in the period preceding the transfer of projects to the private sector.

Mr. Aitken: None. The only revisions made were to total fees where the level was considered to be disproportionate to the contract costs and the work involved. This negotiation was unconnected to the sale of PSA Projects.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what value of new work the MOD has guaranteed to PSA Projects Ltd; and how the MOD will ensure it receives value for money.

Mr. Aitken: The MOD has a contract with PSA Projects for architectural, design and related services to the value of £8 million. This contract ensures value for money through predetermined prices and its provision for termination if the company's performance is unsatisfactory.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list each project undertaken by PSA Projects Ltd. for his Department by name and value; and if he will publish for each of these projects a breakdown of the proportion of fees to be earned at each stage of the project.

Mr. Aitken: The information that the hon. Member requests could not be provided without incurring disproportionate costs. My Department has contracts with PSA Projects Ltd. for some 480 projects with an estimated total value of £4 billion. The phasing of fee payments is related to progress achieved.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total value of contracted work currently undertaken by PSA Projects Ltd.. at the Faslane and Coulport sites; and what was the total value of contracts held by PSA Projects for work at the Faslane and Coulport sites on 1 November 1992.

Mr. Aitken: The total value of the outstanding project management task which PSA Projects Ltd. is contracted to undertaken on Trident works at Faslane and Coulport, including costs for employment of consultants, is some £69·3 million. As at 1 November 1992, the total outstanding value of the supply and service agreements for Trident works at Faslane and Coulport with PSA Projects was £81·9 million. The value of other non-Trident work at Faslane and Coulport with PSA Projects Ltd. is about £3 million.

Market Testing

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the MOD's market-testing programme for maintenance work for each year from 1993-94 to 1998-99.

Mr. Aitken: My Department has a rolling programme to complete market testing of property management, which includes all maintenance and new construction jobs up to a value of £300,000, between now and 1999. Maintenance projects with a value in excess of £300,000 are now subject to competition.

Maintenance

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current total value of maintenance work carried out on behalf of the Ministry of Defence by (a) other undertakings, (b) the PSA building management business divisions and (c) private contractors.

Mr. Aitken: The current value of MOD property management, based on 1992-93 contract figures, is estimated at £593 million, including works costs and fees. Of this some £78 million has been won in competition, including £21 million by PSA Building Management, the balance going to private contractors. The rest of the work remains largely with PSA and there are no other bodies, including MOD employees, undertaking any significant amount of work.

Departmental Land

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will specify the whereabouts of the land owned and leased by his Department and the land over which his Department has rights in Wales, indicating the amount of land area involved in each instance.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence will write to the hon. Member.

Research

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many research agreements or contracts have been agreed by (a) the royal aircraft establishment, (b) the atomic weapons research establishment, (c) the royal signals and radar establishment, (d) the aeroplane and armament experimental aircraft establishment, (e) the royal armament research development establishment, (f) the Admiralty research establishment, (g) the chemical defence establishment and (h) the Royal Ordnance factories with universities and other institutions of higher education (i) within and (ii) outside the United Kingdom.

Mr. Aitken: In April 1991 RAE, RSRE, RARDE and ARE were amalgamated to form the Defence Research Agency (DRA). The DRA currently sponsors 690 research agreements and contracts within the United Kingdom and two overseas.

The atomic weapons establishment currently sponsors 29 research agreements and contracts within the United Kingdom and one overseas.

The aeroplane and armament evaluation establishment, now part of directorate general of test and evaluation, does not currently sponsor any research agreement or contracts.

The chemical and biological defence establishment currently sponsors 66 research agreements and contracts within the United Kingdom and none overseas.

Following their sale on 2 April 1987, the Royal Ordnance factories now are part of British Aerospace plc and I am therefore not in a position to provide the information that the hon. Member requests.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many research projects in universities and other institutions of higher education have been funded under the joint research council-Ministry of Defence research grants scheme in each year since the inception of the scheme.

Mr. Aitken: A total of 552 research projects have been funded under the joint Research Council/MOD research grants scheme since the inception of the scheme in 1986. The annual breakdown is as follows:

Year	Number of projects started
1 April 1986 to 31 March 1987	64
1 April 1987 to 31 March 1988	42
1 April 1988 to 31 March 1989	76
1 April 1989 to 31 March 1990	143
1 April 1990 to 31 March 1991	122
1 April 1991 to 31 March 1992	53
1 April 1992 to 15 January 1993	52

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list his Department's research contracts currently placed with United Kingdom universities and other institutions of higher education.

Mr. Aitken: It has been the consistent policy of my Department not to release details of individual research contracts at universities and other institutions of higher education, but to leave it to the institutions themselves to confirm their involvement.

Procurement

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what percentage of his Department's procurement expenditure was spent in (a) Wales, (b) Scotland, (c) Northern ireland and (d) each of the standard English regions during the last financial year.

Mr. Aitken: A geographical breakdown is available only for equipment expenditure, which excludes items such as fuel, food and clothing. This is published in table 1.11 of Defence Statistics, a copy of which is available in the Library of the House.

Defence Lectureship Scheme

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many academics are at present sponsored under the defence lectureship scheme; and at which universities or other higher education institutions they are based.

Mr. Aitken: There are four academics fully sponsored by my Department under the defence lectureship scheme, based at Aberdeen, Aberystwyth, Birmingham and London universities. My Department also continues to meet the administrative and support costs of two academics at Cambridge university who have come to the end of their lectureship term.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the number of nuclear weapons withdrawn from deployment by NATO in Europe (a) as a result of unilateral decisions by NATO, (b) as a result of bilateral negotiations with the former Soviet Union and the Commonwealth of Independent States and (c) as a result of multilateral negotiations with former members of the Warsaw treaty organisation since 1979.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The number of nuclear warheads deployed by NATO in Europe has since the late 1970s been reduced by some 90 per cent, to a current toal of well under 1,000. This includes the elimination of all ground-launched and tactical martime nuclear weapons in Europe. The withdrawal of some 400 ground-launched cruise missiles and Pershing II missiles came specifically under the bilateral US/USSR INF treaty, other reductions have resulted from reassessments, within the alliance, of NATO's minimum security requirements.

Seismology

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much money was allocated by his Department on unclassified work on seismology as a verification technology in 1992.

Mr. Aitken: Funding allocated for this purpose was £1·5 million.

Defence Land

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the establishments of, and land owned by, or leased by, or in which an interest is held by (a) the Territorial Army, (b) the Home Service Force, (c) the Royal Observer Corps, (d) recruitment offices of the armed forces and (e) the cadet forces in Wales.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Defence will write to the hon. Member.

Arms Exports

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for South Shields (Dr. Clark), 3 December 1992, Official Report, column 365, if he will set out the criteria used to evaluate the commercial sensitivity of arms exports.

Mr. Aitken: All information on individual arms exports is normally judged to be a commercial matter between the customer government and the commercial firm concerned. However, in exceptional circumstances such as those surrounding the conflicts with Argentina and Iraq, when the information concerned is no longer commercially sensitive, this rule may be overriden.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what investigations his Department made, prior to 10 November 1992, into the involvement of United Kingdom companies in establishing military production facilities in Yugoslavia since 1984.

Mr. Aitken: Prior to July 1991, applications for licences to export military production facilities to the former Yugoslavia were considered on a case-by-case basis. It is not our policy to discuss the details of individual export licence applications.

Aldermaston

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the atomic weapons research establishment at Aldermaston became aware that rabbits had been affected by plutonium stored in the open; when the establishment made this fact publicly known; what was the reason for the interval between these dates; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Denton and Reddish (Mr. Bennett) on 25 June, Official Report, column 298. In addition I emphasise that plutonium is not stored in the open at AWE Aldermaston.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date the atomic weapons research establishment at Aldermaston (a) commenced and (b) ceased storing plutonium radioactive waste in the open.

Mr. Aitken: From 1953 to October 1984 plutonium contaminated waste awaiting disposal was held in sealed steel drums, some of which were stored in the open for limited periods. Since October 1984 all such solid waste awaiting disposal has been held in sealed steel drums and other closed steel containers located safely and securely in purpose-built stores.

Prior to 1983 all plutonium contaminated liquid waste was solidified for disposal as solid waste. Since 1983 all such liquid waste has been held in closed steel tanks located in bitumen lined pits.

Helicopter Carrier

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to announce who has won the contract for a new Royal Navy helicopter carrier; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Newcastle-upon-Tyne East, (Mr. Brown) on 12 January 1992, Official Report, col. 759.

Aircraft

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the result of his Department's and the Royal Air Force's discussions with Russian aircraft manufacturers on replacing the RAF's squadrons of (a) Nimrod MR.2 aircraft with the Beriev Be-42 Mermaid, and (b) Lockheed C-130 Hercules aircraft with the Antonov An-70T; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: There have been no substantive discussions with Russian aircraft manufacturers. Western firms wishing to offer Russian aircraft have been advised that we are generally prepared to consider competitive bids on their own merits from sources that can demonstrate their ability to meet our technical, financial and other requirements.

Sri Lanka (Arms Sales)

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent contacts his Department has had with the Government of Sri Lanka about arms sales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: My Department has had a number of contacts with the Sri Lanka Ministry of Defence covering a variety of issues. Such contacts, however, are a confidential matter for the two Governments.

Aircraft

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the present number of (a) helicopters and (b) fixed-winged aircraft in each of the services; and what were the figures in 1978 and 1988, respectively.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The information requested is as follows:

Service Type	Aircraft	1978[1]	1988	Present
Royal Navy	Helicopter	200	183	165
	Fixed wing	117	73	66
Army	Helicopter	—	283	307
	Fixed wing	—	26	28
Royal Air Force	Helicopter	153	164	181
	Fixed wing	1,271	1,238	1,035

[1] The information for the Army could not be obtained in the time available.

Search and Rescue Helicopters

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many search and rescue helicopter flights were flown from RAF Leuchars in 1992; how many persons were rescued; of those rescued, how many were service personnel and how many civilians; and if he will list the same information for the last five years for which information is available.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The table gives the total number of search and rescue flights—civil and military, flown from RAF Leuchars over the past five years. The figures in brackets show the number of persons rescued, including the transfer of sick or injured people from ship to hospital.

Year	Military		Civilian		Total callouts
1988	18	(3)	134	(112)	152	(115)
1989	19	(11)	114	(51)	133	(62)
1990	6	(4)	119	(45)	125	(49)
1991	7	—	154	(90)	161	(90)
1992	13	(7)	118	(54)	131	(61)

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the number of occasions that search and rescue helicopter operations were called out from RAF Leuchars between 24 December 1992 and 4 January 1993.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There were five SAR helicopter call-outs from RAF Leuchars in the period.

Logistic Vehicles

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to receive the Defence Research Agency's study of future logistic vehicles; and if he will publish it when he does so.

Mr. Aitken: The study into future logistic vehicles policy is being led by my Department's operational requirements staff. As part of this activity, we have sponsored the Defence Research Agency's vehicle conceptual study and expect to receive their report in mid-January. My Department's report is scheduled for completion in June; it will not be published but those companies which contributed to the conceptual study will be briefed once the results have been fully evaluated.

Defence Employment Hampshire

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate he has made of the reduction of his Department's employment in Hampshire arising from reductions in the Defence Research Agency.

Mr. Aitken: This is a matter delegated to the Defence Research Agency under its framework document. I have therefore asked the chief executive to reply direct to the hon. Member.

Letter from J. Chisholm to Mr. John Denham, dated 20 January 1993:

In today's written answer the Minister of State for Defence Procurement informed you that I would be replying directly to your question of what estimate he has made of the reduction of his Department's employment in Hampshire arising from reductions in the Defence Research Agency.

I estimate that DRA job losses in Hampshire will be in the region of 700.

I hope you will find this information useful.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for defence what was the total number of personnel employed by his Department whose place of work was located in Hampshire in each year since 1987.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The total number of Ministry of Defence personnel employed in Hampshire in each year since 1987 is as follows:

Year	Service personnel	MOD civilians[1]
1987	38,543	22,275
1988	37,904	21,336
1989	36,715	20,495
1990	34,254	20,642
1991	33,412	20,146
1992	31,742	19,598

All figures are as at 1 July.
[1] Excludes casual staff.

Spare Parts

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total amount of expenditure on spare parts for (a) Tornado GR1 aircraft, (b) Tornado F3 aircraft, (c) Harrier aircraft, (d) Chinook helicopters and (e) Rapier missiles in each year since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: Information is not held in the form requested and could not be provided without incurring disproportionate cost and effort. I will write to the hon. Member.

RAF (Voluntary Redundancy)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Royal Air Force personnel have applied for voluntary redundancy in each year since 1990; what plans he has to make further offers of voluntary redundancy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No Royal Air Force personnel applied for voluntary redundancy in either 1990 or 1991. Under the first phase of the current redundancy scheme, some 1,100 applications have been received for the 960 or so redundancy places available up to April 1994.

The extent of the second phase of the redundancy scheme, which is scheduled to take place in FY 94/95, is subject to review in the light of forecast requirements and outflow trends. Details will be finalised and announced in due course.

RAF (NATO Role)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what role the Royal Air Force will have in (a) the new NATO rapid reaction force, (b) the new NATO main defence forces and (c) the new NATO augmentation forces; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The RAF will be making a significant contribution of up to 80 aircraft to the Reaction Force (Air). The aircraft will be drawn from the Tornado, Harrier and Jaguar forces. Rapier surface-to-air missiles will also be assigned. The broad range of capabilities that these forces will provide to both the immediate reaction and rapid reaction components of the force has been warmly welcomed by NATO.

RAF assets not assigned to the Reaction Force (Air) will form part of the NATO main defence force. Our contribution to this will include strike-attack and reconnaissance assets, a comprehensive air defence capability and, to reflect the increased emphasis on flexibility of deployment, comprehensive transport, air-to-air refuelling and support helicopter forces. No RAF assets are currently being assigned to the lower readiness augmentation forces.

These contributions to the reaction and main defence forces will ensure that the RAF continues to play a major role in NATO.

Air Force Reserve

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many ex-Royal Air Force pilots are currently participating in the Royal Auxiliary Air Force and the Royal Air Force Volunteer Reserve; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There are currently five ex-Royal Air Force pilots in the Royal Auxiliary Air Force and four in the Royal Air Force Volunteer Reserve.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what changes have been made in his policy to encourage pilots who leave the Royal Air Force to participate in the Royal Auxiliary Air Force and the Royal Air Force Volunteer Reserve since May 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: None. All officers, including pilots, who retire or leave the RAF are encouraged to join the volunteer reserve forces. They are issued with a booklet, "Notes for Officers retiring from the Royal Air Force", which gives details of the roles of the various reserve units and their locations.

RAF Personnel

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Royal Air Force personnel (i) became qualified to serve in, (ii) served in and (iii) left the service from (a) armament engineering, (b) mechanical engineering, (c) electrical engineering and (d) electronic engineering in each year since 1990.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The number of ground airmen (including airwomen) who:

(i) Became qualified to serve in engineering trades

		1991	1992
(a)	Armaments	195	56
(b)	Mechanical	761	567
(c)	Electrical	147	224
(d)	Electronic	432	663

(ii) Serving in engineering trades as at 1 January

		1991	1992	1993
(a)	Armaments	3,323	3,339	3,233
(b)	Mechanical	14,543	14,282	13,914
(c)	Electrical	4,006	3,937	3,884
(d)	Electronic	10,253	9,918	9,908

(iii) Left the service from engineering trades

		1991	1992
(a)	Armaments	179	162
(b)	Mechanical	1,022	935
(c)	Electrical	216	277
(d)	Electronic	767	673

Air Defences

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current assessment of the threat to United Kingdom air defences; what changes have occurred in that assessment in the last 10 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Following the collapse of the Warsaw pact and the dissolution of the Soviet Union, the immediate threat posed to United Kingdom air defences has reduced significantly. We remain conscious, however, of the uncertainties posed by the massive political, economic and military changes which have occurred over the past four years and, as reported in the 1992 statement of defence estimates, we shall continue to ensure that the armed forces are of a scale and quality able to respond to future challenges.

Running Costs

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the current average annual running costs of (a) a Buccaneer strike/attack squadron, (b) a Jaguar offensive support squadron, (c) a Nimrod maritime patrol squadron, (d) a Tornado F3 air defence squadron and (e) a Tornado GR1 squadron.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The average running costs for 1992-93 at outturn prices for a squadron of each aircraft type is as shown in the table. Squadron sizes are variable; this has an effect on average running costs.

	£ million
Buccaneer	19·7
Jaguar GR1a	19·4
Nimrod MR	18·8
Tornado F3	35·6
Tornado GR1	26·7

These running costs do not include costs relating to depreciation, interest on capital or station and administration costs.

Belize

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current annual running cost of the Royal Air Force detachment stationed in Belize.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The cash allocation for 1992-93 for pay (ground and air crew), fuel and garrison costs is some £20 million. Training and engineering support costs are not held separately for Belize.

RAF (Compulsory Redundancies)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Royal Air Force personnel have been made compulsorily redundant in each of the last three years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: None.

Legal Immunity

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 15 December, Official Report, columns 131-32, what other reasons for exemption for legislation exist apart from national security; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton [holding answer 13 January 1993]: The Ministry of Defence would seek exemption from legislation only on grounds of national security. In this context national security includes the operational capability and effectiveness of the armed forces.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Motor Industry (Industrial Strategy)

16. Mr. Bryan Davies: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he will next meet representatives of the motor industry to discuss an industrial strategy.

Mr. Salisbury: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply that I gave earlier in response to the question from my hon. Friend the Member for Milton Keynes, North-East (Mr. Butler).

GATT Talks

17. Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the recent GATT talks and on the effects that the outcome will have on the United Kingdom economy.

21. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the current state of the GATT round.

Mr. Needham: Negotiations are continuing in Geneva, and we still hope it will be possible to reach agreement in the next few weeks. A successful conclusion would bring substantial benefits to the United Kingdom economy: it could directly increase GDP by 1 to 2 per cent. and lead to the creation of 60,000 jobs. Over and above that it would give improved market opportunities and more stable trading conditions for our exporters.

Pit Closures

18. Mr. Janner: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the proposed closure of coal mines in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Heseltine: The Government are conducting a wide-ranging review of the prospects for 21 of the pits proposed for closure by British Coal. I hope to be able to publish a White Paper as soon as possible next month setting out the results of that review, which will then be debated in this House.

20. Mr. Enright: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which pits he will keep open in the light of his review; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heseltine: The coal review is considering the prospects for 21 pits proposed for closure by British Coal, but not subject to the current statutory consultation exercise, in the context of the energy market as a whole. I obviously cannot anticipate the findings of the review. I hope to be able to publish the coal review White Paper as soon as possible next month.

33. Mr. Illsley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects to publish his review of British Coal's colliery closure programme.

Mr. Heseltine: I hope to be able to publish the coal review White Paper as soon as possible next month.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what terms of reference have been given to Boyds for its review of the 10 pits on the closure list; and what external legal advice he took from it;

(2) when he expects Boyds to visit each colliery on the 10 pit closure list; what are the causes for the lengthening of the original timetable; and when he expects to receive its report.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 19 January 1993]: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade wrote to British Coal and the mining industry unions on 15 January providing them with details of the Boyds study of the 10 pits currently subject to consultation. Copies of these letters, including the terms of reference and proposed details of procedure of the Boyds study, have been placed in the Library of the House.

I understand that Boyds has sent British Coal and the unions a timetable of its visits to the 10 pits, and that this is the only timetable formally drawn up for the study. Boyds has been asked to report by 15 March. It would not be appropriate for my right hon. Friend to take legal advice from Boyds, and no such advice was taken.

Mr. Ingram: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 13 January to the hon. Member for Richmond, Yorks (Mr. Hague), Official Report, column 739, if OFFER submitted evidence to his Department's coal review.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 19 January 1993]: Professor Stephen Littlechild, Director General of Electricity Supply, wrote to me on 11 January with evidence to the coal review. A copy of the non-confidential parts of this letter has been placed in the Library of the House along with the other evidence to the coal review.

Small and New Businesses

19. Mr. Michael: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to encourage small and new businesses in Cardiff and in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Leigh: The Government will continue to encourage small and new businesses in the United Kingdom by fostering the right economic climate and by providing both directly and through TECs and LECs a wide range of programmes of support and assistance. These policies helped some 400,000 new firms to start last year.

Recent important developments include our plans to establish a network of one-stop shops for businesses in England and changes to the loan guarantee scheme to improve its operation.

Detailed arrangements for encouraging small businesses in Cardiff are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Premium Telephone Services

22. Mr. Lewis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he last met the Director General of OFTEL to discuss regulation of premium telephone services.

Mr. Leigh: No meeting has been held. Premium rate services are effectively regulated by the Independent Committee for the Supervision of Standards of Telephone Information Services, ICSTIS.

Insurance Companies (Solvency Margin)

23. Mr. Purchase: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he proposes to review the Government's solvency margin criteria for insurance companies.

Mr. Heseltine: The statutory minimum solvency margins are Community obligations and stem from the first insurance directives of 1973 (non life insurance) and 1979 (life insurance). The European Commission has undertaken to review and report on the need for further harmonisation of the solvency margin by July 1997 at the latest. In practice, DTI normally expects insurance companies to maintain a solvency margin of at least twice the statutory minimum. In supervising insurance companies my Department attaches importance to a wide range of other indicators besides the solvency margin.

Manufacturing Industry

24. Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received from the Major Energy Users Council about energy costs of manufacturing industry.

Mr. Eggar: Officials met the Major Energy Users Council (MEUC) in October 1992. The MEUC agreed to survey the electricity prices paid by their members in the second and third quarters of 1991 and 1992. The Department will compare the results of this survey, when it is received, with our own statistics.

Product Safety

25. Mr. Donohoe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what recent discussions he had with trading standards officers about their staffing requirements for enforcing product safety legislation.

Mr. Leigh: There have been no such discussions. It is the responsibility of local authorities to employ sufficient trading standards officers to enforce legislation effectively.

Public Sector Purchasing

26. Mr. Luff: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps he is taking to ensure that British companies are able to derive full benefit from the public sector purchasing provisions of the European single market.

Mr. Needham: The opening up of public sector purchasing in the European Community and in the European Economic Area represents a major opportunity for suppliers in Europe. To ensure that British businesses are in a position to take full advantage of this, the EC public procurement programme features prominently in our single market literature. The single market booklet, "A Guide to Public Purchasing", is now in its fifth edition, and in total over 125,000 have been distributed.

Small and Medium Businesses

27. Mr. Jenkin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what progress he has made on the lifting of the burdens of regulation and form-filling for small and medium-sized enterprises; and if he will make a statement on regulations and forms scrapped since 10 April 1992.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Ludlow (Mr. Gill).

32. Mr. David Evans: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many small businesses there were in (a) 1979 and (b) 1992.

Mr. Leigh: Comprehensive figures on the number of small businesses in 1992 are not available. An indication of the change in the number of small businesses can be obtained by comparing the number of VAT registered businesses. The number of businesses registered for VAT at the end of 1979 was 1,289,000. At the end of 1991, the latest year for which we have figures, the number of businesses was 1,716,000, a rise of 33 per cent. These figures have been adjusted to take account of the uplift in the VAT thresholds.

Mining Industry (Redundancy Terms)

28. Mr. Tipping: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what recent discussions he has had with the chairman of British Coal about redundancy terms.

Mr. Heseltine: I agreed with British Coal the broad terms of its currrent redundancy schemes announced on 13 October 1992. Details of the schemes are a matter for the corporation.

Business Closures

29. Mr. Stevenson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many businesses have closed in the last 12 months in the west midlands and Stoke on Trent.

Mr. Needham: A regional breakdown of official insolvency statistics is not available. For compulsory liquidations and bankruptcy orders the only geographical information available is by the court in which the order was made. This is not a good basis for analysing company location, since many cases in England and Wales are dealt with in London regardless of the company's location, and work may be moved between courts according to differing workloads. There is no regional breakdown of creditors' voluntary liquidations.

Machine Tool Industry

30. Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to increase Government support to the machine tool industry.

Mr. Sainsbury: I have met representatives of the machine tool industry twice in recent months. From this and other significant contact, the Government are well aware of the difficulties the industry is currently facing.

Machine tool companies, along with those from other sectors, are and will continue to be eligible for a full range of Government assistance such as for exports and research and development. I also hope that demand for the industry's products may benefit from the temporary increase of capital allowance to 40 per cent. announced in the autumn statement.

Terrorist Incidents (Insurance)

31. Mr. Paice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received regarding the withdrawal of cover for terrorist incidents by insurance companies.

Mr. Heseltine: I have received various representations from a broad spectrum of industry and commerce regarding the announcement that insurance companies were to withdraw insurance cover for terrorist attacks. In response to this problem I announced on 21 December that the Government have decided in principle to act as reinsurer of last resort for terrorist attacks against mainland GB non-domestic property and related risks from January 1993.

Dame Peggy Fenner: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will take steps to ensure that the rating schedule issued by Associated British Insurers in connection with the Government scheme for terrorism insurance cover, does not discriminate heavily against businesses based outside the eight major urban areas; and if he will consider asking the ABI to review these rates.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The premium rates for terrorist cover, as with all forms of insurance, seek to reflect perceived levels of risk and are therefore weighted towards higher-risk areas. The rates will be reviewed from time to time.

Dame Peggy Fenner: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what consultations he has had with retailers and insurance brokers on the Government scheme for terrorism insurance cover.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I met representatives of the British Insurance and Investment Brokers Association on 1 December 1992, and my officials have been in regular touch with them since then. I met representatives of the British Retail Consortium on 19 January.

Dame Peggy Fenner: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will consider extending the Government scheme on insurance cover for terrorism to companies based outside the United Kingdom, in particular captive insurance companies.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: These questions are currently under consideration.

Estate Agents (Complaints)

34. Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what recent discussions he had with the National Association of Estate Agents concerning complaints against estate agents.

Mr. Leigh: No such discussions have taken place. If the hon. Member has any evidence of malpractice by estate agents he should bring it to the attention of the Director General of Fair Trading or the local trading standards department.

Consumer Protection

35. Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to bring forward further legislation in the area of consumer protection.

Mr. Leigh: The Government's manifesto for the 1992 general election included commitments to introduce legislation designed to give consumers confidence that what they purchase is properly described, to ensure that adequate compensation is offered where these requirements are not met, to enable the courts to override unfair terms in contracts, to improve powers to deal with rogue traders, and to amend the law relating to guarantees. Legislation to implement these commitments will be introduced as soon as parliamentary time permits.

Exporters

36. Mr. Trimble: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to ease further the bureaucratic burdens on exporters within the single market.

Mr. Needham: The completion of the single market has led to the removal of most border formalities on trade with the European Community which has, for example, considerably reduced the burden on businesses of providing trade statistics. Under the new system, Intrastat, three quarters of United Kingdom businesses trading with other member states will have to provide only two statistics on their total value of trade on a quarterly basis. Larger traders will also benefit from the replacement of the previous documentation by a simpler statistical return which will only have to be provided monthly. This system, which also covers VAT returns, replaces the present one where each and every export shipment required its own separate paperwork in the form of the Single administrative document. It means that 10 million export forms will be eliminated each year with net annual saving to United Kingdom exporters estimated to be £135 million.

The Prime Minister has recently announced a scrutiny review of European Community legislation to help ensure that unnecessary burdens are not placed on business when transposing Community legislation into national law. Furthermore the Government will continue to press for policies which will further liberalise the European Community market, including breaking down any bureaucratic barriers.

Mining Equipment

Mr. Bennett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assistance the United Kingdom is providing to help manufacturers of mining equipment to win orders in Iran; and what is the comparable provision made by the German Government and agencies for German firms.

Mr. Needham: My Department is providing support to the Association of British Mining Equipment Manufacturers (ABMEC) to attend the international fair of mining machinery in Teheran and is at present considering inward mission sponsorship for the sector.

Short and medium-term export credit cover is available on the usual "first some first served" basis. My Department has also provided overseas project funding in the last year to assist in the pursuance of a United Kingdom bid for a large mining project in Iran.

The German Government and agencies are subject to the same OECD criteria as the United Kingdom, but I am unable to comment more specifically on German Government policy concerning Iran.

Mine Records

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether he will arrange for mine records to be available in each region.

Mr. Eggar: British Coal holds and maintains coal mining records on behalf of the Health and Safety Executive. The location of coal mine records offices is primarily a matter for British Coal.

Debt (Late Payment)

Dr. Wright: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what further action he proposes to take on the problem of late payment in relation to small businesses.

Mr. Leigh: The Government are already addressing the problem of late payment with a range of measures including pilots with trade associations and new Government contracting terms.

Tropical Timber

Mr. Meacher: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish monthly figures, by volume, for imports into the United Kingdom of Brazilian rosewood (Dalbergia nigra) and afrormosia (Pericopsis elata) between July and November 1992.

Mr. Needham: The information is not available. The United Kingdom trade classification does not separately identify Brazilian rosewood and afrormosia from other non-coniferous tropical hardwoods.

Internal Market Council

Mr. Batiste: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Internal Market Council held on 17 December 1992.

Mr. Needham: I chaired the final Internal Market Council of the British presidency on 17 December. Overall this was a successful Council ensuring a satisfactory presidency for the United Kingdom on the single market. Twelve single market measures were agreed at this Council, and 90 overall during our presidency. This last figure is a record for any presidency. This confirmed the verdict of the European Council at Edinburgh that the White Paper programme is now complete in all essential respects. The single market is now open for business.

The Council agreed a common position on the future system for the authorisation of medicines in the Community. This package of measures comprises three directives and one regulation which establish new Community licensing procedures for human and veterinary medicines. The regulation creates a centralised licensing system for certain high technology medicines, and establishes a European Medicines Evaluation Agency to provide administrative and technical support for the new procedures.

The directives provide for a decentralised licensing system for other medicinal products, involving mutual recognition of member states' licensing decisions, with binding arbitration in the event of disputes.

The Council also agreed a common position on a directive harmonising laws relating to the civil use of explosives. The directive acknowledges the need to ensure that intra-Community transfers of explosives are properly controlled so that these potentially dangerous products are only shipped to those who have a legitimate reason to acquire them. The same provision will apply to domestic transfers of the explosives covered by the directive. The United Kingdom was able successfully to preserve our export controls on explosives; this helps ensure that they will not fall into the hands of terrorists in the United Kingdom, or third countries.

The Council reached agreement on a directive harmonising the safety and performance requirements for a wide range of medicinal devices. Products covered include tongue-depressors, bandages, artificial limbs, X-ray equipment, brain scanners and electro-cardiograms. The products are classed in four categories, to ensure that the level of control over assessment of conformity with the directive's requirements is proportional to the level of risk inherent in a device. This is an important directive, which will liberalise trade in a sector with trade worth £8 billion in the Community.

A number of significant single market measures were agreed, including common positions on the second amendment to the machinery directive, the sixth amendment to the cosmetics directive, and directives on food hygiene, brakes of motorcycles and statistical units on industrial production. Final adoption was reached on extraction solvents, road and waterway controls on third country transport, and type approval of vehicle external projections. A regulation was agreed creating a fund for re-adaptation measures for Customs agents.

The Council also discussed a directive on copyright in cable and satellite broadcasting, the abolition of frontier controls, a directive on biotechnological inventions, an amendment to the food additives framework directive, the sweeteners directive, a directive on food labelling, and a regulation on dual-use goods.

I must regret the failure of the Council to reach agreement on the Community trade mark regulation. This important measure will establish a Community trade mark office. A trade mark registered with the Community trade mark office will be a unitary right having effect throughout the Community. It will be possible to enforce the rights conferred by it in a single legal action in court in one member state, with effect for all member states. We had put considerable effort into these measures during our presidency, and had cleared away a large number of reservations. However, continuing disagreement between member states over the language regime to be used at the office prevented agreement. I hope agreement can be finally reached under the incoming Danish presidency.

VAT

Mr. Stevenson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what effect the new arrangement for the payment of VAT one month in arrears instead of three months in arrears is having on small and medium-sized businesses in the west midlands.

Sir John Cope: I have been asked to reply.

The new arrangement for the payment of VAT monthly in arrears instead of quarterly in arrears applies only to the 1,600 or so largest VAT payers nationally. It will therefore have no direct effect on small and medium-sized businesses.

HEALTH

Census

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people are estimated to have been unenumerated by the 1991 census; and on what basis it has been decided that such unenumerated people will be evenly distributed across the country.

Mr. Sackville: A total of 965,000 people resident in England and Wales, or 1·9 per cent. of the population, are estimated to have not been enumerated in the 1991 census. Census figures are not themselves adjusted. However, the estimated under-enumeration has been taken into account in producing the Registrar General's provisional population estimates for England and Wales for mid-1991. These were published in OPCS Monitor PP1 92/1 on 16 October 1992, a copy of which is in the Library.

The figure of 965,000 is estimated by combining evidence from several different sources. Where evidence was available about the geographical distribution of under-enumeration, it was taken into account. Where insufficient evidence was available at the local level, an even distribution for each age and sex group was applied across the country as a whole, or across groupings of local areas where sufficient evidence for such groups was available. Details are given in the monitor.

Regional Funding

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what advice or instructions she has given to regional health authorities about the timescale within which they should move to funding districts by weighted capitation.

Mr. Sackville: Regional health authorities (RHAs) are responsible for revenue allocations to health districts, and for managing their movement towards weighted capitation funding in a way which ensure that services to patients are not disrupted. There is no national deadline, but Ministers continue to attach importance to continued progress towards resource equalisation at district level. The following guidance was sent to all RHAs in circular FDL(92) 113, on 4 December 1992:

"Regions will therefore be asked to report on their planned deployment of the 1993-94 allocation and in particular to demonstrate clear progress towards equalisation. The pace of such progress and whether it should be achieved by reducing resources allocated to districts above their capitation share is a matter for individual regions to judge in the light of local circumstances."

Copies of the circular are available in the Library.

Waiting Lists

Ms. Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people were awaiting treatment on one year waiting lists in each specialty in December 1992; and what were the equivalent figures for April 1992.

Mr. Sackville: Waiting time information by specialty is published twice a year for 31 March and 30 September. The most recent figures, for 31 March 1992, are given in "Hospital Waiting List, In-Patients and Day Cases" (ISBN 1 85839 003 6)—a copy of which is available in the Library.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will make it her policy that details of the number of patients waiting for a first out-patient appointment should be collected centrally;

(2) if she will take action to establish standards for the maximum wait for a first out-patient appointment.

Mr. Sackville: With over 36 million outpatient attendances each year it is not currently practical to collect information about the numbers of people waiting for out-patient appointments centrally. However, under the patients charter health authorities are required to publish information on the local standards they have set for first out-patient appointments and on performance against these targets. Regional health authorities are required to set targets for 1993-94 to build on this progress.

Clinical Waste

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will place a copy in the Library of the guidance notes issued to regional health authorities relating to the creation of a strategy for the disposal of clinical waste.

Mr. Sackville: Yes.

National Health Service Trusts

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will create an independent agency that can review mergers proposals, price cartels and allegations of anti-competitive practices by NHS trusts; and who has the responsibility for reviewing such matters at the present time.

Dr. Mawhinney: No. The national health service management executive has overall responsibility for managing the national health service internal market and therefore has responsibility for dealing with such matters.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the application of the Government's maximum pay guidelines in the public sector to those NHS trusts being set up on 1 April;

(2) if she will issue a letter of guidance to the chairmen of NHS trusts in relation to the application of the Government pay policy to the remuneration of their emloyees as regards (a) pay increases at director level, (b) individual pay increases at other levels and (c) the total pay bill.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 19 January 1993]: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State wrote to the chairmen of all national health service authorities on the day of the Chancellor's autumn statement, 12 November 1992, to explain the Government's policy of public sector pay restraint this year. A copy of this letter was placed in the Library. The NHS management executive will be issuing further guidance shortly.

Juveniles (Secure Units)

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has for more secure units for juveniles to be built, (a) in Yorkshire and (b) elsewhere.

Mr. Yeo: It is estimated that an additional 60 to 65 secure places nationally will be required in order to imlement the new juvenile remand provisions in the Criminal Justice Act 1991 by the mid-1990s. It is envisaged that some 10 to 15 of these will be needed within the Yorkshire and Humberside region as a whole.

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many juveniles were placed in secure accommodation in each of the last 10 years;

(2) how many secure places currently exist for (a) male and (b) female juvenile offenders; if she will list the units by county; and how many of the places are unoccupied.

Mr. Yeo: Secure units are available for the placement of any child looked after by a local authority, where the statutory criteria for restriction of liberty are met. This includes juvenile offenders.

Information about the number of secure units in each local authority and the number of places occupied during the year and at 31 March 1991 is published in "Children accommodated in secure units during the year ending 31 March 1991 England". A copy is in the Library.

Information about the number of admissions to secure units in England for the individual years 1984-85 to 1990-91 is also included in the publication. Information was not collected centrally for earlier years.

The latest information about secure places is in the table.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what research she has commissioned to identify the number of secure places needed to be provided by local authorities to ensure that persons aged 15 or 16 years are not remanded to prison; and if she will place copies of the research in the Library;

(2) how many extra secure places need to be provided by local authorities to ensure that persons aged 15 or 16 years are not remanded to prison.

Mr. Yeo: The need for additional secure places has been assessed by a multi agency national steering group. It is determined that some 60 to 65 additional places will be required. The group's assessment was based on information for a NACRO/ACOP survey of juvenile penal remands; information provided by local authorities; and historical information about provision and use of existing secure facilities.

Operations

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average number of operating theatre sessions carried out in the NHS currently every week; and what the figures were in (a) 1987 and (b) 1979.

Dr. Mawhinney: Information for 1987-88 and 1991-92[1] is set out in the table. Comparable information for 1979 is not available centrally.

Selected List Scheme

Mr. Renton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 9 December 1992, Official Report, column 692, what evidence she has that significant savings continue to be made by the selected list scheme.

Dr. Mawhinney: The national health service drugs bill is affected by many different factors and it is not possible specifically to identify the continuing effect of measures which have been taken under the selected list scheme. We nonetheless believe that such measures have exerted a continuing downward pressure on the drugs bill.

Dioxin

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if her Department will undertake a study of the link between cancer affecting children and exposure to dioxin; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The Department has no plans to undertake such a study.

Studies of the statistical link between exposure to possible cancer-producing substances and the incidence of cancer in children can be undertaken only where separate groups of children, exposed significantly to different levels of the substance under study, can be identified. Dioxin is present everywhere in industrialised countries at very low levels, so this is not possible. We do however keep under review the outcome of studies of the follow-up to the accident at Seveso in 1986.

NHS Pensions

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will order an investigation into the management of the NHS pensioners' trust; if she will seek ways of increasing the proportion of funds paid to those in need; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: No. The financial policy of the trust is the responsibility of the trustees.

Children in Hospital

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consideration she has given to the recommendations made to her by Action for Sick Children into the costs of visiting children in hospital.

Mr. Yeo: We attach particular importance to involving parents in the care and treatment of children in hospital. The hospital travel costs scheme provides help for children, who are in families on income support or family credit or otherwise have a low income, with their expenses for travelling to and from hospital for treatment and the expenses of a companion, where this is medically necessary. Help with the cost of visiting children when in hospital may be available through the social fund to families on income support. We have decided that enhancement of existing help cannot command high priority at the present time as it would entail the diversion of national health service resources away from direct patient care and impose an additional administrative burden on hospitals. Some hospitals are able to give discretionary help from non-exchequer patient amenity funds to parents travelling long distances.

Cancer Screening

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many women were screened for breast and cervical cancer in each year since 1987 within the Sunderland, Durham and Hartlepool health authority areas.

Mr. Sackville: The available information is shown in the table.

NHS Funds (Misappropriation)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action is taken when there is a prima facie case that funds or assets of the NHS have been obtained improperly by (a) a member of the general public, (b) NHS staff, (c) executive directors, (d) non-executive directors and (e) chairmen; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: Health bodies maintain standing orders supported by standing financial instructions. These should identify the action to be taken in the event of loss of national health service funds or assets. Statutory auditors review these documents as part of their annual audit. The action to be taken where funds or assets appear to have been lost will depend on the circumstances of the case.

Ambulance Service

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list by region the percentage of ambulances in Northumberland that responded within (a) eight minutes and (b) 20 minutes to emergency calls for each of the last five years.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave him on 25 November 1992 at column 728. In 1987-88, the Northumbria ambulance service responded to 60 per cent. of emergency calls within seven minutes and to 97 per cent. within 14 minutes.

Epilepsy

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will establish a nationally funded programme of research into, and practice of, surgical techniques in the treatment and cure of epilepsy.

Mr. Yeo: No. There are already well-established procedures for neurosurgery on people with epilepsy. It is for health authorities, within available resources, to purchase services to meet the needs of their residents including the need for epilepsy surgery.

Alcohol and Drug Abuse

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will publish a table showing the total grant available from her Department (a) in total, (b) in revenue and (c) in capital towards the provision of (1) residential facilities and (2) non-residential facilities for (i) people with alcohol problems and (ii) people with drug problems in 1992-93 and 1993-94;

(2) if she will publish a table showing the total grant paid by her Department (a) in total, (b) in revenue and (c) in capital towards the provision of (1) residential facilities and (2) non-residential facilities for (i) people with alcohol problems and (ii) people with drug problems in each of the past five years.

Mr. Yeo: Funding for drug and alcohol projects are provided directly and indirectly by the Department from a number of sources. In part grants are from small centrally administered budgets, such as the specific grant for alcohol and drug misusers, which totalled £2·1 million in 1992-93 and supported expenditure of £3 million; this budget is being increased by 9·5 per cent. to £2·3 million in 1993-94 and will support expenditure of £3·2 million. Other funds are provided locally by health authorities from their general allocations or from money specifically allocated to them for drug misuse services. In 1992-93 earmarked funding comprised:

(1) £17·243 million for the development of services for drug misusers, including the expansion of services to help prevent the spread of HIV among and from drug misusers; this amount will be increased by 10·2 per cent. to £19·001 million in 1993-94;

(2) £2·8 million towards the cost of prescribing methadone as part of a planned programme of treatment, and towards the development of pharmacy-based needle exchange schemes. Decisions on the amounts to be allocated in 1993-94 for these purposes have yet to be taken.

Some additional funding is also provided by local authority social services departments. Details of funding from all these sources could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Harlow Wood Hospital

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the future plans for the Harlow Wood hospital; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: No final decision has been made on the long-term future of the hospital and local managers are currently considering the options.

Stockport DHA

Ms. Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) full-time nursing staff and (b) staff with management responsibilities were employed by Stockport district health authority in 1990 and at the most recent available date.

Dr. Mawhinney: In September 1990 there were 1,317 nursing and midwifery staff employed full-time and in September 1991 there were 1,053.

The number of staff employed with a management role is a matter for the district health authority. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. F. A. Russell, the chairman of Stockport health authority, for details.

Special Hospitals

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of the population of the three special hospitals in England and Wales for the last date available were (a) female; (b) black and (c) aged under 21 years.

Mr. Yeo: The information requested is in the tables.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish a full breakdown of the ages of the population of each of the three special hospitals in England and Wales.

Mr. Yeo: The available information as at 18 January 1993 is given in the table.

NHS Employment (Hampshire)

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people were employed (a) full time and (b) part time in the national health service in Hampshire in each year since 1987.

Dr. Mawhinney: The county of Hampshire consists of four whole DHAs; Portsmouth and South East Hampshire, Southampton and South West Hampshire, Winchester, Basingstoke and North Hampshire; and part of West Surrey and North East Hampshire DHA. As it is not possible to identify separately the information for individual units in West Surrey and North East Hampshire, the global figures have been included in the Hampshire figures given in the table.

The figures for 1991 exclude non-professional non-medical staff[1] as they were collected on the Korner aggregate forms (KM 49) and it is not possible to disaggregate the information to district level.

Dental Care

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 22 October 1992, Official Report, column 371, what plans she has to publish the report of the oral health strategy group on proposed changes to dental policy; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: Following advice from the oral health strategy group, proposals for an oral health strategy for England are still being considered.

Mental Illness

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the current effectiveness of care of the mentally disabled.

Mr. Yeo: The Government's long-standing policy is that people with mental illness should have access to all the services they need, as locally as possible, from long-term in-patient care for the severely and chronically ill to domiciliary support for those who can live near normal lives at home.

Research shows that patients moved from long stay mental illness hospitals to community programmes usually do well on transfer and they and their carers and relatives prefer community-based care.

Evidence from such research both in this country and from abroad, particularly in the United States of America, strongly supports the conclusion that mentally ill people, including chronic and severe patients, can be successfully treated in the community.

To promote the development of comprehensive, local community care services for mentally ill people a mental health task force led by David King was set up last year. It will promote and assist the development of a concerted, comprehensive and speedy implementation of our policies for mental health services, with particular regard to the replacement of large long-stay institutions by more locally based and accessible services.

The Government are currently considering whether changes are needed to the mental health legislation to ensure the more effective delivery of care to the small minority of mentally ill people who refuse to participate voluntarily in their care programmes.

Regional Health Authority Appointments

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether she will make a statement on the position of Sir Donald Wilson, currently chairman of the Mersey regional health authority, and the vacancy for the position of the chairman of the West Midlands health authority.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 19 January 1993]: Sir Donald Wilson ceased to be chairman of the Mersey regional health authority with effect from 11 January, when my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State appointed him as chairman of the West Midlands regional health authority. My right hon. Friend has appointed Professor A. M. Breckenridge as chairman of the Mersey regional health authority.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Uncorroborated Confessions

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Attorney-General if the Northern Ireland Director of Public Prosecutions intends to continue proceedings on the basis of evidence consisting wholly or mainly of uncorroborated confessions in police custody.

The Attorney-General: In Northern Ireland, as in England and Wales, there is no general requirement in law that a confession requires to be corroborated before reliance can be placed upon it. In cases where the evidence consists wholly or mainly of an uncorroborated admission or confession made in police custody, the director has regard to all the available facts and circumstances surrounding the making of such an admission or confession. Where the Director is satisfied that there is a reasonable prospect of the admission or confession being admitted in evidence and reliance being placed upon it, and that that evidence is sufficient to provide a reasonable prospect of obtaining a conviction, prosecution is directed or continued if the public interest so requires.

Public Interest Immunity Certificates

Mr. Allason: To ask the Attorney-General how many public interest immunity certificates have been issued in criminal trials (a) since 1987 and (b) since 1990.

The Attorney-General: The information requested by the hon. Member is not collected centrally either by Government or individual prosecuting authorities. My answer is therefore confined to the three prosecuting authorities for which I have ministerial responsibility and is based on inquiries made of those officials likely to have the requisite knowledge. The number of cases so identified is as follows:

	CPS	SFO	DPP(NI)
1987	1	—	—
1988	—	—	—
1989	3	1	—

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Romania

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals he has for improving relations between the United Kingdom and Romania.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We look forward to developing our relations with the new Government of Romania. My brief visit in December was a valuable first step.

We shall continue to assist Romania's programme of economic and political reform, primarily through the know-how fund. We are currently considering with the Romanian authorities significant new know-how fund-supported projects in the areas of agriculture and privatisation. The reinstatement of a measure of ECGD medium-term cover demonstrates our determination to encourage British companies to compete strongly in the market.

The forthcoming signing of the EC association agreement with Romania will contribute to the strengthening of Romania's relationship with the Community and its member states.

HOME DEPARTMENT

IRA Terrorists

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the effectiveness of controls on the movement of IRA activists to the British mainland.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The port checks conducted under schedule 5 to the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989 continue to represent a valuable means of controlling the movement of terrorists.

Gloucestershire Police

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to allow the chief constable of Gloucestershire constabulary to bring police staffing in the urban areas of Cheltenham and Gloucester city into line with neighbouring counties; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Deployment of police officers is a matter for the chief constable.

Tyre Dumps

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the tyre dumps notified to his office by fire authorities which provide cover to standards required by his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Tyre dumps are notified to the Home Office. Fire authorities are required to be able to deal with all normal requirements, and brigades know the measures which are required to deal with the operational and environmental problems associated with tyre dump and other rubber-based fires.

Police Budgets

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for each police authority, the standard spending assessment, the actual spending, the police establishment based on SSA and the actual establishment for the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Information for 1991-92 on standard spending assessments, expenditure and force establishments is given in the table. Police establishments are not based on SSAs.

The table excludes Welsh forces, because no separate police component is identified in SSAs for Welsh county councils.

Correspondence

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to respond to the letter of 2 December 1992 from the hon. Member for Lewisham, Deptford regarding prison education.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I wrote to the hon. Member on 20 January.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the hon. Member for Walsall, North will receive a reply to his letter of 16 November (HO ref. No. 23833/98) concerning an application for United Kingdom citizenship.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 11 January 1993]: I wrote to the hon. Member on 14 December.

HMP Blakenhurst

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects HMP Blakenhurst to open; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The contractor's proposals envisaged a six-month start-up period from contract signature on 3 December, but he is striving to open the prison earlier.

HMP Manchester

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the application of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations to the proposed market-testing of HMP Manchester.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Legal advice is that TUPE would apply if a private sector company won the contract for operating HMP Manchester. We are currently considering the implications for both staff and the tendering exercise.

Fines

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list the crimes for which the maximum fine is determined by statute; and what is the level of the maximum in each case;

(2) if he will list the crimes for which the maximum penalty is £50,000 or over.

Mr. Jack: There is no upper limit on the fine that the Crown court can impose for any offence triable on indictment for which the option of a fine is provided by statute.

The maximum fine which a magistrates court can impose is limited according to the offence committed. Where an offence is triable either in the magistrates court or on indictment the maximum fine is usually £5,000—the maximum fine normally available to magistrates. For summary offences, the maximum fine is specified in statute. In recent legislation, maximum fines are expressed as a level on the standard scale. The current values of these levels are: level 1, £200; level 2, £500; level 3, £1,000; level 4, £2,500; and level 5, £5,000.

Exceptionally, for a small number of offences, magistrates have the power to impose fines in excess of £5,000: the usual maximum for such offences is either £20,000 or £50,000 depending on the offence.

A comprehensive list of offences that fall into the above categories is not readily available and could be compiled only at disproportionate cost.

Wolds Centre

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list all the incidents and disturbances which have occurred at the Wolds centre since 1 December 1992; and if he will order an inquiry.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Twenty incidents at Wolds remand prison were reported to the incident management support unit at Prison Service headquarters between 1 December 1992 and 18 January 1993. Details are given in the table. The Home Office controller based at Wolds monitors the contractor's performance and provides full and regular reports. None of the reported incidents would merit a separate inquiry.

2 December 1992:
Two prisoners who had been hand-cuffed together attempted to run away as they left the cellular vehicle to enter Doncaster Magistrates Court. They were unsuccessful.

8 December 1992:
Cannabis was found in a prisoner's cell during a cell search.

11 December 1992:
After being located in the Segregation Unit a prisoner smashed the sink in his cell. The prisoner threw a piece of piping from the sink at a Custody Officer which hit his knee causing bruising and a cut which was treated in the Health Care Centre.

16 December 1992:
A prisoner was strip-searched after a visit and found to be in possession of cannabis.

17 December 1992:
A prisoner assaulted another prisoner by striking him with his fists causing bleeding to the nose and bruising.

18 December 1992:
A prisoner claims that he was assaulted while seated watching TV. He cannot identify his assailant. The prisoner had recently been taken off Rule 43 at his own request.

20 December 1992:
A prisoner assaulted the Segregation Unit Supervisor while cleaning out his cell. The weapon used was a mop handle. The supervisor had bruises to his forearm.

21 December 1992:
(1) A prisoner punched another prisoner following a disagreement in the gymnasium.
(2) While searching visitors prior to allowing them into the prison a PCO observed a piece of cannabis apparently fallen from a visitor's pocket when removing items from his trousers.

23 December 1992:
A prisoner began kicking his door for attention. When it was opened up he assaulted a supervisor by punching him in the face and ribs.

25 December 1992:
A prisoner was found in possession of a quantity of tablets not prescribed for him. Search took place after social visits. He became violent on discovery and control and restraint techniques were used to remove him to the segregation unit. Tablets were identified as Temazepam (sleeping tablets).

28 December 1992:
Following information received a search took place between the area from the main exercise yard and the segregation unit where a quantity of cannabis and four valium tablets were found in a sock which had been weighted with an orange. It is believed that this had been thrown from the exercise yard in an attempt to land it in the segregation unit exercise yard.

31 December 1992:
When in visits a prisoner three chairs and smashed a fish tank, then produced a wood stick with a nail in the end and assaulted the Duty Security Manager. The DSM was taken to outside hospital for his hand to be X-rayed, but apparently sustained no lasting injury.

1 January 1993:
Prisoners had been given an extension to 0015 hours on 1 January to see in the New Year. 16 Prisoners in F Unit refused to return to their cells and barricaded themselves in the TV room. Prisoners eventually returned to their cells at 0715 hours.

2 January 1993:
(1) A prisoner assaulted another prisoner by striking him with his fist.
(2) A prisoner was assaulted by other prisoners, assailants unknown. Prisoner sustained head injuries. Police were contacted but do not wish to proceed.

4 January 1993:
On arrival at Sheffield Crown Court a prisoner had to be removed from the cellular vehicle. During his removal he assaulted one officer and bit the hand of another officer. No lasting injuries to officers.

7 January 1993:
A prisoner who was the subject of a strip search after visits was found to be in possession of two syringes in his footwear.

13 January 1993:
(1) A prisoner assaulted an officer by grabbing his throat and attempting to kick him. No lasting injury to officer sustained.
(2) A prisoner had been unlocked to use the bathroom. He refused to return to his cell. He spat at, head-butted and scratched an officer. No lasting injuries to the officer sustained.

Juvenile Offenders

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had about introducing new legislation to deal with juvenile offenders; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: We have had a number of discussions with a wide range of individuals and organisations which have concerned, among other things, the scale of juvenile offending and what might be done about it. For the second part of his question, I refer the hon. Member to the anwer which I gave to the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood) on 14 January, at column 794.

Bosnian Refugees

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what advice has been given to local authorities and health authorities regarding co-ordination of services for arriving Bosnian refugees; and what additional finance has been allocated to help them cope with the added burden;

(2) how many Bosnian refugees, either in this country already or expected to arrive in the next six months, have long-term accommodation provided for them;

(3) what agency is taking responsibility for the allocation of Bosnian refugees to communities in the United Kingdom; and how this process is to be financed.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Refugee Council is taking the lead in arranging accommodation in the community for the Bosnian ex-detainees and their families which the Government have agreed to accept at the request of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees. It is receiving funds from the Home Office for this purpose. The accommodation will be financed through housing benefit payments.

Discussions have been held with the local authority associations, the Housing Corporation and the National Federation of Housing Associations with a view to identifying possible suitable clusters of accommodation in various areas of the country where there is a voluntary organisation support network. No accommodation has as yet been provided under these arrangements, although we understand that some of the Bosnians have left the reception centres to join relatives or friends already living here.

The Government have no plans to provide additional resources to local authorities, but will be funding the Refugee Council to give advice and support to the Bosnians when they move into the community from the reception centres.

The Refugee Council and the British Red Cross are in touch with local health services in the areas where the reception centres are located about possible needs. The Department of Health is considering whether any further advice to health authorities is necessary.

Prisons (HIV)

Mr. Hawksley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what change in instructions has been given to governors of prisons concerning advising their staff as to which inmates are infected with the HIV/AIDS virus.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The last general instruction to governors was contained in circular instruction 30/1991 which was issued in November 1991. The recommended practice is that information about HIV status obtained in a clinical context should be available only to staff with responsibility for the prisoner's health care unless the prisoner consents to wider disclosure in his or her own interest or, exceptionally, such disclosure is deemed necessary to prevent the spread of infection.

New Age Travellers

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will now make a statement of the Government's detailed intentions to implement the measures to tackle problems caused by new age travellers announced by him in October;

(2) what conclusions he has reached from his consultations with chief officers of police and others on the desirability of amending section 39 of the Public Order Act 1986.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My right hon. and learned Friend is currently considering proposals, including changes to the law, for tackling the problems presented by new age travellers and "ravers" and will make an announcement shortly.

Immigration

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many clearance visas were granted to (a) women and (b) men for the purposes of joining a fiancé(e) or spouse in 1992.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Data on entry clearance applications and decisions by category of applicant are only available centrally for the Indian sub-continent. The data that are available for 1992 are given in the table.

Applications granted[1] for entry clearance to the United Kingdom by whether Spouse or Fiancé(e) in the Indian sub-continent 1992

Car Insurance

Mr. Mills: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will bring forward proposals for legislation to provide higher penalties for those car owners who do not have valid car insurance.

Mr. Jack: The existing maximum penalty for using a motor vehicle while uninsured against third party risks is a fine of £5,000 together with an obligatory endorsement of the driving licence with six to eight penalty points and a period of disqualification from driving with no upper limit, at the court's discretion. We have no plans to change these provisions which allows courts to impose sentences which reflect the culpability of those who commit this offence.

Disclosure of Convictions

Mr. Mills: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from magistrates on the effect of the changes on the non-disclosure of previous convictions introduced by the Criminal Justice Act 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: There is nothing in the Criminal Justice Act 1991 that prevents the disclosure of previous convictions to a court which has convicted an individual of a particular offence; and the Court of Appeal has recently made it clear that it is appropriate for courts to continue to receive antecedent information in the same way as they did before the principal provisions of the Act came into force on 1 October 1992. A number of representations have been received, including some from individual magistrates, about section 29 of the Act which deals with the relevance of previous convictions to the current offence. These matters have recently been clarified in a series of guideline judgments from the Court of Appeal.

Firearms

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many licensed firearms are in private ownership within the Peterlee sub-division; and what were the numbers for each year since 1988.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Information received from the Durham constabulary indicates that a total of 1,315 firearms were covered by certificates in force on 15 January 1993 in the Peterlee sub-division—200 firearms, which includes rifles, pistols, large magazine smooth bore guns and specially dangerous air weapons, and 1,115 shotguns.

Information for earlier years is not available.

Public Houses (Licensing)

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made into the review of the licensing system of public houses, announced by the then Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on 10 July 1989 in his statement on the Monopolies and Mergers Commission on the supply of beer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: We hope shortly to publish a consultation document inviting comments on a number of proposals for changes to the liquor licensing law of England and Wales, including possible reform of those aspects of the licensing system referred to in the statement made in July 1989.

Channel Islands (Wartime Occupation)

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he plans to take to bring to justice those British citizens who collaborated with the Nazi occupiers of the Channel Islands during the second world war in rounding up Jewish and other people for deportation to concentration camps; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 14 January 1993]: The Channel Islands are not part of the United Kingdom, but internally self-governing dependencies of the Crown with their own judicial systems. It is for the islands authorites to consider whether offences under their laws have been committed and to act accordingly.

If evidence is forthcoming of conduct in the Channel Islands during the period of German occupation constituting an offence justiciable in the United Kingdom but not in the Channel Islands themselves, that will be referred to the prosecuting authorities here.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Saudi Arabia (Military Equipment)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions he had during his recent visit to Saudia Arabia on the opportunities for the sale of United Kingdom manufactured military equipment to Saudi Arabia.

Mr. Heseltine: I had no such discussions.

Coal Stocks

Mr. Sproat: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what powers he has to set a strategic stock of coal; and what factors he takes into account in setting this level.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. Friend has exercised the powers under section 34 of the Electricity Act 1989 to direct National Power and PowerGen to hold stocks of coal at power stations against interruptions in coal supplies. In determining the appropriate level of stocks, my right hon. Friend takes into account such matters as the diversity of fuels available for generation and the possible threat to supplies which may arise from one or a combination of factors.

Mr. Sproat: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what information he has on the total level and value of coal stocks held at power stations.

Mr. Eggar: Coal stocks at power stations at 3 January 1993 totalled 31·5 million tonnes. Valuation of coal stocks at power stations is a matter for the generating company concerned.

Gross Domestic Product

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what information he has on the percentage contribution of (a) the chemical industry and (b) the engineering industry to the GDP of (i) the United Kingdom, (ii) France, (iii) Germany and (iv) Italy in each of the last 20 years.

Mr. Sainsbury: The information requested is published in National Accounts ESA, detailed tables by branch; EUROSTAT relevant copies are available in the House of Commons Library.

Offshore Drilling

Mr. Ainger: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) pursuant to his answer of 18 January, Official Report, column 37, regarding environmental impact assessments prior to drilling in the Celtic sea, what special conditions he has plans to attach to any licences issued for blocks 103/2, 103/3, 103/6, 103/7, 106/25, 106/29, 107/21, 104/16, 104/17, 104/18, 104/19 and 104/21;

(2) what advice he received from the Joint Nature Conservation Committee and the Countryside Council for Wales prior to including each of blocks 103/2, 103/3, 103/6, 103/7, 106/25, 106/29, 107/21, 104/16, 104/17, 104/18, 104/19 and 104/21 in the 14th round of offshore drilling licensing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: In considering whether to offer blocks 103/2, 103/3, 103/6, 103/7, 106/25, 106/29, 107/21, 104/16, 104/17, 104/18, 104/19 and 104/21 in the 14th round, officials took account of the concerns of the Joint Nature Conservation Committee—JNCC—and the Countryside Council for Wales—CCW—regarding the ecological status of the area. On balance, the evidence did not justify the exclusion of these blocks from hydrocarbons exploration, but it was agreed that special conditions should be attached to each licence.

These special conditions have been agreed with the Department of the Environment, Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, and the JNCC, which has consulted the CCW. As part of the special conditions, licensees will be obliged to consult these organisations before undertaking any activity in these blocks. The conditions will reflect the concerns related to each block and to those elements of the environment potentially at risk.

Coal Industry

Dr. Marek: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the access allowed to Alan Oakes and Associates, consultants hired by Clwyd county council, to visit the Point of Ayr colliery for the purpose of assessing the pit's viability.

Mr. Eggar: This is a matter for British Coal.

Consultancy Reports

Mr. Tipping: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will place copies of the consultancy reports from Caminus Energy, PIMS Associates Ltd. and Ernst and Young in the Library.

Mr. Eggar: The consultants' reports will be placed in the Library as soon as they are published.

Atomic Energy Authority

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what external financing limit has been set for the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority for 1993-94.

Mr. Eggar: The United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority's external financing limit for 1993-94 will be minus £2·1 million.

Coal Industry

Mr. Janner: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on current employment in the coal mining industry.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 19 January 1993]: The total number of people employed by British Coal at the end of December 1992 was 48,700. The total work force at deep mines licensed by British Coal at 30 September 1992—the latest available figure—was 1,683. No figures are held centrally for employees of contractors working at British Coal's own pits and opencast sites or of employment at opencast sites licensed by British Coal.

Electricity

Mr. Clapham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the criteria agreed in 1990 which triggers compensation payments to the regional electricity companies if they have to take dearer electricity.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 19 January 1993]: The operation of contracts for differences between regional electricity companies—RECs—and the generators, which hedge the RECs against increases in pool prices, is a commercial matter for the companies concerned.

Public Houses

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 13 January, Official Report, column 738, if he will publish the information his Department holds on the purchasers of public houses under the Supply of Beer (Tied Estates) Order 1989 (S.I., 1989, No. 2390); and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neil Hamilton [holding answer 20 January 1993]: As I explained in my answer of 13 January, the statutory undertakings given by the national brewers to provide the Director General of Fair Trading with information to enable him to monitor compliance with the order do not require them to provide details of the purchasers of public houses that are sold. However, my Department is aware of trade press estimates—Publican, 11 January 1993—which suggest that since 1989 the number of pubs owned by independent retailers had increased by 8,000 while regional brewers have purchased a further 3,000 outlets.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

High Court Judges

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the current establishment of High Court judges; and how many are currently in post.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Following a number of very recent promotions and retirements there are currently 83 High Court judges holding appointment out of a complement of 85, which is also the current statutory limit on their numbers. Steps are being taken to bring that number back to 85 as soon as is practicable.

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many sittings in the High Court there were in the last available week; how many were taken by (a) High Court judges, (b) deputy High Court judges and (c) circuit judges, excluding appellate and divisional court sittings.

Mr. John M. Taylor: In the royal courts of justice in London in the week commencing 11 January 1993 there were 253 sittings in the three divisions of the High Court. Of these sittings 147 were taken by High Court judges, 59 were taken by circuit judges sitting as judges of the High Court and 47 were taken by deputies. These figures do not, of course, take account of the substantial number of sittings on High Court business and serious crime undertaken by High Court judges on circuits, for which figures for the week commencing 11 January 1993 are not yet available.

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what progress is being made by the Lord Chancellor's committee on the work, deployment and number of High Court judges; when it is expected to report; and whether the report will be published.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The group of senior judges and officials which has been asked to advise the Lord Chancellor and the Lord Chief Justice on the work, deployment and numbers of High Court judges met first on 5 October 1992 and has met several times since then. It is hoped that their advice will be received soon. It is unclear yet whether the advice will be in a form which could be published, but as parliamentary and Privy Council approval is required to increase the statutory limit on the number of High Court judges any changes proposed to be made as a result of it would come into the public domain.

Possession Notices

Mr. Allen: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many (a) possession notices and (b) suspended possession notices have been served in the latest period of 12 months for which figures are available in the Nottinghamshire area; and what were the corresponding figures for the previous period of 12 months.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Mortgage possession figures are collected by the number of actions entered, suspended orders and orders made. The table shows the information for each county court in Nottinghamshire during 1991 and 1992. The figures do not indicate how many houses have been repossessed through the courts as not all the orders will have resulted in the issue and execution of warrants of possession. At this stage, the 1992 figures are provisional and therefore liable to revision to take account of any late amendments. Figures on mortgage possession actions taken in each county court in England and Wales are published quarterly in an information bulletin which is placed in the Libraries of both Houses of Parliament. The figures covering the whole of 1991 and 1992 will be published on 27 January 1993.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Maastricht Treaty

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress each of the 12 EC member states has made in reaching the convergence criteria of the Maastricht treaty.

Mr. Nelson: Article 109j of the Maastricht treaty gives to the Council the responsibility for determining whether or not a member state has met the necessary conditions for entry to stage 3 of economic and monetary union. The Council is required to make this judgment, taking into account reports from the Commission and European Monetary Institute on the extent to which a member state complies with criteria concerning the relative rate of inflation; the Government's fiscal position; observance of the normal fluctuation margins within the exchange rate mechanism—ERM; and long-term interest rates. In addition, the reports must take account of a number of other factors, including the development of the ecu, the integration of markets, current account positions, and unit labour costs and other price indices.

A protocol attached to the treaty lays down figures for the convergence criteria regarding inflation and long-term interest rates. Another protocol sets out reference values for fiscal criteria which, if breached, might prompt a Commission report to the Council on the fiscal position of a member state—such a report being the basis on which the Council would judge whether or not an excessive deficit existed. However, definitions of the indicators of convergence have not yet been fully standardised and figures are therefore only indicative at this stage.

The current position of each member state, in respect of the convergence criteria, is given in the table. The criterion on participation in the ERM is that a member state has respected the normal fluctuation margins without severe tensions for at least the last two years. In particular, the member state shall not have devalued its currency's bilateral central rate against any other member state's currency on its own initiative for the same period. The following member states have been in the narrow band for at least two years: Belgium, Denmark, France, Germany, Ireland, Luxembourg and the Netherlands.

	Latest inflation[1]	Budget balance[2]	General government debt[3]	Longer bond yield[4]
Belgium	2·2	−6·4	132·2	7·5

Mortgage Repayments

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many households in (a) Great Britain, (b) the Yorkshire-Humberside region and (c) the York area have been helped under the scheme announced by him on 19 December 1991 to provide funding on concessional terms to help borrowers who are not on income support, but who face serious problems in paying their mortgages; and what means have been used to assess the effectiveness of the scheme.

Mr. Nelson: I do not believe that it is possible to single out the specific effect of particular elements in the range of industry and Government measures which my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced following my meeting with the mortgage lenders—Official Report, 19 December 1991, column 453.

As for the number of households helped by the package as a whole, one indicator is the latest published figures for possession actions in the county courts in England and Wales which indicate a fall of 16,563—32 per cent.—in the number of actions entered in the third quarter of 1992 compared with the third quarter of 1991. Over the same period possession actions entered in the Yorkshire and Humberside region fell by 1,428—38 per cent.; and in the York and Malton area by 33—22 per cent.

Third World Debt

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps the Government are taking to encourage British banks to cancel a proportion of debts owed to them by third-world countries.

Mr. Nelson: The Government welcome the significant progress made by banks in reaching voluntary arrangements on debt relief with developing countries. The United Kingdom is financing its share of the International Monetary Fund and World bank resources used in support of these arrangements.

Drinks Duty

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what representations he has had on the harmonisation of drinks duties in the European Community; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what discussions he has had with (a) his European Community counterparts and (b) the Scotch whisky industry and others on the harmonisation of drinks duties in the European Community; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what discussions he has had with representatives of the Scotch whisky industry to discuss excise taxation; what representations he has received on the taxation of Scotch whisky; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Cope: EC Finance Ministers have not discussed drinks duties since the adoption of the rates and structures directives last October. Treasury Ministers have since received many representations from the drinks trade on the subject of United Kingdom duties. My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer met a delegation from the Scotch Whisky Association on 14 January to discuss its request for no increase in or revalorisation of the duty on spirits, and a narrowing of the duty differential between spirits and beer and wine. All these representations will be considered in the review of indirect taxation in the run-up to the Budget.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his current estimate of the value of sales of Scotch whisky which would be lost in the event of the abolition of duty free; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Cope: Intra-EC duty-free sales of Scotch whisky are estimated to be worth around £50 million a year. We have no details on the value of non-EC duty-free sales of Scotch whisky. No estimates are available for the value of sales that would be lost in the event of abolition of duty-free sales.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will provide details of (a) the amount and (b) the value of sales of (i) Scotch whisky and (ii) imported wine in cash and real terms in the United Kingdom for each year since 1979; and if he will list the percentage increase/decrease compared with the previous year.

Sir John Cope: Such information as is available is given in the table. The figures for whisky relate to home-produced mature whisky and whiskey. For wine, the figures relate to heavy, light and sparkling wine, the bulk of which is imported.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish the annual amount of revenue accruing to the Exchequer in (a) cash and (b) real terms from the levying of excise duty on Scotch whisky for each year since 1979.

Sir John Cope: Firm data on duty receipts are available only for total spirits. Estimates can be made for all home-produced whisky and these are given in the table:

Correspondence

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when a reply will be sent to the letter written on 1 December 1992 by the hon. Member for Walsall, North regarding a constituent.

Mr. Dorrell: I wrote to the hon. Member yesterday; I apologise for not being able to reply earlier.

Retail Prices Index

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects to receive a report from the Retail Prices Index Advisory Committee.

Mr. Lamont: I have today received a report from the Retail Prices Index Advisory Committee. It makes recommendations on the treatment in the RPI of council tax and holidays. The full report is being published this afternoon as Cm 2142 and copies are available in the Vote Office.

In due course I will announce my response on the recommendations. The committee has not yet concluded its consideration of the treatment of owner-occupiers' housing costs and new cars.

Non-residents (Tax)

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchquer if he will make a statement on the application of the tax deduction at source arrangements to the payment of gross interest to non-residents by deposit-takers.

Mr. Dorrell: The tax deduction at source legislation provides, generally, that individuals who are not ordinarily resident in the United Kingdom, and who make a declaration to that effect, can receive their interest without deduction of tax. However under existing rules a deposit-taker which is not a bank or a building society is required to deduct tax even when a declaration has been made.

We have decided to remove this inconsistency by including legislation in the next Finance Bill to allow these deposit-takers to pay gross interest on the same footing as banks and building societies.

In the meantime, in anticipation of this legislation, and with my agreement, the Inland Revenue will not seek to recover tax from a deposit-taker which has paid gross interest to someone who is not ordinarily resident in the United Kingdom and has provided the necessary declaration.

Germany (Coach Importation)

Mr. Fry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make representations through the European Commission regarding the tax on the temporary importation of coach vehicles to Germany via any border being imposed on vehicles of another EC member state.

Sir John Cope [holding answer 19 January 1993]: There is some uncertainty surrounding the approach being adopted by Germany to coaches since the abolition of fiscal frontiers on 1 January 1993. HM Customs and Excise are seeking clarification of the situation with the Commission and other member states.

Income Statistics

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of the increase in incomes since 1979 has gone to the top 1 per cent., 5 per cent., 10 per cent. and 20 per cent. of the population; and what are the comparable figures for the USA, Japan, Germany and France.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 11 January 1993]: The data requested in the question are not readily available. However, information for the United Kingdom on changes in income shares and real incomes was contained in replies my hon. Friend the Member for Bury, North (Mr. Burt), the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Social Security gave to the hon. Member for Bradford, West (Mr. Madden) on 2 December 1992 at column 100 and the hon. Member for Peckham (Ms. Harman) on 7 December at column 506.

PRIME MINISTER

Iraq

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's discussions with the Government of Jordan on the efficacy of military intervention in Iraq.

The Prime Minister: Since the invasion of Kuwait we have had frequent discussions with the Jordanians on the situation in Iraq. We have discussed the allies' latest military action in Iraq with Jordanian officials.

EDUCATION

Education Spending

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list for each education authority, the amount per pupil spent on (a) under-fives, (b) primary, (c) 11 to 16 and (d) post-16 education for the last three years for which figures are available.

Mr. Forth: Available expenditure data cover nursery and primary schools, or secondary schools, as a whole, and cannot be disaggregated between particular age ranges. The latest year for which information on actual expenditure by local education authorities is available is 1990-91. The tables indicate, for each local education authority in England, the average school-based expenditure per pupil in nursery and primary schools and in secondary schools in each year from 1988-89 to 1990-91.

Notes to tables:
1. Figures are derived from LEAs' returns of their spending to the Department of the Environment and of their pupil numbers to the Department for Education. They include school-based spending on salaries and wages, recurrent premises costs, books, equipment and other supplies and services. For 1990-91 they also include unspent balances held by schools at the year end under local management schemes. Figures exclude spending on home to school transport, school meals, LEAs' central administration and financing costs of capital expenditure.
2. "n/a" indicates that a return was not received from the LEA. Figures for 1988-89 and 1989-90 are rounded to the nearest £5, and for 1990-91 to the nearest £10.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list for each education authority, the amount per pupil spent on special needs education, the total spent on special needs education and the percentage this represents of the total education budget, for the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Forth: The latest year for which information on actual expenditure is available is 1990-91. The table indicates, for each local education authority in England, net institutional expenditure per pupil in maintained special schools or receiving education otherwise than at school provided by each local education authority; total net recurrent expenditure on special education; and the percentage this represents of the LEA's total net recurrent expenditure on education. The figures for special education exclude expenditure on pupils with special needs attending primary and secondary schools and on services such as child guidance and educational psychology, as the relevant data are not collected separately.

Note to table

1. Figures are derived from LEAs' returns of their spending to the Department of the Environment and of their pupil numbers to the Department for Education.

2. Net institutional expenditure covers the costs of salaries and wages, recurrent premises costs, books, equipment and other supplies and services. It excludes the costs of home to school transport, school meals, LEAs' central administration, and financing costs of capital expenditure.

3. Net recurrent expenditure includes all expenditure other than on financing of capital expenditure, less income other than from specific grants.

4. The variations in the figures between LEAs partly reflect the geographical distribution of different kinds of special schools and partly differences in policies of integration of pupils with special needs into ordinary schools.

Nursery Education

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list in rank order the latest available figures for the percentage of three and four-year-olds in nursery education for each local education authority in England.

Mr. Forth: Estimates of the percentage of three and four-year-olds in maintained nursery schools or nursery classes in maintained primary schools in each local education authority in England in January 1991 were published in column (xvii) of table 1 of statistical bulletin 5/92. A copy of this bulletin is available in the Library.

However, data which have since become available from the 1991 census of population suggest that the estimates of the three and four-year-old population in each local education authority used in bulletin 5/92 are in need of revision in some cases, and therefore that the percentages in column (xvii) of table 1 also need to be revised. The percentages as they stand do not therefore provide a reliable basis for a listing of local education authorities in rank order.

It is however not yet possible to re-calculate the percentages in bulletin 5/92 more accurately, or to update them to 1992, because not all of the population estimates required for this purpose are available on a post-census basis.

Teacher Salaries

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) if he will list, for each education authority not in receipt of area cost adjustment, the average teacher's salary for the last year that figures are available;

(2) if he will list, for each education authority in receipt of area cost adjustment, the average teacher's salary for the last year that figures are available.

Mr. Forth: The most recent date for which figures are available is 31 March 1990.

The area cost adjustment is designed to compensate local authorities in London and south-east England for additional employment costs incurred in that region. It is based on evidence of general market earnings levels drawn from the annual new earnings survey.

Some care must be taken in drawing parallels between differentials in average teacher salaries and the area cost adjustment. First, in the field of education, the adjustment compensates for the additional labour costs which apply to all types of staff employed in educational work. While approximately three quarters of total local authority education expenditure is on labour costs, in the current year only half this total expenditure relates to teachers' pay.

Secondly, the average salary figures given below do not necessarily fully reflect the higher costs of employing teachers in the south-east, since in order to attract teaching staff, authorities in that region have generally found it necessary to offer additional incentives, particularly to help with the costs of housing.

With these qualifications, the average teacher's salary was, for education authorities which receive area cost adjustment:

Dronfield School, Derbyshire

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the cost of the services of the Electoral Reform Society in conducting the ballot on grant-maintained status at the Dronfield school in Derbyshire.

Mr. Forth: The cost of the services of the Electoral Reform Society in conducting the ballot on grant-maintained status at the Dronfield school was £350.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Olner: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what has been the cost for the printing and distribution of the pack of information relating to grant maintained conferences for heads and governors, midlands.

Mr. Forth: The conference material for the events to be held in Leicester in February and in Nottingham and Birmingham in March comprised a letter of invitation and a copy of the standard grant maintained information pack. Production costs for the information packs were approximately £5,500. The mailing of invitations and packs fell within the terms of the contract with the departmental dispatch centre and distribution costs cannot be identified separately.

Teachers' Authority

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what consideration he has given to the need for further legislation to clarify the legal basis of teachers' authority referred to in the Elton report on discipline in schools.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend does not consider that further legislation would be appropriate.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

National Lottery

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will publish the terms of reference given to the GAH group of consultants for the report on the national lottery commissioned by his Department.

Mr. Brooke: All the firms invited to tender for the consultancy were sent the following terms of reference.

The Commission ANNEX A

1. The Secretary of State for National Heritage intends to introduce a National Lottery to raise funds for arts, sport, the heritage and charities, and for the Millennium Fund, which will finance projects which celebrate and commemorate the turn of the millennium. The Department of National Heritage will require advice on the key determinants of a successful National Lottery in the United Kingdom. To this end, the contractor is asked to provide a report which covers structure, administration and marketing issues, and includes consideration of the following:

2. The determinants of a successful Game.
   - Lotto/instant lotteries;
   - On-line/off-line operations;
   - Frequency of games;
   - Size and range of prizes, and roll-over provision;
   - Retailing strategy.

3. The Secretary of State is concerned that there should be competition between providers of Lottery goods and services to ensure efficient practice. It is envisaged that one contract will be let to co-ordinate and run the National Lottery, but that a competitive environment will be created in the provision of games. The contractor is asked to provide a suitable model to promote competition and efficiency.

4. Creating a competitive environment.
   - Length of contract awarded to primary operator.
   - Separation of services/games offered by sub-contractors.
   - Administrative costs of complex/simple arrangements.

5. Regulatory issues. The contractor is asked to bear in mind the balance to be struck between regulation, innovation, and yield.
   - Identify where either on-line or off-line systems might present opportunities for fraud, and ways of avoiding or minimising those opportunities.
   - Ways of minimising vulnerability to very large, big-spending syndicates.

6. Assessing other economic effects. Some respondents to the consultation have claimed that the introduction of a Lottery will seriously damage the turnover of other industries. Some substitution to the Lottery will undoubtedly take place, but it would be helpful to have an estimate of:
   - The extent to which the Lottery will tap into new markets. Insofar as existing markets are affected (particularly gambling and charitable giving), advice will be needed on possible changes to the current regimes for those activities, with quantified effects as far as possible. The contractor should for the purposes of this exercise assume no changes in the tax regimes for any of these markets.

The Method

7. Given the time constraints, it is not envisaged that the contractor will undertake specific market research for this project but will proceed by modelling, using information already available in the United Kingdom and abroad. Your presentation will need to make clear how you would intend to carry out the commission.

Royal Armouries Museum

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what is the projected number of visitors to the royal armouries museum being built in Leeds; what is the projected break-even attendance figure; and what commitment the Government have given to secure the future of the royal armouries in the event of the move not breaking even financially.

Mr. Key: A nationally recognised firm of market researchers has advised that the proposed museum in Leeds will attract well in excess of 1 million visitors per year, and has confirmed this advice recently.

The projected break-even attendance figure is well below half the expected number of visitors.

There is no question of the royal armouries not having a secure future.

Windsor Castle

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Natioal Heritage how much of the £2·50 that members of the public are being charged to view the fire-damaged rooms at Windsor castle will go to its restoration fund; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: Visitors to the state apartments at Windsor castle are currently being charged a reduced admission fee of £2·50 instead of the normal adult charge of £4 because some rooms are temporarily removed from the public route as a result of the fire. Visitors view only in passing the areas damaged by fire. Admission fees continue to be used for the conservation, presentation and administration of the royal collection.

KPMG Management Consultants

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list the contracts awarded by his Department to KPMG Management Consultants over the past 12 months.

Mr. Key: The Department of National Heritage, which came into being in April 1993, has not awarded any contracts to KPMG Management Consultants during the past 12 months. However, on 5 March 1992 the Department of Trade and Industry awarded a contract to KPMG Management Consultants to carry out a review of British Screen Finance Ltd. The Department of National Heritage inherited this contract when responsibility for film industry policy, including British Screen Finance, passed to this Department on 1 May 1992. The final report was delivered in May 1992.

Welsh Television

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what representations he has received regarding the reception of Welsh television services in north east Clwyd; and what has been his response.

Mr. Brooke: Since responsibility for broadcasting policy was transferred to the Department of National Heritage in April 1992, we have received representations about Welsh television services in north-east Clwyd only from the hon. Member for Alyn and Deeside (Mr. Jones). We have offered advice on how to improve reception of Welsh programmes in some parts of the area.

TRANSPORT

Public Transport Fares, London

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will update the table of real fares and passenger mileage on London Transport underground and buses given in his answer to the hon. Member for Lewisham, Deptford (Ms. Ruddock), 22 July 1991, Official Report, column 336.

Mr. Norris: The information requested is given in the table. Figures for bus passenger miles, given in the answer referred to, were on a financial year basis from 1984. London Transport has revised its estimates of passenger miles for the years from 1987-88 to 1990-91, so these data are also shown.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish a real fares index for child fares on (a) British Rail, (b) Network SouthEast, (c) London Underground, (d) London Buses and (e) London Transport bus and underground services combined for each year since 1971 expressed at 1971 prices.

Mr. Steven Norris: The information available for London Buses, London Underground, and London Transport bus and underground services combined is shown in the table. Comparable figures for British Rail and Network SouthEast are not readily available.

The figures shown in the table are for child ordinary tickets only. They do not include the effect of changes in the price of child season tickets, travelcards and passes, as this information is not available. The figures shown for bus and all London Transport services start in 1976 because the age band covered by child tickets on buses changed during 1975, and consistent data for earlier years are not available.

Ferries

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the incident threatening the safety of the Stena Sealink ferry Hibernia on the night of 16-17 January.

Mr. Norris: The incident is the subject of an investigation by the Department's marine accident investigation branch. The inspector appointed to carry out the investigation will in due course submit a report to the the Chief Inspector of Marine Accidents.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which ferries currently in service and operating from British ports are comparable in design or class to the Jan Heweliusz.

Mr. Norris: There is one ferry operating to British ports that can carry rail freight in a similar manner to the Jan Heweliusz. This is the French-registered ferry Nord Pas de Calais.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport in what circumstances and under what powers the Irish or British authorities can intervene to prevent the sailing of ferries between Ireland and the United Kingdom because of hazardous conditions.

Mr. Norris: Unless a vessel has weather restrictions placed on its operation, my Department has no powers to prevent the sailing of ferries because of hazardous weather conditions. The decision to sail is ultimately that of the ship's master.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which ferries currently in service and operating from British ports are comparable in design or class to the Stena Hibernia.

Mr. Norris: The Stena Hibernia is typical of the type of ro-ro passenger ferry in service between United Kingdom ports, continental Europe and Ireland, although the design will differ in detail.

London Underground

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish details of investment in the London underground system made in 1992-93 and planned for 1993-94, 1994-95 and 1995-96.

Mr. Norris: Total investment expenditure by London Underground in 1992-93 is currently forecast to be about £680 million. London Transport is still finalising its budget plans for future years, in light of the autumn statement, but I expect London Underground investment, including provision for the Jubilee line extension and crossrail, to be in the region of £1 billion per annum over the next three years.

Shipping Statistics

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what is his best estimate of the number of vessels passing through the Bristol channel daily;

(2) what is his estimate of the average number of vessels passing through St. George's channel each day.

Mr. Norris: My Department does not hold information on the number of vessels passing through the St. George's channel or the Bristol channel daily.

Network SouthEast

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish details of the investment made in Network SouthEast in 1992-93 and planned for 1993-94, 1994-95 and 1995-96.

Mr. Freeman: Around £600 million is being invested in Network SouthEast in 1992-93. Rolling stock, including networkers for Kent link and turbos for Thames and Chiltern, accounts for over half this sum. Other major projects include resignalling schemes on the Great Eastern, London, Tilbury and Southend, Thames, Kent link and Kent coast lines, and Cambridge to King's Lynn electrification. Some of these projects will continue in 1993-94 including the delivery of more rolling stock for Kent link and Thames. However, British Rail has yet to be make final decisions on its detailed investment plans for 1993-94 to 1995-96.

Oil Spills

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is, in both cash and constant prices, the amount of financial support his Department has given to fund research into oil spill clean-ups in each year since financial year 1987-88; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: The expenditure on research into oil spill clean-ups in the years specified was:

Year	Expenditure	Deflated to 1987-88 prices
1987-88	988,938
1988-89	741,975	691,621
1989-90	737,089	644,687
1990-91	874,603	708,410
1991-92	610,464	462,506
1992-93	[1]830,000	603,197

[1] Estimate.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consideration has been given to the use of napalm to tackle the oil slick resulting from the Braer disaster; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: My Department considers all available techniques when dealing with oil pollution at sea in oil spill incidents. Burning the slick would not have been appropriate in the Braer incident due to the location of the vessel and the weather conditions. My Department has also commissioned a research project to review burning as a response option.

Transport Links

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations have been made by his Department to the European Commission's request that a full evaluation should be undertaken of all transport links between the United Kingdom and Ireland.

Mr. Norris: I am not aware of any such request from the Commission.

Planning Appeal, Ealing

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy not to oppose the application or the continuation of the appeal proceedings in the matter of the planning appeal being heard at the Ealing town hall and relating to the access to Norbreck parade, London NW10, from the north circular road, on the grounds that the appellant may not in fact at present own the land in question.

Mr. Norris: The Department's grounds for opposing this application are set out in its proofs of evidence submitted to the public inquiry. These and all other evidence submitted are matters for the inspector to consider before making his recommendations to the Secretary of State for the Environment.

WALES

Capital Receipts

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the level of (a) housing and (b) other capital receipts held by each Welsh district council at the end of the year 1991-92 which they are unable to spend.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: For the year in question under the Local Government and Housing Act 1989 and the capital finance regulations made under the provisions of that Act, a proportion of capital receipts is available for the redemption of debt with the balance being available either for voluntary debt redemption or for new capital spending. Debt redemption, or the holding of receipts set aside for this purpose, reduces or offsets the interest charges that have to be borne by a local authority or its housing revenue account and there are no capital receipts that cannot be used either in that way or for new capital spending.

Accident Trauma Specialists

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many accident trauma specialists have been employed within each health authority area of Wales during each of the last five years.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The available information, which relates to consultants in the specialty of traumatic and orthopaedic surgery, is given in the table. It is not known centrally how many of these consultants are accident trauma specialists.

Further Education

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to launch a review of further education provision for students with learning difficulties and physical disabilities in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Further education is currently a matter for the local education authorities. On 1 April, the Further Education Funding Council for Wales assumes responsibility for planning and funding the sector. In the Secretary of State's guidance letter of 27 May 1992 to the chairman of the funding council he asked that the council ensures that adequate arrangements are in place for assessing the needs of students with learning difficulties and disabilities and for identifying appropriate provision within further education.

Public Bodies

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the estimated total number of people he has currently appointed to public bodies in Wales; and what is the estimated total annual amount paid to those members appointed by him to public bodies in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: The total number of people I have currently appointed to public bodies in Wales is 1,195. Information on the total amount paid to those members appointed is not collected centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Information on the level of remuneration for each appointment was given in the reply I gave the hon. Member for Don Valley (Mr. Redmond) on 30 October 1992, at columns 866-908.

Transport Links

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what action has been taken to date by his Department in response to the European Commission's invitation to the United Kingdom to undertake a feasibility study as background to the pilot project on transport links between Holyhead and Dublin.

Sir Wyn Roberts: My officials have been discussing with colleagues in the Department of Transport possible terms of reference for a feasibility study into combined transport links between Great Britain and Ireland.

Ramp Metering

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to introduce ramp metering on motorway and dual carriageway approach roads in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: None at this time.

Alcohol Projects

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps will be taken to ring-fence money for residential alcohol projects in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Resources being transferred for residential facilities under the care in the community arrangements will be ring-fenced. The Department will continue to support individual projects aimed at combating alcohol misuse.

Hearing Aids

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what charge is made for replacement hearing aids for adults and children by (a) South Glamorgan health authority and (b) other health authorities in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The National Health Service Act 1977 enables the making of regulations to provide for health authorities to recover the cost of lost or damaged equipment. The National Health Service (Charges for Appliances) Regulations 1974 make such provision. It is for individual health authorities to assess how much to charge for replacing appliances and information on charges made is not held centrally.

Early Retirement

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many employees aged 55 years or over have retired early on grounds of ill-health in Wales in each year since 1985.

Mr. David Hunt: This information is not available centrally.

Roadworks

Mr. Llywd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to issue a code of practice on the reduction of traffic delays around roadworks in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Advice on reducing delays around roadworks is available to highway authorities in Wales.

Special Needs Education

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much extra money will be allocated for the assessment of support services and placements for students with learning difficulties and physical disabilities in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The allocation of funds to the further education sector will become the responsibility of the Further Education Funding Council for Wales from 1 April. The Secretary of State announced on 15 December 1992 the planned funding for further education in Wales from 1993-94 to 1995-96. The Secretary of State has acknowledged that additional costs are involved in making provision for students with special needs and has asked that the funding council take this into account in distributing funds to the FE colleges.

Council Tax

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to set a target time in which valuation tribunals in Wales will complete a council tax valuation appeal.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: When the number of appeals coming forward in 1993 is known, we will agree with the tribunal service and the Valuation Office agency a broad timetable for their disposal. The Government will keep under review the progress of tribunals in disposing of appeals. The time taken to clear individual appeals will vary with the particular circumstances of the appeal. It would not be practicable to set a time within which an individual appeal should be settled.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Official Information

Mr. Richard Shepherd: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) if he will list the statutory provisions restricting disclosure of official information, other than the Official Secrets Acts, which came into force after the publication of the list of provisions in appendix V of the Franks report, Cmnd 5104;

(2) if he will publish a list of the clauses containing provisions bearing upon the disclosure of official information which appear in Government Bills published since 2 April 1990.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, Central (Mr. Fisher) on 2 November 1992, at column 55.

ENVIRONMENT

Tenants Cash Incentive Scheme

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the amount used by each local authority in the United Kingdom, as a percentage of its housing budget, to fund the tenants cash incentive scheme in the last financial year.

Mr. Baldry: The available information for authorities in England operating approved cash incentive schemes in 1991-92 is given in the table. Corresponding data for authorities in other parts of the United Kingdom are the responsibility of the Secretaries of State for the territorial Departments.

Disclosure of Information

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many prosecutions have been carried out under section 206 of the Water Industry Act 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Neither my Department nor the Office of Water Services collect information about prosecutions under the provisions of section 206 of the Water Industry Act 1991. No such prosecutions have been otherwise brought to my attention.

Construction Industry Inquiry

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to ensure representation of client interests in the construction industry inquiry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: We are having discussions with several bodies about the representation of public and private client interests in the proposed review. We hope to finalise the arrangements shortly.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if the terms of reference of the inquiry into the construction industry will include retention money reform.

Mr. Baldry: The purpose of the proposed review is to consider and make recommendations to the Government, the construction industry and its clients on those matters that cause conflict in the shape of procurement and contracts. The question of retention money is one of many matters that we would expect to be included.

Multi-occupied Houses

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what records local authorities are required to keep on the environmental standard of multi-occupied houses and, specifically, on whether such accommodation has adequate cooking facilities.

Sir George Young: There is no general requirement for local authorities to keep such records. However, a local authority must maintain a register of all notices served under section 352 of the Housing Act 1985, as amended by the Local Government and Housing Act 1989. An authority may serve a notice under this section where it considers that the facilities in a house in multiple occupation—HMO—render the house unfit for occupation. The requirement includes adequate facilities for the storage, preparation and cooking of food.

Local authorities have the power under section 346 of the Act to set up a registration scheme for the HMOs in their area. The Department's model scheme suggests that the register should contain details about each house, including the number of rooms in the house used exclusively as kitchens or sculleries and bathrooms, and the number of sanitary and washing facilities.

Bosnian Refugees

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many Bosnian refugees have been housed in local authority accommodation; and how much money has been allocated to replacing that accommodation (a) nationally and (b) in the city of Nottingham.

Mr. Baldry: The Department does not hold details of the national origins of people allocated accommodation under the homelessness legislation. As the Minister for Housing and Planning, my hon. Friend the Member for Ealing, Acton (Sir G. Young), announced on 16 November 1992, at column 54, the Government are making available a special grant for local authorities faced with exceptional costs arising from the influx of refugees from the former Yugoslav republic; the distribution of that grant has not yet been decided.

Pollution Control

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to review the implementation and enforcement of the integrated pollution control system established through the Environmental Protection Act 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Integrated pollution control is being phased in between 1991 and 1996. We are satisfied that it is being properly implemented and enforced by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution and that its introduction is proceeding according to timetable. It is our policy to keep this, and all other systems for which the Department is responsible, under review.

Composting Units

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to provide financial assistance to (a) local authorities, (b) farmers and (c) private companies in the setting up of commercial composting units.

Mr. Maclean: Local authorities, in partnership with the private sector where appropriate, are able to apply for supplementary credit approvals for recycling projects. Private companies which are developing new recycling technologies or processes may seek grants under the ETIS and DEMOS schemes. While my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food has the responsibility for providing grants to farmers for works to prevent pollution from agricultural waste, he has no plans to extend these grants to businesses of this type.

Packaging

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are his targets for reducing the overall amount of packaging materials used to package goods under the EC directive on packaging and packaging waste.

Mr. Maclean: The Commission's proposal for a directive is still in its early stages. It is not yet clear what the final shape of any directive that is adopted may be. I consider therefore that it is premature for the United Kingdom to set targets now given that the current proposals may be changed substantially during negotiations between member states. We already have a target of recycling 25 per cent. of household waste, a substantial amount of the recyclable proportion of which is packaging materials.

Bed-and-breakfast Accommodation

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how often bed-and-breakfast accommodation, occupied by homeless families, is required to be inspected by an environmental health officer; and what are the provisions under which such an inspection takes place.

Sir George Young: Section 605 of the Housing Act 1985, as amended, requires a local authority to consider the housing conditions in their district in this regard at least once a year. It is for each authority to decide on an inspection programme in the light of circumstances.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what research has been undertaken to establish how many homeless households living in bed-and-breakfast accommodation have refused offers of permanent accommodation since 1989.

Mr. Baldry: The Department has conducted no research on this matter in relation to the period in question.

Local Authority Tendering

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidance he gives to local authorities involved in placing work out to tender with the private sector concerning the notification of changes by local authorities to the original specification once the original invitation to tender is issued and the tendering process is under way; and if he will list the relevant statutes.

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. and learned Friend has not issued any guidance to local authorities on this specific aspect of tendering procedure.

The statutes relevant to public purchasing are:

—for compulsory competitive tendering:

The Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980
The Local Government Act 1988
The Local Government Act 1982
and regulations made under those Acts.

—for more general purchasing, regulations made to implement in the United Kingdom:

(European Economic Community) Directive 71/305/EEC, as amended by 89/440/EEC. (Public Sector Works Directive)
Directive 77/62/EEC, as amended by 88/295/EEC. (Supplies Directive)
Directive 92/50/EEC. (Services Directive)

Architects Registration Council

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to abolish the Architects Registration Council.

Sir George Young: The Department has received the report by Mr. John Warne CB of his review of the Architects (Registration) Acts 1931 to 1969. We are at present considering its recommendations and will make an announcement shortly.

Tyre Dumps

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many tyre dumps it is estimated will be subject to the requirements of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 when these are introduced on 1 April 1993; and what additional financial provision is to be made to the local waste regulation authorities by his Department.

Mr. Maclean: Under legislation in the Control of Pollution Act 1974, sites used for the deposit of waste tyres must be licensed for that purpose. This will continue to be the case after the introduction of the new waste management licensing system in the Environmental Protection Act 1990, scheduled for 1 April 1993; unless exempt, all waste tyre dumps will be subject to the requirements of this system. However, it is proposed that where the waste tyres are being kept in limited quantities prior to recycling, such storage should be exempted from the requirements.

At the same time as the new licensing system is introduced, a scheme of fees and charges will be made, which will enable waste regulation authorities to recover their reasonable administrative costs incurred in considering licence applications and supervising licensed activities. Thus authorities will be provided with an income in respect of activities which for the most part they already carry out.

Furthermore, resources of £12 million have been set aside for supplementary credit approvals to local authorities for landfill gas and contaminated land remedial works in the financial year 1993-94.

Council Tax

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to set a target time in which valuation tribunals in England will complete a council tax band appeal.

Mr. Robin Squire: When the number of council tax appeals arising in 1993 is known, we will agree with the valuation tribunal service and the Valuation Office agency a broad timetable for disposing of them. We will then keep progress under review. Since the time taken to clear individual appeals will vary with the particular circumstances of the case, it would not be practicable to set a specific deadline for each one.

Urban Programme

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many representations he has received (a) in favour of and (b) against the decision, announced on 13 November 1992, to reduce the urban programme for 1993-94.

Mr. Robin Squire: The 97 letters received up to and including 4 January 1993, to which I referred in my answer to the hon. Member of 11 January, at column 655, either sought clarification or expressed concern about the new arrangements for the urban programme. In reply, we have made clear that there will be a substantial urban programme in 1993-94 amounting to £176 million and that we have demonstrated our continuing commitment to urban regeneration by increasing planned resources for my Department's urban group of programmes for 1993-94 by over £90 million; total spending will be over £1 billion.

Right to Buy

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information is available on the recent right-to-buy performance of London authorities.

Mr. Baldry: The right-to-buy performance of London authorities has been monitored by my Department for a number of years. Annual monitoring is carried out of each authority's performance at the end of September, with poor performers submitting additional reports on a monthly basis. Data from the latest survey is given in the table.

I am pleased to report that data for September 1992 show that the number of tenants whose applications are being unduly delayed continues to decline. Across London as a whole delays beyond statutory deadlines have fallen by 60 per cent. from 2,192 to 884. This compares with more than 15,000 delayed cases in March 1989 when the Government's "tenants sanctions" procedures came into effect.

Only two authorities—Hackney and Lambeth—were monitored on a monthly basis in 1992. I am glad to say that the performance of both authorities is now very much better and it has been possible for me to agree that monthly monitoring of Lambeth should cease. Monthly monitoring of Hackney continues, but will also cease if Hackney's improved performance is maintained.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment why the sparsity indicator for standard spending assessments has increased in value against the grant-related expenditure allocation position.

Mr. Robin Squire [holding answer 18 January 1993]: The allowance for sparsity within standard spending assessments follows extensive statistical analysis and the consideration of other evidence provided by local authority representatives. It reflects the Government's current view of the additional costs of providing local services associated with population sparsity.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how the standard level of service is defined for the purpose of standard spending assessments; and how this standard is arrived at.

Mr. Robin Squire [holding answer 19 January 1993]: The standard level of service is that which is consistent with the Government's view of the appropriate total amount of revenue expenditure for all local authorities —that is, "total standard spending". This figure takes into account the various pressures on local authority services, any changes in local authority functions or new burdens, and the potential for improved efficiency in service delivery. It also reflects the Government's view of what taxpayers, both locally and nationally, can afford.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what economies of scale are identified within the standard spending assessment formulae.

Mr. Robin Squire [holding answer 19 January 1993]: Standard spending assessments take account of a wide range of indicators of the physical, demographic, and social characteristics of local authorities. We have no evidence that expenditure needs are affected by the size of an authority in itself, over and above the extent to which size is already reflected in the existing indicators such as population.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what account is taken of the distribution of low-paid groups, other than recipients of income support, in calculating standard spending assessments.

Mr. Robin Squire [holding answer 19 January 1993]: There is no explicit reference within the calculation of standard spending assessments to the distribution of low-paid groups, other than through indicators based on income support claimants. However, the use of the children's and all ages social indices within the calculation of the personal social services and all other services elements of the standard spending assessment reflects the fact that the costs of providing some services are higher in areas with poorer social conditions relative to those with above average social conditions.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each county, London and metropolitan borough the standard spending assessment per person for the last three years for which figures are available.

Mr. Robin Squire: A table containing the information requested has been placed in the Library. This also includes a column showing standard spending assessments per head for 1992-93 adjusted for changes in function which are consistent with those figures shown in the table placed in the Library in response to a question from the hon. Member for Blackburn (Mr. Straw), Official Report, 1 December 1992, column 155.

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list (a) those authorities which have made representations about his local government finance proposals for 1993-94 (i) in writing and (ii) by way of a delegation to Ministers, (b) a summary of the points made by each authority, (c) the duration of each meeting and (d) any ministerial responses to the representations, including any promised changes in relevant notional amounts.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 20 January 1993]: The tables list authorities which have made representations to myself and other Ministers in my Department on my proposals for the local government finance settlement generally and specifically on my proposals for relevant notional amounts.

I intend to present the settlement reports embodying my decisions to the House shortly. A summary of points made by each authority can only be prepared at disproportionate cost. Records are not made of the duration of meetings. As regards notional amounts, I refer the hon. Member to the answer my hon. Friend the Minister for Local Government and Inner Cities gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Welwyn Hatfield (Mr. Evans) on 12 November 1992, at columns 962-63.

Table A—local authorities in England from which representations were received on the proposed local government finance settlement for 1993-94 by the Secretary of State for the Environment in writing between 26 November 1992 and 18 January 1993 other than those specifically on the subject of notional amounts.

All Purpose Authority
Scilly Isles

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about the requirement of section 67(2) of the Local Government Finance Act 1992 for an authority to hold a full council meeting in order to calculate its tax base used in the section 33 calculation of the basic amount of council tax; how many authorities have been obliged to hold special council meetings for this purpose; and what plans he has to seek a change in the requirement.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 20 January 1993]: We have received several representations on this matter. We do not have information on each authority's arrangements for council meetings, which are matters for the authorities concerned. We have no plans to change the requirements for calculating tax bases.

Tower Blocks, Enfield

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what representations he has received from the London borough of Enfield following publication of the Building Research Establishment's report into unsafe tower blocks in Enfield;

(2) what conclusions he has drawn from the report from the Building Research Establishment into the safety standards of tower blocks in Enfield; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young [holding answer 19 January 1993]: The London borough of Enfield has discussed the Building Research Establishment's initial assessment of consultants' reports with my Department. BRE's current work for the borough follows our long-standing recommendations on the appraisal of high-rise blocks. Any eventual findings will be taken into account when considering the borough's housing investment programme.

Water Disconnections

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what statistics he has for the number of disconnections of water supplied to inhabited domestic premises for the year 1990-91 and subsequently; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 20 January 1993]: I refer the right hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Sheffield, Hillsborough (Mrs. Jackson) on 4 November 1992, at columns 234-35.

Waste Disposal

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the handling method for the proposed dumping of radioactive materials from RAF Sealand accords with the practice embodied in the licence for the tip at Arpley Meadows landfill site in Warrington; what precautions are being taken to prevent the radioactivity leaching into the River Mersey and the surrounding water table; and what measures will be taken to protect those people working at or near the site from possible contamination from radioactive materials.

Mr. Maclean: The draft approval document referred to the use of drums to contain this waste. However, at the request of Cheshire county council and the waste disposal contractor, the approval conditions will be amended to allow this waste to be deposited as a loose damp material. The Arpley Meadows site conditions will then be met.

This site has previously been authorised to receive radioactive waste from other organisations. The very low level of radioactivity present in this waste and the low water solubility of the radioactivity of this waste means that this method of disposal should not present any additional environmental problems. The loose material will be damped down before being deposited to minimise dust emissions from the tipping operation.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what surveys and hazard assessments have been carried out prior to the dumping at the Arpley Meadows landfill site in Warrington and what were their results; and on what grounds authorisation was granted for the dumping of radioactive waste at the site.

Mr. Maclean: The radioactivity and radiological effects of this waste have been assessed as part of the approval procedure. The results of these assessments are that the total radioactivity contained in this waste is less than 100 MBq which is less than the radioactivity contained in the average garden or given off by granite rocks in Cornwall.

Since the RAF, and therefore the Crown, is sending this material for disposal, approval and not authorisation is given for this disposal of waste. This approval has not yet been granted. The proposed grounds for approval are that the material will be deposited as a loose damp material, that the material will be buried at least 1·5 metres below the surface of the site, that the waste is landfilled at an area within the site specified by the site operator and that the waste is accompanied by a competent person during the transit from the premises to the waste disposal site and during the tipping operation.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total level of radioactivity in the material from RAF Sealand proposed to be dumped at the Arpley Meadows landfill site in Warrington; if he will require the radioactive material to be dumped in sealed containers; how regularly the area will be checked for radioactive leakage and for excessive levels of radioactivity; and what will be considered the maximum safe level of radioactivity at the dump.

Mr. David Maclean: The waste from RAF Sealand contains less than 100 MBq of radioactivity which is expected to be present in building rubble and overalls and will be contained in at most two covered skips. In the draft approval document, reference was made to the use of sealed metal containers. The disposal of such containers can cause problems due to delayed compaction within the waste disposal site and is therefore not now standard practice for the Arpley Meadows site. The waste disposal contractor and the county council have requested that drums should not be used. Considering the level of radioactivy present in this waste, approval for dumping damp loose material from skips was proposed.

It has been recommended that the monitoring of the leachate from this site be incorporated into the HMIP monitoring program for radioactive waste disposal sites. From the assessments which have been carried out, the site operator, the waste disposal contractor and HMIP consider that the proposed disposal of this material to this site is an acceptable and suitable disposal route and location.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the results of the tests on radioactivity at the Arpley Meadows landfill site after the dumping of radioactive material from RAF Sealand; and if he will allow the testing of radioactivity levels by independent bodies at the site after the dumping of radioactive materials.

Mr. David Maclean: The results of tests on radioactivity at the site will be given to the Environmental Planning Department of Cheshire county council. The results from the site monitoring will be made public if the site is incorporated into the HMIP monitoring program—radioactive substances. The decision about testing by other bodies rests with the site operator who controls access to the site.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Income Support

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what information his Department has on the duration of the different client groups drawing of supplementary benefit/income support beyond that published in "Social Security Statistics 1992".

Mr. Burt: "Social Security Statistics 1992"—SSS 1992—is based upon data from the May 1991 income support annual statistical enquiry—ASE—which is the most recent information available. Series 12 of the tables within the 1991 ASE give a more detailed analysis of durations of claims than that contained in SSS 1992. Copies of both publications are in the Library.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claimants and dependants dependent on supplementary benefit/income support there were in each year since 1989; and if he will break down this total of each of the main client groups and express these figures as a percentage of the total.

Mr. Burt: The information requested is in the table.

Water Charges

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) pursuant to his answer of 30 November 1992, Official Report, column 70, what plans he has to extend the system of direct payments to water companies by DSS offices for claimants;

(2) pursuant to his answer of 30 November 1992, Official Report, column 70, if he will list those DSS offices which currently do not make direct payments for benefit claimants to water companies; and if he will make a statement;

(3) pursuant to his answer of 30 November 1992, Official Report, column 70, if he will list those DSS offices which currently make direct payments for benefit claimants to water companies; and if he will make a statement;

(4) pursuant to his answer of 30 November 1992, Official Report, column 70, if he will list for each DSS regional office the number of people who meet the criteria in paragraph 7 of schedule 9 of the Claims and Payments Regulations 1987 and have direct payments made to the water companies by the DSS.

Mr. Burt: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to him on 14 December 1992 at column 72.

War Pensions

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give the total value of war pensions paid to war pensioners living within the boundary of the Barnsley metropolitan borough council, together with a breakdown of the number of pensioners receiving pensions at the various rates.

Miss Widdecombe: The information is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Benefits Agency (Correspondence)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the Benefits Agency replied to the letter of the hon. Member for Caernarfon, of 18 August 1992, addressed to him; what assessment he makes of the speed with which such letters are answered; and if he now makes it his practice to answer letters from hon. Members directly rather than referring them to the Benefits Agency.

Miss Widdecombe: The hon. Member wrote two letters on 18 August 1992 about the claims to disability living allowance—DLA—of his constituents. The chief executive of the Benefits Agency, Mr. Bichard, replied to one on 9 December 1992 and the other on 18 December 1992. The claims in both cases had been resolved in September 1992. While apologising for the delays in replying, Mr. Bichard explained that this was because of the high level of correspondence on DLA in recent months.

Ministers have agreed with Mr. Bichard an average response rate of 20 working days from receipt of Members' letters and the agency has taken steps to achieve this target as soon as possible. Ministers will continue to refer Members' letters on social security benefits relating to operational matters to the relevant chief executive to reply under the arrangements which apply to all executive agencies.

Benefit Reductions

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to alter the reduction in social security benefits resulting from failure to pay contributions or receive credits for periods of four weeks or less.

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 18 January 1993]: We have no plans to change the contribution conditions relating to the contributory social security benefits.

Civil Servants (Bicycles)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the current conditions on which civil servants in his Department are granted salary advances to enable the purchase of bicycles for home-to-office travel; if he will make a statement on the current conditions in each agency of his Department; what plans he has to change the conditions; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 18 January 1993]: Staff in junior grades in the Department, including its executive agencies, may apply for an advance of salary up to a limit of £100, repayable over 12 months, for the purchase of a bicycle for home to office travel. Advances are available to officers with at least two months service, other than casual employees, up to and including the executive officer grade or its equivalent.

The Department is currently considering how to take up the freedom, announced by my hon. Friend the Financial Security to the Treasury on 16 December 1992, at columns 285-86, to decide its own rules on the size of advance, eligibility and repayment.

Disability Benefits

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claims to date for the disability living allowance have been completed (a) with the assistance of telephone calls and (b) with the assistance of visits made by the forms completion service staff in the disability benefits centres.

Mr. Scott [pursuant to his reply, 27 October 1992, c. 751-52]: The chief executive has written further to the hon. Member.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Paul Flynn, dated 20 January 1993:

I wrote to you on 27 October in reply to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social security concerning the number of people claiming Disability Living Allowance (DLA) who had help completing their claim forms either with a telephone call or a visit from the Forms Completion Service staff of the Disability Benefit Centres.

I should explain that the figures provided include numbers for assistance given for DLA and Attendance Allowance. We are unable to provide the figure for DLA only as you requested.

Please accept my apologies for any confusion that this may have caused. A copy of this letter will appear in the Official Report. A copy is also being placed in the Library.

HEALTH

Hospital Beds

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information she has on how many NHS beds within all regional health authorities are funded by commercial sponsors, charitable and philanthropic organisations.

Mr. Sackville: The information requested is not collected centrally. Successive Governments have encouraged voluntary financial support for the national health service at local levels. This can include bed sponsorship arrangements, but is often provided in ways which cannot be directly related to beds. The sums involved are welcomed as an additional source of revenue for the NHS but nationally are small in comparison with central funding.

Drug Prescribing

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 17 December 1992, Official Report, column 412, what has been the annual increase, in percentage terms, of the cost of the indicative prescribing scheme for NHS doctors in 1991-92 compared with the previous year; and if she will give the figure in real terms, deflating by the price index for NHS medicines.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not available because the indicative prescribing scheme for general practitioners only came into effect in April 1991.

Overseas Adoption Helpline

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many inquiries have been received by the overseas adoption helpline since the statement of the Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Suffolk, South (Mr. Yeo), on Bosnian orphans in early January; and if she will make a statement;

(2) what is the current response time on the overseas adoptions helpline; and if she will make a statement;

(3) how many inquiries have been answered by the overseas adoption helpline since it was set up; and if she will make a statement;

(4) what representations she has received about the level of service from the overseas adoption helpline.

Mr. Yeo: The overseas adoption helpline began operating on 11 May 1992. It had received 1,500 telephone calls by 13 January 1993, 450 of which were received between 4 and 13 January. Callers are currently being advised that a response may take two weeks. I have received no written representations about the level of service except for the letter from my hon. Friend of the 13 January which has recently been received in my office.

Provider Units (Contracts)

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps have been taken by her Department to monitor the cessation of contracts with provider units from health authorities in England in the current financial year.

Dr. Mawhinney: The management of national health service contracts at local level is for district health authorities and provider units, with regional health authorities taking an overview.

Laparoscopic Surgery

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what records are centrally held on laparoscopic surgery which has not been properly executed.

Mr. Sackville: Data are not collected centrally. We have, however, allocated £42 million to the hospital and community health services this year for medical audit and this is being used to improve and assure high standards of patient care. Some of this money is being used to support the Royal College of Surgeon's confidential comparative audit services which includes a study of laparoscopic cholecystectomy.

Dentistry

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she expects to announce her conclusions on the Bloomfield review on the future system for the remuneration of dentists.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State gave my hon. Friend the Member for Ribble Valley (Mr. Nigel Evans) on 18 January at column 98.

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what estimate her Department has made of the total fixed capital in the hands of the dentists in Cornwall and of the return on that capital over the last five years;

(2) if she will publish the assumptions used by her Department when seeking to estimate the fixed costs of a dental practice in different parts of England.

Dr. Mawhinney: We have made no such estimates. Average national health service dental practice expenses in Great Britain are estimated each year by the Dental Rates Study Group and full reimbursement of these costs to dentists on an average basis is included in dental fees.

The return on capital is one of the factors that the Review Body on Doctors' and Dentists' Remuneration takes into account when recommending target average net income for dentists.

Cystitis

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) men and (b) women in England and Wales were recorded as having suffered from cystitis in 1992.

Dr. Mawhinney: The incidence of this condition is not routinely recorded centrally. In 1981-82 the third national morbidity survey showed that in England and Wales 8·5 men per thousand and 43·8 women per thousand received treatment for cystitis.

Mental Illness

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many mental illness hospitals in England and Wales are planned to be closed by 1997; and what will be the resulting loss of beds;

(2) how many mental illness hospitals in England and Wales are planned to be closed in 1993; and how many bed spaces will thereby be lost.

Mr. Yeo: The information is not held centrally. The provision of services for the mentally ill in Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many places were provided in the community for schizophrenic patients in 1991 and 1992; and how many will be provided in 1993.

Mr. Yeo: This information is not available centrally.

KPMG Management Consultants

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the contracts awarded by her Department to KPMG Management Consultants over the past 12 months.

Mr. Sackville: Five contracts have been awarded to KPMG Management Consultants by the Department in the past 12 months they are

1. Personal Social Services Information Strategy Unit Costs;
2. Market Testing Programme for Department of Health;
3. Decision Support System for Departmental London Office Accommodation Strategy;
4. Implementation of Community Care Act—independent sector involvement in community care planning;
5. Third Wave Hospital Trusts—financial assessment.

Romanian Adoption Committee

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) when the Romanian adoption committee is to close; and for what reason it is closing;

(2) what effect the closure of the Romanian adoption committee will have on the processes of the adoption of Romanian orphans by British couples.

Mr. Yeo: The Romanian Committee for Adoptions has informed officials that there are no moves to close the operations of the committee.

GP Fund Holders

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish the names of those general practices which have indicated interest in becoming a third or fourth wave fund-holding practice in the Bexley and Greenwich health authority area and the Dartford and Gravesham health authority area; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: The South East Thames regional health authority is responsible for the management of the general practitioner fund-holding scheme in these areas. My hon. Friend may wish to contact Mr. P. W. Barker, the RHA chairman, for details.

Mr. Enright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the general practices which are fund holding in the Hemsworth constituency.

Dr. Mawhinney: The management of the general practitioner fund-holding scheme in Hemsworth is the responsibility of the Yorkshire regional health authority. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman, Sir Bryan Askew, for details.

Community Social Care

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list those local authorities which bid successfully for funding to develop independent community social care initiatives, together with the initiatives proposed by each authority; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: The social services authorities invited to take part in this initiative, together with an outline of their proposals, are:

Barnsley
The build up of a new range of independent care provision with the aim of securing at least a 20 per cent. share of the home care market within three years.

Cambridgeshire
The appointment of two Home Care Development Managers to help new providers assess the market and to test out new ideas.

Camden
Setting up an Independent Sector Development Team to develop a mixed economy of domiciliary care.

Devon
The establishment of Rural Outreach Projects to provide new services for younger people with physical or sensory disabilities who live in rural areas.

Essex
The build up of new services for older people from a range of existing bases in a rural area (the "Dengie project").

Gloucestershire
The appointment of a Development Officer to work with independent providers to establish new services for older people and for those with learning disabilities.

Hammersmith and Fulham
The development of a commercially sound community care agency to create, and deliver, a portfolio of services for black elders and their carers.

Lewisham
A joint project with Lewisham College to introduce a course in domiciliary care and enterprise skills for those who want to establish themselves as small local community care businesses.

Liverpool
The development of secure links with the independent sector, and to oversee a range of new ideas for older people and those with learning disabilities.

Newham
The development of new community care services for ethnic minority communities.

North Yorkshire
The development of local non-residential care to complement the expected reduction in demand for residential and nursing home care.

Richmond upon Thames
The appointment of an independent Organisations Coordinator to develop opportunities for, and a range of, home and respite care.

Rochdale
The appointment of a Development Officer, to be based with local Age Concern, to establish a new 24 hour help service, based on a network of existing private care homes, for older persons who are mentally ill.

Sandwell
The development of practical support services in inner city areas for those with dementia and for black elders without live-in carers.

Shropshire
The establishment of a Social Care Enterprise Agency to help the independent sector develop to the point where it can provide the range and quality of services which statutory authorities need to purchase.

The response to this initiative was encouraging—more than 100 bids—which shows the importance authorities rightly attach to developing the range of day and domiciliary services available locally.

Nicotine Patches

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will review the procedures for licensing tobacco substitute patches and other products to prevent them from being sold prior to the licence being granted; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: I am satisfied with the licensing arrangements in place for the licensing of medicinal products. Any unlicensed product on sale, which is brought to the attention of the Medicines Control Agency as making medicinal claims, will be investigated by its enforcement unit.

Juveniles (Secure Units)

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the average weekly cost of a juvenile stay (a) in care and (b) in a secure unit in 1992; and how the figure is calculated.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many secure places in children's homes are provided by each local authority.

Mr. Yeo: Information about the cost per week for children in care in England is set out in the table for the two main categories of placement.

The average cost is derived from the revenue expenditure 1990-91 divided by the average of the numbers of children in care at 31 March 1990 and 1991 under each accommodation heading.

Information about the costs for children accommodated in secure units in the form requested is not collected centrally.

Expenditure by local authorities in England on care 1990-91

Accommodation	Average cost per child per week £
Foster placements	102
Community homes	536

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the Government's policy for providing secure accommodation for persistent juvenile offenders.

Mr. Jack: I have been asked to reply.

The Government are currently looking urgently at the adequacy of arrangements for dealing with a small minority of juvenile offenders who appear to be responsible for a disproportionate amount of recorded crime attributed to their age group. This review includes consideration of the need both for new powers for the courts and for new secure facilities.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Bananas

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) whether it will be permissible under the proposed banana regime for retailers to import bananas directly;

(2) to what extent the position of the independent distributor has been safeguarded in the proposed banana regime.

Mr. Curry: The Agriculture Council has agreed the main provisions of a common regime to govern banana imports. Further provisions, including the precise basis for the distribution of licences where these will be required, have yet to be determined.

Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowance

Mr. Hague: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when claim forms for hill livestock compensatory allowance payments will be made available to farmers in north Yorkshire.

Mr. Curry: Claim forms and explanatory notes for the 1993 hill livestock compensatory allowances scheme are currently being sent to farmers in north Yorkshire who applied under the 1992 scheme.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what were the (a) actual and (b) real values of hill livestock compensatory amounts in each year since 1981.

Mr. Curry: This information is contained in tables 16 and 17 of the statistical data prepared for the 1992 "Autumn Review of the Economic Conditions in the Hills and Uplands" a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Wool

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the level of guaranteed price per kilo of wool in each of the last five years and the assessed level of guaranteed price per kilo of wool in each of the last five years and the assessed level of guaranteed price in the financial year 1992-93.

Mr. Curry: The wool guarantee price for the 1992 and five previous clip years was:

Year	Price p/kg
1992	117
1991	120
1990	125
1989	129
1988	129
1987	129

Agricultural Training Board

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the future of the Agricultural Training Board.

Mr. Curry: The recent industry consultation on the future status and operation of the Agricultural Training Board produced no firm consensus in favour of either the new proposals or for retaining the status quo. Agriculture Ministers are considering, in consultation with the board, the best way to proceed taking into account the needs of the industry and the funding available. My right hon. Friend expects to make a statement during February.

Set-aside Land

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what consideration has been given by his Department to the possibility of using set-aside land for the purposes of producing vegetable-based biodiesel.

Mr. Curry: Oilseeds may be grown for biodiesel production both on arable land, with the benefit of the oilseed area payment and, where growers can contract to supply a processor, on set-aside land with the benefit of the lower set-aside payment.

Agricultural Returns

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 23 November 1992, Official Report, column 531, if he will allow farmers to submit information to his Department in acres rather than hectares.

Mr. Curry: Most forms and returns submitted to this Department require the use of hectares. However, on certain returns, such as the agricultural and horticultural census return, information can be submitted in acres rather than hectares. This option is shown on the form or return concerned or in the explanatory note associated with it. Hectares are, however, gradually replacing acres as the only acceptable measurement on most such returns and there are no plans to reintroduce the use of acres for these purposes.

Fishing Vessels

Mr. Alnger: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his best estimate of the number of fishing vessels daily fishing in the International Council for the Exploration of the Seas areas VIIa, VIIg and VIIf.

Mr. Curry: Surveillance aircraft record all fishing vessels seen in the area patrolled. Those records relate to all fishing vessels, of whatever nationality, spotted by the aircraft within British sea fisheries limits at the time of the patrol. The records do not necessarily include very small fishing boats working close inshore.

The following shows the number of fishing vessels recorded in the areas listed on one day in each month during 1992:

Month	VIIa	VIIf and g
January	206	30
February	61	37
March	101	44
April	88	76
May	95	47
June	103	61
July	128	54
August	93	66
September	104	43
October	125	48
November	52	41
December	91	49

There are many factors which will affect the numbers of vessels fishing on any particular day. Such factors include availability of fish, weather and the seasonality of fisheries.

Public Access

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many public access agreements have been concluded in England in each of the last three years in respect of Forestry Commission holdings sold to the private sector; and what percentage of total sales these figures represent.

Mr. Curry [holding answer 18 January 1993]: The arrangements for securing continued public access to woodlands sold by the Forestry Commission were introduced in October 1991. Seven of the woodland areas considered under these arrangements have been sold so far, of which one was subject to an access agreement. This represents 14 per cent. of the sales concerned.

NORTHERN IRELAND

United States Government (Discussions)

13. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what discussions he has had about Northern Ireland with members of the incoming Clinton Administration.

17. Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what discussions he has planned with representatives of President Clinton regarding the United States policy on Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: There have been no such meetings yet, but I hope to meet members of the new Administration in the coming months.

Housing (Grant Application Form)

14. Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what examination has been given to the grant application form of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive.

Mr. Atkins: The design of the forms required for the renovation grants scheme is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive which is responsible for the day-to-day administration of the scheme.

However, I understand from the chief executive that the initial grant application form, known as a preliminary inquiry form, has recently been redesigned as a feature of the new grants scheme introduced to Northern Ireland on 1 October 1992 under the Housing (Northern Ireland) Order 1992.

Civil Liberties

16. Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations on civil liberties he has received from international human rights organisations; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: I have received a number of representations from organisations with an interest in human rights, including Amnesty International and Human Rights Watch. I am, of course, wholly committed to the protection of civil liberties throughout the community in Northern Ireland, where they have been inexcusably denied to so many people by the action of terrorists.

Security

18. Mr. Molyneaux: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the security situation in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Mates: I refer the right hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Bolton, North-East (Mr. Thurnham).

Unemployment

19. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the current level of unemployment in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Atkins: At 17 December 1992, the latest date for which figures are available, there were 105,420 unemployed claimants in Northern Ireland, representing 14·4 per cent. of the work force.

Investment (Londonderry)

20. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what measures are being taken to attract investment in Londonderry.

Mr. Atkins: The attraction of inward investment to high unemployment areas, including Londonderry, is a priority task for the Industrial Development Board for Northern Ireland, which, through its offices at home and overseas, ensures that the many advantages which such areas offer are brought to the attention of potential investors. The IDB is grateful for the valuable support it receives from local business men and other community leaders. The success of this partnership was evident in the announcement last month by Seagate Technology that it intends to establish a high-tech project which will create 500 new jobs in Londonderry. This very welcome news follows recent announcements of investment by other major international companies which will create in excess of 450 more jobs.

Londonderry

21. Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what measures are being taken to regenerate the Londonderry economy.

Mr. Atkins: The Londonderry area benefits from the many measures currently being undertaken by Government to promote economic development throughout Northern Ireland. The Department of the Environment's Londonderry development officer provides a clear focus for all forms of regeneration in the area, including the Londonderry initiative. Furthermore, both the Industrial Development Board and the Local Enterprise Development Unit have Londonderry regional offices. The IDB has been successful in attracting 955 new jobs and £48 million in new investment to the area in 1992.

Bangor Hospital

22. Sir James Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to give the people of Bangor and surrounding areas the right to decide the future of Bangor hospital.

Mr. Hanley: Responsibility for the management of services at Bangor hospital rests with the Eastern health and social services board. In June 1992 the Eastern board issued for consultation a paper entitled "Framework for General (Acute) Hospital Services within the Eastern Board Area". Comments and representations were invited from a broad range of interested groups and individuals including local MPs, district councils and health and social services councils. Since the consultation period ended on 30 September the board has been considering all the responses it has received, including those representative of the views of the people of Bangor. The board will issue a "Statement of Purchasing Intent", taking account of all the views and comments expressed, in the very near future.

Irish Republic (Discussions)

23. Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to meet representatives of the Government of the Irish Republic in the near future in order to discuss matters relating to the current economic, social and political circumstances of Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

25. Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he has any plans to meet the Irish Prime Minister to discuss co-operation between the United Kingdom and the Irish Republic.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: I refer the hon. Members to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Falkirk, West (Mr. Canavan) earlier today.

Electricity Interconnector

24. Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what discussions he has had regarding the electricity interconnector between Scotland and Northern Ireland.

Mr. Atkins: Apart from my discussions with the hon. Member on 13 October, I have had discussions with Commissioner Millan and the chairman and board of NIE plc. In my discussions I stressed the strategic importance of securing European Community grant assistance.

School Meals

26. Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment has been made of the administrative costs for the school meals programme.

Mr. Hanley: The administrative costs of the school meals service are included in the headquarters costs of education and library boards and are subject to annual assessment and review by the boards.

Northern Ireland Electricity plc

27. Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the flotation of Northern Ireland Electricity plc.

Mr. Atkins: The Government are committed to the floatation of NIE plc at the earliest suitable opportunity.

Inward Investment

Mr. Bates: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what efforts are being made to promote investment from abroad; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Gravesham (Mr. Arnold) earlier today.

Disabled People

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what consideration has been given to the provision of financial support for disabled people below pensionable age in Northern Ireland so that they may benefit from the alarm call system provided for elderly disabled people.

Mr. Hanley: Where help with an alarm call system is not available from any other source, a non-repayable community care grant from the social fund may be made available to disabled and other vulnerable people receiving income support. Each case is decided on its merits by a social fund officer.

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many 24-hour alarm call systems have been provided by health boards to disabled people below pensionable age in Northern Ireland; how many are planned for provision in the future; and what assessment has been made of how many such people might benefit from such a system.

Mr. Hanley: The total number of emergency alarm systems currently provided by health and social services boards to disabled people under pensionable age is 77. The number of people who might benefit from such a system and the number of alarms to be provided in the future will depend on assessments of the needs of individual disabled persons by health and social services boards.

Travellers

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether the extension of the Race Relations Act to Northern Ireland will cover Ireland's travelling people.

Mr. Hanley: On 16 December 1992 my right hon. and learned Friend published a consultative document which seeks views on the scope for legislation on racial discrimination and on any additional action which the Government might take to further promote equity of treatment for ethnic groups. The document also seeks views on whether the traditional Irish travelling community should be recognised as an ethnic group and specifically covered by any proposed race legislation for Northern Ireland.

School Examinations

Mr. Stott: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps he proposes to take to ensure that pupils in Northern Ireland are able to enjoy the same choice of public examination syllabuses as is available to pupils in England and Wales.

Mr. Hanley: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for South Down (Mr. McGrady) on 15 December 1992, at column 165.

Further Education

Mr. Stott: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps he intends to take to ensure that the Southern Education and Library Board complies with the recommendations of the Fair Employment Commission regarding recruitment practices for lecturers in institutions of further education.

Mr. Hanley: The board has reaffirmed its support for the principles and practices of fair employment and intends to review its procedures in relation to the recruitment of temporary and part-time staff in its further education colleges. It is expected that the board will soon reach agreement with the Fair Employment Commission on the terms of a voluntary written undertaking to this effect.

Railways

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the condition of Northern Ireland's rail system; and what proposals he has for privatisation.

Mr. Atkins: Responsibility for the maintenance of railways in Northern Ireland rests with Northern Ireland Railways. I am advised by the managing director that, arising from several recent studies, the company has undertaken a complete review of the railway system including the permanent way, signalling and level crossings; bridge works; rolling stock and maintenance facilities; and stations and passenger amenities. Substantial improvements will flow from the two major capital projects which are currently under way, namely the upgrading of the Belfast/Dublin rail link and the construction of the cross-harbour rail bridge in Belfast. The latter includes provision for new depot maintenance facilities. A programme to upgrade 22 level crossings on the Londonderry line is already well advanced and the company has comprehensive plans to upgrade the remainder of the rail system by the late 1990s. This will include replacement of rolling stock for use on short-haul services within Northern Ireland. Facilities for passengers at stations will also be improved to meet the company's obligations under its passengers charter launched in November 1992.

In accordance with the commitment in the citizens charter for Northern Ireland, the Government commissioned a study into the scope for introducing a private element into the management and operation of Northern Ireland Railways. The report has been received and is under consideration.

Fair Employment

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many cases have been brought against (a) local authorities and (b) other public bodies, alleging religious and political discrimination, since the establishment of the Fair Employment Tribunal, indicating the local authority and public body concerned, the nature of the allegation and the tribunal's decision.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 15 January 1993]: Since the establishment of the Fair Employment Tribunal until 31 December 1992, 52 cases have been brought against local authorities and 237 cases against other specified public authorities. The details, in chronological order of registration, are as follows:

SCOTLAND

NHS Trusts

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish guidelines on how hon. Members should deal with constituency inquiries and complaints relating to a hospital trust; what changes he envisages from the arrangements prior to such hospitals becoming trusts; what rights of appeal are open to hon. Members who are dissatisfied with the initial responses; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: It remains the responsibility of health boards to determine the health needs of those in their area, to secure services to meet those needs and to monitor the services provided. Inquiries on these issues should be raised with the health board concerned. Issues about specific services being provided by a trust should be raised with the chairman of the trust. While my right hon. Friend will continue to exercise close scrutiny of the NHS in Scotland through the management executive, we are confident that chairmen of both health boards and trusts will endeavour to be as helpful as possible to hon. Members with whom, I am sure, they will want to foster good relations. I hope this will be reciprocated.

Legal Aid and Advice

Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the average legal aid cost of a Court of Session proof day.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is not available in the form requested. In 1991-92 the average legal aid cost of a case in the Court of Session was £2,834.

Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Ayr (Mr. Gallie) on 16 November 1992, Official Report, column 780, what proportion of the population of Scotland he estimates will be eligible for legal aid from April;

(2) pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Ayr (Mr. Gallie) on 16 November 1992, Official Report, column 780, what proportion of the population of Scotland he estimates will be eligible for legal advice and assistance from April;

(3) what proportion of the population of Scotland is currently eligible for legal advice and assistance;

(4) what proportion of the population of Scotland is currently eligible for legal aid.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Given the variations over time in individual's circumstances it is not possible to estimate with any precision the proportion of the adult population eligible for legal aid.

Analysis of data from the family expenditure survey suggests that in Scotland the percentage of households which would be eligible for civil legal aid under the proposed changes to eligibility criteria would be in the range of 45 to 55 per cent. with between 20 to 30 per cent. free of contribution. Similar figures would apply to advice and assistance. This represents a reduction of between 5 and 10 per cent. of the households currently eligible in financial terms.

Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what amount he expects to be saved from the current legal advice and assistance budget, as a result of the proposed changes to the legal advice and assistance system in each of the next five financial years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The purpose of the proposed changes announced on 16 November is to ensure the continuation of reasonable access to legal aid for the most needy, while at the same time taking action to control the rate of growth in legal aid expenditure. The proposed changes are expected to reduce forecast expenditure on the legal advice and assistance system by around £3 million and £4 million in 1993-94 rising to around £5 million in 1997-98. Total expenditure on legal aid will, however, continue to increase and in financial year 1995-96 it is expected to be 40 per cent. higher than the planned expenditure for the current year.

MV Braer

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has finalised the arrangements for the bridging fund to assist local businesses in Shetland affected by the recent incident involving the MV Braer.

Mr. Lang: I am pleased to announce that agreement has been reached on the operation of the bridging fund which I announced in my statement to the House on 11 January.

The bridging fund is designed to help in particular the farming, fishing and fish-farming industries in Shetland, and prevent economic hardship to primary producers facing temporary cash-flow difficulties pending the settlement of compensation claims. It is of course without prejudice to the Government's view that the polluter must pay.

After consultation with Shetland Islands council, the shipowner's insurers—the P and I Club—and the International Oil Pollution Compensation Fund—IOPC fund—it has been agreed that requests for advances from the bridging fund should be made through the "single door" of the Braer claims office in Lerwick. Claims from businesses which qualify under this scheme and which are, in the view of the club and the IOPC fund, likely to receive compensation in due course will be passed to the islands council, which will make the payment from the bridging fund. The Scottish Office will now pay an initial grant of £1 million to the council to enable it to start meeting claims. Further payments to the council will be made as claims arise. In due course, when each compensation claim is settled, the amount of the advance will be paid back to the bridging fund.

I currently intend that payments will be available until 31 March 1994, but this date may be varied, in particular if there is a continuing need for the scheme, or if it becomes clear that the flow of compensation settlements is sufficient to meet continuing needs.

I am glad that the Government have been able to take steps to prevent the people of Shetland from suffering economic hardship at this very difficult time for them, and I am grateful for the co-operation of the council, the shipowner's insurers and the International Oil Pollution Compensation Fund in putting together these arrangements so quickly.

Royal Scottish Academy

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what plans he has to review the 1910 agreements whereby the Royal Scottish Academy uses the Royal Scottish Heritage Building for its diploma show;

(2) what representations he has had about better value for money in relation to funds disbursed by the Scottish Office to the Royal Scottish Academy, in relation to the building on the Mound;

(3) whether he will make arrangements for experts from the Scottish Office to examine and assess the state of the roof of the Royal Scottish Academy and the state of the fabric of the building;

(4) whether he permits the use of Government indemnity for exhibits within the Royal Scottish Academy; and what assessment he has made of the security and environmental controls for pictures for which Her Majesty's Government are responsible, displayed in the Royal Scottish Academy;

(5) how much public money from his vote went to the Royal Scottish Academy in 1989, 1990, 1991 and 1992.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 11 January 1993]: No Scottish Office funds are paid direct to the Royal Scottish Academy. Responsibility for the management of the building rests, under the provisions of the National Galleries of Scotland Act 1906, with the trustees of the national galleries of Scotland who receive grant-in-aid from the Scottish Office to carry out their functions. Details of expenditure on individual buildings have been recorded only since the financial year 1990-91 since when the following sums have been spent by the national galleries of Scotland specifically on the Royal Scottish Academy building:

1990-91	66,091
1991-92	153,194
[1]1992-93	45,131

[1]to date

This expenditure has covered the costs of minor maintenance works; rates, heating and lighting and other running costs; and works related to exhibitions.

My right hon. Friend has acknowledged for some time that the fabric of the building is in need of repair. Once the future shared use of the building has been clarified in the light of arrangements laid down in the National Galleries of Scotland (Appropriation of Buildings) Order 1910 and he has received firm proposals from the national galleries of Scotland on the exact nature of the works required, he will consider what resources can be provided and on what timescale. We would expect the national galleries of Scotland to base proposals for building works on a thorough examination of the building by appropriate professional advisers.

The Government indemnity scheme enables the Government to underwrite the risk of loss of, or damage to, art objects loaned for the public benefit. Under section 16 of the National Heritage Act 1980, an indemnity is given only where appropriate arrangements are made for the safety of the object while it is on loan. These considerations would apply in the case of any painting to be exhibited in the Royal Scottish Academy for which an indemnity was sought.

Defective Housing

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list houses and house types situated in the Burnfoot housing scheme in Hawick supplied to his Department by Roxburgh district council in March 1984 which had been identified by the local authority as being eligible for assistance under the Housing Defects Act 1984.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 18 January 1993]: In 1983 district and islands councils were asked by the Scottish Office to give details of the number of houses in their ownership belonging to types later designated as defective. They were not asked for the location of such houses within their districts. Roxburgh district council said that it owned 21 houses of the single-storey Orlit type, 50 Whitson-Fairhursts and 119 Crudens.

The owners of such houses would be eligible for assistance under the housing defects legislation only if they were bought before 26 April 1984 or, in certain circumstances, in the 12 months thereafter.

Angus Hospitals

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, what consultations he, his colleagues or Scottish Office officials have had with Tayside health board on the future of (a) Stracathro hospital, (b) Arbroath infirmary and (c) other hospital services in Angus.

Mr. Stewart: [holding answer 17 December 1992]: Representatives of Tayside health board have met Scottish Office officials in order to discuss the board's local health strategy. As a matter of course during these discussions, the future of acute services in Tayside were talked about. However, it will only be when the board has the results of its review and public consultation that detailed discussion on individual hospitals will take place.

EMPLOYMENT

Euroform Programme

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will list details of (a) how many bids her Department has received for funding from the Euroform programme, (b) how many of these bids have been accepted, (c) how many have been refused, (d) the total value of the bids that have been refused and (e) the total value of funding allocated to the United Kingdom from the Euroform programme.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Employment Department has received 328 bids under the first two rounds of applications for the Euroform programme. Of these, 156 projects have been approved, while 172 projects were refused. The approximate cost of unsuccessful applications was £4·6 million.

A further 211 bids have been received as a result of a third call for applications following the allocation funds by the European Commission.

The Department has responsibility for Great Britain only, for which the total value of funding allocated under Euroform is £25·5 million. Northern Ireland has a separate allocation of funds.

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what criteria her Department uses when assessing bids for funding from the Euroform programme.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Under Euroform, projects are selected by a partnership committee comprising representatives from the sectors which apply for funding, the European Commission and the Employment Department.

Taking account of the priorities identified in the operational programme, the committee agreed a list of 10 key areas against which to score individual projects. These were:

(i) the depth and quality of the transnational partnership(s);
(ii) the contribution to be made by the project to less-developed regions;
(iii) the innovatory nature of the project;
(iv) whether the project would provide value for money;
(v) the qualifications which would be developed and acquired;
(vi) the relevance of the project to the needs of the labour market and whether the project would facilitate geographical and occupational mobility;
(vii) whether systems were in place for the administration and management of the project;
(viii) that the project could not have taken place without assistance from Euroform and that the outcomes could be developed for subsequent use in other contexts;
(ix) whether the project built on links with other European Community programmes;
(x) whether the project was clearly targeted had clearly stated and quantifiable objectives.

Defence Employment, Hampshire

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people were employed in the defence industries in Hampshire in each year since 1987.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 20 January 1993]: Defence industries are not identifiable from the standard industrial classification used to compile employment statistics.

Training Schemes, Hampshire

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people were taking part in Government-sponsored training schemes in Hampshire in each year since 1987; and if she will express these figures as a proportion of the total number of people registered as unemployed in Hampshire in each of those years.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 20 January 1993]: The information requested is not available. Detailed historical information about numbers on Government-sponsored training schemes is not held centrally. People on Government training schemes are not included in the monthly unemployment figures.

DEFENCE

Northern Ireland

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many British troops are currently stationed in Northern Ireland; and how many of these are currently serving in other countries.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There are currently some 19,000 service men deployed in Northern Ireland. None of them is serving in other countries.

Fuel Cores

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the used fuel core currently stored at the naval reactor test establishment Dounreay was removed from the reactor; when it is planned to transport the used core to Sellafield; and by what means.

Mr. Aitken: The used fuel core at the naval reactor test establishment, Dounreay, comprises elements removed from three different naval reactors between 1984 and 1987. The material has been analysed as part of the continuing programme of used naval fuel post-irradiation examination. The core will be removed to Sellafield when a suitably licensed mode of transport is available.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence where and how a used fuel core is currently stored within the naval reactor test establishment Dounreay.

Mr. Aitken: The used fuel core is held safely in a dedicated core pond within the establishment.

Search and Rescue

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the number and location of military incidents requiring search-and-rescue helicopter response in the area defined by longitudes 7° W and 3° W and latitudes 50° 25°V N and 53° N, together with the name of the military establishments which responded to each incident, since 1987.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The table gives the number of military incidents requiring search and rescue helicopter response, together with the name of the military establishment which responded, in the area defined for the period in question:

	1987	1988	1989	1990	1991	1992	Total
Brawdy	17	13	5	9	7	6	57

Total	43	30	24	21	26	21	165

Other Royal Navy = Royal Navy helicoptor from HM Vessel.
Other = Shannon Coastguard helicopter.

Information on the location of each of the incidents could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Proof and Experimental Establishments

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many of his Department's employees and permanent contractors currently work at Eskmeals, Shoeburyness and Pendine proof and experimental establishments.

Mr. Aitken: The figures for Ministry of Defence employees at the beginning of the year were as follows:

	Service	Civilian
Eskmeals	12	66
Shoeburyness	24	92
Pendine	12	56

The numbers employed by the contractors at these establishments are a matter for them.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the expenditure by his Department at each of the proof and experimental establishments at Eskmeals, Shoeburyness and Pendine in 1990-91, 1991-92 and projected for 1992-93.

Mr. Aitken: It is not possible to produce figures on a directly comparable basis for the three years in question because of changes in the Department's accounting practice.

Subject to this proviso, the details are as follows:

			£ million
	1990-91	1991-92	1992-93
Eskmeals	3·2	5·5	6·6
Shoeburyness	8·1	11·7	14·0
Pendine	3·6	4·8	7·3

Sea Survival

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the average sea surface temperature in each of the 12 months of the year in sea areas Lundy, Fastnet and Irish sea; and what is the estimated survival time of a normally clothed person immersed in water at each of those temperatures.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The readily available information is set out in the table:

Month	Temperature (C)	Survival time (hours)
Winter (February)	8-9	2·5
Spring (May)	9-11	3·5
Summer (August)	14-16	In excess of 5
Autumn (November)	9-12	3

Job Losses

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the number of his Department's jobs lost as the result of closure or cut at his Department's bases and establishments in each of the counties of England and Wales and regional authorities in Scotland in 1990-91, 1991-92 and projected for 1992-93, 1993-94, 1994-95 and 1995-96 based on announcements made to date.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The number of Ministry of Defence United Kingdom-based civilians has reduced from 141,372 in April 1990 to 137,793 as at 1 December 1992; a reduction of 3,579 posts. Since the introduction of the new management strategy we no longer hold manpower details by establishments centrally. To produce a full listing to show every post would involve disproportionate cost and effort. Major changes—involving over 50 posts—announced to date, excluding the Defence Research Agency, include those listed. Numbers given for civilian post losses/gains do not mean that all those concerned will be made redundant as alternative defence uses may be found in the case of partial or full closure of units.

Trident

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the latest estimate of the cost of the Trident programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: The current estimate of the total project cost of the Trident programme is £10,676 million, if all expenditure, including payments already made, is brought up to current prices and a common exchange rate of £1=$1·74, as assumed in the long-term costing of the defence programme. If payments already made are expressed at the prices and exchange rates actually incurred, the equivalent estimate is now £9,596 million. Expenditure on the Trident programme to 31 August 1992 represented some 60 per cent. of the overall estimate.

The revised estimate of £10,676 million represents a small real cost reduction of £18 million compared to that announced last year, after allowing for the effects of inflation and exchange rate variations. The increase in cash terms is £158 million. The reduction in real terms since the original 1982 Trident II estimate, including the savings resulting from the decision to have United Kingdom missiles processed in the United States facility at Kings bay, Georgia, now stands at some £2·8 billion.

The proportion of the programme to be undertaken in the United Kingdom has increased from 72 per cent. to 74 per cent.

The Select Committee on Defence previously asked that when announcing the annual revised estimate, I should report on the state of the project as a whole. I am pleased to say that the Trident programme remains on schedule to enter service in the mid-1990s. There has been no slippage in the in-service date since the decision to purchase Trident II was announced in March 1982. I am, as in previous years, sending to the Chairmen of the Public Accounts Committee and of the Select Committee on Defence a more detailed report covering the points on which the Select Committee on Defence sought advice. I am also placing a copy of this report in the Library of the House.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prison Service

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 12 January, Official Report, column 693, what are the criteria on which the performance of the chief executive of the prison service agency will be assessed for eligibility for the performance bonus.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: For the period up to 31 March 1993 the performance of the director general will be assessed wholly on a qualitative basis. Thereafter, when the agency comes into being, his performance will be assessed on the basis of both qualitative and quantitative measures, the nature and balance of which are still to be settled.

Uniformed Police Officers

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many uniformed police officers were employed by each police authority in Wales for each year since 1979.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information requested is set out in the table:

Sunday Trading

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to include the recent proposals of high street retailers in his consultations on the reform of Sunday trading laws; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My right hon. and learned Friend is referring to the proposals for reform which have been drawn up by Marks and Spencer plc and other leading high street retailers. I met representatives of the traders on 3 November 1992 to discuss the proposals. At this stage we have no plans to include the model as one of the options to be put before the House.

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent representations he has received from high street retailers on the reform of Sunday trading legislation.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Since 20 October 1992, we have received 83 written representations from retailers on this issue.

Unlicensed Drivers

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people over the age of 17 years have been caught driving without having passed a recognised driving test within each police authority area during each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Jack: The following table sets out the number of prosecutions for offences of "driving without licence or causing or permitting to drive without licence" and "provisional licence holders not accompanied by qualified person" committed by persons 17 years old and above in each police force area in England and Wales for each of the years 1987 to 1991. Similar information for earlier years is not readily available.

Ainsty Lodge, Wetherby

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many convictions for (a) burglary, (b) assault, (c) offences against property, (d) taking vehicles without the owner's consent, (e) driving without a licence and (f) dangerous driving have been recorded in each of the last five years against residents of Ainsty Lodge, Wetherby;

(2) in respect of how many offences residents of Ainsty Lodge, Wetherby have been (a) charged and (b) convicted in each of the last five years;

(3) what proportion of crimes suspected to have been committed in England by juveniles in each of the last five years are suspected to have been committed by persons in the care of local authorities;

(4) how many offences residents of Ainsty Lodge in Leeds have committed while on bail in each of the last five years.

Mr. Jack: The information requested is not collected.

Criminal Justice System (Costs)

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for what reason it was decided to provide each member of every justices' bench in England and Wales with a copy of the relevant volume of his Department's analysis of the costs of the criminal justice system, 1992; and what were the costs of this exercise including the cost of multi-colour printing.

Mr. Jack: Section 95 of the Criminal Justice Act 1991 requires the Home Secretary to publish information annually to assist those engaged in the administration of criminal justice to become aware of the financial implications of their decisions. It was decided to provide magistrates with individual volumes to ensure that they had personal access to this important information.

The total cost of printing, producing and distributing the volumes was £124,290, or £2·54 per copy.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list, by county, in England and Wales the number of confirmed cases of BSE for the month of December 1992.

Mr. Soames: The information requested is available in the Library of the House.

Farmers (Medicines)

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what guidelines are used by his Ministry when determining whether a vet can sell medicine to a farmer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: The Medicines Act 1968 and its subordinate legislation sets the legal framework for the sale of and supply of medicines. This provides for a veterinary surgeon to prescribe medicines for use on animals under his or her care. Within those requirements, decisions on whether to sell medicines to farmers are a matter for the judgment of the individual veterinary surgeon.

BST Products

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what advice he has received from the Medicines Commission concerning BST products.

Mr. Gummer: The Medicines Commission has advised me that the BST products manufactured by the companies, Lilly Industries Ltd. and Monsanto SA/NV, meet the medicines licensing criteria of safety, quality and efficacy. I have told the companies that the United Kingdom position in forthcoming Committee on Veterinary Medicinal Products discussions will reflect this advice. However, no product licences under the Medicines Act may be issued so long as the licensing moratorium agreed by the European Community's Council of Ministers remains in force.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mr. Jopling: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the progress to establish new environmentally sensitive areas; and what management commitments and financial remuneration he is proposing.

Mr. Gummer: Pursuant to the answer given on 2 December 1992 at columns 224-25, I am today laying before both Houses of Parliament the six designation orders providing for the introduction of six new environmentally sensitive areas (ESAs) in England. These new ESAs are:

Avon Valley;
Exmoor;
Lake District;
North Kent Marshes;
South Wessex Downs; and South West Peak.

Information packs giving details of the areas covered, scheme conditions and payment rates are being placed in the Libraries.

I am delighted to be able to introduce these new ESAs which will add some 426,000 hectares to the 387,000 hectares currently within ESAs in England. The new areas contain some of our most beautiful countryside and important wildlife areas. I am confident that like the existing schemes, they will play a significant part in the conservation and enhancement of landscapes, special habitats and features of historic interest.

Details of the new schemes are being sent to farmers in each area and applications to join them should be lodged with the Ministry's regional service centres before 31 March.

I will shortly be issuing for consultation our proposals for the introduction of a further six new ESAs which we plan to launch next winter. I will also be announcing the conclusions of my review of the existing schemes in the Breckland, Clun, North Peak, Suffolk river valleys and the Test valley.

Fallen Stock

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many farmers in Wales have developed small-scale incinerators and waste disposal units to deal with fallen stock in each year since 1990; and what financial assistance was granted by his Department for such schemes in each year.

Mr. David Hunt: I have been asked to reply.

My Department does not provide financial assistance for the provision of incinerators and waste disposal units. No information as to the numbers of such facilities is held centrally.

EDUCATION

Class Sizes

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will outline the maximum numbers of pupils per classroom laid down by his Department in accordance with best practice policy in (a) infant schools, (b) primary schools and (c) secondary schools, in England and Wales.

Mr. Forth: The Department does not issue guidance on the maximum number of pupils per classroom. The Education (School Premises) Regulations 1981 prescribe the overall minimum teaching areas to be provided for maintained and grant-maintained schools in England and Wales. These areas are based on the total number of registered pupils at the school and their age range. The apportionment of teaching space within the overall area available is a matter for local determination.

National Union of Students

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what changes he proposes to make to the status of the National Union of Students; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Boswell: In the light of the Department's consultations on student unionism, my right hon. Friend is considering proposals for reform, which he plans to announce in the near future.

Schools Capacity

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will outline the criteria by which his Department currently calculates the total pupil capacity in (a) primary and (b) secondary schools in England.

Mr. Forth: Our recent survey of the capacity of primary and secondary schools was calculated on the basis of two different measures: for primary schools capacity was calculated (a) using the more open enrolment (MOE) formula set out in annex D of the Department's circular 6/91, and (b) by multiplying the standard admission number of the school by the number of year groups. For secondary schools the capacity was calculated (a) by using the more open enrolement (MOE) formula set out in annex A of the Department's circular 11/88, and (b) (for pupils aged under 16) by multiplying the standard number by the number of year groups. Both circulars are available in the Library.

Careers Officers

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many university and polytechnic careers officers there were in (a) 1979 and (b) 1985; and how many there are today.

Mr. Boswell: Information on careers officers in the former polytechnics is not held centrally. The table shows numbers of careers and appointments officers employed by institutions within the Universities Funding Council sector.

Pupil Exclusions

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will give for each grant-maintained school the number of permanent pupil exclusions in the academic year 1991-92 and for each previous year back to and including the final academic year in which the school was local authority maintained.

Mr. Forth: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to him on 5 November 1992 at col. 345.

Teacher Training

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement about future levels of recruitment to teacher training courses.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend is pleased to note the buoyant level of recruitment to initial teacher training courses in 1991 and 1992. He is however concerned that if the present pattern of recruitment continues it is likely to lead to an over-supply of teachers trained for primary schools, whereas secondary schools may face teacher shortages as pupil numbers rise during the 1990s. In advising the Higher Education Funding Council for England of intake targets for initial teacher training for the period 1993-1996 the Department has therefore proposed that they should fund a reducing number of places for primary school training and increasing numbers for secondary education. He has also asked the council to consider how it might help to tilt the balance of recruitment to primary school training towards applicants holding science, technology and mathematics qualifications, while containing overall numbers.

A copy of the official letter to the council dated 7 January has been placed in the Library of the House. I understand that the Welsh Office has written in similar terms to the Higher Education Funding Council for Wales.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the contracts awarded by his Department to KPMG Management Consultants over the past 12 months.

Miss Widdecombe: The following contracts have been awarded to KPMG Management Consultants by the Department of Social Security during the 1992-93 financial year:

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the local authorities which operate (a) a total disregard, (b) a partial disregard and (c) no disregard, other than the statutory minimum of war pensions for housing and community charge benefit.

Migrants, Greater London

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list (a) by borough, (b) by district health authority and (c) by country of origin, the number of migrants from Ethiopia, Somalia and Sudan currently resident in Greater London and claiming any type of social security benefit.

Miss Widdecombe: I understand from Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency that details of the country of origin of benefit recipients are not recorded routinely and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Matters concerning district health authorities are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health.

Invalid Care Allowance

Sir John Hunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many unsuccessful claims were made for invalid care allowances in the past 12 months, and if he will publish a breakdown of refusals according to (a) non-receipt of the appropriate benefits by the cared for person, (b) claimant earning more than the weekly ICA earnings limit, (c) claimant caring for less than 35 hours a week, (d) claimant over 65 years of age and (e) claimant in receipt of an overlapping benefit.

Mr. Scott: In the 12 months to 31 December 1992 there were 20,840 unsuccessful claims to invalid care allowance. The breakdown of refusals requested is in the table.

Category	Number
(a)	11,339
(b)	1,388
(c)	56
(d)	1,972
(e)	2,569

The balance of refusals were for reasons other than those mentioned by my hon. Friend.

Disability Allowances

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects to reply to the application by Mr. Keith Pownall of 20 August 1992 on behalf of his wife Valerie Pownall for invalid care allowance and the higher rate of attendance allowance.

Mr. Scott: The administration of invalid care allowance and attendance allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Bob Cryer, dated 21 January 1993.

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about Mr. Keith Pownall's applications for Invalid Care Allowance (ICA) and for higher rate Attendance Allowance (AA) made on behalf of his wife Mrs. Valerie Pownall.

I can confirm that decisions were made on 17 August 1992 on Mr. Pownall's ICA claim and on 19 January 1993 on his wife's AA claim. Mr. and Mrs. Pownall have been notified of both decisions. I have replied to you separately and in greater detail about the case.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report. A copy will also be placed in the Library.

Young People (Benefits)

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people aged 16 and 17 years in Birmingham not in employment, not on a youth training scheme and not in full-time education are receiving benefit.

Mr. Burt: The administration of benefits is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Dr. Lynne Jones, dated 21 January 1993.

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking how many people aged 16 and 17 years in Birmingham not in employment, not on a YT scheme and not in full time-education are receiving benefit.

The complete range of information you requested is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. I have, however, detailed below the number of successful applications as a result of the hardship provisions, and these are outlined below. It should be noted that a direction to pay in these cases normally lasts for an eight week period, therefore, some of the applications successful in November may no longer be currently receiving benefit.

District	November 1992	December 1992
Birmingham Chamberlain	13	12
Birmingham North West	19	10
Birmingham Heartlands	16	16
Birmingham South East	9	12
Birmingham South West	31	19
Totals	88	69

The number of successful applications do not equate to the number of customers as some customers may have made more than one application. The above information has been supplied by the Severe Hardship Claims Unit.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy of this reply will appear in the Official Report. A copy is also being placed in the Library.

Income Support

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people are on income support within the Seaham and Peterlee agency areas; and what were the comparable numbers each year since 1988.

Mr. Burt: The administration of income support is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. John Cummings, dated 20 January 1993.

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking how many people are on Income Support within the Seaham and Peterlee agency areas; and what were the comparable numbers each year since 1988.

The complete range of information you requested is not available. This is because statistics of a local nature are destroyed at regular intervals in accordance with standing instructions. I have listed below the latest available data which shows the number of recipients at a given point in time rather than for a given period.

Date	Seaham	Peterlee
November 1989	3,040	6,782
November 1990	3,300	7,111
November 1991	3,143	7,348
November 1992	3,518	8,003

This information has been obtained from the Income Support Management Information System.

I hope you find this reply helpful. Copies of this letter will be placed in the library.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Advance Corporation Tax

Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received regarding the effects of advance corporation tax on British overseas investment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: We have received a number of representations about advance corporation tax. My right hon. Friend drew attention to the issue in his last Budget statement.

Tobacco Industry

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much money the United Kingdom contributed to the European tobacco-growing industry in the last financial year.

Sir John Cope: Member states' contributions go to fund the EC budget as a whole; no breakdown can be given of contributions to individual sections of the budget.

Written Questions

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing the advisory cost limit for answering written parliamentary questions in each year since 1980; what was the percentage increase in (a) constant and (b) actual terms in each year; when he next plans to uprate the limit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The table is as follows:

Advisory cost limit for answering written parliamentary questions

Year		Percentage increase since preceding change
		(a) At constant prices[1]	(b) Actual
	£	Per cent.	Per cent.
1980[2]	50	—	—
1981	50	—	—
1982	200	53·0	300·0
1983	200	—	—
1984	200	—	—
1985	200	—	—
1986	200	—	—
1987	200	—	—
1988	250	20·0	25·0
1989	250	—	—
1990	250	—	—
1991	250	—	—
1992	400	45·0	60·0

[1] Indexed by GDP deflator.
[2] Unchanged since 1965.

The advisory cost limit was last increased on 14 January 1992 at column 546 and this followed a major review of costs in 1991.

The current level of £400 was fixed as a multiple of eight times the average marginal cost so that only cases of exceptionally high cost might be affected and to avoid the need for frequent small increases.

The limit may be increased from time to time in future when costs or policy suggest the need for a change.

VAT and Excise Duty

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the combined level of VAT and excise duty on beer, wine, spirits and cigarettes in each member state of the European Community.

Sir John Cope: The following table sets out details of the VAT rate and duty rate applied by each member state to typical excise products in November 1992. The combined level of VAT and excise duty can be calculated only with reference to the retail price. Information is available on the retail price of the most popular price category of cigarettes in the different member states and this has been used to calculate the total tax on cigarettes. It is not possible to arrive at an equivalent price for the main types of alcoholic drinks however, since neither average prices for most popular price category prices are available.

Personal Wealth

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing the most recent estimates of personal wealth per capita in each region and nation within the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: In 1990, the most recent year available, the average marketable wealth as defined in section 11 of Inland Revenue Statistics 1992, for the United Kingdom adult population, was £38,100 per head. I regret that more disaggregated figures are not available.

Treasury Running Costs

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will provide a breakdown of the expenditure under sub-head A1 of the vote for class XVIII, vote 1, HM Treasury running costs, for 1991-92.

Mr. Nelson: The main elements of expenditure under subhead A1 of class XVIII vote 1 for 1991-92 is as follows:

Pay and related expenditure	32,669,000
Accommodation	12,116,000
Other	8,792,000
	53,577,000

EC Economic and Finance Council

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the outcome of the latest meeting of the European Community's Economic and Finance Council.

Mr. Lamont: I represented the United Kingdom at the meeting of the Economic and Finance Council of the European Community in Brussels on 18 January.

The Council discussed the economic situation in the Community and national measures to promote recovery in its biannual multilateral surveillance exercise. Ministers agreed that, with the EC economy now in recession, member states should step up their efforts to promote growth and reduce unemployment and that they should strengthen the co-ordination of their economic policies. Wage restraint and healthier public finances with an increased emphasis on investment would help to create the conditions for lower interest rates across Europe. These principles are all consistent with measures I announced in my autumn statement.

The Commission will be contacting member states to discuss their economic plans in order to offer a general picture of the action member states are taking at the next meeting of ECOFIN.

The Council was given a brief presentation by the Commission and the President of the European Investment Bank (EIB) of their plans to follow up the conclusions of the Edinburgh European Council by establishing the new European investment fund and EIB lending facility. All member states stressed the need to bring both new facilities into operation as soon as possible.

The Council adopted a proposal for a balance of payments loan for Italy of 8 billion ecu (approximately £6·3 billion). This loan will be paid in four tranches conditional upon Italy's meeting its targets for reducing its budget deficit.

The Council also made a statement welcoming the decision of the new Irish Government to maintain the existing parities of the Irish punt within the ERM.

EMPLOYMENT

Labour Statistics

Mr. George: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many young people aged between 16 and 18 years in the Walsall travel-to-work area are unemployed.

Mr. McLoughlin: In October 1992 there were 973 unemployed claimants aged between 16 and 18 years in the Walsall travel-to-work area.

Changes to the benefit regulations in September 1988 coincided with the extension of a guaranteed YTS, now YT, place to all those aged under 18 not in full-time education or employment, which meant that those who declined an offer of a YTS place were no longer entitled to benefit. However, there are still a small number of under 18-year-olds entitled to benefit due to special circumstances, such as severe hardship or by virtue of their being orphans.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people now registered as unemployed in the Greater London area have been out of work for periods of up to three months, six months, nine months, one year, two years and three years or longer.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information requested is contained in the following table and can also be obtained from the NOMIS database system in the Library.

Duration of unemployment in the Greater London region (October 1992)

Duration of unemployment	Number of claimant unemployed
Up to 3 months	126,008
Up to 6 months	197,933
Up to 9 months	255,145
Up to 1 year	292,619
Up to 2 years	390,604
Up to 3 years	421,186
Over 3 years	26,445

Note: Claimant unemployment figures by duration are available on a quarterly basis for the months of January, April, July and October and are not adjusted for seasonal influences.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many (a) men and (b) women were registered as unemployed in the Tooting constituency on 11 January.

Mr. McLoughlin: On 12 November 1992, the latest date for which figures are available, there were 4,893 male and 1,898 female unemployed claimants in the Tooting parliamentary constituency. These figures are on the unadjusted basis.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what were the registered job vacancies at employment centres in the Tooting constituency on 11 January.

Mr. McLoughlin: On 6 November 1992, the latest date for which figures are available, there were 76 unfilled vacancies at jobcentres covering Tooting parliamentary constituency.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people were employed in part-time work in the United Kingdom, and as a percentage of the working population, in 1979, 1985 and at the most recent available date.

Mr. McLoughlin: The available information is as follows:

Part-time workforce in employment in Great Britain seasonally adjusted

	Part-time workforce in employment	Part-time workforce in employment as percentage of the workforce
	(000's)	Per cent.
June 1978	4,632	18
September 1985	5,526	20
September 1992	6,633	24

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many (a) men and (b) women under the age of 21 years were registered as unemployed in the London borough of Wandsworth on 12 January.

Mr. McLoughlin: Unemployment figures by age are available only on a quarterly basis and are based on particular age bands. In January 1992, the latest available date, there were 561 male and 301 female unemployed claimants aged under 20 years in the London borough of Wandsworth.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the number of (a) men of 65 years and (b) women of the age of 60 years in full-time employment in the United Kingdom at the latest available date.

Mr. McLoughlin: Results from the spring—March to May—1992 labour force survey show that in the United Kingdom 23,000 men aged 65 years and 40,000 women aged 60 years were in full-time employment.

Technical and Vocational Education Initiative

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are his Department's plans for the future of TVEI and its future funding.

Mr. McLoughlin: The technical and vocational education initiative is a 10-year programme, running from 1987 to 1997, in which education authorities participate for up to seven years. The Department is working closely with authorities on the development of their plans for assimilating the lessons of TVEI as they leave the programme. The impetus of the initiative will be further carried forward through the implementation of the national curriculum, the introduction of general national vocational qualifications and the impact of training and enterprise councils on education.

Health and Safety Inspectors

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many health and safety inspectors are currently employed in permanent duties in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: The number of inspectors permanently employed by the Health and Safety Executive based in Scotland at 1 January 1993 was 156.

Note: Figure given is for full time equivalent staff.

Trainees

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the number of trainees on employment training, including those on employment action for each month since the beginning of the programme.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information requested is given in the following tables.

Workplace Safety

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps she is taking to implement the requirements of European Council directive 92-57 of 24 June 1992 concerning safety and health requirements at temporary or mobile work sites; what requirements are laid down for regulatory action; and what further parliamentary action may be necessary.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Health and Safety Commission has already published a consultative document on proposed new Construction (Design and Management) Regulations and an approved code of practice to implement the main requirements of the temporary or mobile construction sites directive. A copy has been placed in the Library of the House. A further consultative document will be issued later this year to implement the technical requirements of annex IV of the directive. These documents effectively set out the requirements for regulatory action.

Both sets of implementing regulations proposed by the HSC would be made under the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 and laid before the House and in the usual way subject to negative resolution. My right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary will be responsible for implementation of the fire safety aspects of the directive.

Employment Action

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of the money allocated for employment action for 1991-92 was spent; and what is the estimate for 1992-93.

Mr. McLoughlin: In 1991-92 32 per cent. of the money allocated for employment action was spent. Current Departmental forecasts estimate that 85 per cent. of the 1992-93 provision will be spent and it is planned to reduce the cash limit accordingly in the spring supplementary estimate due to be published at the end of January 1993.

Health and Safety Executive

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much it will cost to refurbish the Health and Safety Executive head office at Baynards House; what the cost would be of relocating staff to (a) east London, (b) Bootle or (c) any other new location away from London which has been considered; and if she will make it her policy that the refurbished building should meet the highest possible health and safety standards.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Health and Safety Executive is considering relocating its London head office in 1994, when the leases on its existing London headquarters buildings expire. A study of the scope for relocation out of London was carried out in 1988. This concluded that those headquarters functions based in London need to remain there. Various London options are now under consideration. Information on each of these and their costs is commercially sensitive and therefore confidential. Any building chosen will have to meet fully the standards of current health and safety legislation.

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what were the terms of reference of the study team on market testing in relation to the functions of the Health and Safety Commission and Executive; if she will list the members of the study team and their remuneration in each case; whether any members of the study team have outside interests inconsistent with this role; and what will be the total cost of the study.

Mr. McLoughlin: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State asked the Health and Safety Commission to consider the feasibility of applying market testing to those areas of the Health and Safety Executive's activities not covered by their existing market testing programme, but not including advice and assistance to the Commission.

A study is being undertaken by the director general of the Health and Safety Executive. The other members of the study team were a consultant from Touche Ross and an assistant secretary from HSE. The director general and the assistant secretary are remunerated at civil service rates. I regard the consultant's remuneration as commercial in confidence.

I am confident that there are no conflicts of interest involved. I cannot give the total cost because at this stage the eventual extent of the study is uncertain.

Mr. A. J. Linehan

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to the question from the hon. Member for Denton and Reddish of 9 December 1992, Official Report, column 730, whether the role of Mr. A. J. Linehan has now been clarified; and whether it conforms to civil service guidelines.

Mr. McLoughlin: An application has been received under the normal civil service rules and is being considered. It is not the practice to give information about the outcome of individual cases.

Job Creation

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what specific proposals she has for stimulating job creation in rural areas.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Government work primarily through the Rural Development Commission to promote enterprise, economic diversity and employment in rural areas in England. Acting through the employment service and training and enterprise councils, my Department has a range of facilities and programmes available to people in rural areas, to help equip them for work and increase their skills.

Social Workers

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the total number of qualified social workers (a) in employment and (b) unemployed, for the last three years for which figures are available;

Mr. McLoughlin: The labour force survey provides estimates by occupation according to the standard occupational classification in which social workers are grouped with probation officers. The numbers in employment in this group in spring 1991, spring 1992 and summer 1992 were estimated respectively to be 96,000, 125,000 and 125,000, not seasonally adjusted.

Estimates at these periods for the numbers previously employed in this group who were unemployed, according to the International Labour Organisation definition, are all below 10,000. No comparable information for this occupational group is available for earlier years.

Foreign Workers

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information she has on the numbers of (a) non-United Kingdom EC nationals, (b) non-EC nationals from commonwealth countries and (c) non-EC nationals from non-commonwealth countries which are (i) currently working in the United Kingdom part-time, (ii) currently working in the United Kingdom full-time, (iii) currently unemployed and not claiming benefit and (iv) currently registered as unemployed and claiming benefit.

Mr. McLoughlin: The latest available estimates for the United Kingdom are given in the following table.

Foreign nationals: in employment by whether working full/part time, and ILO unemployed by whether claiming benefit: United Kingdom, spring 1992 (not seasonally adjusted).

[3] Includes a small number of ILO unemployed persons who did not state in the survey whether or not they were claiming benefit.

Young People, Birmingham

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of people aged 16 and 17 years in Birmingham are (a) on a youth training scheme, (b) in full-time education and (c) in employment.

Mr. McLoughlin: A total of 20·6 per cent. of people aged 16 and 17 years are currently on a YT scheme in Birmingham. 54·1 per cent. are in full-time education and 24·8 per cent. are in employment.

Psychiatric Nurses

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the total number of qualified psychiatric nurses, (a) in employment and (b) unemployed for the last three years for which figures are available.

Mr. McLoughlin: I regret that estimates of numbers of people in this specific occupation are not available.

Disabled People

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what efforts are currently made by her Department to inform disabled people of their rights under section 9 of the Disabled Persons (Employment) Act 1944.

Mr. McLoughlin: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. Fogden to Mr. Dafydd Wigley, dated 22 January 1993:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to write to you direct to respond to your Parliamentary Question to her about the information provided to disabled people about section 9 of the Disabled Persons (Employment) Act 1944.

Under section 9 of the 1994 Act an employer (with twenty or more employees) has a duty to employ a quota (3%) of registered disabled people. It is not an offence to be below Quota but in such circumstances employers must obtain a permit before engaging someone who is not registered as disabled. In addition under section 9 of the Act, an employer (with twenty or more employees) may not discharge a registered disabled person without reasonable cause if immediately after the dismissal, the employer does not employ a Quota (3%) of registered disabled people. Registration as a disabled person is voluntary.

Disabled jobseekers may be made aware of the registration provisions of the Act and their consequent rights in the course of interviews with my people or through the leaflet 'Advice on Joining the Disabled Persons Register' which is available in all my Jobcentres. I enclose a copy of the leaflet for your information.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

Working Conditions

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what discussions she has had with representatives of EC member states and the European Commission on the proposed Council directive on the application of the laws of the member states relating to certain employment relationships with regard to working conditions; and if she will make a statement;

(2) what discussions she has had with representatives of the EC member states and the European Commission on the proposed Council directive relating to certain employment contracts and employment relationships involving distortions of competition; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: There have been no discussions on this draft directive since January 1991.

Post-graduate Training

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much money has been invested in post-graduate training in each year since 1979.

Mr. McLoughlin: This information is not available in the form requested.

Graduates (Unemployment)

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the rate of unemployment among graduates in each year since 1979; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: Results from the labour force survey show that, for graduates of working age in Great Britain, unemployment rates on the internationally agreed ILO definition, were as follows:

Spring of each year	ILO unemployment rate per cent.
1984	4·1
1985	3·8
1986	4·1
1987	3·6
1988	2·9
1989	2·3
1990	2·2
1991	3·4
1992	4·0

Note: Consistent estimates are not available for years prior to 1984.

Employment Definitions

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the current definitions of (a) part-time employee and (b) temporary worker used by his Department; what changes have been made in this definition since 1979; and what plans she has to change this definition.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 19 January 1993]: The most widely used employment definitions occur in the context of the Department's statistical surveys.

The employer-based surveys classify part-time employees as those who normally work thirty hours a week or less. These surveys do not distinguish between temporary workers and other categories of employee.

The household-based labour force survey has two methods by which part-time employees can be defined. The usual way is by whether or not the respondents consider themselves to be in part-time employment. The alternative classifies as part-time those working 30 hours or less per week. For the purposes of this survey, temporary workers are those who have an understanding with their employer that their jobs are of fixed duration or that their employment will cease when another condition —for example, the return of an employee who has been temporarily replaced—is met.

The definitions have not changed since 1979 and there are no plans to alter them.

Employment Training

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of those referred to employment training by the Department of Employment did not arrive; and what percentage of those who start a scheme completed their training in (i) Wales, (ii) the valleys programme area and (iii) the United Kingdom, for the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information about the percentage of those referred to employment training by the Employment Department who did not arrive is not available in the form requested. The total number of people who took part in and subsequently completed employment training for Great Britain, Wales and the valleys initiative area is shown in the following table. The table also shows the percentage of those people referred by the employment service who actually started on employment training for Wales and Great Britain in the year ended March 1992. Some people referred will have withdrawn their application, for example because they have taken up a job; others will have been advised to seek alternative help after assessment. These people will have arrived but not started. Information on the referral to start ratio for the Valleys Programme area is not readily available in the form requested and can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

WALES

Old People

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the activities arranged in Wales to date by his Department to mark the European Year of Older People and Solidarity between Generations in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: My Department has commissioned and supported Age Concern Wales to arrange a programme of events to mark the Year, which was formally launched on 11 January. A steering group has been set up to act as the focal point for discussion of ideas, consideration of proposals for events and activities and recommendation of projects and priorities for Wales during the Year. Further information is available from Age Concern Wales.

Consultant Mineralogist

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will now take steps to appoint a consultant mineralogist for Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: There is no present intention to make such an appointment.

European Regional Development Fund

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has concerning the number and estimated cost of bids made by Welsh local authorities for European regional development fund support for projects during 1993-94; and what provision he has made for supplementary credit approval for them.

Mr. David Hunt: The invitation to bid for European regional development fund support under the Welsh structural funds programmes for the calendar years 1992 and 1993 attracted a total of 1,200 outline applications from all potential sponsors, including local authorities, with an estimated grant potential of some £290 million. These bids represented a considerable overbid against the total resources of some £120 million available to the Welsh programmes, and the monitoring committees charged with implementing the programmes are undertaking a selection process to identify those projects which should be supported from the funds available.

I will be making the necessary provisions to enable SCAs to be issued to match in full that element of an authority's expenditure from 1 April 1993 which is reimbursed by European regional development fund grants.

Mental Handicap Nurses

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are his current estimates for (a) the number of mental handicap nurses in Wales who will retrain in 1993-94 as general or psychiatric nurses and (b) the level of resources allocated by his Department to assist in this process.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The employing health authority or trust has responsibility for ensuring that any such retraining needs are met. No specific central funding is available for this purpose.

Environmental Education

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to require schools in Wales to publish information on the teaching of environmental education.

Sir Wyn Roberts: I have no plans to require schools to publish such information. The Office of Her Majesty's chief inspector of schools in Wales published "Environmental Education in the Schools of Wales 1992" on 11 January. I understand that local education authorities have been sent sufficient copies to distribute to all schools.

Local Government

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what studies he has undertaken to establish the cost-effectiveness of a unitary system of local government in Wales; and if he will publish as much information as he has.

Mr. David Hunt: I commissioned Touche Ross Management Consultants to produce a report on the financial implications of a move to a system of unitary authorities. The report was published in March 1992 and a copy is available in the Library of the House.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what investigation he has undertaken to establish the transitional costs of the reorganisation of Welsh local government; and what plans he has to publish his findings.

Mr. David Hunt: I have commissioned Touche Ross Management Consultants to undertake a study of the transitional costs of Welsh local government reorganisation.

I plan to publish the report and place a copy in the Library of the House.

Hearing-impaired Children

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement upon the future development of specialist educational provisions for hearing-impaired children under the unitary authorities in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Special education, including provision for children with hearing impairment, will continue to be treated as a matter of high priority under the new structure of local government. Local education authorities will retain responsibility for identifying and assessing children with special educational needs and making and maintaining statutory statements, as necessary, and for arranging the special educational provision specified. It is anticipated that it will be open to authorities to join together to share specialised services, such as those for hearing-impaired children, if they wish.

Mental Handicap Nurses

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has, for each health authority in Wales for 1993-94, for the number of (a) mental handicap nurses staying in their current roles, (b) mental handicap nurses transferring to general or psychiatric nursing and (c) mental handicap nurses leaving the profession.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Responsibility for identifying future needs for mental handicap nurses within the NHS rests with employing authorities and trusts. This should be done through the workforce planning system in conjunction with the county joint planning teams set up under the auspices of the mental handicap strategy.

KPMG management consultants

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the contracts awarded by his Department to KPMG management consultants over the past 12 months.

Mr. David Hunt: My Department has awarded the following contracts to KPMG management consultants over the past 12 months.

Financial and risk appraisal on applications for NHS Trust status.
Review of new production and process Research and Development in Wales.
Assessment of the future of the in-house computer bureau.
Evaluation of the agent authority (roads) accounts database.

National Garden Festival

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will provide figures to show the outturn at (a) 1988-89 prices, (b) 1991-92 prices and (c) cash prices for the urban programme in the valleys programme area, excluding expenditure on National Garden Festival, for each year from 1988-89 to 1992-93.

Mr. David Hunt: Urban programme outturn expenditure (in £ million) in the valleys programme area, excluding the National Garden Festival, since 1988-89 at (a) 1988-89 prices, (b) 1991-92 prices and (c) cash prices is:

	(a)	(b)	(c)
1988-89	11·44	14·07	11·44
1989-90	12·57	15·47	13·40
1990-91	12·47	15·34	14·35
1991-92	11·12	13·68	13·68
1992-93	N/A	N/A	N/A

Accident Treatment Service

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to launch a review of accident treatment service in the national health service in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: None at present, though health authorities are assessing these services as they develop their local strategies for health.

Compulsory Competitive Tendering

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to issue new guidelines to Welsh health authorities concerning the application of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 to compulsory competitive tendering.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Guidance will be issued as soon as practicable following consideration of legal advice on this issue.

Special Needs Education

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to ring-fence all funding for special needs education in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Resources to local authorities are not hypothecated to particular services. It is for authorities themselves to decide how much to direct to education, including special education, in the light of local priorities and circumstances. Specific grant is available to local education authorities under the grants for education support and training programme (GEST) for the training of teachers of children with sensory impairments and severe learning difficulties and other support for children with special needs. Special purpose grant for development is available to fund grant maintained schools for all activities supported at LEA level by the GEST programme.

Nursery Education

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the percentage of children aged under five years attending maintained nursery schools or classes in each Welsh county in each year since 1979.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The percentage of children attending maintained nursery schools or nursery classes in each local education authority is shown in the table.

Archive Service

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has regarding the future funding and organisation of the archive service in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: My plans for the archives service will be set out in the White Paper which I shall be publishing shortly.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received regarding the future and status of the archive service in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I have received a number of such representations; copies of these, together with representations on other matters, are in the Library of the House. I am giving careful consideration to the points put to me.

Welsh Language Bill

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much extra finance the Government expect to give to Welsh local authorities to implement the provisions outlined in the Welsh Language Bill; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The financial implications of the Welsh Language Bill will be taken into account in determining the local government revenue settlement in future years.

Criggion Quarry

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received regarding the future of Criggion quarry on Breidden hill, Montgomeryshire; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: None.

Oil Pollution, Cardigan Bay

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many incidents of oil pollution off Cardigan bay have been reported in each year since 1973; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Figures relating specifically to Cardigan bay are not held centrally. Since 1980, details of all reported oil spills around the United Kingdom coastline have been provided, on a regional basis, in the annual reports of the Advisory Committee on Pollution of the Sea (ACOPS). Copies of the reports are held in the Library of the House.

Printing Costs

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 19 November 1992, Official Report, columns 323-24, on how many occasions since 1988 disciplinary action has been taken against civil servants responsible for his departmental printing expenditure; in which financial year; and on how many occasions and on what dates such disciplinary action has involved (a) suspension on full pay, (b) suspension without pay, (c) summary dismissal and (d) criminal charges.

Mr. David Hunt: There has been one such case of disciplinary action. The officer was suspended on full pay on 6 March 1992, without pay on 11 March 1992 and dismissed on 30 April 1992. Criminal charges are a matter for the police.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 19 November 1992, Official Report, columns 323-24, for what proportion of Welsh Office policy printing work inclusive of typesetting and graphic design the Central Office of Information is now responsible; and if he will make a statement on the changes in the relationship between HMSO, the Central Office of Information and the Welsh Office introduced since March 1992 in the responsibility for placing contracts.

Mr. David Hunt: Approximately two thirds.

In 1991 the Welsh Office, in reorganising its systems for handling paid publicity and in the interests of value for money, transferred much of this work to the Central Office of Information; in 1992 it transferred the rest.

The Central Office of Information's relationship with HMSO is a matter for them. The relationship between the Welsh Office and HMSO is subject to similar value for money considerations as its paid publicity handling, and since 1991 it has been the same as that between the Welsh Office and any other contractor.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 19 November 1992, Official Report, columns 323-24, what estimate he has made of the proportion and amount of his Department's total annual contract expenditure on printing, publicity and stationery placed with firms outside Wales in each full financial year since 1988, and for the first half of 1992-93.

Mr. David Hunt: This information is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 19 November 1992, Official Report, columns 323-24, for what proportion of his Department's general stationery and miscellaneous printing contract work, inclusive of typesetting and graphic design, the Central Office of Information is currently responsible; and if he will make a statement on the changes in the responsibility for Welsh Office printing contracts between his Department, HMSO and the Central Office of Information in the last 12 months.

Mr. David Hunt: The Central Office of Information is not responsible for the Department's general stationery and miscellaneous printing contract work including typesetting and graphic design. There have been no changes in the relationship between the Department, HMSO and the Central Office of Information regarding printing contracts in the last 12 months.

Since September 1991 the Department's printing contracts have been awarded entirely on the basis of competitive tendering.

ENVIRONMENT

Nitrous Oxide

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the total amount of nitrous oxide emitted from (a) coal-fired power stations and (b) gas-fired power stations, in the latest available year.

Mr. Maclean: In 1991, the latest year for which the information is available, emissions of oxides of nitrogen from coal-fired power stations in England and Wales totalled 620 kilotonnes. Similar figures for gas-fired power stations are not available.

Derelict Land

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what figures he has for the amount of derelict land in England; and what studies he has made into the cost of reclaiming it.

Mr. Robin Squire: The 1988 survey of derelict land in England recorded 40,500 hectares of derelict land as at 1 April 1988.

Ove Arup consultants are currently researching the cost effectiveness of a sample of hard end use derelict land grant schemes for the Department.

The cost effectiveness of derelict land grant schemes intended for environmental/recreational end uses has already been studied and is reported in the 1989 HMSO publication "Cost Effective Management of Reclaimed Derelict Sites".

Ecolabelling

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangements are being made in the United Kingdom for the launch in June of the EC-wide ecolabel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The European Commission recently announced that the Community ecolabelling scheme would be formally launched in June. The United Kingdom Ecolabelling Board is responsible for administering and promoting the scheme nationally and I have therefore asked the board to reply to the hon. Member direct with more information on the arrangements they will be making for the launch.

Urban Regeneration Agency

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many staff are intended to be employed by the urban regeneration agency; and what is its budget for the first three years.

Mr. Robin Squire: It will be for the agency to assess the staff resources it requires to deliver its work programme. The agency's budget will incorporate the existing resources of the three programmes it is taking over, including the additional resources for English Estates' work in the coalfields which were announced by the President of the Board of Trade on 19 October. We anticipate that these elements will total to £268 million in 1993-94, rising to about £300 million in 1995-96. These figures depend in part upon the level of receipts raised from the sale of assets.

Children (Temporary Accommodation)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate he has of the numbers of children currently living in temporary accommodation, broken down by age and accommodation type.

Mr. Robin Squire: This information is not available centrally.

Aggregates

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which is the base forecast used in the preparation of the tables option I and option II on pages 19 to 20 respectively of his Department's report "Guidelines for Aggregates Provision in England and Wales-Revision of MPG6 Policy Issues Paper".

Mr. Baldry: Option 1 in the policy issues paper is derived from the views expressed about future demand by the regional aggregates working parties (RAWPs) in their regional commentaries which were published in 1992. The RAWPs took into account the long term projections of primary aggregates demand produced in 1991 by ECOTEC Research and Consulting Ltd. Option II reflects the Government view that between 6,500 million tonnes and 7,000 million tonnes of aggregates may be needed between 1992 and 2011 and was informed by the long term projections of demand for primary aggregates prepared by ECOTEC last year.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out the statistical basis for the statement on page 20 of his Department's report "Guidelines for Aggregates Provision in England and Wales-Revision of MPG6 Policy Issues Paper" that option II envisages that land won resources in England and Wales identified in the regional commentaries are reduced by an overall level of 20 per cent. during the period of the guidelines.

Mr. Baldry: The option was prepared on the basis of a judgment about the level of supply from land won sources of primary aggregates that would be consistent with meeting the Government's objectives for a sustainable aggregates policy.

Waste Management

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what efforts have been made by his Department to date to enforce section 33 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990.

Mr. Maclean: The offence in section 33 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 of treating, keeping or disposing of controlled waste in a manner likely to cause pollution of the environment or harm to human health was brought into force on 1 April 1992.

Enforcement of this section is a matter for others, principally waste regulation authorities.

Combe Down Mines

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the effect of the forthcoming EC landfill directive on the remedial works in the Combe Down mines, Bath.

Mr. Maclean: The latest draft of the EC directive on the landfill of waste is currently being substantially revised by the European Commission to take account of amendments considered by the European Parliament at its October plenary session. The proposal will be subject to detailed consideration by the Council of Ministers once it is given priority by a member state holding the presidency. The directive is unlikely to be adopted for a considerable time and it is too early to anticipate what impact its provisions will have on the proposals for remedial works in the Combe Down mines, Bath.

Interim Development Orders

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the areas of the United Kingdom still subject to interim development orders granted before 1970; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: Interim Development Order mineral permissions were granted between July 1943 and I July 1948 and preserved by successive planning acts. In relation to the area they cover in England and Wales I refer the hon. Member to my replies on 16 December to the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith). The position in Scotland and Northern Ireland is a matter for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Northern Ireland.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to give local planning authorities the power to revoke interim development grants without having to pay compensation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: The Government took steps in the Planning and Compensation Act 1991 to deal with interim development order permissions. These can be updated by the imposition of modern environmental conditions which do not attract compensation provided they are consistent with the guidance in MPG9. I have no plans for further measures to deal with such permissions. My Department has recently completed a wide ranging consultation exercise on options for dealing with the problems of old mineral permissions generally and I hope to consult on detailed proposals for change later this year.

THORP

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what communications and correspondence his Department has received since November 1992 on the new thermal oxide reprocessing plant at Sellafield.

David Maclean [holding answer 20 January 1993]: Since November 1992 my Department has received approximately 55,000 items of correspondence concerning the thermal oxide reprocessing plant at Sellafield.

Standard Spending Assessments

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what additional criteria for standard spending assessments are being considered; and what consultation he will introduce to improve the standard spending assessment system.

Mr. Robin Squire: Standard spending assessments (SSAs) already include a wide range of indicators which are updated and refined every year in the light of new data and evidence. In preparation for the 1994-95 settlement, a number of indicators and formulae will be looked at again in the light of the full results from the 1991 census. These include the indicator for additional educational needs and the all ages social index. We will also be considering the possibility of introducing measures of sparsity and density based on census enumeration districts, and of including a factor to represent day visitors. All of this analysis will be fully discussed with local authority representatives. We consider that the present arrangements provide the opportunity for full and widespread consultation and there are no plans for change.

TRANSPORT

Route Guidance Systems

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how his Department proposes to utilise route guidance systems for drivers on the motorway and trunk road systems in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Part II of the Road Traffic (Driver Licensing and Information Systems) Act 1989 provides enabling powers under which commercial operators may seek licences for such systems.

Travel Information

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action is currently undertaken by his Department to enable improved dissemination of information between the motorway and non-motorway network management authorities to travel information centres and the media's travel information service.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The computerised national lane closure bulletin, which is distributed fortnightly to motoring organisations and the media, provides accurate and timely information about planned lane closures on the strategic network of motorways and other trunk roads.

This system and the information it contains will be developed further as demands for information are identified. Under the EC collaborative programme (DRIVE), the Department is sponsoring research into driver information technology.

KPMG Management Consultants

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list all the contracts awarded by his Department to KPMG Management Consultants over the past 12 months.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: My Department, including agencies, awarded the following commissions to KPMG Management Consultants:

- Trial of project management software for Road Programme Directorate.
- Assistance in formulating the Department's data communications needs.
- Development of an implementation Strategy for Pavement Management.
- Development of an information Strategy for the Vehicle Inspectorate.
- Options study for locating data on trunk roads network.
- Advice on DVOIT privatisation.

Driving Tests

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assistance is currently provided by his Department to help those with reading and/or writing difficulties to complete the written part of the driving test.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Current driving tests do not include a written examination. I shall shortly be considering a broad range of options for testing drivers' knowledge, including the possibility of a written theoretical test, in the light of responses to a consultation paper issued recently by the Driving Standards Agency on the implementation of the second EC driving licence directive. If a written test were to be introduced, the requirements of those with reading or writing difficulties would be taken into account.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many (a) applications and (b) actual driving tests were taken in the United Kingdom in each of the last 10 years; and if he will indicate the proportion of successfully completed driving tests in each instance.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The number of applications received, tests conducted, and the proportion successfully completed for car, motorcycle, heavy goods vehicle and bus tests in Great Britain for the last 10 years are shown in the table.

Year	Car and Motorcycle			Heavy Goods Vehicles and Buses
	Applications Received	Tests Conducted	Pass Rate per cent.	Applications Received	Tests Conducted	Pass Rate per cent.
1982-83	1,783,700	1,966,909	48	42,256	42,991	55

1991-92	1,862,382	1,886,146	53	80,039	71,704	51

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the total amount of revenue generated from driving test charges in the United Kingdom during each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The total revenue generated from driving test fees in Great Britain during each of the last 10 years is shown in the following table.

Financial year	Heavy goods vehicles and buses (£000)	Cars and motorcycles (£000)	Total (£000)
1982-83	1,912	24,846	26,758

1991-92	3,596	39,805	43,401

[1]The financial information on tests was not separately analysed for 1983-84 and 1986-87.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how many applications have been made for driving tests in each police authority area in Wales in each of the last 10 years;

(2) how many people took driving tests in each police authority area in Wales in each of the last 10 years; and how many tests were successfully completed in each instance, in numbers and as a proportion.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Statistics for driving tests are not collected by police authority area and it is therefore not possible to provide the information requested.

Section 56 Grants

223. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the date, amount awarded and brief descriptions of each project where application for a section 56 grant under the Transport Act 1968 has been successful; if he will list each unsuccessful application; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Since 1985, when such grants became available for large new public transport infrastructure projects, the following grants have been awarded.

Project	Date approved	Grant £ million
Merseyrail safety work	March 1989	0·3
Manchester Metrolink light rail scheme	October 1989	53·0
South Yorkshire Supertram light rail scheme	December 1990	[1]65·0
Ivanhoe Line heavy rail restoration scheme	January 1992	[1]5·0

In addition grant of £0·75m was approved in October 1991 for development work on the plans for Midland Metro Line One, a proposed light rail scheme.

Five unsuccessful applications have been made: Merseyside centralised signalling system, Manchester to Blackpool electrification, trolleybuses in West Yorkshire, Halifax bus station, and the extension of the Tyne and Wear Metro to Newcastle airport. Credit approvals were however provided for three of these projects.

We are prepared to grant-aid worthwhile schemes subject to the availability of resources.

Railways (Severe Weather Damage)

296. Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what financial assistance will be available to British Rail to help with the cost of repairing damage to Scottish railway lines caused by the recent severe weather.

Mr. Freeman: The cost will qualify for support through the public service obligation grant.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how often ships carrying radioactive waste will be passing Cardigan bay and the west Wales coast in 1993; how many ships are involved; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: We have no information to suggest that there have been any such shipments in 1993 to date or that there will be any during the remainder of this year.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the current regulations regarding tankers carrying radioactive waste off Cardigan bay; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: Radioactive waste must be carried in accordance with the requirements of the Merchant Shipping (Dangerous Goods and Marine Pollutants) Regulations 1990.

Oil Tankers

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to implement new safety regulations for oil tankers travelling off Cardigan bay; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: The Department has no plans to implement new and further safety regulations for oil tankers travelling off Cardigan bay. However these matters are within the terms of reference of the Lord Donaldson inquiry announced by my right hon. Friend to the House on 11 January. In the meantime, we are exploring the possibility of introducing interim measures for tanker operations around the United Kingdom.

A5 Bypass

Mr. Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when in 1993 the public inquiry into the A5 bypass of Dunstable will begin; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 14 January 1993]: The need for a public inquiry will depend on the weight and nature of objections to the draft orders which we are aiming to publish this autumn. Any inquiry would be held during 1994.

Motoring Offences (Unadopted Roads)

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will list the (a) motoring offences which apply on unadopted highways and (b) motoring offences which apply only on adopted highways;

(2) if he will make it his policy to seek to amend the law to ensure that all drink driving legislation applies in circumstances where the road is unadopted.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 21 January 1993]: The definition of "road" used in the Road Traffic Act 1988, in relation to England and Wales, includes any highway and any other road to which the public has access. Road traffic offences, including the drink-drive offences, therefore apply on all highways, whether adopted or not, and on certain other roads. The drink-drive offences and the offences involving dangerous or careless driving also extend to public places other than roads.

Motorway Lighting

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many miles of motorway there are in the United Kingdom and what percentage is illuminated by overhead lights.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 21 January 1993]: There are 1,996 miles of motorway in the United Kingdom of which 1,692 miles are in England. Approximately 30 per cent. of the length of motorway in England is lit.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Thai Boxing

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many representations he has received to ban Thai boxing; what action he proposes to take; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: I have not received any representations from sporting or other authorities to ban Thai boxing. The Sports Council has however met representatives of various Thai boxing and kick boxing bodies to discuss possible recognition of the activity. They are currently awaiting a unified response from these bodies before considering the issue further. At present, Thai boxing and kick boxing are not recognised by the Sports Council for purposes of grant aid or other services.

National Lottery

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage (1) what opportunities were given by his Department or the GAH group of consultants to (a) individuals, (b) private companies and (c) foreign Governments to express their willingness to have the information supplied to him published; and what number of each category indicated such willingness;

(2) how many invitations his Department or the GAH group issued to (a) individuals, (b) private companies and (c) foreign Governments requesting information towards his Department's report on the national lottery which were declined; and what was the reason given in each case;

(3) if he will publish a table showing the total number of (a) individuals, (b) private companies and (c) foreign Governments supplying information to the GAH report which he has contacted requesting permission to publish (i) those parts of the report which do not contain commercially sensitive information and (ii) the report in full; on what dates, and by which method, each request was made; and what further action he intends to take with remaining numbers in each category to pursue permission to publish (1) those parts of the report which do not contain commercially sensitive information and (2) the report in full;

(4) how many (a) individuals, (b) private companies and (c) foreign Governments were consulted by the GAH group of consultants or his Department in compiling his Department's report on the national lottery; and how many in each category requested to him in advance of supplying information that their evidence be treated as commercial in confidence.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 21 January 1993]: The GAH group consulted publicly available documents and reports from lotteries throughout the world, and sought supplementary information by means of a questionnaire, after promising that both the approach and the answers would remain confidential, and that the ensuing report would not be published. Twenty-seven state lotteries responded to the confidential questionnaire. In one instance the assurance of confidentiality was not considered sufficient for the lottery operator to venture any information at all. Much of the information provided is commercially confidential to the operators concerned.

I have not contacted the respondents to re-open the original assurance of confidentiality. Unanimous consent would be necessary for the report to be published, and in many cases the respondents have made it clear from the start that they would under no circumstances allow the information they provided to be made public.

DEFENCE

Hawk Aircraft (Indonesia)

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 12 January, Official Report, column 749, to the hon. Member for Halifax (Mrs. Mahon), whether the details of the sale of Hawk aircraft to Indonesia will be included in the UN register of arms sales; and if the entries in the register will be available for inspection in the Library.

Mr. Aitken: A sale of Hawk aircraft to Indonesia would be included in the UN register of conventional arms transfers. The British contribution to the register will be placed in the Library of the House.

Private Rented Accommodation

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many RAF personnel at (a) RAF Valley and (b) RAF Chivenor were accommodated in rented private sector property in December 1992; and what was the total cost to his Department of that accommodation in each case.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The numbers of RAF personnel accommodated in rented private sector property at RAF Valley and RAF Chivenor and the total costs of that accommodation to the Department were as follows:

(a) RAF Valley
- (i) December 1991—Nil.
- (ii) December 1992—26 airmen and 10 officers, at a cost of £7,425.

A modernisation programme of officers' married quarters at RAF Valley will be completed in August 1993, after which there will be no need for officers to be in rented private sector property.

(b) RAF Chivenor
- (i) December 1991—6 Officers, at a cost of £2,650.
- (ii) December 1992—40 airmen and 11 officers, at a cost of £20,959.

Provision of married quarters to accommodate the above numbers at RAF Chivenor is currently being investigated.

Flight Training

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many days were lost due to poor weather conditions in each year since 1987 at (a) RAF Valley, (b) RAF Chivenor, (c) RAF Brawdy and (d) Pembrey weapons range.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The percentage of training time lost when weather conditions were unfit for flying training at RAF Valley, RAF Brawdy and RAF Chivenor during these periods is as follows:

	RAF Valley per cent.	RAF Brawdy per cent.	RAF Chivenor per cent.
1987	26·5	12·7	8·7
1988	20·8	8·8	5·6
1989	16·5	8·9	4·1
1990	16·8	7·1	6·9
1991	24·0	10·0	6·9

Similar information for RAF Pembrey Sands is recorded as per cent. of range time lost due to weather conditions, as follows:

	per cent.
1987	20
1988	16
1989	11
1990	11
1991	16

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when his Department's internal audit committee completed its review of the ending of flight training at Brawdy.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No audit into the ending of flight training at RAF Brawdy has been undertaken. The station was, however, visited as part of a wider audit of the management controls governing the closure of Ministry of Defence establishments, and this work is expected to be completed in the spring.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many RAF pilots based at RAF Valley for advanced weapon training have had to carry out part of that training at RAF St. Evel in 1992.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: None.

United States Naval Facility

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were the annual costs to his Department of the support and servicing of the United States naval facility at Brawdy in (a) 1989-90, (b) 1990-91 and (c) 1991-92 and the estimated costs for (i) 1992-93, (ii) 1993-94 and (iii) 1994-95.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Until the end of flying training at Brawdy in August 1992 support for the United States naval facility at RAF Brawdy was included in the overall running costs of the station. Figures for 1989-90, 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93 could be provided only at disproportionate cost. The cost for 1993-94 is estimated to be £4·6 million. It is not yet possible to provide an estimate for 1994-95.

Allowances

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the levels of allowances paid to military personnel serving in (a) Germany, (b) former Yugoslavia and (c) Northern Ireland.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The allowances paid to military personnel depend not only on their location but on their rank, job and personal circumstances, including whether they are married or not. It is our general policy that normal rules on allowances apply wherever personnel are serving. These rules include the payment of local overseas allowance to personnel deployed outside the United Kingdom to cover, where appropriate, the additional costs associated with living in the country concerned. Troops deployed from Germany to the former Yugoslavia continue to receive a significant element of the LOA, 70 per cent. for married personnel and 40 per cent. for single personnel, in recognition of their continuing financial commitments in Germany. In recognition of the conditions under which they are serving we have introduced a special welfare package which includes free two-way aerogrammes and an allowance towards the cost of telephone calls for all troops based in the former Yugoslavia. Personnel deployed to Northern Ireland also receive a number of special allowances, for example, in respect of meals and telephone calls.

Exercise Long Summer

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 11 January, Official Report, columns 630-31, if he will give details of the outsize load required to be moved for Exercise Long Summer in 1992, and the type of civil aircraft chartered for this purpose.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The payload consisted of two Chinook helicopters, associated equipment and spares. The task was carried out by an Antonov aircraft chartered through Heavylift Cargo Airlines Ltd.

Air Charter Budget

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 11 January, Official Report, columns 630-31, if he will set out the total sum allocated in Supply Estimates in 1990-91, 1991-92, 1992-93, and to be allocated in 1993-94 to the air charter budget, and the arrangements for its central management.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The total sums allocated to air charter in supply estimates were as follows:

	£ Million
1990-91	13·415
1991-92	13·212
1992-93	16·096

The figure for 1993-94 has yet to be agreed. Operations and finance for air charter are centrally managed by a group captain, the deputy director of movements (RAF), based in London. Contracts are placed competitively by contracts staff based in Glasgow.

Exercise Medman

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 11 January, Official Report, columns 630-31, if he will set out the nature of Exercise Medman in 1990, 1991 and 1992, and the reasons for its change in prioritisation within the Air Charter budget.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Exercise Medman is an all-arms battlegroup exercise, using live ammunition, held at the British Army training unit, Suffield, Canada. The units due to take part in the exercises in 1990 and 1991 were those most likely to be subsequently deployed in support of operations in the Gulf. It was considered essential that the forces in question train in Canada and, as the RAF air transport force was already fully committed, central funding for air charter was provided.

"Capture of Rudolf Hess"

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence pursuant to the oral answer by the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs of 3 June 1992, Official Report, column 823, if he will release for public perusal the files bearing the title "Capture of Rudolf Hess" between May and July 1941 ref. no. WO 199/3288A and B.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Both files are already available for perusal at the Public Record Office. File WO 199/3288A was released to the public domain in 1977 and WO 199/3288B in January 1992.

Search and Rescue Helicopters

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were the operating costs of providing Sea King search and rescue helicopter coverage at RAF Boulmer and RAF Leconfield for the years 1990-91 and 1991-92; and what are the estimated costs for 1992-93 and 1993-94.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I will write to the hon. Member.

Tankers

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what monitoring has been carried out by his Department of tanker traffic passing through the Minches; what results are available from that monitoring; what resources and facilities are utilised; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Ministry of Defence agreed in 1991 that MOD support vessels operating in the area would report to the Stornoway coastguard on an opportunity basis sightings of laden tankers transitting the Minches. Records have not been kept of any reports made under this arrangement.

Rayo Rocket System

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received about sales of the Rayo rocket system developed by Royal Ordnance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: I have received a number of representations on this matter. Royal Ordnance's participation in the RAYO project continues to be subject to very careful scrutiny under the normal export licensing disciplines.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence at what defence research agency establishment the Rayo multiple launch rocket system has been tested.

Mr. Aitken: For reasons of commercial confidentiality we do not release details of tests by manufacturers at MOD ranges.

Gulf Trust Fund

Mr. Alison: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his broad estimate as to the numbers of potential beneficiaries, including widows and dependent children, who might be eligible to apply for help from the Gulf trust fund.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Those who are entitled to be beneficiaries of the Gulf trust fund are defined in the trust deed as members of Her Majesty's armed forces involved in military and other operations relating to or in connection with the Gulf conflict, the civilian personnel attached to or accompanying such members of Her Majesty's armed forces and their respective dependants. On this basis the number of potential beneficiaries from those who served in theatre alone is some 43,500 service and civilian personnel as well as their dependants. Those who have already received assistance from the fund may require further financial help and stress and trauma-related cases may not emerge for a number of years.

Service Pensions

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will review his policy with regard to the provision of pensions for all widows of service men, where their marriage took place after service in the forces;

(2) what consideration has been given to the provision of pensions for all widows of service men who fought in the second world war but married after leaving service.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Pension entitlements for service men and their widows are determined according to the terms applicable to the date on which service ends and, where appropriate, on the duration of that service.

The terms of the armed forces pension scheme include provision for a pension to be awarded to the eligible widow of a service man who marries after leaving service provided that some part of his service was given on or after 6 April 1978 and that he qualified for retired pay or pension.

There are no plans to change these arrangements.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Amnesty International

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his policy regarding consultation with Amnesty International; how many times he has met representatives of the organisation in the past 12 months; what action he has taken following those representations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Consultations with Amnesty International are valued by us. My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary last met representatives of Amnesty in September 1992; in addition I addressed representatives of non-governmental organisations (including Amnesty) on 18 January, and Amnesty had a general discussion with my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 20 January. I attended that meeting. Information received from Amnesty complements Government monitoring of human rights abuse, and therefore contributes to the formulation of policy.

Turkey

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the human rights implications of the killing of journalists in Turkey since 1991.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The Turkish Government are well aware of our concern about human rights in Turkey. We welcome Prime Minister Demirel's recognition of a Kurdish identity and his Government's intention to make human rights improvements a priority. Prime Minister Demirel has pledged to bring to justice those responsible for the killing of journalists in south east Turkey.

Vietnam

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his most recent assessment of the economic and political situation in Vietnam.

Mr. Goodlad: The new constitution adopted on 15 April 1992 retained the primacy of the Communist party of Vietnam, but modified the Government structure to make it more accountable to the National Assembly, elections for which were held on 19 July 1992. Since 1986, Vietnam has pursued a programme of economic restructuring, aimed at moving to a free-market system. The IMF consider this an exemplary effort at economic reform.

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many Vietnamese boat people, in total, have appealed against repatriation from Hong Kong to Vietnam; and how many of these appeals have been successful.

Mr. Goodlad: As at 31 December 1992, 30,971 appeals had been heard by the Refugee Status review board. Of these 1,855 were successful.

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what monitoring has taken place to date of those Vietnamese boat people who have been repatriated from Hong Kong to Vietnam to ensure that they do not face persecution on being returned to Vietnam; if such monitoring is continuing; and what the results of the monitoring reveal.

Mr. Goodland: Monitoring has been and will continue to be carried out by the staff of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the British embassy in Hanoi and non-governmental organisations working in Vietnam.

There has been no evidence of ill-treatment by the Vietnamese authorities in more than 31,000 cases, including returns from first asylum countries in the region other than Hong Kong.

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current state of relations between the United Kingdom and Vietnam.

Mr. Goodlad: The development of our relations with Vietnam has been given greater impetus by progress towards a political settlement in Cambodia and a solution of the problem of Vietnamese migrants in Hong Kong. Our aid programme to Vietnam was resumed in 1990. Bilateral trade is increasing rapidly and the United Kingdom is now the fifth largest foreign investor in Vietnam. The Vietnamese Foreign Minister paid a successful visit to the United Kingdom in June 1992, and Sir George Young, Lord Caithness and I all visited Vietnam last year. We are also at the forefront of efforts to expand relations between the EC and Vietnam, and to normalise Vietnam's relations with the international financial institutions.

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many Vietnamese boat people have, in total to date, been repatriated from Hong Kong to Vietnam.

Mr. Goodlad: As at 31 December 1992, 26,753 Vietnamese migrants had been repatriated.

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many Vietnamese boat people currently remain in Hong Kong awaiting repatriation to Vietnam.

Mr. Goodlad: As at 31 December 1992, 22,118 Vietnamese migrants had been found not to be refugees and were awaiting repatriation. A further 20,599 were awaiting refugee status determination.

Iran

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement regarding Iran's military build-up and the removal by the Iranian Government of non-Iranians from Abu Musa island in the Gulf.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We accept the right of countries to acquire the means to defend themselves, but are concerned that Iran's arms procurement should not pose a threat to regional stability. Iranian actions on Abu Musa in the course of last year were a cause for concern in terms of regional stability. We and our European Community partners have urged Iran and the United Arab Emirates to work for a peaceful resolution of their differences.

Denmark

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the provisions of international law governing the extent to which the International Court of Justice may adjudicate on the intergovernmental decision taken in Edinburgh concerning Denmark.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The provisions of international law governing the jurisdiction of the International Court of Justice to adjudicate on questions arising on international agreements, such as the decision concerning Denmark agreed at the Edinburgh European Council, are set out in the statute of the International Court of Justice, annexed to the UN charter and in particular chapter II.

Mr. Mansoor Hussain Qureshi

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 19 January concerning Mansoor Hussain Qureshi—Ref: K051037—Official Report, column 157, when Mr. Qureshi was refused entry clearance to join his wife in the United Kingdom; what representations have been received at the British post in Karachi by Mr. Qureshi's representatives; what is the average time taken by the post in Karachi in preparing explanatory statements; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Mr. Qureshi was refused entry clearance to join his wife on 15 April 1992.

The Deputy High Commission in Karachi received representations from Chans and Co., immigration consultants, in February 1992; from Bradford law centre on 19 November 1992 and 14 January 1993; and from Ruth Budney and Co, in December 1992.

The average time taken by the deputy high commission in Karachi in preparing explanatory statements is, 12 weeks from receipt of the completed appeal forms.

As the hon. Member may know, it has only recently come to light that Mr. Qureshi's appeal forms never reached the post in Karachi. However, now that they have received proof of posting from Bradford law centre, they have agreed to act as if the appeal had been submitted in time.

Laws of War

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which of the additional protocols to the Geneva convention on the laws of war have been signed and ratified by Her Majesty's Government; which have been signed but not ratified; which have not been signed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad [pursuant to the reply 15 December 1992 c. 87]: The date given was incorrect. The United Kingdom signed both additional protocols on 12 December 1977. It has not yet ratified them.

Edinburgh Summit

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether Her Majesty's Government intend to register with the Secretary-General of the United Nations, pursuant to article 102 of the United Nations charter, the decision of the head of state and Government meeting within the European Council held at Edinburgh on 12 December 1992 concerning certain problems raised by Denmark.

Mr. Garel-Jones [pursuant to his reply 13 January 1993 c. 758]: The decision is registrable with the United Nations secretariat and will be registered. But the question does not arise until the entry into force of the decision on Denmark, which by virtue of section E is linked to that of the Maastricht treaty itself.

2. The real terms figure takes into account the RPI figure for the 12 months to March 1992 which is 4 per cent.

Small Rural Hospitals

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research has been carried out by, or under the auspices of her Department into the medical value and community role of small hospitals in rural areas.

Dr. Mawhinney: None.

Epilepsy

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what level of government funding will be provided for medical research into epilepsy in 1993.

Dr. Mawhinney: Health Departments' recent research expenditure in this field amounts to some £70,000 on a number of projects, of which a small part is to be spent during 1993.

The main agency through which the Government support biomedical and clinical research is the Medical Research Council (MRC) which receives its grant-in-aid from the Office of Science and Technology under the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster. In 1991-92 the MRC spent £381,000 on research into epilepsy. The MRC is always willing to consider scientifically sound proposals for research in competition with other applications. Any change in the level of spending during subsequent years will depend on the nature of applications received.

Dentistry

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps she is planning to maintain the current level of NHS dental services in Cornwall; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: It is the responsibility of the family health services authority (FHSA) to ensure that local services remain accessible. FHSAs may apply for permission to employ salaried dentists if they consider it necessary to maintain services locally. Approval has recently been given to the Cornwall and Isles of Scilly FHSA to employ two salaried dentists, who will work from a mobile clinic serving a number of areas in the locality. Anyone who needs help in obtaining national health service dental treatment should contact the FHSA.

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many courses of dental treatment were undertaken in Cornwall in each of the last five years.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information requested is given in the table.

Courses of Dental Treatment in Cornwall and Isles of Scilly Family Health Services Authority

Year	Adults	Children	Total
1987-88	229,290	97,290	326,580
1988-89	241,450	98,220	339,670
1989-90	238,716	101,631	340,347
1990-91	237,047	82,423	319,470
1991-92	262,771	26,810	289,581

Note:
The data for each year are not fully comparable. Changes introduced by the new contract for general dental practitioners on 1 October 1990, mean that most treatment for under 18s is given under capitation arrangements and is therefore no longer separately identified.

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent representations she has received about the provision of national health service dental treatment in Cornwall; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: Since July last year we have received 18 letters from hon. Members about national health service dental treatment in Cornwall and a number from members of the public.

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish a table showing the amount paid to dental practitioners in Cornwall in each of the past five years at constant prices together with the planned level of remuneration for the next three years.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information requested is shown in the table.

Gross payments to general dental practitioners (GDPs) in contract with Cornwall and Isle of Scilly family health services authority

Financial Year	Cash[1] £ million	At 1991-92 prices[2] £ million
1987-88	6·778	8·946
1988-89	7·822	9·623
1989-90	8·432	9·734
1990-91	9·608	10·272
1991-92	12·051	12·051

Notes:
[1]Based on the total of treatment and registration fees (including charges paid by patients) authorised for payment to GDPs, but excluding additional earnings such as seniority payments, vocational training allowances, and the direct reimbursement of business rates. Data for 1987-88 to 1990-91 are taken from Financial Information System returns and those for 1991-92 are taken from payments scheduled by the Dental Practice Board.
[2]Adjustment using the gross domestic product deflator.

Levels of GDP remuneration are forecast at national level. For 1992-93, we expect that the average GDP in Great Britain will have a gross income of about £88,000. The levels of gross remuneration for GDPs for 1993-94 and 1994-95 have yet to be determined.

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the basis on which payments for courses of dental treatment, materials and laboratory fees are calculated.

Dr. Mawhinney: Dentists' remuneration for national health service work is set in a process of several stages. The Review Body on Doctors' and Dentists' Remuneration (DDRB) recommends a target average net income (TANI) which it considers dentists should earn from providing NHS general dental services, and the Government decide to accept or amend the recommendation and sets the TANI.

The dental rates study group (DRSG) then forecasts the level of dentists' expenses (including materials and laboratory costs) for the coming year and adds this figure to the TANI to produce target average gross income (TAGI). TAGI is modified, if necessary, to take account of under or over-payments of net income arising from an earlier year to produce the sum due to the average dentist. Finally, the DRSG forecasts the amount of NHS work that dentists will undertake in the coming year and sets the scale of individual payments and fees, taking account of the report of its laboratory and materials joint working party, that will, given the forecast amount of work, deliver the TAGI sum due to the average dentist.

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many dental practices in Cornwall have (a) restricted the number of new NHS patients they will take on or (b) opted out of NHS dental treatment in the last 12 month period for which figures are available.

Dr. Mawhinney: Information about the number of dental practices restricting the numbers of new national health service patients is not available centrally. Dentists are independent contractors and, as such, are free to accept or refuse patients for NHS treatment. They may also practise privately, wholly or in part, if they wish. Since July 1992, one dentist out of a total of 145[1] dentists as at 30 June 1992 in Cornwall and Isles of Scilly FHSA, has asked for their name to be removed from the dental list.

[1] Includes dentists who may also have a contract with another FHSA in addition to Cornwall and Isles of Scilly FHSA.

Ms. Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to increase the number of children registered with general dental practitioners.

Dr. Mawhinney: It is for family health services authorities, working with district health authorities, to take action to encourage children to be registered with a dentist. The dental contract, introduced in 1990, encourages raised awareness and a more preventative approach to dentistry. As at November 1992, there were 7·3 million children in England registered with a General Dental Practitioner—two thirds of all children in England.

Dentistry

Ms. Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many nursing mothers received dental treatment in 1990-91 and 1991-92; and what was the average cost per patient;

(2) how many pregnant women received dental treatment in 1990-91 and 1991-92; and what was the average cost per patient.

Dr. Mawhinney: The number of courses of dental treatment for nursing mothers in England in 1991-92 was 666,816, with an average cost per course of treatment of £46·01. The number of courses of dental treatment for pregnant women in 1991-92 was 453,467, with an average cost per course of treatment was £33·78.

Figures for 1990-91 are not available.

Ms. Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the average cost per adult patient for each course of dental treatment in 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Dr. Mawhinney: The average cost per adult patient for each course of national health service treatment in 1990-91 was £35·58 and in 1991-92 it was £36·11.

Brockhall Hospital

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps were taken to set aside the terms of the lease of land at Brockhall hospital in East Lancashire which stipulated that the land and everything on it would revert to the freeholder in the event of Brockhall hospital being closed.

Mr. Sackville: The Secretary of State has no power to override the restrictive covenant attached to the leasehold interest in this land which comprises residential property, attached to Brockhall hospital. Following counsel's opinion, the regional health authority has reached a negotiated settlement with the freeholder giving security of tenure to the tenants and the health authority a full share in any redevelopment.

Hospital Freehold

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list (a) those hospitals in England where the freehold title lies other than with the NHS and (b) those hospitals that will revert to the freeholder when they are no longer used for health purposes.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not held centrally. National health service property is managed by NHS trusts, or by health authorities on behalf of the Secretary of State.

Migrants (Mental Health)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information is held by his Department concerning the incidence of mental health problems amongst migrants, particularly refugees and asylum seekers from the Horn of Africa, who are settled in Greater London.

Mr. Yeo: District health authorities are responsible for assessing the mental health needs of their populations, including immigrants, and for providing necessary services. The Department does not, therefore, routinely collect statistics or other information on the incidence of mental disorders among immigrant populations.

Departmental officials are in discussion with the Somali counselling project about its work among the Somalian community.

Disabled People

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much has been allocated by her Department to date in publicising the Children Act 1989 and the relevant guidance notes amongst organisations of and for disabled people.

Mr. Yeo: Expenditure on publicising the Children Act 1989 and associated guides was:

1989-90	3,863
1990-91	86,007
1991-92	806,271
1992-93	[1]85,756

[1] Estimated.

Information on publicity material that may have been sent to or requested by disabled people or organisations for the disabled is not available centrally.

Breast and Cervical Cancer

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will ensure that more resources are allocated for mobile units for the screening of breast and cervical cancer; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The bulk of cervical screening is performed in general practitioner surgeries or community and family planning clinics. Special facilities are therefore not necessary.

Between 1987 and 1990, the Government provided £70 million in the United Kingdom (£55 million in England) to set up and run the breast screening programme including the purchase of equipment. Current funding to meet the costs of the breast screening programme is built into health authority allocations and they should implement their breast screening programmes within the overall money allocated to them. It is for health authorities to determine whether additional resources should be made available for screening services in the light of local needs and priorities.

Abortion

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information she has regarding the prevalence of the practice of screening women prior to abortion for chlamydia.

Mr. Sackville: Information about levels of chlamydia screening is not available centrally. The decision whether or not to offer such screening prior to abortion is one for the doctor concerned.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in how many cases of abortion, in the last year for which figures are available, it was necessary to provide blood transfusions to the mother.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not collected centrally.

Care Beds

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many district health authorities have no continuing care beds.

Mr. Yeo: Information collected by the Department on numbers of geriatric beds does not separately identify those used for continuing care. Health authorities are responsible for purchasing services to meet the needs of frail elderly patients, including continuing care for those who require it.

Care Homes

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many district health authorities are providing incontinence services for people in residential care homes on the same basis as people living in their own homes; and whether a charge is made.

Mr. Yeo: The information requested is not held centrally.

Elderly People (Housing Transfers)

Ms. Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which local authorities have transferred or propose to transfer all or some of their elderly persons homes to a housing trust or association; how many homes are involved out of the total number in each local authority; and to which housing trusts or associations the homes have been or are proposed to be transferred.

Mr. Yeo: This information is not collected centrally.

Voluntary Organisations (Assistance)

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what funding under section 64 of the Health Services and Public Health Act 1968 will be made available through Liverpool health authority in 1993-94 to agencies dealing with psychiatric patients, mentally ill patients and mental handicap patients;

(2) if she will list the Liverpool agencies which under section 64 of the Health Services and Public Health Act 1968 were funded in 1992-93; how much each received; how many patients they care for; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Grants made by the Department under the section 64 general scheme are almost entirely to assist with the central administrative costs of, or to support a national project run by, a national voluntary organisation.

Health authorities also have powers to make grants under section 64. Information on such grants is not held centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman of Liverpool health authority for details.

Dentures

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total number of dentures supplied in the most recent year for which figures are available; what were the comparable figures in each of the previous 10 years; and what figures she has for upper and lower dentures.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information requested is given in the table.

	Synthetic dentures			Metal dentures
Year	Upper	Lower	Total	total
1981	998,390	730,000	1,728,390	113,740

1983	1,038,180	769,860	1,808,040	143,230

1987-88	1,010,130	736,670	1,746,800	199,400
1988-89	1,037,700	760,560	1,798,260	206,830
1989-90	883,680	625,890	1,509,570	193,700
1990-91	—	—	1,457,648	195,814
1991-92	—	—	1,536,286	199,958

Notes:

Data for 1981 to 1985 are given in calendar years. Data for 1986-87 to 1991-92 are given in financial years.

Separate figures for upper and lower synthetic dentures are not available for 1990-91 and 1991-92. Separate figures for upper and lower metal dentures are not available for any of the years quoted.

Ms. Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what advice and suggestions her Department has given to those managing community care in local authorities as to how best to appraise the effectiveness and efficiency of the services they provide.

Mr. Yeo: Local authorities and their senior social services are responsible for monitoring the services they provide. This has been strengthened with the introduction of arms-length inspection units and statutory complaints procedures both of which can contribute to quality control. They also draw on the advice, guidance and help offered by the Department. In particular, the social services inspectorate makes available its inspection reports to the authorities concerned and offers guidance on good practice. The Audit Commission has an important role in assessing the cost effectiveness of local authority provision and in drawing the attention of individual authorities to their responsibilities that need to be managed more effectively. Also, the local authority performance indicator package issued by the Audit Commission on 15 December 1992 should ensure that the public will increasingly be able to judge the effectiveness and efficiency of a wide range of local authority services.

NHS Drugs

Ms. Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the estimated cost to the national health service of prescribed but unused drugs.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not collected.

Ms. Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consideration she has given to the introduction of a triple prescription form as a means of preventing wastage of prescribed drugs.

Dr. Mawhinney: This matter is still under consideration.

DHA Mergers

47. Mr. David Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, how many applications for amalgamation she has received from district health authorities; and if she will list them.

Mr. Sackville: The Department has received 14 applications from regional health authorities to merge the following district health authorities:

Hull and East Yorkshire district health authorities

Grimsby and Scunthorpe district health authorities

Calderdale, Dewsbury and Huddersfield district health authorities

Pontefract and Wakefield district health authorities

West Suffolk and East Suffolk district health authorities

North East Essex, Mid Essex and West Essex district health authorities

Bloomsbury and Islington and Hampstead district health authorities

Southend, Basildon and Thurrock and Brentwood (part of Barking, Havering and Brentwood) district health authorities

Enfield and Haringey district health authorities

Lewisham and North Southwark, Camberwell and West Lambeth district health authorities

Brighton, Eastbourne and Hastings district health authorities

Aylesbury Vale, Wycombe and Milton Keynes district health authorities

Kingston and Esher and Richmond, Twickenham and Roehampton health authorities

North East Warwickshire and South Warwickshire health authorities.

Correspondence

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she expects to reply to the letter sent to her on 27 August 1992 by the hon. Member for Liverpool, Mossley Hill, about the killing of Lee and Nicholas Evans.

Mr. Sackville: I wrote to the hon. Member on 12 October 1992.

Patients (Transport)

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will give the criteria on which calls received by the London ambulance service are transferred to the patients transport service, after 8 pm Monday to Friday and at weekends; how many calls were transferred; how many calls were taken up by patient transport services; how many calls were of an urgent and non-urgent nature over the past three months; and over what period such statistics are available.

Mr. Sackville: Only in exceptional circumstances should calls for emergency ambulances be passed to the patient transport service. There are no records held centrally of when this may have occurred in the London ambulance service. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. James Harris, chairman of the London ambulance service, for details.

Electromagnetic Radiation

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what studies have been undertaken by Her Department into the effects of electromagnetic radiation on the uptake of calcium ions by human cells.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 15 January 1993]: No such studies have been undertaken by the Department, nor any other body so far as we are aware. Studies in the United States involving animal cells have raised the possibility of an effect of electromagnetic radiation on the uptake of calcium ions. However, subsequent work undertaken by the National Radiological Protection Board does not suggest an adverse effect. This work has recently been submitted for publication.

Premature Births

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many babies were born prematurely in the United Kingdom in the last two years; and how many of these (a) contracted advanced retinopathy, (b) received treatment for advanced retinopathy in the United Kingdom, (c) received treatment for advanced retinopathy outside the United Kingdom and (d) responded to such treatment.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 18 January 1993]: This information is not available in the form requested.

Babies who are very premature are prone to a condition known as retinopathy of prematurity, the most severe cases tending to occur in babies weighing less than 1,500 g or of 31 weeks gestation or less. In 1990 in England and Wales, the latest year for which figures are available, there were 4,827 babies of less than 1,500 g who survived the first year of life. The number affected by retinopathy of prematurity is not known, though research studies which have been carried out suggest that more than half of those weighing less than 1,500 g experience some form of retinopathy. In most cases of retinopathy of prematurity, the condition improves without recourse to treatment.

Details of the number of low birthweight babies receiving treatment for severe retinopathy either in this country or overseas are not collected centrally; nor is information collected centrally on the outcome of such treatment.

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans her Department has to sponsor or conduct research into the cause and treatment of advanced retinopathy in premature babies.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 18 January 1993]: The British Association of Perinatal Medicine and the College of Ophthalmologists have produced joint professional guidelines on the care of retinopathy of prematurity. The Department is currently discussing with the professional bodies concerned what further research studies are required to find out the extent to which this knowledge is being applied in practice.

SCOTLAND

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the (a) names, (b) occupations and (c) places of residence of (i) the vice lord-lieutenant and (ii) the deputy lords-lieutenant of the county of Renfrewshire; if he plans to make any further nominations; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 20 January]: Vice lord-lieutenants and deputy lieutenants are appointed by the lord-lieutenant, subject to Her Majesty's approbation. Current information about their occupations is not held centrally. The names and places of residence of the deputy lieutenants for Renfrewshire are as follows:—

European Forests

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what contribution Her Majesty's Government made to the fourth annual report on Europe's forests by the European Commission.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 20 January 1993]: The 1992 report on forest condition in Europe, which was produced jointly by the Commission of the European Communities and the United Nations economic commission for Europe, was based on the results of forest health surveys carried out in 1991 by the forest services of 33 European countries. In Britain, the survey was carried out by the Forestry Commission which submitted the results to the compilers of the report.

Hill Livestock

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many producers are entitled to hill livestock compensation allowances in Scotland; and what proportion of those are located in (a) severely disadvantaged and (b) disadvantaged areas.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 18 January 1993]: My Department's information relates to the number of producers receiving hill livestock compensatory allowances. Under the 1992 scheme 17,706 producers have received HLCAs of whom 16,927 are situated in severely disadvantaged areas and 779 in the disadvantaged areas.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will investigate the discrepancy between the low farm gate prices available to Scottish hill livestock producers and the high retail prices paid by consumers in the shops.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 18 January 1993]: I have no plans to do so.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement setting out the reasons for reducing levels of hill livestock compensatory allowances; and what assistance he will give the Scottish hill livestock farmers to make up the reduction in income they will sustain as a result.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 18 January 1993]: We took the decision to reduce HLCA sheep rates after a careful examination of the economic circumstances of farmers in the hills and uplands. This showed that the incomes of specialist sheep producers had risen substantially over the last two years. The reduction in HLCAs will be substantially more than offset by increases in the 1992 sheep annual premium.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many employees were engaged by Scottish hill livestock farming businesses over each of the last five years for which figures are available;

(2) what percentage of the total labour force engaged in hill livestock farming in Scotland lost their jobs over the last five years for which figures are available.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 18 January 1993]: The number of employees engaged by Scottish hill livestock businesses in each of the last five years is set out in the following table. Information is collected only on levels of employment.

Year	Number of Employees	Percentage Change
1988	6,880	—
1989	6,874	−0·1
1990	6,978	+1·5
1991	6,830	−2·1
1992	6,704	−1·8

Notes:

1. Employees include family and hired workers, full-time and part-time workers and casual/seasonal workers. Farmers and spouses are excluded.

2. All figures relate to main holdings classified as Less Favoured Areas (LFA) mainly sheep, LFA mainly cattle or LFA cattle and sheep from Scottish June 1992 census data.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish details of state-financed social payments, subsidies and other schemes to provide a supplement to income, within the common agricultural policy available to hill farmers in other EC member states.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 18 January 1993]: The information is not readily available.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the net farm income figures for Scottish hill livestock farming businesses over the past five years for which figures are available at constant prices shown as a percentage of average full time manual earnings for the same period.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 18 January 1993]: Information on net farm incomes of hill livestock farm businesses and average full-time manual earnings, in money and real terms, over the last five years is set out in the following table. Net farm income is not a measure of the direct cash earnings that farmers receive and hence is not comparable with average manual earnings.

	Net farm income All hill livestock farms[1] (£ per farm)		Average full-time manual earnings (male) (£ per male worker)

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number and proportion of farmers in Scotland who receive hill livestock compensatory allowance payments.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 18 January 1993]: Under the 1992 HLCA scheme a total of 17,706 producers received payments. That represents 85 per cent. of occupiers of main holdings in Scotland from the June 1992 agricultural census.

Livestock Producers

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate the level of average net farm income available to Scottish livestock producers in 1993 and 1994.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 18 January 1993]: We will shortly be announcing net farm income figures for 1992-93. The level of net farm incomes in 1993 and 1994 cannot be predicted since it will depend on a number of factors, including market returns in those years.

Land

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what hectarage of land in Scotland is in (a) less-favoured areas, (b) severly disadvantaged areas and (c) disadvantaged areas; what proportion of land in Scotland each figure represents; and how many farmers are involved.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 18 January 1993]: Information on agricultural land within the less favoured area is in the following table. The agricultural census collects information on occupiers of main holdings rather than on farmers. Information is not collected separately for severely disadvantaged and disadvantaged areas because of the small number of main holdings in the latter category.

	Scotland	Within LFA boundary	Within LFA boundary as a percentage of Scotland per cent.

Occupiers	20,724	15,562	75

Road Traffic Accidents

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many people have been charged by Scottish police forces for failing to report and stop at the scene of a road traffic accident, in each of the last five years; and if he will give a regional breakdown of these figures;

(2) how many people have been prosecuted for failing to report and stop at the scene of a road traffic accident, in each of the last five years; and if he will give a regional breakdown of these figures.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 19 January 1993]: The information is not available in the form requested. Table (i) gives the total number of offences under section 170 of the Road Traffic Act 1988, and corresponding earlier legislation, which were cleared up by Scottish police forces. Table (ii) gives the number of offences under section 170 of the Road Traffic Act 1988, and corresponding earlier legislation, which were proceeded against. Section 170 of the Road Traffic Act 1988 includes both failing to stop or report a road traffic accident and also failing to provide proof of insurance.

Scottish Homes (Rents)

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what would the average Scottish Homes rent have been if rents had increased only by the rate of inflation in every year since the establishment of Scottish Homes; and what is average rent of Scottish Homes for 1992-93;

(2) what is the amount in cash and real terms by which Scottish Homes has raised its average rents since its establishment;

(3) what percentage of Scottish Homes tenants received housing benefit in each year since the establishment of Scottish Homes;

(4) what is the percentage amount by which Scottish Homes has raised rents in each year since its establishment; and what was the rate of inflation in each of those years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 19 January 1993]: The information is set out in the table.

Mental Hospitals

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many beds in mental hospitals were (a) closed and (b) negotiated to close in 1992 in each health board area.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 19 January 1993]: From a total of 17,631 mental health beds in Scotland, 1,336 were closed in 1992. Some of these will have been replaced by contracts with private or voluntary sector providers, but precise information is not held centrally. Health boards are constantly reviewing their assessment of need, consequently separate figures for negotiated closures are not available.

Alcohol and Drug Abuse

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will publish a table showing the total grant available from his Department (a) in total, (b) in revenue and (c) in capital towards the provision of (1) residential facilities and (2) non-residential facilities for (i) people with alcohol problems and (ii) people with drug problems in 1992-93 and 1993-94;

(2) if he will publish a table showing the total grant paid by his Department (a) in total, (b) in revenue and (c) in capital towards the provision of (1) residential facilities and (2) non-residential facilities for (i) people with alcohol problems and (ii) people with drug problems in each of the past five years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 20 January 1993]: Funding is provided directly and indirectly by the Scottish Office for alcohol and drug misuse projects in a number of ways. Many projects are funded by health boards either from their general allocations or the funds, totalling £2·4 million in 1992-93, specifically allocated for drug misuse. Other projects are funded by local authorities. Details of funding from all sources could be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, information, as set out in the tables, is available on funding by the Scottish Office for residential and non-residential facilities provided by voluntary sector organisations under section 10 of the Social Work (Scotland) Act 1968 and under the urban programme for the years 1987-88 to 1992-93. Figures for 1993-94 are not yet available.

Shetlands (Oil Pollution)

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has finalised the arrangements for the bridging fund to assist local businesses in Shetland affected by the recent incident involving the MV 'Braer'.

Mr. Lang [pursuant to his answer, of 21 January 1993, c. 411-12.]: The bridging fund scheme is a new service for which parliamentary approval will be sought in a supplementary estimate for the local environmental services and housing, Scotland vote—class XV, vote 6. Pending that approval, urgent expenditure estimated at £3 million will be met by repayable advances from the contingencies fund.

PRIME MINISTER

Disabled People

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Prime Minister what plans he has to introduce legislation to outlaw discrimination against disabled people in access to employment, training, education, leisure, transport, public buildings and shops; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: We have no plans to introduce generalised anti-discrimination legislation because we foresee problems in both approach and implementation. However, as I have made clear in the past, we are continuing to work to eliminate unjustified discrimination against people on the ground of their disability. We believe that this is best achieved by education and persuasion backed up by targeted legislation to address specific problems.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Prime Minister what progress has been made by Departments in implementing the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986; what plans he has to implement the outstanding sections; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Most of the major provisions of the Act have now been implemented, bringing substantial benefits to disabled people and their carers. The requirements of the non-implemented sections of the Act are now, to a very large extent, reflected in the Department of Health's new and wide-ranging reforms of community care, which demonstrate our commitment to high quality care responsive to the needs and wishes of service users and carers. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health will review the need to implement these sections in the light of several years' experience of the community care arrangements.

Scottish Constitution

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 14 January, Official Report, column 790, if he will list those individuals and organisations that he has consulted when taking stock of the governance of Scotland since April 1992.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for East Lothian (Mr. Home Robertson) on 11 January 1993 at column 552.

Iraq

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister what discussions Her Majesty's Government held with the Governments of (a) Egypt and (b) Syria on the efficacy of military intervention in Iraq; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Since the invasion of Kuwait we have had frequent discussions with the Egyptians and Syrians on the situation in Iraq. We have discussed the allies' latest military action in Iraq with Egyptian and Syrian officials.

Ministerial Residences

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Prime Minister what was the cost in 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93 of each of the official country residences owned by the Government broken down into (a) housekeeping, (b) catering/hospitality, (c) maintenance and (d) other costs; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 20 January 1993]: Chequers, Dorneywood and Chevening are not owned by the Government.

Chequers is administered as an independent trust, which receives an annual grant from public funds towards the maintenance of Chequers. In the three years concerned the grant has been:

1990-91	238,000
1991-92	244,000
1992-93	260,000

The Government also contribute to the costs of household staff at Chequers, but this information is not separately identifiable.

The maintenance and staff expenses of Chevening house are met by the Chevening trust. The total cost to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office for housekeeping, catering/hospitality and other costs in the three years concerned has been:

1990-91	4,374
1991-92	7,984
1992-93	9,451

In addition, other Government Departments use Chevening from time to time for meetings or seminars, for which they pay separately.

Dorneywood is administered by a trust fund. Its upkeep does not involve any cost to the Treasury.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Tobacco Industry

Mr. A. Cecil Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the number of people directly employed in the tobacco industry in Northern Ireland at the latest date; and what proportion of manufacturing jobs this represents in the province.

Mr. Atkins: I shall write to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Holiday Accommodation

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will meet the Association of British Travel Agents to discuss dangerous holiday accommodation abroad.

Mr. Leigh: I see no need for such a meeting. The Association of British Travel Agents already offers comprehensive advice to its members regarding the maintenance of high standards of safety in holiday accommodation.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions he has had with United Kingdom tour operators about the safety of foreign accommodation offered to package holidaymakers.

Mr. Leigh: I have had no such discussions. There is already comprehensive guidance for tour operators in this area.

Chambers of Commerce

Mr. Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what consultations he has had with the Association of British Chambers of Commerce regarding the proposed setting up of core chambers of commerce; what time scale he is proposing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade has consulted extensively with representatives of the Association of British Chambers of Commerce (ABCC) regarding its proposals to set up core chambers of commerce.

The Government support the objectives of the ABCC as set out in its development strategy. Chambers provide a valuable focus for information and support for business. However, coverage is currently patchy and there is considerable untapped potential for chambers to achieve economies of scale. I believe that the establishment of core chambers, and their closer co-operation with other business support organisations to develop one-stop shop business advice centres in each area, will lead to a major improvement in the quality of the support provided to companies.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what criteria he has agreed with the Association of British Chambers of Commerce for financial contributions from his departmental funds towards the cost of development executives; and for what length of time such contributions will be available.

Mr. Leigh: The Government support the objectives of the Association of British Chambers of Commerce (ABCC) to set up a coherent network of chambers, as set out in their development strategy. In each case for which funding is required, the President of the Board of Trade will expect to be satisfied that the proposal is consistent with realising this strategy.

Subject to this condition, my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade has agreed with the ABCC that he is prepared to fund half the cost of a development officer in each of the core chambers for up two years. The chambers have to fund the remaining 50 per cent. of the cost, and the whole of any continuing cost after the initial two-year appointment.

Trading Standards Service

Mr. Stern: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what proposals he has to alter the basis of funding the trading standards service;

(2) if he will institute an inquiry into the extent to which the trading standards service is fulfilling the functions for which it was set up;

(3) if he will make a statement on increasing central co-ordination of the trading standards service;

Mr. Leigh: I keep the funding and performance of the trading standards service under review and, together with the Secretaries of State for Scotland, for Wales and for the Environment, have given, and will continue to give, careful consideration to the service in the context of the review of local government. There are at present no proposals for action on the lines suggested by the hon. Member. However, if he has any concerns about the service, the noble Baroness Denton of Wakefield, the Minister for Consumer Affairs, will be pleased to consider them.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what plans he has to publish a charter for the trading standards service.

Mr. Leigh: I have been asked to reply.

I keep the funding and performance of the trading standards service under review and, together with the Secretaries of State for Scotland, for Wales and for the Environment, have given, and will continue to give, careful consideration to the service in the context of the review of local government. There are at present no proposals for action on the lines suggested by the hon. Member. However, if he has any concerns about the service, the Noble Baroness Denton of Wakefield, the Minister for Consumer Affairs, will be pleased to consider them.

Supergun Launcher Systems

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment his Department has made of the peaceful uses of supergun launcher systems in delivering satellites into earth orbit.

Mr. Leigh: My Department is aware of work being performed in the United States of America, which is aimed at demonstrating that small payloads can be put into Earth orbit using a supergun launcher and of European patent applications of a similar nature. However, my Department has not made a detailed study of the viability of these proposals. Any assessment in this field would be carried out in conjunction with our partners within the European Space Agency.

Patent Law

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what efforts he is making to bring about greater harmonisation of international patent law.

Mr. Leigh: There is already considerable harmonisation of substantive patent law in Europe. In a wider arena, my officials have been very active in the negotiations for an international treaty on patent law harmonisation which have taken place under the auspices of the World Intellectual Property Organisation and will take a committed part in the diplomatic conference to be held in July this year in order to reach agreement on the treaty. They have also taken an active part in discussions at Community level on a directive to harmonise the legal protection of biotechnological inventions.

Post Office

Mr. Colvin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when his review of the future organisation and structure of the Post Office will be complete; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh: The review will be completed in due course. We will then be in a position to make a statement to the House.

Price Marking Order 1991

Mr. Hanson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to amend the 1991 Price Marking Order, implemented under European Community directive 88/314/EEC.

Mr. Leigh: My Department is currently discussing the way forward with interested parties.

Girobank

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether he was consulted about Girobank's recent withdrawal of a small firms export credit support scheme: whether this, or similar matters, was set out as a service obligation in the sale of Girobank; and what those service obligations now are.

Mr. Leigh: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade was not consulted about Girobank's provision of export credit schemes, nor would he expect to be. The sale agreement between the Post Office and the Alliance and Leicester Building Society in respect of Girobank did not specify the future of particular Girobank services. Subject only to regulation under the Banking Act 1987, the provision of services by Girobank, as any other bank, is a matter for its commercial judgment.

Manufacturing Industry

Mr. Hendry: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what financial assistance his Department gives to manufacturing industry.

Mr. Leigh: My Department runs or supports a wide range of schemes and services providing assistance to manufacturing businesses. The majority of these involve direct financial assistance.

Together the full range of services provide a comprehensive package for business, including help with the provision of expert advice in key management areas such as quality or manufacturing systems; help towards the cost of consultancy to assist businesses plan their use of advanced manufacturing technology; grant support to develop innovative ideas; help with exporting; and special financial assistance for businesses in assisted areas and urban programme areas.

Small Firms

Mr. Hendry: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assistance is available from his Department to help companies with fewer than 100 employees.

Mr. Leigh: My Department operates the following measures of support for small and medium-sized firms:

the Enterprise Initiative Consultancy Scheme;
the Small Firms Loan Guarantee Scheme;
the Small Firms Merit Award for Research and Technology;
Support for Products Under Research;
Regional Enterprise Grants (Investment);
Regional Enterprise Grants (Innovation);
Export Marketing Research Scheme;
Your Business Success;
Graduate Enterprise;

The criteria for determining the eligibility of a company to take advantage of each of these forms of assistance varies from scheme to scheme.

My Department also provides funding for development work which aims to benefit small firms and produces a wide range of publications aimed at small businesses.

During 1993 my Department will start support for up to 15 pilot schemes which will provide businesses with a single point of access to information and advice.

From April 1993 my Department will take over responsibility from the Employment Department for funding training and enterprise councils (TECs) to provide a wide range of business support services to help small businesses.

In addition, small businesses can, of course, take advantage of other business support programmes provided for firms of all sizes.

Leg Irons

Mr. McMaster: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his current policy on the manufacture of leg irons in the United Kingdom and the export of such products; if any prosecutions are pending for such practices; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: I have no plans relating to the manufacture of leg irons: they are not used by the police and prison services in the United Kingdom, and my Department, which tightened export controls in this area last year, will not issue a licence for their export under the Export of Goods (Control) Order. I am not aware of any breach of the order in respect of leg irons nor of any prosecution involving their export.

Sovereign Debt

Mr. Meacher: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if doubtful sovereign debt held by the Export Credits Guarantee Department is provisioned in accordance with guidelines established by the Bank of England.

Mr. Needham: I can confirm that the provisions for unrecovered claims in respect of political risk in ECGD's trading accounts are assessed using the Bank of England provisioning matrix. ECGD's 1991-92 trading accounts are due to be laid before the House on 28 January.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will provide details regarding levels of sovereign debt held by the Export Credits Guarantee Department.

Mr. Needham: The Export Credits Guarantee Department's 1991-92 annual report, which is due to be laid before the House on 28 January, provides a detailed breakdown of its sovereign debt.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will provide details regarding sovereign debt held by the Export Credits Guarantee Department offered for sale in the secondary debt market.

Mr. Needham: The agreement amongst Paris club group of creditors currently allows the Export Credits Guarantee Department to consider sales of sovereign debt in the following markets:

Benin
Bolivia
Cameroon
Congo
Cote D'Ivoire
Ecuador
Egypt
Ethiopia
Guinea Republic
Jamaica
Jordan
Mali
Morocco
Nicaragua
Niger
Nigeria
Peru
Phillipines
Poland
Senegal
Sierra Leone
Tanzania
Togo
Uganda
Zambia

Rescheduled Debt

Mr. Meacher: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will provide details on the proportion of rescheduled official bilateral debt that may be sold on the secondary debt market by the Export Credits Guarantee Department under the auspices of the Trinidad terms.

Mr. Needham: The agreement amongst Paris club group of creditors allows for either US $10 million or 10 per cent. of a creditors exposure, whichever is the greater, to be sold or swapped for local investment.

EC Regulations

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what will be the terms of reference for the scrutiny into the way in which EC regulations impact upon business.

Mr. Heseltine: The terms of reference are as follows:

To investigate the formulation, implementation and enforcement of EC law with the aim of securing legislation which is necessary and proportionate and;

—minimises the burdens on British business and sustains its international competitiveness; and —is least intrusive in the lives of British citizens.

Specific areas to be addressed will include:

—whether the burden for business is kept to the minimum necessary to comply with EC requirements;

—the difficulties in interpreting EC law;

—the timing and content of implementing legislation;

—whether the views of business are properly taken into account;

—whether the views of United Kingdom enforcement agencies are taken into account;

—whether Ministers are kept fully aware of implementation and enforcement issues; and —the proportionally of enforcement practice.

These issues will be examined in the context of at least the following case studies:

—Meat hygiene (as implemented by the 1990 Food Safety Act)

—Health and Safety (Framework and Subordinate directives)

—Personal Protective Equipment directive.

The scrutiny will recommend improvements procedures to be followed in negotiating EC law, in implementing EC legislation in United Kingdom law, and in enforcing the United Kingdom law.

The scrutiny will report to Ministers within the 90 working days which are allowed under efficiency scrutiny guidelines.

I will be the supervising Minister for the scrutiny. The scrutiny team will be advised by a steering group which will include private sector members.

Electricity Generators

Mr. Hardy: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the recent report by OFFER on electricity purchasing with respect to the treatment of (a) the actual costs of generating and (b) the position of coal-fired generators; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The contents of OFFER's report will be taken into account in the Government's coal review along with other evidence and submissions.

Coal Review

Mr. Clappison: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to publish the consultants' reports commissioned as part of the coal review.

Mr. Heseltine: I announced on 20 November that I had appointed consultants to report as part of the coal review. John T. Boyds was to examine the viability of each of the 21 pits proposed for closure last October, and not subject to the statutory consultation process being undertaken by British Coal; Ernst & Young was to investigate the competitiveness of British Coal as an organisation; Caminus Energy Ltd. was to investigate the markets for coal; and PIMS Associates Ltd. was to examine British Coal's costs and productivity in comparison with international benchmarks. Caminus and Boyds have, in addition, jointly produced a summary of their reports.

I sent copies of all these reports and the summary to the Chairman of the Trade and Industry Select Committee yesterday, and am arranging for them to be published today. I have placed a copy of my letter together with copies of the reports and the summary in the Library.

Computer Games (Epilepsy)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what consultations he has had with toys and games retailers and manufacturers concerning the dangers of photo-sensitive epilepsy induced by computer games;

(2) what representations he has received in relation to the dangers of photo-sensitive epilepsy in children induced by use of computer games;

(3) what proposals he has to introduce a compulsory health warning on the dangers of photo-sensitive epilepsy on the packaging of computer games.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 13 January 1993]: My Department is aware of recent cases of children reported to have suffered epileptic seizures while playing with computer games. We are holding urgent discussions with industry representatives and others to ascertain what information and advice should be made available to consumers and how best this might be achieved.

One-stop Shops

Mr. Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) if he will make a statement on one-stop shops for business and technology information dissemination; what proposals he has to grant aid such one-stop shops; and what arrangements he will make to monitor and evaluate their progress;

(2) if he will make a statement on the local dissemination of business and technology information; and when he expects to announce pilot projects to further such local dissemination.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 14 January 1993]: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade made a statement in the House on 3 December 1992 announcing the publication of a prospectus seeking competitive bids for the establishment of up to 15 pilot one-stop shops in England.

I understand that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales, who has responsibility for Welsh matters, is separately considering the business enterprise and support arrangements in Wales.

One-stop shop bids will be submitted to DTI by 29 January 1993 and I will be announcing the pilot areas in mid-March 1993.

DTI will provide grant aid as a contribution towards meeting the additional costs of establishing pilot shops for a period of up to three financial years.

The progress of the pilots will be closely monitored and will be the subject of a detailed evaluation. If the initial pilots are as successful as I expect, a further round of bids will take place in 1993-94 and a national network of one-stop shops will be established as quickly as possible.

Staff Documents

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what procedures his Department has to alert staff to the existence of documents which affect their work but are not circulated for security reasons.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 14 January 1993]: My Department distributes such documents to the appropriate officials, who are alerted by telephone in urgent cases.

Warren Spring Laboratory

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many persons of all grades, scientific and non-scientific, worked in marine pollution-related activities at Warren Spring laboratory in 1979, 1985, 1990, 1991 and 1992; and if he will give conveniently available figures on the public expenditure on such work during those years.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 14 January 1993]: The information requested is as follows:

	Number of persons	Total cost of work (£ thousands)
		£ Thousand
1979-80	12	385
1985-86	17	830
1990-91	13	1,075
1991-92	8	670

Royal Family

Mr. Hain: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if, following the planned privatisation of Parcelforce, members of the royal family will continue to receive free use of its services.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 18 January 1993]: Following my right hon. Friend's announcement on 15 July of his intention to privatise Parcelforce, the arrangements for parcels services for the royal family is one of the many issues which will be studied carefully.

Mr. Hain: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the total annual cost of free postage provided (a) to Her Majesty the Queen and (b) to each other individual member of the royal family so entitled.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 18 January 1993]: The provision of free postage services to members of the royal family is primarily to enable the royal household to deal with mail from the public, congratulatory messages to mark diamond weddings and one hundredth birthdays, and to maintain communications when Her Majesty the Queen is out of London.

The Post Office has no statistics on the annual cost of these services which are provided, to a varying extent, to Her Majesty the Queen and 15 other members of the royal family.

Microwave Frequency Transmissions

Mr. Purchase: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what publicly funded research has been carried out regarding the biological effects of microwave frequency transmissions; if he will fund a study into the type of equipment being installed on or near high-rise residential blocks in Wolverhampton; and if he will publish the results of any such research;

(2) what assessment he has made of the impact of biological penetration from personal communication network range frequencies on all life-forms which have come into close proximity with such equipment; and if he will publish his conclusions.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 18 January 1993]: The National Radiological Protection Board (NRPB) has responsibility for advising United Kingdom Government Departments on standards of protection for exposure to non-ionising radiation. Recent reports from that body indicate that, at the lower frequencies associated with these installations, there is no firm epidemiological evidence of the existence of a carcinogenic hazard. My Department is currently helping to fund a joint research study, managed by the NRPB, into the possible effects of exposure to mobile telephone transmissions.

Parcelforce

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what provision he has made to ensure that free postal and parcel services for literature and tapes for the visually impaired are retained following the sale of Parcelforce.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 19 January 1993]: Both Royal Mail and Parcelforce provide certain free postal and parcel services for the visually impaired. Such provision will continue in the future although the details of how this will be done have yet to be settled.

Coal Industry

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the criteria to be employed by Boyds in assessing the viability of the 10 pits listed for immediate closure; and if he will list the criteria employed by Boyds in respect of the other 21 pits listed for closure.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 21 January 1993]: Boyds is required to consider for each of the 10 pits whether the criteria for closure announced on 19 October (currently loss-making and no prospect of viability in the foreseeable future) are met. Its conclusions will be based on an inspection of each of the 10 pits and evaluation in respect of each mine of:

(i) financial information for the current financial year;
(ii) available coal reserve base;
(iii) near-term capital requirements;
(iv) estimated future operating costs;
(v) estimated future income.

A copy of the full terms of reference of the Boyds' study of the 10 pits is available in the Library of the House.

In respect of the 21 pits, I refer to the reply my right hon. Friend, the President of the Board of Trade, gave to my hon. Friend for Waveney (Mr. Porter) on 20 November at column 433.

Offences Against Businesses

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was (a) the total number of offences against businesses committed in England and Wales in 1991 and (b) the total loss incurred by businesses as a result of those offences.

Mr. Jack: The information is not collected centrally.

Fines

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he intends to take to ensure that all an individual's assets and income are taken into account by the court in assessing the level of unit fine under the Criminal Justice Act 1991.

Mr. Jack: The Criminal Justice Act 1991 already requires magistrates courts to take the whole of an individual's income, including income from assets, into account in assessing an offender's weekly disposable income for the purpose of determining the value of a unit in accordance with the provisions of section 18 of the Act, as well as such other information relating to an offender's means as appears to the court to be relevant. A specific exception is made for child benefit.

Under section 20 of the Criminal Justice Act 1991, a court may order a convicted person to provide the court with a statement of means. Failure to do so is an offence punishable by a fine of up to £1,000. Provision of false information or omission of any material fact is an offence punishable by a fine of up to £2,500.

Remand Prisoners (Escorts)

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in what circumstances police forces may charge health authorities or trusts to escort prisoners in custody on remand but who are, during their custody, in the care of health authorities or trusts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The escorting of such patients is the responsibility of the health authority or trust concerned. Existing guidance makes it clear that they are free to seek police assistance with escorting if the circumstances appear to require this. Section 15 of the Police Act 1964 gives police authorities power to make charges for services which go beyond normal policing activity. We are currently reviewing guidance on this subject.

Pools Coupons

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has as to what proportion of pools clients prefer to use lucky numbers rather than skill in making their bets on pools coupons.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No estimate has been made of the proportion of football pools clients who employ "lucky" numbers when making their selection on pools coupons. The fact remains, however, that the law requires the pools to take the form of a forecasting competition, in which there is an opportunity for clients who wish to do so to exercise skill and judgment in making their forecasts.

Remand Prisons

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the average length of time that women have been held on remand in prisons in England and Wales since 1985.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The latest information is given in the table.

Average time spent in custody by female untried and convicted unsentenced prisoners in Prison Service establishments, 1985-91.

Year	Average Number of Days in Custody
	Untried Prisoners[1][3]	Convicted Unsentenced Prisoners[2][3]

[2]Time spent in Prison Service establishments after conviction.
[3]Averages are subject to wide variation because of the small populations on which they are based.
[4]Data for 1991 is provisional.

These figures are published annually in "Prison Statistics, England and Wales", chapter 2, table 2.1, of the volume for 1990, Cm 1800.

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many women are currently being held on remand in prisons (a) in England and Wales and (b) in London.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The table shows how many unsentenced females were in prison service establishments on 19 January. Of these Holloway prison is the only establishment in London.

Establishment	Number
Holloway	200
Low Newton	13
New Hall	32
Pucklechurch	28
Risley	63
TOTAL	336

The numbers shown cover all females, both adults and young persons, remanded in custody by magistrates courts, committed for trial to the Crown court and convicted but not sentenced.

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of women held on remand in prisons in England and Wales since 1985 have been acquitted of the charges for which they were held in detention.

Mr. Jack: It is estimated that about 17 per cent. of females held in custody on remand since 1985 have subsequently been acquitted.

Police Custody

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have been kept overnight in police custody following being charged, before being released on unopposed conditional magistrates bail the following day in each of the Welsh police authority areas in 1991-92.

Mr. Jack: This information is not held centrally and could be compiled by the individual police forces only at disproportionate cost.

New Age Travellers

Mr. Jonathan Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to publish his proposals for dealing with the public order issues raised by the activities of new age travellers.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My right hon. and learned Friend hopes to make an announcement shortly.

Police Officers (Assaults)

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures are being taken to reduce the level of violent assaults against police officers.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Home Office police scientific development branch undertakes a full programme of evaluation of new equipment and improvements to existing equipment. Recent work includes an examination of stab-resistant clothing. In order that their work might be better informed, my right hon. and learned Friend has commissioned an investigation into the circumstances in which police officers are assaulted.

Terrorism (Central London)

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police for the Metropolis indicating how many police officers have been withdrawn from service in the London borough of Greenwich in each of the last two years in order to increase the police presence in the central London area in response to the threat of terrorist activities.

Mr. Charles Wardle: It is not our practice to disclose details of resources devoted to combating terrorism.

Police Recruitment

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures are being taken to ensure recruits into the police force are of the highest quality.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The responsibilty for making appointments to the police service lies solely with the chief officer of the police force concerned. All applicants are required to sit the police initial recruitment test, which was revised in 1991 and which is designed to test the precise abilities and attributes which are necessary for a successful career in the service.

The accelerated promotion scheme for graduates, which offers places to young officers who are looking to rise rapidly to the higher ranks in the service, is also highly selective, with high standards.

Data Protection

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to make representations to the European Community to enable exemptions to be granted to charities from the provisions of the current European Community directive on processing of personal data.

Mr. Jack: The Government are seeking, in discussion with their European Community partners, to ensure that the directive makes proper allowance for the needs of charities and other data users, and does not go beyond the 1981 Council of Europe convention on data processing on which the Data Protection Act 1984 is based.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Fissile Material Stocks

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has regarding the quantities of fissile material stocks held by (a) each of the other four acknowledged nuclear weapons states, (b) Israel and (c) India.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: This information is not available.

Nazi Persecution

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many outstanding claims for compensation from victims of Nazi persecution are known to his Department.

Mr. Garel-Jones: No claim remains outstanding. There was a scheme between 1964-66, when a British tribunal disbursed £1 million to compensate victims of Nazi persecution held at concentration camps during the second world war. All cases were settled and the scheme closed in 1966. It is not now possible to reconsider cases nor to consider new claims.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the claims for compensation by Mr. Ted Roberts and Mr. Arthur Thomas, held by the Nazis at Drancy.

Mr. Garel-Jones: Between 1964 and 1966, a British tribunal disbursed £1 million in a scheme to compensate the victims of Nazi persecution held at concentration camps. The funds were fully disbursed and the scheme closed in 1966. Mr. Roberts's claim failed to meet the criteria and was turned down in 1964. Mr. Thomas made his claim known to the Department only recently. It is not now possible to admit new claims or to reconsider cases settled by the tribunal.

Plutonium

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the development of an international plutonium store to enhance non-proliferation.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We give careful consideration to any proposal which may contribute to international efforts to prevent proliferation.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the nuclear proliferation implications of the planned stockpiling of military usable plutonium by Japan over the next decade.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Japan, as a non-nuclear weapon state party to the treaty on the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons, has undertaken a formal binding commitment not to develop nuclear weapons and has concluded a fullscope safeguards agreement with the International Atomic Energy Agency. We are satisfied that plutonium held by Japan will be covered by such safeguards, but we understand that it is Japan's intention to avoid the accumulation of stockpiles.

Government Communications Headquarters

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received about security arrangements at the GCHQ base in the Blackdown Hills, Somerset.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: None.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what measures he has taken to assure himself of the efficiency and effectiveness of the security arrangements at the GCHQ base in the Blackdown Hills, Somerset.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs is satisfied that the security arrangements in place at the composite signals organisation station at Culmhead meet prescribed national standards for the protection of classified material.

Serbia

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has of breaches of sanctions against Serbia by companies based in member states of the Community other than Greece.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Nations sanctions committee in New York has not confirmed any sanctions breach by a company based in a member state of the Community other than Greece.

Mr. Mohd Iftikhar

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he now expects a decision to be taken by the United Kingdom post in Islamabad on the entry clearance application by Mr. Mohd Iftikhar—ref. TH/20617/92—to join his wife in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In the absence of any information about this case, I have asked the high commission in Islamabad for a full report. I shall arrange for the hon. Member to receive a substantive reply from the migration and visa correspondence unit of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office as soon as possible.

Kuwait

Mr. Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what advice his Department is currently giving to United Kingdom subjects working and living in Kuwait; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The current Foreign and Commonwealth Office consular travel advice for Kuwait is:

"In view of heightened tension in the area, British nationals visiting Kuwait should exercise caution. In particular they are strongly advised not to travel anywhere near the border with Iraq. It would be easy and very dangerous to cross inadvertently. Anyone who has to travel north of the Mutla Ridge should consult HM Consul, British Embasy, Kuwait City (Tel. 240 3334–6 or 240 3324–7) in advance.

British nationals travelling anywhere outside Kuwait City should take care, and let someone know where they are going. There are dangers from unexploded ordnance. Even where officially cleared, beaches and picnic spots should be avoided because of mines.

Visitors are advised to register with the Embassy on arrival."

Nuclear Test Ban

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the resumption of negotiations towards a comprehensive test ban treaty is now considered to be in the United Kingdom's security interests; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Garel-Jones: We have long made plain our support for the ultimate goal of a comprehensive test ban, but we have also emphasised our belief that this can be approached only on a step-by-step basis. In particular, we have drawn attention to the problems of verification, and have been actively involved in discussing these issues in the conference on disarmament, in Geneva.

Iraq

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which United Nations Security Council resolutions specifically authorised each of the allied coalition military attacks on Iraq in the current year, pursuant to chapter VII of the United Nations charter.

Mr. Hogg: The Security Council determined in its statements of 8 and 11 January that Iraq was in material breach of resolution 687 and its related resolutions, and warned Iraq that serious consequences would ensue from continued failure to comply with its obligations. Resolution 687 lays down the terms for the formal ceasefire between the coalition states and Iraq at the end of the hostilities mandated by the Security Council in resolution 678. These terms are binding in themselves but have also been specifically accepted by Iraq as a condition for the formal ceasefire to come into effect. In the light of Iraq's continued breaches of Security Council resolution 687 and thus of the ceasefire terms, and the repeated warnings given by the Security Council and members of the coalition, their forces were entitled to take necessary and proportionate action in order to ensure Iraqi compliance with those terms.

The purpose of the no-fly zones in Northern and Southern Iraq is to monitor compliance by Iraq with United Nations Security Council resolution 688 in areas in which there are circumstances of extreme humanitarian need. Iraq has been warned frequently not to interfere with allied aircraft in the zones. Such aircraft have the inherent right of self-defence against Iraqi threats to their safety. Attacks against Iraqi missile systems and associated command and control centres were necessary and proportionate responses in self-defence to such threats.

Somalia

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received of the talks between the different factions of southern Somalia; and if he will list (a) the positive decisions reached and (b) the issues that remain to be resolved.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 19 January 1993]: We have received regular reports on the recent meeting of Somali factions in Addis Ababa. The factions have agreed in principle:

(i) on a cease fire;
(ii) to hold a National Reconciliation Conference, probably on 15 March in Addis Ababa;
(iii) on the establishment of an ad hoc committee to continue discussion, in particular over the participation and the agenda for reconciliation conference;
(iv) on the disarmament of heavy weapons;
(v) on the encampment of factional militias.

The agreement leaves key issues for discussion by an ad hoc committee. Conference attendance in particular is likely to be contentious. Implementation on the ground of the cease fire, disarmament and emcampment too will be a complex and difficult task.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the representatives who attended the meeting of Somali factions which ended on 13 January; and what assistance to the peace process was given by (a) the United Nations, (b) the United States of America, (c) the EC and (d) Britain.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 19 January 1993]: The recent meeting of Somali factions in Addis Ababa was arranged by the United Nations. We, the EC, and the United States have consistently supported the United Nations peace initiative in Somalia. The following representatives of Somali factions attend the meeting.

1. Somali Africans Muki Organisation (SAMO)
   Mr. Mohamed Ramadan Arbow, Chairman
2. Somali Democratic Alliance (SDA)
   Mr. Mohamed Farah Abudllahi, Chairman
3. Somali Democratic Movement (SDM)[1]
   Mr. Abdi Muse Mayow, Chairman
   Colonel Mohamed Nur Aliyou, Chairman[1]
4. Somali National Democratic Union (SNDU)
   Mr. Ali Ismael Abdi, Chairman
5. Somali National Front (SNF)
   General Omar Hagi Mohamed Hersi, Chairman
6. Somali National Union (SNU)
   Dr. Mohamed Ragis Mohamed, Chairman
7. Somali Patriotic Movement (SPM)[1]
   General Aden Abdillahi Noor, Chairman
8. Somali Patriotic Movement (SPM)[1]
   Colonel Ahmed Omar Jess, Chairman
9. Somali Salvation Democratic Front (SSDF)
   General Mohamed Abshir Musse, Chairman
10. Southern Somali National Movement (SSNM)
    Colonel Abdi Warsame Isaaq, Chairman
11. United Somali Congress (USC)[1]
    General Mohamed Farah Aidid, Chairman
12. United Somali Congress (USC)[1]
    Mr. Mohamed Qanyare Afrah, Chairman
13. United Somali Front (USF)
    Mr. Abdurahman Dualeh Ali, Chairman
14. United Somali Party (USP)
    Mr. Mohamed Abdi Hashi, Chairman

[1] The USC, SPM and the SDM were divided into different factions owing different allegiances.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what arrangements have been made to include the traditional elders in Somalia in the March negotiations and in relief and reconstruction plans; and what plans he has to reduce the role of the warlords.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have made it clear to the United Nations that the reconciliation process and the development of rehabilitation plans must involve all sections of Somali society, particularly the traditional elders. Implementation of Security Council resolution 794 has reduced the ability of the warloads to hinder aid deliveries.

Liberia

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the Security Council's special representative has yet reported back to the Council with his evaluation of the situation in Liberia under resolution 788; what further steps are being considered; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The United Nations Secretary-General's special envoy, Mr. Gordon-Somers, has reported informally to the Security Council on his visit to Liberia. He has now returned to Liberia. The Secretary-General is expected to deliver his report on Mr. Gordon-Somers's evaluation to the Security Council in the last week of January. We would not wish to anticipate that report.

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he is taking to monitor developments of incursions of rebel forces from Liberia into Sierra Leone; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have been monitoring Liberian rebel incursions into Seirra Leone through our high commission in Freetown. Our defence adviser in Accra visits Sierra Leone regularly.

TRANSPORT

Driving Tests

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what was the proportion of those passing driving tests at the first time of taking in each of the last 10 years;

(2) how many people successfully completing driving tests at the first time of taking in Wales in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Information on first-time passes is not collated regularly. Surveys carried out by the Transport Research Laboratory from time to time provide information on first-time pass rates for Great Britain.

Aircraft (Air Circulation)

Mr. Fry: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what guidelines from the Civil Aviation Authority or his Department exist for the circulation rates of air in aircraft cabins necessary to safeguard the health of passengers and flight attendants; and if the CAA takes regular readings of circulation rates of aircraft in service;

(2) if the Civil Aviation Authority or his Department will initiate a review with the joint aviation authorities into cabin air quality issues and their effects on the health of passengers, flight attendants and crew;

(3) what assessment the Civil Aviation Authority has made of the dangers to the health of flight attendants and passengers of high levels of ozone in aircraft cabins encountered on some high altitude, high latitude flights; and what plans there are to introduce regulations to ensure ozone is kept within safe limits.

Mr. Norris: The Civil Aviation Authority and the joint aviation authorities—JAA—have no plans at present to review aircraft cabin air quality issues. The airworthiness requirements addressing fresh air supply in civil air transport aircraft cabins have remained unchanged for some years and the CAA does not believe there is sufficient evidence to suggest that a further review is necessary.

The European—JAA—airworthiness regulations include requirements for minimum fresh air ventilation flows expressed in terms of fresh air quantity per minute per person. These minimum flows must be provided in the event of a failure in the air supply system; normal flow rates would be appreciably higher. The CAA does not consider it necessary to make regular checks of air flow rates in aircraft cabins.

The JAA have reviewed the need for changes to aircraft systems to limit ozone levels and have concluded that no additional design features are required.

Workers (Reduced Mobility)

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when she next expects to discuss with other EC member states and the European Commission the proposed Council directive on minimum requirements to improve the mobility of and the safe transport to work of workers with reduced mobility; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The directive is not currently under discussion. The agenda for Council meetings is a matter for the current presidency in consultation with the Commission.

Glasgow Airport

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will sponsor a study of the environmental impact of aircraft noise in the urban area under the flight path of Glasgow airport; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: I understand that Glasgow airport has undertaken to operate a noise monitoring scheme agreed with the local district council. It also produces noise contours regularly and has a local consultative committee at which noise issues are discussed. In these circumstances, I do not see a need for a study by the Department.

Transport Policies (Land Use)

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to publish the research work recently undertaken by his Department on the interaction of land use and transport policies and needs.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The consultants' report will be published shortly.

Driver Sleepiness

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received from the Medical Commission on Accident Prevention in relation to driver sleepiness.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: We have now considered the review of research on driver fatigue undertaken for the Department by the Medical Commission on Accident Prevention. As a result, we have commissioned the Transport Research Laboratory to manage a research programme into fatigue and driving which will involve Professor Horne's department at Loughborough university.

Trunk Roads

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on how many occasions, and for how much mileage in each case, county highways have been redesignated as trunk roads in each of the past 10 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The information is not readily available in the form required.

Road Schemes, Oxford

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has for a public inquiry into the north Oxfordshire tin hat scheme, the details of the Marston interchange and the A40 bypass north of Headington; and what consideration has been given to holding a joint inquiry into the schemes.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The Marston interchange is part of the A40 north of Oxford scheme. Draft orders for this scheme are expected to be published under the Highways Act 1980 later this year, followed by those for the A40 Headington bypass. The need for, and timing of, public inquiries into the schemes will be decided in the light of objections received following publication of the respective orders.

Rural Train Services

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will discuss with British Rail the extension of request stopping on rural lines as an alternative to the closure of smal rural stations.

Mr. Freeman: I expect British Rail to have considered all realistic options before proposing closure of any station. I understand that any savings that might arise from making an unstaffed station a request stop are unlikely to be sufficient to influence materially its viability.

Search and Rescue

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the United Kingdom's international search and rescue commitments under (a) the Chicago convention on civil aviation 1947, (b) convention of the high seas 1958, (c) convention on safety of life at sea 1974, (d) the maritime search and rescue convention 1979 and (e) other relevant treaties or conventions to which the United Kingdom is a signatory.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 21 January 1993]: The United Kingdom's international search and rescue commitments under (a) international convention on civil aviation 1944—Chicago convention—are:

"Each contracting State undertakes to provide such measures of assistance to aircraft in distress in its territory as it may find practicable, and to permit, subject to control by its own authorities, the owners of the aircraft or authorities of the State in which the aircraft is registered to provide such measures of assistance as may be necessitated by the circumstances. Each contracting State, when undertaking search for missing aircraft, will collaborate in co-ordinated measures which may be recommended from time to time pursuant to this Convention."

(b) convention of the high seas 1958 are:

"Every coastal State shall promote the establishment and maintenance of an adequate and effective search and rescue service regarding safety on and over the sea and—where circumstances so require—by way of mutual regional arrangements co-operate with neighbouring States for this purpose."

(c) convention of safety of life at sea 1974 are:

"Each Contracting Government undertakes to ensure that any necessary arrangements are made for coast watching and for the rescue of persons in distress at sea round its coasts. These arrangements should include the establishment, operation and maintenance of such maritime safety facilities as are deemed practicable and necessary having regard to the density of the seagoing traffic and the navigational dangers and should, so far as possible, afford adequate means of locating and rescuing such persons."

(d) international convention on maritime search and rescue 1979 are:

"Parties shall ensure that necessary arrangements are made for the provision of adequate search and rescue services for persons in distress at sea round their coasts".

There are no other relevant search and rescue conventions and treaties to which the United Kingdom is a signatory.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the names of members and organisations they represent at the United Kingdom search and rescue committee and the district search and rescue and safety committee responsible for south-west Wales.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 22 January 1993]: A local coastal search and rescue committee responsible for south-west Wales has yet to be established. The district marine safety committee for Wales is split into sub-committees concerned with specific areas. Those present at the meeting of the sub-committee responsible for Whiteford Point to Cardigan Island including Milford Haven, Pembroke Dock and Fishguard were:

MV Braer

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the chemical composition of dispersants, including the half-life of biodegradable substances, used to date to disperse oil spilled from the MV Braer.

Mr. Curry [holding answer 14 January 1993]: I have been asked to reply.

In general, dispersants are a blend of surfactants and solvents which have the ability to modify surface tension between the oil and the water, promoting the formation of oil droplets and helping to prevent the oil reforming into one mass. Dispersion of the droplets in the water column makes the oil more accessible to the natural processes of degradation. The precise chemical composition of individual dispersants is subject to conditions of commercial confidentiality under which manufacturers have provided the information.

No specific tests are carried out on the biodegradability of the dispersants. However, data on the substances used indicate that they are not environmentally persistent and most would degrade within a few weeks.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Training Organisations

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to change VAT regulations as they currently apply to organisations providing training opportunities to the unemployed.

Sir John Cope: Customs and the Department of Employment are jointly consulting with training and enterprise councils and other training providers in order to assess the impact of VAT on Government-funded training schemes. It is too early yet to predict whether these consultations will result in a recommendation for a change in VAT legislation.

Council Tax

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what advice was given to valuation officers on the special circumstances relating to farm properties in relation to valuation for the council tax;

(2) what instructions were given to district valuers on checking properties for restrictive planning covenants in favour of agricultural use when establishing valuations for council tax bandings;

(3) what was the base level for estimating farm incomes to establish the valuations of properties for council tax bandings.

Mr. Dorrell: The banding of dwellings for council tax has not been carried out by reference to farm incomes. General advice was given to listing officers on the approach to the valuation of farmhouses. The way in which special circumstances relating to particular categories of property are to be taken into account is a matter for individual listing officers.

Listing officers were instructed to make appropriate general inquiries from local authorities as to the existence of planning restrictions limiting dwellings to occupation by persons engaged in agriculture.

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what were the instructions given to district valuers on checking whether properties were connected to water, gas or electricity when establishing valuations for council tax bandings.

Mr. Dorrell: No specific instructions were issued to listing officers about checking for these services. The availability of water, gas or electricity are factors taken into account in any valuation of property as part of normal valuation practice.

Printed Products (VAT)

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list (a) the current obligations on the United Kingdom under the existing treaties of the European Community in respect of VAT on printed products, including books and newspapers and (b) the additional obligations arising from the treaty on European union.

Sir John Cope: Article 189 of the treaty establishing the European Economic Community places upon member states the obligation to comply with European Community law. There are no additional obligations in this regard in the treaty of European union. Community law in respect of VAT takes the form of directives, of which the most significant is the sixth VAT directive, as amended. The right of the United Kingdom to continue with its zero rates, including those on books, newspapers and printed products, is fully protected by that legislation.

Contractors' Payments

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on progress towards the introduction of new contracting terms requiring companies awarded Government contracts to pay their subcontractors promptly.

Mr. Portillo: Government Departments and agencies have confirmed that they have introduced a clause into their contracts for goods and services which requires the supplier or contractor to pay its suppliers or subcontractors promptly.

Taxation

Dr. Marek: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 19 January, Official Report, column 148, what information he has on the average income tax liability of each decile group of tax-paying married men for the years 1986-87 to 1989-90.

Mr. Dorrell: For years prior to the introduction of independent taxation income tax liability was calculated on a tax unit basis and a married couple was counted as one tax unit. The table shows the average income tax liability of those tax units comprising a married couple, and the figures include the liability on both the husband's and the wife's income.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Business Debt

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement on progress towards improvements to court procedures for business debt recovery.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Both the Lord Chancellor and I recognise the difficulties that late payment causes the business community. Although it would not be equitable to single out business debts for special treatment by the courts, we are committed to improving the efficiency of the court system for the benefit of all court users. For example, procedures have been streamlined and simplified through initiatives such as the establishment of the computerised summons production centre and the county court bulk centre; more general measures for replies to summonses to be sent directly to plaintiffs and allow them to prepare a range of court documents, giving greater control over the speed with which their cases move through the system. Recent changes to the small claims procedure—October 1992—have reduced the number of times a party is required to attend court.

Other improvements, such as a measure to encourage district judges to help unrepresented litigants present their cases and giving them the right to be represented by someone other than a lawyer at a small claims hearing, are of equal benefit to business men as to other litigants. During 1993 improvements will be made to a number of post-judgment procedures including administration orders and oral examinations.

Legal Aid and Advice

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what proportion of the adult population of (a) Cornwall and (b) Devon is currently eligible for (i) legal advice and assistance and (ii) legal aid for civil purposes irrespective of the level of contribution; and what is his estimate for the proportion which will be so eligible after 1 April.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The information is not available. The only estimates of eligibility which are available are those which are made for England and Wales as a whole.

Retrials

Dame Angela Rumbold: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department in how many cases in the last year section 8 of the Criminal Appeals Act 1968 has been breached in that the retrial was not listed within the two-month period; and what action he is taking to ensure that the provisions of section 8 of the Criminal Appeal Act 1968 regarding the period for listing a retrial are complied with.

Mr. John M. Taylor: On three occasions during 1992 the time limits laid down by section 8 of the Criminal Appeal Act 1968 were not met.

As the right hon. Lady is aware from my previous reply on 11 December 1992, at columns 801-2, existing instructions to court staff are that defendants in such cases must be arraigned within two months so as to comply with the statute. Guidelines for Crown court listing to be published on 1 February 1993, which have already been dispatched for issue to the Crown court, state that the appellant must be arraigned on a new indictment within two months. The Registrar of Criminal Appeals will, in addition, when retrials are ordered in the future, change the letter which he always sends to the Crown court and the legal representatives of the parties notifying them of the Court of Appeal's order, stating in clear terms the need to arraign the defendant in two months.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Burglaries

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what statistics he has for house burglaries in Carrowdore, Ballywalter and Greyabbey districts in the Ards peninsula in each of the past three years; whether policing has been increased in these areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mates [holding answer 25 January 1993]: Total house burglaries reported to the RUC in the Greyabbey station area, which includes the villages of Carrowdore, Ballywalter and Greyabbey, for the last three years were as follows:

1990—11 burglaries
1991—15 burglaries
1992—13 burglaries

Policing in the area is an operational matter for the Chief Constable of the RUC. I understand that police patrols have been increased in the Greyabbey station area during the last six months.

Training

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what monitoring exists to assess the Training and Employment Agency's programme to encourage the development of skills within the two communities; what numbers of men and women are being trained within each community; and what monitoring takes place to assess the long-term impact of such training.

Mr. Atkin [holding answer 22 January 1993]: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Training and Employment Agency under its chief executive, Mr. J. S. Crozier. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from J. S. Crozier to Mr. Kevin McNamara, dated 22 January 1993:

You asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what monitoring exists to assess the Training and Employment Agency's programmes to encourage the development of skills within the two communities; what numbers of men and women are being trained within each community and what monitoring takes place to assess the long term impact of such training. As Chief Executive of the Agency, I have been asked to reply.

The Training and Employment Agency has instituted arrangements to collect information by which it can monitor uptake of all its employment and training services, by reference to religion, gender and disability. After a developmental period this information is now coming on stream. It is as yet incomplete, partly because there are still substantial numbers of people who entered our programmes before its collection commenced but its quality is steadily improving. The information will be monitored monthly.

Because there is a constant flow in and out of our programmes, the figures change from month to month. However at the last count there was a total of 27,350 people receiving training in our programmes. Of those whose religion we have so far been able to determine, 7,061 were Protestant (47%) and 7,927 were Catholic (53%). We cannot as yet establish the gender split, within these groups. Overall however 62% of participants were male and 38% were female.

Establishing the long term impact of training measures is by definition a long term process, and is difficult to do accurately or exhaustively. However we collect information about the numbers and proportion of trainees who secure recognised vocational qualifications and employment. We plan in future to analyse this information so that we can establish what proportions of successful trainees are Protestant or Catholic, male or female, or disabled.

Civil Service

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what regulations exist preventing or limiting the employment of citizens from (a) the Republic of Ireland, (b) other European Community countries and (c) Commonwealth nations in the Northern Ireland civil service.

Mr. Mates [holding answer 22 January 1993]: Rules relating to the conditions under which persons may be appointed to the Northern Ireland civil service are set out in the Northern Ireland Civil Service Commission General Regulations 1991, a copy of which has been placed in the House of Commons Library.

In the case of citizens of Commonwealth nations a work permit under the Immigration Act 1971 is required.

PRIME MINISTER

Kashmir

Mr. Cox: To ask the Prime Minister if he will raise the issue of the status of Kashmir and the human rights of Kashmiri people with the Indian Prime Minister during his forthcoming visit to India.

The Prime Minister: I expect my discussions with the Indian Prime Minister to include the situation in Kashmir and our concerns about human rights.

Arabic-speaking Adviser

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will appoint an Arabic-speaking adviser as part of the staff in 10 Downing Street.

The Prime Minister: I have no plans to do so.

Office Running Costs

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister what steps are being taken by him to limit or reduce the cost of running of his office.

The Prime Minister: My office is subject to the same efficiency and value-for-money initiatives as the rest of the civil service. Between 1989-90 and 1991-92, the cost of running my office fell by just over 2 per cent. in real terms.

CD-ROM

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Prime Minister what arrangements are in place for Government Departments to offer financial assistance for CD-ROM applications for blind and visually impaired people; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The Department for Education is providing £40,000 for the development of software which will enable blind and partially-sighted people to gain full access to CD-ROM materials. This is being undertaken in collaboration with the Royal National Institute for the Blind and the Open university and will be completed later this year. The software will be published by the Royal National Institute for the Blind.

HEALTH

Multiple Pregnancies

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 7 July, Official Report, column 147, if she has yet reached a decision on publishing the counselling guide about multiple pregnancies for patients attending infertility centres; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: It is our intention to fund publication and distribution of the booklet "The Prospect of Triplets and Quads". Arrangements for this are being finalised.

Dentistry

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will estimate the reduction in turnover experienced by dental practices in Cornwall as a result of the Government's recent changes in the method of remuneration.

Dr. Mawhinney: The most recent quarter for which figures are available shows that the turnover, as reflected in gross income received, of dentists in Cornwall and Isles of Scilly family health services authority has increased by some 20 per cent. by comparing October to December 1992 with the same period in 1990.

GP Fund Holders

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total amount of the computer budget in general practice per family health services authority, regional health authority and nationally in 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93, or estimates, and what was the percentage of that computer budget given to first, second and third wave GP fund holders for each FHSA, RHA and nationally in 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93.

Mr. Sackville: The information shown in the table is based on quarterly returns from individual FHSAs. The way in which the information is collected from, and supplied by FHSAs, means that in some cases it may not accurately reflect the split between reimbursement for non-fund holders' computers and those for fund holders. Figures in 1990-91 do not distinguish non-fund holders' and fund holders' computer costs.

Incontinence

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) men and (b) women in England and Wales suffer from incontinence.

Mr. Yeo: Estimates vary according to the definitions used by researchers, but up to about 3 million adults and children in England and Wales may be affected. A Medical Research Council survey showed a prevalence of urinary incontinence of 8·5 per cent. in women and 1·6 per cent. in men aged 15 to 64 and 11·6 per cent. in women and 6·9 per cent. in men aged 65 and over.

Smoking

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her estimate of the risk to women who are (a) smokers and (b) non-smokers and taking the contraceptive pill of a heart attack, stroke or other cardiovascular disease.

Dr. Mawhinney: The risk of myocardial infarction, stroke and other cardiovascular diseases in young women is increased approximately three to four fold by either oral contraceptive use or by smoking. When the two are combined there is an approximately tenfold increase in risk overall.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her estimate of the cost to the national health service of advice from doctors to their patients in respect of giving up smoking per year.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not available centrally.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her estimate of the number of smokers who die each year in the United Kingdom as a result of smoking and smoking-related diseases.

Dr. Mawhinney: It is estimated that in the United Kingdom about 110,000 deaths each year are smoking related.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her estimate of the number of deaths in the United Kingdom each year from lung cancer caused by passive smoking.

Dr. Mawhinney: In its fourth report published in 1988, the independent scientific committee on smoking and health estimated the number of lung cancer deaths in non smokers exposed to environmental tobacco smoke over most of their lives as "several hundred deaths per year".

Breast Cancer

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of women with breast cancer in Britain have, since 1980, died within (a) one year, (b) three years and (c) five years of the original diagnosis being made; and what comparison she has made of the survival rates of women with breast cancer in other EC countries.

Mr. Sackville: The one, three and five-year relative survival rates—per cent.—for cases registered in 1981 in (a) England and Wales and (b) Scotland are given in the table. More recent figures for England and Wales are not available. Those for Scotland show no change in the five-year relative survival rate, but small improvements in the one and three-year rates. Figures on cancer survival are not published by any other EC country.

One, three and five year relative survival (per cent.) of cases of breast cancer registered in England and Wales and in Scotland in 1981

Scotland	87	72	62

Eye Tests

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people had sight tests in Nottingham, North, or the next biggest geographical area for which figures are available, in (a) the last 12-month period for which figures are available and (b) 1 January 1988 to 31 December 1988; and what proportion of these were over the age of 65 years.

Dr. Mawhinney: Figures are not collected in respect of parliamentary constituencies. The numbers of national health service sight tests paid for in each financial year by the Nottingham family health services authority are shown in the table.

Year	Number of sight tests
1987-88	238,980
1988-89	254,830
[1]1989-90	111,410
1990-91	82,950
1991-92	96,850

[1] From 1 April 1989, NHS sight tests were restricted to certain groups in the population. The sight tests paid for in 1989-90 include some conducted prior to 1 April 1989. The remainder paid for in 1989-90 do not represent a full year under the new system, because of the delay in payments. The figure for 1989-90 is not, therefore, directly comparable with that for 1990-91.

The Department does not collect information on either the number of private sight tests carried out, or the number of people aged over 65 who have sight tests. The figures are collected by financial year.

St. Bartholomew's Hospital

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on what date she proposes to visit St. Bartholomew's hospital to discuss the Tomlinson report; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: I have visited St. Bartholomew's hospital twice to listen to views on the Tomlinson report, We expect to announce our policy on the future of London's health services and medical education shortly.

Children in Hospital

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what examination she has made of financial hardship faced by families visiting children in hospital.

Mr. Yeo: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Bolton, North-East (Mr. Thurnham) on 20 January at column 321.

Tuberculosis

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of tuberculosis have been reported in (a) England, (b) Scotland, (c) Wales and (d) Northern Ireland in each year since 1985.

Mr. Sackville: The information requested is shown in the table.

Notifications of Tuberculosis[1] in England, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland since 1985.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what moneys are expended nationally on tuberculosis vaccinations in schools in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally. The National Health Service Supplies Authority purchases tuberculosis vaccine—BCG—on behalf of the national health service. It is for district health authorities to arrange for immunisation and costs vary from one authority to another.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of rickets and TB have been reported in the Liverpool health authority area in the past five years; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The information requested about the number of cases of rickets is not collected centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. D. H. Tod, chairman of Liverpool health authority, for details. Information on the number of cases of tuberculosis in Liverpool is given in the table.

Tobacco

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make it her policy to license tobacco retailers.

Dr. Mawhinney: No.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her policy on the advertising of tobacco.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Government's policy on tobacco advertising is set out in the "Health of the Nation" White Paper.

Children's Hospices

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many children's hospices are funded by Government funds for (a) revenue costs and (b) capital projects.

Mr. Yeo: The Department is giving direct assistance to voluntary organisations, in one case contributing to the running costs of an existing children's hospice and, in another, to the cost of planning a new hospice soon to be constructed. Support for this new development is from a £5 million programme of pilot projects which we are funding to identify good practice in the care of children with life-threatening illnesses. We are not providing any help with capital costs. Health authorities may purchase services for children with life-threatening illness from statutory and voluntary sector bodies, but no details of these are held centrally.

Child Care

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on progress made towards implementing the European Council recommendation 92/241/EEC on child care.

Mr. Yeo: Local authorities, national voluntary organisations, child care providers in the private and voluntary sectors and other relevant organisations were sent copies of the recommendation 92/241/EEC on 11 January together with the Department's further guidance on the day care provisions in the Children Act—LAC (93)1. Copies of the recommendation and the guidance are available in the Library.

Abortion

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on her Department's definition of informed consent under her Department's guidance for dealing with patients, in the context of women consenting to an abortion.

Mr. Sackville: Patients have the right under common law to give or withhold consent prior to examination or treatment. Informed consent as such does not form part of English law. Patients are, however, entitled to receive sufficient information in a way that they can understand about the proposed treatment, the possible alternatives and any substantial risks, so that they can make a balanced judgment. A doctor will exercise his or her professional skill and judgment in deciding what information a patient is given about a particular treatment.

This principle applies to all forms of treatment, including abortion.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what provisions exist for reporting physical complications following abortions which occur after the form notifying her Department of the abortion has been submitted.

Mr. Sackville: There is no formal procedure for reporting complications occurring after an abortion has been notified to the Chief Medical Officer, but doctors can provide additional information.

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if charities providing abortion services for the NHS through agency agreements with individual district health authorities may also enter into agency agreements with individual GP fund holders; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Terminations of pregnancy are not included in the list of goods and services which GP fund holders may purchase. We have no plans at present to change this.

Consultants

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on relating the system of distinction awards for consultants to their performance, with particular reference to outcomes.

Dr. Mawhinney: The leaflet "Consultants' Distinction Awards", issued in October 1990, sets out general guidelines on the criteria used in assessing consultants for awards. A copy of the leaflet is available in the Library. This makes clear that, in considering consultants for awards, awards committees look for performance over and above what is normally expected in respect of service to patients, teaching and the management and development of the service.

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the reform of the system of distinction awards—merit payments—for consultants.

Dr. Mawhinney: There are at present no plans to change the distinction awards system.

Hospital Visits

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list each ministerial visit to (a) Charing Cross, (b) Guy's, (c) London chest hospital, (d) Queen Charlotte's, (e) Queen Elizabeth hospital, Hackney, (f) Royal Brompton, (g) Royal Marsden, (h) St. Mary's, Paddington, (i) St. Thomas's, (j) St. Mark's, (k) St. Bartholomew's, (l) UCH-Middlesex, (m) the Royal National Ear, Nose and Throat, and (n) the Hospital for Tropical Diseases, since 23 October 1992; how long the Minister spent at each hospital to the nearest quarter hour; and if she will indicate for each hospital whether the Minister held discussions on the Tomlinson report with (i) management, (ii) consultants, (iii) junior doctors, (iv) nurses or (v) staff side.

Dr. Mawhinney: In addition to visits by my colleagues I have either visited or had discussions with representatives of all the hospitals mentioned. I have visited St. Batholomew's twice to listen to their views on the Tomlinson report. I have also had meetings with professional, educational and trade union representatives.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the rules relating to the making available to NHS patients of services and equipment available for private patients in NHS trusts; and what is the position in respect of the laser treatment for myopia at St. James's hospital, Leeds.

Dr. Mawhinney: The availability of such services within the National Health Service is dependent on the decisions of purchasers, who are responsible for assessing the health care needs of their resident populations.

The corneal laser centre based at St. James's hospital, Leeds offers a service supplied by an independent company. The laser equipment will be used for the private treatment of short sight, a service currently not available under the NHS. It will also be made available to treat NHS patients with corneal scars. The revenue from leasing the premises and the royalties the trust receives from each operation provides additional funds for services for all patients at the hospital.

Ambulance Service

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the basis of the standards set in the citizens charter for response performance of emergency ambulance services.

Mr. Sackville: The patients charter performance standards reflect those first recommended to the ambulance service in 1990 as a national benchmark which all services should strive to meet or better.

Care in the Community

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what monitoring her Department is undertaking of implementation of care in the community in respect (a) of local authority variations around the United Kingdom, (b) existing proposed provision of residential facilities in the private sector and (c) the effectiveness of dialogue between interested parties over each individual client's needs.

Mr. Yeo: The social services inspectorate and regional health authorities are currently undertaking their fourth round of monitoring of the progress being made by English social services and health authorities towards the full implementation of the Government's community care reforms from April this year. This monitoring is paying particular attention to liaison between authorities and between the statutory and independent sectors. The Department routinely collects data on the number of private residential care home places in England. Arrangment in Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland are a matter for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and Wales and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

West Midlands RHA

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will order the publication of the management letter by the district health auditor which was sent to the West Midlands regional health authority in December 1992.

Dr. Mawhinney: No. This is a management document. Its publication is a matter for West Midlands regional health authority.

Mr. Joseph Raphael

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will make a statement concerning the escape from custody of Joseph Raphael on 19 January;

(2) what changes she intends to make in the procedures for the transportation of remand prisoners from hospital to court;

(3) if she will make a statement on the escape by Joseph Raphael while being taken to the Old Bailey in the company of nurses from Cane Hill secure unit.

Mr. Yeo: I understand that Mr. Raphael was detained in the secure unit at Cane Hill hospital on 6 November 1992 under section 35 of the Mental Health Act 1983, which provides for an accused person to be remanded to hospital for a report on his medical condition. He was to appear at the central criminal court on 19 January 1993 on a charge of murder. He absconded from the custody of the nurses who were escorting him from the hospital to the court. He subsequently gave himself up to the police and was detained at Brixton prison.

The Ravensbourne NHS Trust, which manages the Cane Hill unit, has stated that a decision was taken following clinical assessment to transport Mr. Raphael without a police escort. The trust is holding an internal inquiry into the incident and the events leading up to it. We will be studying the inquiry report carefully and will consider in consultation with the Home Office what further guidance might be needed for hospitals and the police about their responsibilities in this area.

Managerial Staff

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many senior nurse manager posts there were in each region in each year since 1989.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 18 January 1993]: Information on the number of nurse manager posts in each region is not collected centrally. The table shows the number of senior nurses in posts paid on review body pay scales in each year since 1989. There are in addition senior nurse managers on the pay arrangements for general and senior managers; the numbers of these senior nurses cannot be disaggregated from other senior managerial staff. The fall in nurse numbers is a result of the continuing transfer of senior nursing staff to the managerial grades and the growing numbers of Project 2000 trainees who are not counted in the manpower figures.

Radiation

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what facilities and experienced personnel are available within the national health service to detect, study and report on the incidence of illness resulting from nuclear radiation contamination.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 18 January 1993]: Currently, there is no known method of directly identifying disease in an individual which has been induced wholly or in part by exposure to low levels of radiation in the environment. In order to establish whether an excess incidence of disease in a given population is associated in some way with external factors, accepted public health practice is to subject the available data to epidemiological study. The national health service employs public health professionals in each region and district whose responsibilities include monitoring the health of the local population and investigating unusual patterns of disease. Statistics on disease are also monitored at the national level. In addition, the Department has established the small area health statistics unit which is concerned with the assessment of any risk to the health of the population from point source contamination. In relation to environmental radiation, the results of epidemiological studies are referred to the Committee on Medical Aspects of Radiation in the Environment, a group of independent experts which was set up to assess and advise the Government on the health effects of natural and man-made radiation in the environment, and to assess the adequacy of the available data and the need for further research.

Mrs. Tracey Evans

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will order a public inquiry into the circumstances which led to the discharge of Mrs. Tracey Evans from Brighton general hospital; what social services involvement occurred in this case; and what assessment has been made of the implications for the treatment of schizophrenics arising out of the case of Tracey Evans.

Mr. Yeo [holding answer 22 January 1993]: No. The reports I have received from the local agencies involved indicated that there was nothing untoward which suggested that Mrs. Evans would harm her children.

This is a tragic case and is one that will fall within the remit of the inquiry which the Government have asked the Royal College of Psyschiatrists to establish in consultation with the other relevant professional groups to "Inquire into the circumstances leading up to and surrounding homicides and suicides committed by people under the care of or recently discharged by the specialist psychiatric services, to identify factors in the patients' management which may be related to the deaths, and to recommend measures designed to reduce the number of such incidents".

EDUCATION

Lingua Programme

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if pupils at independent schools are eligible to participte in the programme of exchanges under the Lingua programme; and what are the reasons for these arrangements.

Mr. Boswell Under the terms of the Council of Education Ministers' decision of 28 July 1989, upon which the Lingua programme is based, eligibility for support for pupil exchanges is limited to pupils attending educational establishments supported with public funds. In line with this, pupils at independent schools in the United Kingdom are not eligible for support under the current programme.

Socially Responsible Parenthood

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what steps he has taken to develop a post-school education strategy aimed at promoting socially responsible parenthood as recommended in the Elton report on discipline in schools.

Mr. Boswell: The Government's general policy for further and higher education is to create a framework to enable institutions to meet the widely differing needs of students. It is for institutions to decide which courses to offer, and to help students to select those courses which meet their needs. The Government would expect institutions, including local authority adult centres, to take account of the need for education about parenthood, building on that provided in school in collaboration with other appropriate agencies, including the youth service.

School Management

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many local education authorities have schools which take formal account of the views of pupils on matters relating to school management; and whether these arrangements meet the standards expected by his Department.

Mr. Forth: This information is not collected centrally. Pupil participation in school management is a matter for individual schools and their governing bodies.

School Governors

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many local education authorities provide regular training courses for school governors which meet the standards expected by his Department.

Mr. Forth: All LEAs arrange for training for school governors. The 1991 HMI report "The Quality of Training and Support for Governors in Schools and Colleges" found that 81 per cent. of training sessions inspected were sound or very good. Training and support were reaching a high proportion of governors.

Pupil Exclusions

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what are the latest available figures for the number of pupils excluded from school (a) permanently and (b) temporarily.

Mr. Forth: The Department has been monitoring permanent exclusions at maintained schools over a two-year period starting with summer term 1990 under the national exclusions reporting system—(NERS). Some preliminary findings from NERS were incorporated in our recently published discussion paper on exclusions. Some 3,000 pupils were permanently excluded in the first year of the NERS exercise. Information on temporary exclusions is not collected by the Department.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many local education authorities have schools with conditional re-entry agreements as a means of readmitting excluded pupils to schools; and what assessment he has made of their effectiveness.

Mr. Forth: This information is not collected centrally.

School Closures

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education on what occasions he has used his powers under the Education Reform Act 1988 to close schools whose governing bodies were deemed to be failing in the performance of their statutory duties.

Mr. Forth: None.

Schools (Communication Systems)

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many local education authorities have formal systems of communication within their schools and between schools and parents, governors, their communities and outside agencies, as recommended in the Elton report on discipline in schools; what percentage of schools have such systems of communication; and to what extent they meet the standards expected by his Department.

Mr. Forth: This information is not collected centrally.

Health Education

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what plans he has to monitor the response of local education authorities to the ending of grants for education support and training—GEST—funding for health education co-ordination and the impact on the employment of dedicated health education staff;

(2) what plans he has to monitor the continued provision of drugs education in schools from 1 April.

Mr. Forth: The monitoring arrangements for the GEST preventive health education programme were set out in the original draft circular inviting bids, which issued on 1 July 1991. Amongst other things, this made clear that LEAs would be asked to provide by July 1993 a brief report on the work undertaken in 1992-93 and its effectiveness. My right hon. Friend will look to the Office for Standards in Education to provide him with information and advice about all aspects of education provision in schools. This will include provision made for preventive health education, aspects of which are included in the national curriculum and must be studied by all pupils.

Educational Psychologists

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many local education authorities have developed working relationships between schools and educational psychologists to provide advice on the management of behaviour in groups and in schools as a whole which meet with the standards expected by his Department.

Mr. Forth: This information is not collected centrally.

St. Mary's School, Hendon

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education when he expects to determine the application by St. Mary's school, Hendon, to become a grant-maintained school.

Mr. Forth: No application for grant-maintained status from St. Mary's school, Hendon, has yet been received. Following the positive ballot result at the school in favour of grant-maintained status on 7 December, the governors must publish proposals within six months from that date and submit them to the Secretary of State for determination.

Schools (Arson Attacks)

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what are the latest available figures for the incidence of arson attacks in schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: The number of incidents of arson in schools in England is not collected centrally. Information on the number of incidents of deliberate—or probably deliberate—fires in maintained primary and secondary schools in England is collected as part of the Department's annual survey of security in schools. In the financial year 1990-91 there were an estimated 3,100 such fires.

Schools (Lunch-time Supervision)

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many local education authorities provide lunch-time supervision; what percentage of schools in each local education authority provide such supervision; how much is spent; and what assessment he has made of the extent to which this supervision meets the standards expected by his Department.

Mr. Forth: This information is not collected centrally.

Schools Police Liaison

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what steps he has taken to monitor the way in which local education authorities have assessed the number of schools in their areas which would particularly benefit from school-police liaison projects; and what percentage of such schools in each local education authority have these projects.

Mr. Forth: This information is not collected centrally.

Under the Education (No. 2) Act 1986, school governing bodies are required to report annually to parents on steps taken to strengthen links with the community, including the police. Advice on good practice in police/school liaison was contained in HM inspectorate's publication "Our Policeman" published in 1989. The Elton report on "Discipline in Schools", distributed to all LEAs and schools in March 1989, also gave advice on links with the police. The Department is currently funding a research project by the National Association for the Care and Resettlement of Offenders on the role of the education service in youth crime prevention. My right hon. Friend will wish to review the general question of links between schools and the police in the light of the outcomes of that project.

Funding

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many local education authorities have made representations to him on the funding of education services in the last three months.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend has received representations from a number of local education authorities.

Surplus School Places, Hampshire

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the total number of surplus school places in each district council area in Hampshire in (a) primary schools and (b) secondary schools; and what was the basis on which these figures were calculated.

Mr. Forth: The information is not available in the form requested. We estimate that in 1991 there were 24,719 surplus primary places and 10,373 surplus secondary places in Hampshire, representing 17 per cent. and 16 per cent. of total capacity respectively. These figures derive from the Department's survey of school capacity which was carried out during the 1990-91 academic year. Surplus place figures were calculated by comparing the capacity derived from the more open enrolment formula with the number of pupils on roll at each school.

Schools Expenditure, Hampshire

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the capital expenditure on (a) nursery schools, (b) primary schools and (c) secondary schools in Hampshire in each of the years since 1987, expressed in 1987 values.

Mr. Forth: The table shows the information requested:

Capital spending by Hampshire LEA on schools, expressed in cash terms and in 1987 values

	Nursery and Primary Schools £'000	Secondary Schools £'000
1987-88	11,407	7,306
1988-89	15,169	7,015
1989-90	12,588	5,846
1990-91	11,412	7,438

Notes:

1. 1990-91 is the latest year for which data are available.
2. Capital expenditure on nursery and primary schools is not identified separately in the returns made by local authorities.
3. Real value figures were derived by applying the GDP deflators announced with the Autumn Statement.

Nursery Education, Hampshire

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what proportion of three and four-year-old children attended nursery school or nursery classes in Hampshire in each year since 1987.

Mr. Forth: In each year between 1987 and 1991—the latest year for which information is available—approximately 5 per cent. of the local three and four-year-old population attended maintained nursery schools and classes in Hampshire.

Mandatory Awards

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will review the arrangements for the provision of mandatory awards.

Mr. Boswell: These arrangements are already kept under periodic review.

Maths and Physics

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what progress he is making in standards of teacher training in maths and physics.

Mr. Forth: All courses of initial teacher training for primary teachers in England, Wales and Northern Ireland must include at least 100 hours devoted to maths and 100 hours devoted to science. A number of courses for secondary teachers now provide for "balanced" science, including physics. Postgraduate teacher training courses in "balanced" science enable students whose initial degree was in one science to spend part of the course extending their knowledge of the others.

Under the programme of grants for educational support and training, the Department for Education supports 20-day designated courses of in-service training to enhance the subject knowledge of primary maths and science teachers. They make a valuable contribution to improving teaching standards.

Capital Expenditure

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list the bids for capital expenditure for education from shire counties in 1993-94 and 1992-93 and the annual capital guideline notified by the Department for Education for 1993-94 and 1992-93.

Mr. Forth: The figures in the table represent the bids and annual capital guidelines—ACGs—for county and voluntary controlled schools in 1992-93 and 1993-94. They do not include capital work at sixth form, tertiary and further education colleges, the responsibility for which will transfer on 1 April 1993 to the Further Education Funding Council, or capital work at voluntary-aided schools.

The allocation figures also exclude resources issued during the current year by means of supplementary credit approvals—SCAs. No SCAs have yet been issued for 1993-94.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Civil Research and Development

36. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the Government's spending on civil research and development in the latest available year; and what were the comparable figures for the United States of America and Japan.

Mr. Robert Jackson: Data in the 1992 annual review of Government-funded research and development show that Government spent £2,772·8 million—0·51 per cent. of GDP—in 1990-91 and an estimated £2,830 million in 1991-92 on civil research and development.

In calendar year 1990, the latest year for which comparable figures are available, Government expenditure on civil research and development in the United States of America and in Japan was £14,524 million—0·44 per cent. of GDP—and £5,651 million—0·43 per cent. of GDP—respectively.

Departments of Physics

37. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what steps he is taking to maintain the dual support system in respect of departments of physics, not currently considered to be in the top research rank, to ensure that they have the funds to develop ideas that may move them up the scale.

Mr. Robert Jackson: All university departments can apply for research council grants to support projects. Applications are considered on their merits. Institutions are free to use their block grants from the higher education funding councils to foster promising departments.

KPMG Management Consultants

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the contracts awarded by his Department to KPMG Management Consultants over the past 12 months.

Mr. Waldegrave: Contracts were awarded by the Office of Public Service and Science and its agencies to KPMG Management Consultants during the past 12 months for the following:

CCTA—the Government Centre for Information Systems

Distributed information technology infrastructure scoping study.
Information systems strategy study.
Infrastructure management scoping study.
Speaker for managing change workshop.
Business transformation scoping study.

Office of Science and Technology

Financial management survey of costing Research Council contracts with other Government Departments.

Civil Service College

Study of future financial structures.

Non-departmental Public Bodies

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what percentage of public expenditure was the responsibility of non-departmental public bodies in (a) 1979 and (b) 1992 or the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Robert Jackson: Expenditure by non-departmental public bodies, which excludes national health service bodies, funded by the Government through grants and other support was 4 per cent. of general Government expenditure in 1978-79 and 4·6 per cent. in 1990-91.

Citizens Charters

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on his proposals for citizens charters as they affect young people under 18 years of age.

Mr. Waldegrave: Young people benefit—as do all sections of society—from the better quality, more responsive public services promoted by the citizens charter initiative. More specifically, they will benefit from the publication, later this year, of charters setting standards of service for students in further and higher education.

Freedom of Information

Mr. Bryan Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will introduce a Bill on the freedom of information.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Government will be publishing a White Paper later this Session setting out our further proposals for achieving greater openness and access to information.

Research and Development

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what spending per capita on research and development is in each country of the European Community and the EC as a whole.

Mr. Waldegrave: The latest figures for per capita spending on research and development in the EC are for 1990:

Millions of Current Purchasing Power Parity £ per capita, 1990

Belgium	165·66
Denmark	[1]170·81
France	252·66
Germany	306·78

Spain	57·18
United Kingdom	210·60

Note: Luxembourg is not separately identified in OECD R & D statistics.

Tuberculosis

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what clinical research is carried out in the United Kingdom into tuberculosis; at what institutions; and at what cost.

Mr. Robert Jackson: The main agency through which the Government support biomedical and clinical research is the Medical Research Council, which receives its grant-in-aid from this Department. The MRC is an independent body deciding what research to support on its own expert judgment.

In the last financial year 1991-92, the council's expenditure for research directly relevant to tuberculosis was £808,000. This supported basic research at its own MRC tuberculosis and related infections unit at the Hammersmith hospital, and through grants to researchers at the Royal Postgraduate Medical School, the London School of Hygiene and Tropical Medicine, the Public Health Laboratory Service, London, and the university of Leicester. A further £327,000 was spent in 1991-92 on projects which may, in part, be relevant to the study of tuberculosis.

The MRC is not currently funding any research into tuberculosis directly relevant to patients, but the council is always willing to consider for support soundly based new scientific proposals in competition with other applications.

Research is also undertaken by higher education institutions, but details are not available centrally.

Quangos

Mr. Hain: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will give figures for the total number of quangos, together with the total number of staff employed and the total expenditure, including those connected with the health service, for each year from 1979 to 1991; and if he will give the percentage difference in each figure between 1979 and 1991.

Mr. Robert Jackson: The available information is shown in the table; fuller details are published in "Public Bodies", copies of which are available in the House Library. The figures are not strictly comparable on a year-by-year basis because of the change of status of some major spending bodies.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Hendon Artists

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee if he has considered an application for an exhibition of paintings by Hendon, South artists to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Michael J. Martin: I understand that, under procedures agreed by the Administration Committee, arrangements have been made for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from 22 to 26 March 1993.

Machine Tool Technology

Mr. Waller: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee if he has considered an application for an exhibition relating to machine tool technology to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Michael J. Martin: I understand that, under procedures agreed by the Administration Committee, arrangements have been made for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from 1 to 5 March 1993.

Staff Salaries

Mr. Winnick: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, representing the House of Commons Commission if he will set out the level of the most recent salary or wage increase given for this year for each grade of staff employed by the House, giving the effective date of the increase in each case.

Mr. Beith: Grades 1 to 3 in the service of the House are affected by the decision of the Government that, in common with Ministers and Members of Parliament, staff covered by the Top Salaries Review Body should receive no pay increase in 1993. However, the second stage of the 1992 TSRB award comprising a 3 per cent. increase of salaries in payment will be implemented with effect from 1 April 1993. This applies to staff of the House in grades 1 to 3.

The most recent salary increases for other grades are as follows:

Grade	Percentage increase	Effective date
4-7	3·9	1 August 1992
8 and below (including Catering grades)	4·1	1 April 1992

The existing arrangements for discretionary performance-related pay will continue to operate.

Questions

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will introduce proposals to allow the tabling of questions to take place (a) by fax and (b) by electronic transfer.

Mr. Newton: I have no plans to do so.

It is the long-standing practice of the House that each question should be tabled on the personal authority of an hon. Member, either in person or on his or her behalf by another hon. Member, or in writing with a genuine signature. It would not be possible for the Clerks in the Table Office to verify that a fax or electronic message had been sent personally by an hon. Member. However, the hon. Member may wish to draw this matter to the attention of the Select Committee on Procedure.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Lord President of the Council when he now expects to respond to the Procedure Committee's third report of Session 1990-91, HC 178, on parliamentary questions.

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on Thursday 22 October 1992, at column 363.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Cambridge Water Company (Judgment)

Mr. Fry: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the effect on British industry of the retrospective provisions of the judgment in the case of Cambridge Water Company v. Eastern Counties Leather plc.

Mr. Sainsbury: Eastern Counties Leather is petitioning for leave to appeal to the House of Lords. The Government will await the final determination of this case.

President of the Board of Trade

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 13 January, Official Report, column 745, if he will now abolish the title of President of the Board of Trade; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heseltine: No.

Chemical Weapons

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has for the United Kingdom national authority under the chemical weapons convention to include representation from the chemical industry, the scientific community and other concerned and interested parties.

Mr. Heseltine: The national authority will be an executive body. No decision has been taken about the involvement of the chemical industry, the scientific community, and other concerned and interested parties. Such involvement will be the subject of consultation in due course.

Pit Closures

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what measures he is taking to ensure that British Coal's care and maintenance procedures in the 31 pits proposed for closure do not prejudice the outcome of his reviews; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Coaling and development work is continuing at the 21 pits subject to the coal review so there can be no question of the outcome of that review being prejudiced. British Coal has given frequent assurances in correspondence, to the Trade and Industry and Employment Select Committees, and in court that it is preserving the fabric of the 10 pits so that if, at the end of the period of consultation, it is decided to keep any or all of them open, that will be possible. My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade has asked Boyds to report on whether the fabric of the 10 pits is being preserved in accordance with those assurances.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects Boyds to complete its report on the 10 pits proposed for immediate closure; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. Friend has asked Boyds to submit its final report by 15 March 1993. A copy of the full terms of reference of the Boyds study of the 10 pits is available in the Library of the House.

Oil and Gas Exploration

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps are being taken to protect wildlife sites and sites of special scientific interest in the firth of Forth from oil exploration and possible oil contamination arising from the Department of Trade and Industry's 14th round of offering coastal oil and gas exploration licences.

Mr. Eggar: The environmental sensitivities of all areas offered in the 14th offshore oil and gas licensing round, including any which encompass sites of special scientific interest or of particular wildlife value, have been considered on a block-by-block basis. Environmental conditions to be attached to blocks offered in the first two stages of the round have been drafted following agreement with the Department of the Environment, the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the Joint Nature Conservation Committee; those for coastal blocks, including those offered in the Forth approaches, include requirements to consult these bodies and relevant local authorities regarding environmental protection measures before exploration commences. Other special conditions may include seasonal restrictions on exploration activities and controls on discharges from rigs and the chemical formulation of drilling muds.

Corporate Communications Ltd.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he has appointed inspectors to inquire into the actions of the auditors and directors of Corporate Communications Ltd.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I cannot comment on the affairs of individual companies. I am prepared to consider any information the hon. Member may provide in the usual way.

Maxwell Companies

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the President of the Board of Trade on what date Companies house was notified that the ownership of London and Bishopgate International had been transferred from Kevin Maxwell to L & B Holdings plc.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: On 24 May 1989.

Coal Industry

Mr. Cummings: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what response he has made to the findings by the Closkey Coal Information Services contained in the Easington district council submission entitled "The Case for Easington and Vane Tempest Collieries"; and if he will commission an environmental impact report.

Mr. Eggar: We are taking Easington district council's submission into account in the coal review, and hope to publish a White Paper setting out our findings as early as possible next month. The commissioning of an environmental impact report would be an operational matter for British Coal.

Republic of Ireland

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the operation of the market development fund in the Republic of Ireland with respect to possible unfair competition for United Kingdom exports into the European single market and possible subsidy implications; what consideration has been given to the implications for manufacturing firms in Northern Ireland; what representations he has made to the authorities of the Irish Republic; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: Officials in this, and other Government Departments, are watching closely the operation of the market development fund which is scheduled to terminate at the end of March 1993. My right hon. Friend raised our concerns with the Commission as soon as he heard of this scheme. These concerns included the incompatibility of the measures with the common market, the damaging effects on United Kingdom and other Community producers and the serious precedents it would set were the Commission to approve the measures. As a result of this approach, the Commission imposed a number of important restrictions on the operation of the scheme.

British Steel (US Duties)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 4 December 1992, Official Report, column 459, what further discussions he has had with the United States about their imposition of duties on British steel output.

Mr. Sainsbury: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade raised this matter with the US Secretary of Commerce by letter on 11 December.

Outstanding Debts

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on progress towards requiring large companies to state in their reports and acounts how quickly they pay outstanding debts.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Consumer Affairs and Small Firms has today published a consultative document to take forward the commitment the Government have given that in future large companies will be required to state in their report and accounts how quickly they pay.

Late payment is a reflection of business culture which is intangible and notoriously resistant to change. The Government are using their influence to nudge a culture change in the right direction.

A number of options have been considered as the best way of taking forward the commitment and these options are discussed in the consultative document.

The Government-preferred option uses data large companies collect already, rather than requiring collection of new data which would be a burden on business. Suppliers and others will be provided with information they have not had previously.

The consultative document also suggests which companies would be required to make this disclosure by proposing a definition of large companies.

The Department is seeking comments on the consultative document by 26 March 1993 with a view to presenting the necessary regulations to Parliament and applying them to company accounts as soon as possible.

Energy Strategy

Mr. David Porter: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what consideration he is giving to the generation costs, and employment and investment levels of the nuclear and offshore gas and oil industries, relative to coal equivalents, in developing a national energy strategy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Many of these issues are being addressed in the coal review currently being undertaken by my Department.

Wind Generation

Mr. David Porter: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proposals he has further to increase the generation of wind-generated electricity in East Anglia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Wind-generated electricity is expected to increase in the future, encouraged by further orders under the non-fossil fuel obligation. There are no plans to promote wind energy selectively in particular locations.

BCCI

Mr. Vaz: To ask the President of the Board of Trade on what date he granted an extension to the liquidators of the Bank of Credit and Commerce International to the undertaking they gave on 14 January 1992 to hold a creditors' meeting.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: In view of the terms of the judgment of the vice-chancellor given on 2 March 1992 no formal extension was given to the liquidators in respect of the undertaking whch they gave on 5 December 1991 regarding the holding of a creditors meeting pursuant to section 141 of the Insolvency Act 1986. The liquidators have now sought and obtained the directions of the court with regard to the summoning and conduct of such a meeting which I understand will be held May 1993.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many compromises he has sanctioned in respect of the liquidation of the bank of Credit and Commerce International; and what is the value involved.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Twelve such sanctions have been given, 10 in respect of claims totalling £30,877,540 and two in respect of claims totalling 14,438,462 US dollars.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many meetings he has had with the liquidators of the Bank of Credit and Commerce International.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: None.

Colombian Coal

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations his Department have made to the EC Commission in support of British Coal's anti-dumping claim against Colombian coal imported into the United Kingdom through the EC.

Mr. Eggar: The responsibility for deciding whether an anti-dumping complaint should be formally investigated lies with the Commission. The Government have made it clear to the Commission that we look to it to take seriously its responsibilities in this area and therefore to consider British Coal's complaint carefully. We have also made clear that we have no objection to its opening an investigation.

Electricity Generators

Mr. Hardy: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will call for a report from the Office of Electricity Regulation on profits made by the electricity generators.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 22 January 1993]: When the Government set up the privatised electricity market it appointed the Director General of Electricity Supply—DGES—to regulate it. It is for the DGES to decide whether any action is called for over the profits made by the electricity generators. However, the terms of reference of the coal review announced on 26 October said that the review would, amongst other issues, consider in consultation with the DGES whether any company is abusing its position in the marketplace.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Press Regulation

16. Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will make it his policy to maintain press freedom.

23. Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what changes will be made concerning the Press Complaints Commission in the light of the report by Sir David Calcutt, QC; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: I refer my hon. Friends to the reply I gave earlier today to the question from the hon. Member for Walsall, North (Mr. Winnick).

National Lottery

17. Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what recent representations he has received about his proposals for a national lottery.

Mr. Brooke: I have received a number of recent representations from a wide range of interested parties about the Government's proposals for a national lottery. Only a small minority of those representations were opposed to the establishment of a national lottery.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what representations he has received urging the location of the headquarters of the national lottery in an area traditionally associated with the pools industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: The Department has received representations from the Liverpool chamber of commerce and from the editor of the Liverpool Echo, and from the Glasgow development agency. Bradford metropolitan borough council has also urged consideration of Liverpool as a location. The National Heritage Committee recommended that the headquarters of the office of the national lottery should be established in such an area.

BBC Licence Fee

18. Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what representations he has received about the BBC licence fee; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: Since the Department's establishment, we have received a total of 713 representations about the television licence fee. Matters raised included the level of the fee, possible concessions for particular groups and the operation of the concessionary licence scheme.

Cathedrals

19. Sir Anthony Durant: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what grants his Department is making to support the preservation of great cathedrals.

Mr. Brooke: In April 1991, the Government launched the cathedral repair grant scheme, aimed at assisting with the repair of cathedrals and comparable buildings of other denominations. A total of £11·5 million, spread over the three financial years 1991-92 to 1993-94, was provided to English Heritage for this purpose. Following the autumn statement, I was able to announce an additional provisional allocation of £4 million for each of the two years 1994-95 and 1995-96 in order to sustain this very successful scheme.

Rugby League Grounds

20. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will make a statement on the operation of the Safety of Sports Grounds Act 1975 in relation to professional rugby league football.

Mr. Brooke: I am empowered under the Safety of Sports Grounds Act 1975 to designate for the purposes of safety certification any sports ground accommodating more than 10,000 spectators at which football, rugby or cricket is played. The purpose of certification is to secure reasonable public safety. At present, 25 rugby league grounds are designated under the 1975 Act.

Highcliffe Castle, Dorset

21. Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will make a statement on the future of Highcliffe castle, Dorset.

Mr. Key: The Buildings at Risk Trust has submitted to Christchurch borough council a business plan for the restoration of Highcliffe castle. I have agreed to meet my hon. Friend, and a deputation from the council, on Monday 15 February, to discuss the plan.

Windsor Castle (Fire)

22. Mr. Boyce: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he is now in a position to give an estimate of the cost of Windsor castle's restoration and the percentage to be met from public funds.

Mr. Brooke: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave earlier today to the question from the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks).

Theatres Act 1843

24. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans he has to commemorate the 150th anniversary of the passing of the Theatres Act 1843.

Mr. Key: Although we have no particular plans to mark this anniversary, I am grateful to my hon. Friend for having drawn it to the attention of the House. As he will know, the Theatres Act greatly liberalised the provision of theatre in London in the last century.

Drug Abuse (Sport)

25. Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if, when he next meets the chairman of the Sports Council, he will discuss with him the problem of drug abuse in sport.

Mr. Brooke: During 1993, I expect to have a number of meetings with the chairman of the Sports Council to discuss issues of mutual concern, including the abuse of drugs in sport.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what action he will take to counter the abuse of the taking or administration of drugs in sport.

Mr. Brooke: My Department is seeking to combat drug abuse in sport both nationally through support for the Sports Council's national drug testing programme and internationally through the Council of Europe's anti-doping convention and the memorandum of understanding with the Australian, Canadian and Norwegian Governments.

Regional Orchestras

26. Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what is his policy concerning regional orchestras.

Mr. Key: Under the arm's-length principle, it is for the Arts Council to set policies for the arts in line with the broad objectives agreed by the Government. As my right hon. Friend said in his statement to the House on 11 December, Official Report, columns 1123-33, the orchestras are unevenly distributed around the country, and their funding requirements needed to be assessed by comparison with each other. They will, therefore, continue to be funded directly by the Arts Council rather than the regional arts boards.

Tourism

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when he next expects to visit seaside resorts in the north-west to review progress in co-ordinating the marketing of tourist attractions inside and outside the United Kingdom.

Mr. Key: My right hon. Friend has no plans to visit resorts in the north-west in the immediate future. I am a regular visitor to the north-west and either my right hon. Friend or I would welcome an invitation to visit my hon. Friend's constituency as soon as an opportunity can be found.

Pub Theatre

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what representations he has received concerning assistance towards pub theatre; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: Although I have received no representations about pub theatre, I am aware that the growth in pub theatre over the last two decades has added a new and lively dimension to theatre life in London and elsewhere. The funding of these theatres is a matter for the Regional Arts Boards. I understand that a number of pub theatres have received grants from, for example, the London Arts Board.

DEFENCE

Northumberland National Park

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list, for each of the last five years, the amount of land in the Northumberland national park used by the Army, Navy and Air Force.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: That part of Otterburn training area which lies within the Northumberland national park area has been as follows:

1988 23,364 hectares freehold
1989 23,364 hectares freehold
1990 23,364 hectares freehold
1991 23,379 hectares freehold
1992 23,379 hectares freehold

Since 1991, about 3,640 hectares within the national park (including Kidland, Kidlandlee and parts of Harwood forest) have been licensed for use up to a maximum of 28 days each year. In addition, some training has been carried out on private land such as Thirwell common and Blakehope fell without charge and by prior arrangement with the owners.

The land detailed is mostly used for training by the Army.

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list, for each of the forthcoming five years, the amount of land in the Northumberland national park expected to be allocated for use by each of the armed services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The future use of land within Northumberland national park for military training is under review at present. It is too early to say what the precise future requirements will be.

Equipment (Exports)

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list for each year since 1980 levels of exports of defence equipment in pound million to (a) NATO and other western European countries, (b) the middle east and north Africa, (c) other African countries, (d) Asia and the far east and (e) Latin America and the Caribbean.

Mr. Aitken: I refer the hon. Member to table 1.12 of "Defence Statistics," 1992 edition, a copy of which is available in the Library of the House. 1991 is the latest year for which these figures are available.

KPMG Management Consultants

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the contracts awarded by his Department to KPMG Management Consultants over the past 12 months.

Mr. Aitken: During the past 12 months one contract has been placed with KPMG Management Consultants; the contract covers the provision of out-placement services related to "Options for Change".

Bosnia

Mr. Snape: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received regarding pay and allowances for British troops serving in Bosnia; whether he plans to introduce any special allowances for those troops; if he will list the comparative pay and allowances for British troops serving in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) BAOR and (c) Hong Kong; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have received a number of representations on this subject.

The pay and allowances paid to military personnel depend not only on their location but on their rank, job and personal circumstances, including whether they are married or not. It is our general policy that normal provisions on pay and allowances apply wherever personnel are serving. Service personnel receive the 'x' factor (currently an 11·5 per cent. addition to basic pay) throughout their career, which recognises their liability to serve, on occasions, in difficult and demanding circumstances. Provisions also include the payment of local overseas allowance (LOA) to personnel deployed outside the United Kingdom to cover, where appropriate, the additional costs associated with living in the country concerned. The troops deployed from Germany to the former Yugoslavia continue to receive a significant element of their LOA (70 per cent. for married personnel and 40 per cent. for single personnel) in recognition of their continuing financial commitments in Germany. In recognition of the conditions under which troops are serving in the former Yugoslavia, we have introduced a special welfare package which includes free two-way aerogrammes and an allowance towards the cost of telephone calls for all troops based in the region.

Nuclear Weapons Testing

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his estimate of the cost to the United Kingdom of radioactive decontamination and rehabilitation of Christmas island and Monte Bello island following weapons testing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Three independent studies by American and New Zealand experts have demonstrated that the levels of radioactivity on Christmas island—now Kiritimati—is consistent with that to be expected from world-wide fall-out. As for the Monte Bello islands, the report of the technical assessment group showed their isolation and lack of potable water ensured visitations would be casual and that such visits would cause no radiological health concern. For both localities, therefore, no radioactive decontamination is either necessary or planned.

HMS Ark Royal (Aircraft Landings)

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many of (a) the Sea Harrier and (b) the Sea King pilots who landed their aircraft on HMS Ark Royal on 15 January had not previously exercised landing of their aircraft on an aircraft carrier at sea.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: None.

Search and Rescue

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received about his plans to transfer the search and rescue unit from RAF Coltishall to RAF Wattisham; if he proposes to review the transfer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My Department has received a number of representations. There are no plans to review the decision.

HMS Vanguard

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's latest assessment of the in-service date of HMS Vanguard.

Mr. Aitken: Vanguard remains on course to enter service towards the end of 1994 or early in 1995.

Anti-ballistic Missile Systems

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's assessment as to the operational effective range of the anti-ballistic missile systems deployed around Moscow.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Components of the ABM system deployed around Moscow include the short range Gazelle interceptor for engagements within the atmosphere and the Gorgon long-range interceptor for engagements beyond the atmosphere. The Gorgon is capable of engaging incoming warheads at ranges of several hundred kilometres.

Ballistic Missiles

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how the downloading of Russian ballistic missiles under the terms of the START II agreement will be verified; and whether the downloading of Russian ballistic missiles precludes those missiles from being uploaded at a subsequent date.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: START II is a bilateral treaty between the United States of America and the Russian Federation. I understand that the comprehensive verification procedure agreed under START I will apply to the new treaty as well. The texts of both START treaties have been released. Implementation of the treaty is a matter for the states party to it.

Polaris

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's latest assessment of the year in which the final Polaris submarine will be decommissioned.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We expect the last Polaris submarine to be decommissioned in the second half of the decade.

RAF Carlisle

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the reason for the postponement of the planned £2 million capital improvements at RAF Carlisle; and when the improvements will now commence.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: A study is currently being carried out, with the knowledge of the trade unions, into options for the rationalisation of RAF equipment supply depots. To avoid pre-empting the results of that study, it was considered prudent to defer expenditure on the transportation shed at RAF Carlisle.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Fallen Livestock

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what new guidelines have been produced by his Department to local authorities on the provision of facilities for animal waste disposal following the publication of the fourth report of the Agriculture Committee, Session 1990-91, HC 493, on disposal of fallen livestock.

Mr. Soames: The Government reply to this report—Cm 1778—made it clear that it did not believe that it would be appropriate for local authorities to take on new functions on disposal of fallen livestock within their areas of responsibility either voluntarily or as a legal duty. The Department has issued codes of good agricultural practice for the protection of water and air which contain advice to anyone including local authorities on the disposal of animal carcases.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action has been taken by his Department since 1991 to tighten legal controls over the disposal of fallen stock.

Mr. Soames: The Animal By-Products Order 1992 came into effect on 1 January 1993. This requires anyone disposing of fallen animal carcases to ensure that they are either processed in establishments approved or registered for such purposes, buried or burned.

The order increases the penalties that can be imposed on those found to be disposing and dumping fallen stock illegally.

Hill Farmers

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has on state-financed social payments, subsidies and other support schemes to supplement income available to hill farmers in other EC member states.

Mr. Curry: Information on payment of compensatory allowances to hill farmers for 1987 to 1989 in all EC member states is available at page T/129 of "The Agricultural Situation in the Community—1991 Report", published by the European Commission. This publication is in the Library of the House. More recent information is not available. The Government do not have comprehensive details of expenditure on social and other national payments available to hill farmers in other member states.

Hormone Substances

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many people have been charged with offences under the Hormonal Substances (Food Source) (Animals) Regulations 1991 to date.

Mr. Soames: The Hormonal Substances (Food Sources) (Animals) Regulations 1991—SI 1991/1593—were revoked and replaced by the Animals, Meat and Meat Products (Examination for Residues and Maximum Residue Limits) Regulations 1991—SI 1991/2843—which came into force on 8 January 1992. To date no persons have been charged with offences under either set of regulations.

Salmonella

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has on the checks which take place for salmonella in live birds in Holland producing eggs that are being sold in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Soames: I understand that official checks are carried out for the presence of salmonella in poultry brooding flocks in the Netherlands, but not as far as I am aware in commercial egg laying flocks.

The EC Zoonoses directive—92/117/EEC—agreed at the December Agriculture Council, includes provisions for the control of salmonella in poultry. The directive comes into force on 1 January 1994, and from that date producers in all member states will be required to meet the standards set in the directive. We would expect the European Commission to ensure compliance with the requirements in other member states.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proportion of egg imports are subject to testing for salmonella.

Mr. Soames: Checks for salmonella in imported eggs ceased from 1 January on the introduction of the single market. However, all eggs, including imported eggs, remain subject to checks at any stage of marketing.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many cases of salmonella were reported in each month since January 1991.

Mr. Soames: The total number of incidents of salmonella in animals and birds reported to the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food under the Zoonoses Order 1989, in each month since January 1991 were:

	1991	[1] 1992
January	389	275
February	371	320
March	315	290
April	318	245
May	280	183
June	300	236
July	300	282
August	298	281
September	492	298
October	500	301
November	393	270
December	315	166
TOTAL	4,271	3,147

[1] Figures for 1992 are provisional.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what arrangements exist for the removal of egg stocks from the market where sample testing of imported eggs reveals salmonella contamination.

Mr. Soames: All eggs on the British market, whether imported or home produced, may be subject to testing for salmonella. Any food, including eggs, which poses a threat to human health would be removed from the market under section 9 of the Food Safety Act 1990.

Eggs

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what procedures common to all member states of the European Community exist for the inspection of eggs and chickens.

Mr. Soames: European Community legislation requires inspections of chickens and eggs for various purposes including animal health, trade and consumer protection. Detailed arrangements for such inspections are usually a matter for the competent authority in each member state.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what procedures exist to ensure that where containers carrying imported eggs are subject to random sampling, such sampling includes eggs from throughout the container and not just from those areas of the container which are immediately accessible to inspection officials.

Mr. Soames: Sampling arrangements are the same for both home produced and imported eggs. Arrangements take account of the need both to take representative samples and to facilitate the flow of trade.

Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowances

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the value, at 1980 prices, of hill livestock compensatory allowances in each year since 1980.

Mr. Curry: The figures requested are shown in the table.

Recycling (Horticulture)

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what specific assistance is currently granted by his Department to promote the use of recycled waste in horticulture.

Mr. Curry: Advice on disposal, including the potential for recycling, of waste from agricultural and horticultural premises was included in the MAFF/Welsh Office code of good agricultural practice for the protection of air, issued in July 1992. The Ministry's professional advisory service, Agricultural Development Advisory Service, also offers free initial advice to growers on a wide range of environmental issues, including the recycling of waste.

Dairy Inspection Charges

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 18 January, at column 74, regarding dairy inspection charges, for what reason no dairy inspection charges are levied in Scotland and Northern Ireland.

Mr. Curry: This is a matter for the respective Secretaries of State.

Fishing Industry

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has made to the European Commission and to other fishing nations requesting that other European fishing efforts in British waters be limited to an extent equal to that resulting from the days at sea limitations to be imposed on British fishermen.

Mr. Curry: The multi-annual guidance programmes which were agreed in December require all member states to take steps to reduce their fishing effort, but it is for individual member states to determine the balance between measures to reduce capacity and measures to reduce time at sea.

Myxomatosis

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when the veterinary medicines directorate will have completed its assessment of the current application from Intervet (UK) Ltd. to licence a myxomatosis vaccine.

Mr. Soames: The assessment of product licence applications against the Medicines Act's criteria of safety, quality and efficacy is a complex matter and is individual to each product. The application referred to is being assessed as rapidly as possible, consistent with the requirements of the Act.

Badgers

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many licences for fox hunts to damage and enter dogs down badger setts during the breeding seasons of (a) December 1991 to June 1992 and (b) December 1992 to June 1993 he has granted; and if he will give details in each case.

Mr. Soames: No such licences have been issued.

Abattoirs

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the estimated cost to the meat and livestock industry of veterinary supervision in abattoirs.

Mr. Soames: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Macclesfield (Mr. Winterton) on 11 January, Official Report, column 618.

SCOTLAND

Children's Hospices

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the development of hospices for terminally ill children in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which my hon. Friend, the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Scotland gave to his question on 1 December, at column 186-87.

Health Service

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list all appointments made as members or chairpersons and members-designate and chairpersons-designate of all national health service trusts and trusts-designate in Scotland as at 21 January and the annual scale of remuneration payable to each.

Health Promotion

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will set out the individual contributions made in an official capacity by Ministers in his Department towards his Department's health promotion campaign.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 22 January 1993]: In his foreward to the policy statement "Scotland's Health—A Challenge To Us All", my right hon. Friend set out some of the initiatives we would be taking to help promote good health in Scotland.

My right hon. and noble Friend the Minister of State is co-ordinating action on the policy statement; and, with his agreement, the chief medical officer has met the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities and the Scottish Trades Union Congress to discuss ways in which these two bodies can contribute to health improvements in Scotland. In October he formally welcomed the launch of a major anti-smoking campaign by the Health Education Board for Scotland. Both he and I participated in a number of engagements during European Drug Prevention Week in November to emphasise the dangers of drug misuse to health.

On 4 December my hon. Friend the Minister for industry and local government in Scotland met representatives of employers' organisations in Scotland to discuss health promotion in the workplace. He was much encouraged by the helpful and constructive views expressed at the meeting and by the general welcome given to our proposal to prepare a guide to good practice on health promotion in the workplace. Later this year my hon. Friend, the Minister for agriculture and the environment in Scotland, will be meeting representatives of farming, food processing and retailing organisations to discuss how they can contribute to improvements in the Scottish diet. Further ministerial activity will take place as appropriate to maintain the momentum generated by the policy statement.

Petitions

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his Department's policy for responding to the signatories of petitions; if it is his policy to respond to each of the signatories; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 20 January 1993]: My Department's usual practice is to respond to the organisers of a petition or the individual who presents it. If the organisation or person is not readily identifiable my Department writes to the first name on the petition. Responses are not sent to each of the signatories.

Official Visits

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the (a) dates and (b) reasons for each official visit he has made to Paisley since being appointed to his present post; what plans he has to visit the town; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 20 January 1993]: I attended the formal launch of the Glencoats area development in Ferguslie Park, Paisley on 4 October 1991. I have no plans to visit Paisley in the immediate future.

Hill Livestock

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the subsidies available to hill livestock farming businesses over the last five years for which figures are available; and how they have varied in value at constant prices in relation to farm input costs and the retail price index over the last five years for which figures are available.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 18 January 1993]: The table shows the main rates of assistance available to hill farming enterprises, in money and real terms, from livestock subsidy schemes over the last five years. Information on the prices of input items of hill farming enterprises are not readily available. However, aggregate input costs which include input volume as well as price changes, have risen at a rate below the retail prices index.

Road Traffic Accidents

Mr. Alex Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many people have been charged by Scottish police forces for failing to report and stop at the scene of a road traffic accident, in each of the last five years; and if he will give a regional breakdown of these figures;

(2) how many people have been prosecuted for failing to report and stop at the scene of a road traffic accident, in each of the last five years; and if he will give a regional breakdown of these figures.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 19 January 1993]: The information is not available in the form requested. Table (i) gives the total number of offences under section 170 of the Road Traffic Act 1988, and corresponding earlier legislation, which were cleared-up by Scottish police forces. Table (ii) gives the number of offences under section 170 of the Road Traffic Act 1988, and corresponding earlier legislation, which were proceeded against. Section 170 of the Road Traffic Act 1988 includes both failing to stop or report a road traffic accident and also failing to provide proof of insurance.

EMPLOYMENT

Disabled People

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will publish a table showing the (a) names, (b) place of residence, (c) current occupation, (d) salary, honorarium or allowance payable, (e) expected weekly time commitment, (f) date of appointment and (g) date of retirement of those appointed to serve on each local committee for the employment of disabled people; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. Gordon McMaster, dated 25 January 1993:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to write to you direct to respond to your Parliamentary Question to her about Committees for the Employment of People With Disabilities (CEPDs). This is something which falls within the responsibility delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

Unfortunately, I cannot provide you with the information you require about the names, residence and occupation of people appointed to the Committees. There are 60 local Committees with a total membership of approximately 900 people and such information about the membership is not held centrally.

Chairmen and members of Committees are not paid. Certain allowances may however be claimed and I am enclosing a note of the current rates.

We do not expect any particular weekly commitment from people on the Committees, nor is there a record of the amount of time spent on Committee work. There are usually 2-4 meetings each year and events to promote people with disabilities.

Turning to your question about the date of appointment and retirement, I regret I cannot give details about the date of appointment as such information is again not held centrally. Committees are normally reconstituted approximately every three years when all appointments are considered afresh. Committee Chairmen are appointed by the Parliamentary Under Secretary of State on behalf of the Secretary of State. Members are appointed by my Regional Directors again on behalf of the Secretary of State. The Committees are next due to be reconstituted on 1 April 1994 and current appointments will terminate on 31 March 1994.

Committees have a duty to advise and assist the Secretary of State for Employment (in practice my local officials) on matters relating to the employment and self employment of people with disabilities in their areas. Their role includes:

helping to influence and educate employers locally towards positive policies and action to promote the employment and progression of people with disabilities; promoting and marketing our services to people with disabilities particularly employers;

a statutory role in respect of items referred to them in conjunction with registration of people as disabled and the provisions of the Quota Scheme.

We value the help Committees give to promoting people with disabilities and in getting the important message across to employers that disability does not mean inability.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

Redundant Workers

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans she has to introduce a charter for redundant workers.

Mr. McLoughlin: The redundancy payments service charter, which has been in operation since November 1991, lays down standards of service to be met in dealing with claims for statutory redundancy payments, as well as certain other debts against employers who have become insolvent. It prescribes target time limits within which claims will be met, and which have recently been enhanced.

In December 1991, the Employment Service published its job seekers charter, which tells job seekers how the Employment Service can help them get back to work and what happens when they claim unemployment benefits. All local offices display the standards and their performance against them.

Unemployment Benefit Disqualification

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information is available regarding the length of periods of unemployment benefit disqualification imposed by adjudication officers in the area which includes the Derbyshire, North-East constituency.

Mr. McLoughlin: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. Harry Barnes, dated 25 January 1993:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to write to you direct to respond to your Parliamentary Question to her about the length of periods of unemployment benefit disqualifications in the North East Derbyshire area. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

All decisions on claims for unemployment benefit are made by the independent adjudicating authorities.

Information about the length of disqualification periods imposed is not collated or published as each is decided in the light of the circumstances surrounding the individual case. Without knowledge of these circumstances no meaningful interpretation of the information could be made.

I hope this is helpful.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information is available regarding the lengths of periods of unemployment benefit disqualification imposed by adjudication officers in the area which includes the constituency of Manchester, Withington.

Mr. McLoughlin: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what representations have been made by his Department to date to the European Community concerning (a) the future development of ferry ports in Wales and (b) the future development of transport links between Wales and the Republic of Ireland;

(2) what representations he has made to the European Commission's directorates general XVI (inter-regional) and VII (transport) concerning the inclusion of Wales-Ireland transport links as part of the INTERREG programme.

Sir Wyn Roberts: My officials have had a number of discussions with their counterparts in the European Commission over links between Wales and the Republic of Ireland and my right hon. Friend intends to raise this matter at his next meeting with Commissioner Millan.

Self-employment

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many self-employed people in Wales have reported (a) zero income and (b) after-tax losses in Wales in each year since 1990.

Business Advice Centres

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many clients have sought the assistance of each business advice centre in Wales within each of the last three years; and what monitoring has been undertaken of the nature of the inquiries.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Many organisations in Wales, including banks and other commercial companies, have "centres" for giving advice to businesses. Information on total numbers of clients seeking advice from such bodies is not held centrally. However, the Development Board for Rural Wales—DBRW—operates a network of business advice centres and the information requested for those centres is as follows:

[2] TS —Training Sessions (number held).

The Development Board for Rural Wales monitoring includes a range of processes including customer-care questionnaires, independent reviews and evaluations of customer needs, as well as meeting representatives of the business advice centres monthly.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the business advice centres established in Wales within the last three years; and if he will make a statement outlining the main activities carried out by such centres.

Sir Wyn Roberts: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer given today. As regards the Development Board for Rural Wales network of business advice centres, two additional centres have been established at Cardigan and Lampeter. They primarily provide advice on business start-up, training, and access to information on premises and financial assistance.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much has been allocated by his Department to develop business advice centres in Wales within each of the last three years; and if he will list the amount allocated to each centre.

Sir Wyn Roberts: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer given today. The Development Board for Rural Wales has allocated funding to its business advice centres over the last three financial years, as follows:

Business advice centre	1989-90 £	1990-91 £	1991-92 £
Ystradgynlais and Brecon	21,000	36,000	36,000
Llandrindod Wells	14,000	18,000	18,000
Welshpool	14,000	18,000	18,000

Aberystwyth	14,000	18,000	18,000
Dolgellau	14,000	18,000	18,000

In addition, the Welsh Development Agency and the Development Board for Rural Wales have given funding for core services and special projects to Wales' 21 local enterprise agencies, which also provide business advice, as follows:

1989-90 £	1990-91 £	1991-92 £
430,700	370,400	353,000

Local Development Agencies

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to establish local development agencies to operate in the 10 areas which head the deprivation tables published by his Department with the duty of granting loans to assist unemployed people to establish their own businesses.

Sir Wyn Roberts: I have approved local enterprise agencies in all but one of the areas concerned and I am currently considering an application for the remaining area. These agencies provide a wide range of services to people considering establishing their own business, including advice on the Government's loan guarantee scheme.

Disabled People (Unemployment)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the current rate of unemployment among (a) disabled people in total and (b) disabled people of working age in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: Information on those with a health problem or disability which limits the kind of paid work they can do is available from the labour force survey, but is only collected for people of working age. It is estimated that, in the summer of 1992, 7 per cent. of such people were unemployed according to the International Labour Organisation definition. A further 12 per cent. said they would like a job but were not currently looking for work. These estimates are based on very small samples in Wales and may be subject to large sampling variability.

Education Capital Expenditure

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what was the indicative capital allocation for education in Mid-Glamorgan (a) for 1991-92 and (b) 1992-93; and what information he has of the actual expenditure by Mid-Glamorgan;

(2) what calculation he has made in capital appraisals for Mid-Glamorgan in 1993-94 for the development of bilingual education.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Welsh local education authorities do not receive indicative capital allocations for education services. County councils receive annual basic credit approvals which are unhypothecated to particular services. Spending priorities between services and within services, including spending on bilingual education, are a matter for them. Actual capital expenditure on education services by Mid Glamorgan county council, including any financed from the authority's own resources, in 1991-92 was reported at £9·014 million and for 1992-93 is forecast by the local authority to be £8·226 million.

EC Regional Development Fund

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the projects supported by the European regional development fund in Wales, by county, for each of the last three years.

Mr. David Hunt: I will write to the hon. Gentleman and will place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House.

Trunk Roads

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on how many occasions, and for how much mileage in each case, county highways have been redesignated as trunk roads in each of the last 10 years; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: In the last 10 years only two such trunking orders have been made. These were :

1982—The St. Clears-Nash (South Pembrokeshire) Trunk Road (Nash Finger Post—Waterloo Roundabout Trunking) Order 1982 (SI 1982 No. 437). A length of 2.81 miles.

1987—The London—Fishguard Trunk Road (A48) and the Newhouse—High Beech Principal Road (A466) (County of Gwent) Order 1987 (SI 1987 No. 322) A length of 1.34 miles.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with Cardiff city council concerning the release of final tranches of urban development grant to the Brent Walker Welsh world trade centre; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Welsh Office receives a written quarterly progress report from Cardiff city council on the Cardiff international arena—formerly the world trade centre. Frequent informal contact by officials is also maintained with the city council's monitoring team.

Under the terms of the urban development grant agreement between Cardiff city council and Brent Walker plc, £3 million has been paid to Brent Walker for work undertaken and £0.25 million remains to be paid. The balance of the grant will only be released when the building has been completed to the satisfaction of the city council and the Department.

Conwy Tunnel

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what analysis he has made of the cost control and contracting techniques used in the completion of construction of the Conwy tunnel; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: I am satisfied that the financial aspects of the work carried out on the Conwy crossing, including cost control and contractual arrangements, are consistent with best financial practice as laid down in the Department's rules and instructions for dealing with all trunk road projects.

Central Office of Information

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales for what length of time the Central Office of Information will carry responsibility for his Department's printing and publicity contracts; and if he will place a copy of the letter of arrangement with COI covering the delegation of power to place his Department's contracts in the Library.

Mr. David Hunt: We will be reviewing the arrangements during 1993-94 and will change them if value-for-money and managerial considerations suggest that that is the right course.

The relationship with COI is a long-standing one. The extent to which COI is used is a matter for administrative decision rather than specific contract.

Butetown Link Road

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he had with the South Glamorgan county council concerning the application of a global settlement agreement with the contractors' consortium building the Butetown link road section of the south Glamorgan peripheral distributor road.

Sir Wyn Roberts: My right hon. Friend met the leader of South Glamorgan county council on 16 November and again on 20 January when the financing of the Butetown link was discussed.

Printing and Publicity Contracts

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on what date he was first informed of allegations of improper conduct in the placing of his Department's printing and publicity contracts; and what follow-up action he took.

Mr. David Hunt: On 28 April 1992 I was advised that a member of staff engaged in publicity work was to be dismissed for misconduct following an informal investigation. The matter was put in the hands of the police.

A reorganisation of the department's systems for publicity management had been instituted in 1991 and is continuing.

Public Bodies

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which non-departmental public bodies are sponsored by his Department; which of these are audited by the National Audit Office; which firms of private accountants audit each of the others, by what method of tendering contracts to such firms are awarded; and for what duration.

Mr. David Hunt [Pursuant to his reply, 10 July 1992, c. 360-61]: Three Welsh non-departmental public bodies were not included in "Public Bodies 1991" because of their establishment after its publication.

Wales Youth Agency was incorporated on 1 April 1992. The agency is a company limited by guarantee. Messrs. Owens Thomas and Co., chartered accountants, were appointed as auditors on 18 December 1992. The appointment followed open competition.

The Higher Education Funding Council for Wales and the Further Education Funding Council for Wales were established on 6 May 1992. In both cases the Comptroller and Auditor General is the auditor.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Carers

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his best estimate of the cost of continuing payment of invalid care allowance for a period of (a) eight weeks and (b) six months after their caring responsibilities come to an end to carers who have been receiving invalid care allowance for more than one year.

Mr. Scott The estimated cost of continuing payment of invalid care allowance after caring ceases to carers who have been receiving the benefit for more than one year is £5 million for eight weeks and £16 million for six months.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he will review the present rules governing carer premium and carers over the age of 65.

Mr. Burt: The carer premium is linked to entitlement to invalid care allowance and is primarily intended to give additional help to younger carers, many of whom previously had no premium. Additional help is given to people over 60 through the pensioner premiums. We have no plans to extend the carer premium to people who are unable to establish entitlement to invalid care allowance on age grounds.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many carers aged over 65 years receive (a) invalid care allowance and (b) the carer premium; and what proposals he has to increase the amount of financial support for older carers.

Mr. Scott: At 31 December 1992, 288 men over age 65 and 9,028 women over age 60 were receiving invalid care allowance. Separate figures are not held on the numbers of carers over age 65 who receive carer premium. We have no plans to increase the amount of financial support for older carers.

Note: Separate figures are not available for female carers over age 65.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much his Department spends on invalid care allowance and the carer premium; and what percentage of the total social security budget this figure makes up.

Mr. Scott: Expenditure on invalid care allowance and the carer premium was £262 million and £15·5 million respectively in 1991-92. This represents 0·02 per cent. of the total social security budget for that year.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much it would cost his Department to restore national insurance credits for short-term benefits through invalid care allowance.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Moray (Mrs. Ewing) on 18 November 1992, at columns 252-53.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he plans to initiate a take-up campaign for invalid care allowance and the carer premium in light of the introduction of community care; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The number of people in receipt of invalid care allowance continues to increase. We have no plans to initiate a take-up campaign at present, but we shall continue to monitor the situation.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he proposes to abolish the upper age limit for first claims of invalid care allowance.

Mr. Scott: We have no plans to do so.

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people currently receive invalid care allowance; and what percentage this is of the total number of people caring for 35 hours or more each week.

Mr. Scott: At 31 December 1992, there were 189,000 people receiving invalid care allowance. Figures showing the total number of people who are caring for 35 hours or more each week are not available.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate for the number of carers who are entitled to the carer premium; and how many are actually paid it.

Mr. Burt: We estimate that about 70,000 people are entitled to the carer premium because they have invalid care allowance, or would have it but for the overlapping benefit rules, and are claiming income support, housing benefit or community charge benefit. Premiums are awarded in those benefits where the qualifying conditions are met, so this would also be our estimate of the numbers who have it included in the calculation of their benefit.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of national average earnings the current level of invalid care allowance is; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The current rate of invalid care allowance is £32·55 which represents 10·69 per cent. of average national earnings. Invalid care allowance recipients may earn up to £40 a week, after deduction of allowable expenses, without affecting their entitlement. They may also be eligible to receive other social security benefits.

Note: Average national earnings figure for April 1992 is £304·60 (Source: New Earnings Survey).

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much it would cost his Department to extend eligibility for invalid care allowance to carers providing care and support for a person who receives the lower rate care component of disability living allowance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people would benefit and what is his estimate of the cost of extending entitlement to invalid care allowance to those caring for a person who receives the lower rate care component of disability living allowance.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Members to my reply to the hon. Member for Moray (Mrs Ewing) on 18 November 1992 at columns 252-53, and to my reply to the hon. Member for Manchester, Withington (Mr. Bradley) on 11 January 1993 at columns 676-77.

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people are (a) in receipt of and (b) estimated to be eligible for the carer premium; and what measures his Department is taking to increase take-up of the carer premium.

Mr. Burt: We estimate that about 70,000 people are currently eligible for, and receiving, the carer premium in income support, housing benefit or community charge benefit because they have invalid care allowance, or would have it but for the overlapping benefit rules. It is not possible to make a reliable estimate of the numbers who could become eligible for the premium were they to claim one or more of the benefits mentioned. The carer premium is already publicised in a number of ways and we continually monitor the provision of information about benefits.

Income Support

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the number of claimants of income support in residential and nursing homes in each of the last three years for which figures are available, in each year giving both the total figures and the numbers in receipt of the weekly rates for elderly people, very dependent elderly, mental disorder other than mental handicap, drug or alcohol dependency, mental handicap, terminal illness and physical disablement below pension age.

Mr. Burt: Estimates of numbers claiming each of the income support limits are shown in the table.

Social Fund

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he will publish the social fund budget allocations for individual district offices, following the social fund discretionary loans budget announced on 18 January.

Mr. Scott: Today a list of the new social fund budget allocations for district offices has been placed in the Library.

As a result of increases in the discretionary social fund loans budget for this financial year, my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State has changed two of the Benefits Agency's published targets for 1992-93. The revised targets are:

(i) to keep to the gross allocation for social fund loans and grants of £317 million.
(ii) recovery of Social Fund loans—£187 million.

The new loan recovery target represents the higher level of recoveries which the Benefits Agency is expected to achieve as a result of the increased gross allocation for loans. We do not propose to increase the rate of recovery from individual customers or change their repayment arrangements.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what action his Department is taking to help carers who have gone into debt as a result of the delays in payments of disability living allowance.

Mr. Scott: Income Support is available under the normal rules for anyone who otherwise would be left without funds.

Furthermore an award of invalid care allowance may be backdated for up to 12 months provided that entitlement to disability living allowance has been established for the relevant period.

Community Care

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the number of severely disabled people who will have to go into residential care when the new funding system for community care is introduced in April; and if he will publish letters sent by officials of his Department during December 1992 to directors of (a) the independent living fund and (b) other relevant organisations about maximum payments for independent living.

Mr. Scott: The information on residential care is not available in the form requested. We do not intend to publish official correspondence.

SERPS

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what plans he has to advertise the financial benefits of opting back into the state earnings-related pension scheme for those with personal pensions;

(2) what is his estimate of the number of those holding personal pensions who would now benefit by opting back into the state earnings-related pension scheme.

Miss Widdecombe: The 1 per cent. additional rebate, which will be paid to appropriate personal pension holders aged 30 and over from April this year, is intended to ensure that the majority of personal pension holders continue to find it worth while to maintain their personal pensions.

Taking out and maintaining a personal pension is a matter of individual choice. The decision will be based on many factors, including age, earnings, likely future investment returns and future employment intentions. It is therefore not possible to say how many appropriate personal pension holders would benefit from returning to the state earnings-related pension scheme at any specific time.

Independent Living Fund

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what arrangements will be made under the successor scheme to the independent living fund in assessing care needs for awards; and what action will be taken in the event of reduction in support provided by a local authority.

Mr. Scott: Responsibility for assessing care needs will initially be with local authorities. People who are eligible for help from the new fund will also be assessed by social workers employed by the successor body. Details of how local authority arrangements will work, including interaction between local authorities and the successor body, have yet to be finalised.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what powers the successor independent living fund body will have to review the awards of existing beneficiaries.

Mr. Scott: Subject to its cash limited provision, the successor body will have an unfettered power to review the awards of existing beneficiaries.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assumptions will be made in considering applications under the successor scheme to the independent living fund, on the level of support from local authorities for applicants; if this will be fixed on a local basis; to whom applications will be made; and if local authorities will be able to refuse awards.

Mr. Scott: Details of arrangements applying to local authorities are not yet finalised and are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what arrangements will be made under the successor scheme to the independent living fund for appeals by applicants in cases of disagreement between the trustees and local authorities or otherwise; what limits will be placed on payments and whether help for local authorities will count towards the limit; what criteria will be applied in deciding applications; and what arrangements will be made for local cash limits.

Mr. Scott: There will be no independent right of appeal available to those who apply to the successor body for new cases. It is right that the trustees should have the final say on expenditure for which they are responsible.

There will be a ceiling of £500 per week for total costs of help under the scheme.

Details of arrangements applying to local authorities are not yet finalised and are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health.

The people eligible for help from the body for new cases will be those severely disabled people aged 16 to 65 who are:

(a) in receipt of the highest rate of the care component of Disability Living Allowance;

(b) who, after paying care costs with help from the fund, are left with income at or about the level of Income Support; and

(c) who would otherwise have to go into residential care.

EC Social Security Schemes

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he next expects to have discussions with other EC member states and the European Commission on the proposed Council regulation amending regulation (EEC) No. 1408/71 on the application of social security schemes to employed persons, to self-employed persons and to members of their families moving within the Community and regulation (EEC) No. 574/72 laying down the procedure for implementing regulation (EEC) 1408/71; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: We have no current plans to discuss these draft amending regulations personally with other EC member states or the European Commission. However, officials are taking part in negotiations on behalf of my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State, within the normal Community machinery. Once these negotiations have been completed, reference will be made to the Council of Ministers for final approval by all member states.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Women Refugees

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what representations he has had on the particular needs and dangers facing women refugees; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will seek to amend the 1951 United Nations convention relating to the status of refugees to define women as a social group facing persecution resulting from gender based discrimination, violence, sexual exploitation and traditional practices harmful to women.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: It would not be a practical proposition to amend the 1951 convention on the status of refugees. But I am well aware of the particular needs and dangers facing women refugees. Women are often in the majority among refugees. They may be separated from their husbands and relatives, struggling to look after children in difficult conditions.

The United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) has become increasingly aware of women's particular problems and needs, such as protection from violence, equal representation on refugee committees, family planning services and child care facilities. The high commissioner has introduced appropriate operational guidelines and appointed a women's co-ordinator.

Tropical Rain Forests

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress was made during the United Kingdom's presidency of the European Community in implementing the fourth European Community action plan for the Environment as it relates to the conservation of tropical rain forests.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Under our presidency we achieved, with EC backing, the inclusion of follow-up to the UNCED forest principles in the remit of the UN Sustainable Development Commission, and the development of a consensus amongst tropical timber consuming countries that the sustainable production of timber should be the central objective of a renegotiated international tropical timber agreement. The Community and individual member states, including the United Kingdom, made progress towards the identification of incentives for the sustainable management of forests. The Community and many member states continued to undertake substantial programmes of development assistance in tropical forestry.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to support the development of a code of conduct to regulate the activities of European national companies operating in tropical rain forest regions.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I have no such plans. Regulation of the activities of companies operating in the rain forests is the responsibility of the rainforest countries themselves. We are ready to consider requests from developing countries for help in the management of their forests including the development and strengthening of effective regulatory arrangements and institutions.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will publish the results of monitoring carried out in relation to the joint Commonwealth Development Corporation and Kolombangara Forest Products Ltd. project, pursuant to plans elaborated in the 1989-1993 environmental working plan;

(2) pursuant to his answer of 3 December 1992, Official Report, column 310, if the Commonwealth Development Corporation has carried out an environmental impact assessment in relation to its involvement with the Liberty Club Ltd. tourist hotel development in Grenada.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: As indicated in my earlier answer, decisions on individual investments are the responsibility of the Commonwealth Development Corporation Board. Consideration of the environmental aspects of proposed investments is an integral part of the corporation's project appraisal and approval procedures. The assessment and monitoring procedures for specific projects and the results of these are a matter for the corporation. I have asked the chairman to write the hon. Member and will arrange for copies of his letter to be placed in the Libraries of the House.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to review the current level of tariffs on imports of tropical timber goods into the European Community in order to encourage trade in sustainably produced and value-added products.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have no plans to review these tariffs. Negotiation of such tariffs is the responsibility of the European Commission which is currently engaged in tariff negotiations as part of the Uruguay round on GATT.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 4 December 1992, Official Report, column 428, if he will place in the Library a copy of the report of the ODA-supported assessment of the implementation to date of the international tropical timber agreement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We continuously review and assess the ITTO's performance. No report has been produced.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what has been the Government's total contribution to the special account of the International Tropical Timber Organisation since 1987.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Since 1987 we have committed US dollars 1,961,986 to projects financed through the International Tropical Timber Organisation's special account.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what response ODA officials have made to a letter from Friends of the Earth, dated 20 November 1992, requesting detailed information on British support for the tropical forestry action plan.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: ODA officials will reply to Friends of the Earth as soon as they have compiled the details requested. I will send the hon. Member a copy of their letter. A summary is contained in my reply to the hon. Member of 7 December 1992 at column 494.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what plans he has to discuss the conservation of tropical rain forests with Ministers from other European Community member states;

(2) what plans he has to discuss the conservation of tropical rain forests with ministers from other European Community member states.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I have no immediate plans to do so. Tropical forestry issues are discussed regularly within the European Community at official level.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 3 December, to the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith), Official Report, column 310, what was the most recent FAO assessment of the rate of tropical forest loss before the one made in 1990.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The previous assessment in 1980 estimated the rate of tropical forest loss to be 12 million hectares annually.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to discuss with his European Community counterparts the renegotiation of the international tropical timber agreement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: No Ministerial meetings are planned. Overseas Development Administration officials have frequent discussions with their European Community colleagues on the renegotiation of the international tropical timber agreement.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to establish a programme for the planting of trees in tropical countries to offset emissions of carbon dioxide.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Our support to forestry programmes in developing countries through the aid programme is designed to encourage sustainable forestry and forest conservation and includes reafforestation activities. One of the advantages of successful implementation of these policies is to the global climate through carbon sequestration.

International Development Association

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the United Kingdom proposals for the replenishment of the World Bank's International Development Association.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Worcester (Mr. Luff) on 19 January at column 155.

Overseas Aid

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what proportion of British aid is directly focused on the alleviation of poverty;

(2) if he will publish in the next issue of "British Aid Statistics" a table showing the proportion of British aid directly focused on the alleviation of poverty.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The basic purpose of the aid programme is to reduce poverty in the poorest countries. We do this in a number of ways including supporting sound policies that will encourage economic growth, ensuring that full account is taken of the impact of our projects and programmes on poor people and by projects which are specifically intended to help the poorest communities directly.

Direct poverty alleviation activities are funded through a number of channels including through our bilateral country programmes, and our support for non-governmental organisations. The overall figure for those activities is not currently available, although work is underway on a system for collating this information. We hope to include it in future editions of "British Aid Statistics". But this direct assistance is only a part of our total contribution to poverty reduction through multilateral as well as bilateral channels.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proportion of aid for developing countries planned for 1993-94 and 1994-95 is already committed.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The financial management of the aid programme for developing countries over the survey period is exercised through spending allocations to individual programme managers for each of the three years ahead.

It is the responsibility of programme managers to live within their spending allocations and make commitments accordingly. The forecast rate of expenditure in future years against any commitment will be subject to change.

The latest position for 1993-94 will be reflected in the main estimates to be published in March.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what countries currently receive United Kingdom bilateral aid assistance in relation to the control of human population growth.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We are currently providing bilateral assistance to population programmes in Bangladesh, India, Pakistan, Ghana, Kenya, Malawi, Nigeria and Zimbabwe; we are also providing assistance to a non-governmental organisation working in South Africa. We expect to begin financing population projects in Tanzania and Uganda in the near future. In addition we are supporting NGO population projects in 17 countries through the joint funding scheme. Our aim is to enable more women and men to choose when to have children and to help meet the considerable unmet demand for safe and effective family planning and reproductive health services in developing countries.

Brazil

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what specific activities have so far been conducted under the Overseas Development Administration-funded project in the Tapajos national forest in Brazil.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: No logging activity has been started in the forest. An initial meeting of agencies involved in the project was held in Brazil on 15 December 1992, chaired by the director of the national forest. It was attended by representatives of the ODA, the International Tropical Timber Organisation (the managing agent) and all the Brazilian agencies involved. Two Brazilian environmental NGOs also attended. The meeting established the steering and consultative committees which will advise and monitor the project. A further meeting in February is planned to consider the work plan.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make available to the House a copy of an environmental impact assessment relating to the Overseas Development Administration-funded project in the Tapajos national forest in Brazil.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The objective of the project is to conduct controlled selective logging on a trial basis to see if it is possible to manage the forest for commercial purposes without causing long term environmental damage. The trial will be in an area of less than 1 per cent. of the national forest and will contribute to an on-going environmental impact assessment.

Aid and Trade Provision

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Cynon Valley (Mrs. Clwyd) of 19 June 1992, Official Report, column 695, when the review of aid and trade provision will be published.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Following the review of the aid and trade provision, Ministers decided in the context of last year's public expenditure discussions that the scheme should continue. An announcement about future policy will be made to the House shortly.

Developing Countries (Aid)

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what has been the net flow of private resources to developing countries for each year since 1979; and for each of these years what was the level of aid paid to these countries and the level of their debt interest payments.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The figures are as follows:

($ billion)	Net Private Flows to Developing Countries	Aid (oda) to Developing Countries	Interest and Dividends Paid by Developing Countries
1979	54·0	31·1	n/a
1980	66·2	37·8	63·6
1981	74·3	36·8	86·4
1982	58·2	33·8	95·3
1983	47·9	33·7	90·6
1984	31·6	34·7	89·5
1985	30·2	37·0	92·8
1986	26·5	44·5	80·3
1987	33·7	48·4	73·6
1988	43·9	51·5	93·4
1989	48·6	51·4	93·4
1990	52·6	63·0	93·3

Russian Federation

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much funding from the know-how fund is being given to assist the current symposium in parliamentary democracy for members of the symposium in parliamentary democracy for members of the supreme soviet of the Russian Federation organised by the department of politics of the University of Leeds; which parliamentary parties have been invited to participate; and what attention the symposium is paying (a) to the conflict in Ireland and (b) the role of regional parties in the House of Commons.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The know-how fund has allocated £60,000 towards the costs of this symposium. I understand from the organisers that Members of Parliament from the following parties have been invited to participate in various stages of the course:

the Conservative Party
the Labour Party
the Liberal Democrat Party
the Ulster Unionist Party
the Scottish National Party Plaid Cymru
the Democratic Unionist Party
the Social Democratic and Labour Party
the Ulster Popular Unionist Party

The symposium will include during its three week programme separate discussion, each of one and a half hours, on the situation in Northern Ireland and on the role of regional and nationalist parties in Parliament.

World Bank

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what efforts have been made by his Department to secure greater public scrutiny of the activities of the International Development Association of the World bank.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The World bank circulates monthly an operational summary containing information about all projects which it is considering for possible financing, and their environmental categorisation. This includes projects financed under the International Development Association as well as those financed on normal Bank terms. Copies of the operational summaries are available in the libraries of the House. All financial decisions made by the board and a wide range of technical and policy papers are also published.

Bank procedures require that information on projects with potentially significant environmental impacts is made available to the local groups and non-governmental organisations in the borrowing country well in advance of consideration of the project in the board. We have supported the development of these arrangements.

Development Banks

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to publish the Government's voting position on all multilateral development bank board decisions.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The proceedings of the boards of the multilateral development banks are confidential so as not to inhibit full and frank discussion.

Liberia

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what humanitarian aid and other forms of assistance is being provided from his Department to the economic community of West African states and to United Nations and other agencies in their efforts to overcome the problems created by the spillover of the conflict in Liberia into Sierra Leone; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have supported strongly in the UN and elsewhere the efforts made by ECOWAS to bring about peace in Liberia, which will also be an essential element in resolving Sierra Leone's problems. The UK's humanitarian aid to the region as a whole arising from the Liberian conflict amounts to some £8·4 million (including contributions made through the EC), of which £1·1 million has been provided for assistance to Sierra Leone.

Kenya

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government will now press for suspended bilateral and multilateral aid to Kenya to be released.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Britain has not suspended bilateral aid to Kenya. Our development assistance programme, worth £29 million in 1991-92 continues.

In common with other donors, we have withheld provision of new balance of payments assistance pending economic and political reforms. Recent progress on the political front has been commendable culminating in the multi-party elections held last month which we and international observers believe constituted a major step on the road to democracy. Economic progress will be examined in a forthcoming IMF review of Kenya's economic reform programme. We and other donors will take account of the outcome of this review in considering future policy.

Overseas Aid Review

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs for what reason statistics on official and private flows to developing countries, with breakdown, and the percentage shares of gross national product involved were dropped from the 1992 British overseas aid review; why the review's publication date was delayed until December 1992; and if he will make it his policy to reinstate the figures for official and private flows, broken down by categories as in the 1991 annual review, and expressed as percentages of gross national product, for subsequent years.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 18 January 1993]: Tables giving statistics on official and private flows to developing countries and the percentage shares of gross national product were not included in the 1992 edition of the "British Overseas Aid Annual Review" following an internal review of the format, presentation, content and style of the review.

Individual tables taken from "British Aid Statistics" are available free from ODA information department.

The review was published at a later date than in the past to coincide with the availability of "British Aid Statistics" which was published later this year following the decision to show tables on a financial rather than calendar year basis.

A decision of the format of the 1993 annual review and the information to be contained within it will be taken later this year, taking account of all views expressed on the 1992 review.

ENVIRONMENT

Waste Disposal

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he had held or plans to hold with the National Association of Waste Regulation Officers relating to inconsistency of penalties for waste disposal offences; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: None. We understand that the National Association of Waste Regulation Officers is looking into this issue following some recent court cases, but it has so far made no representations to the Department. Within the maxima laid down by Parliament, it is for the courts to determine the most suitable sentence in the light of all the circumstances of the offence and the offender.

Drinking Water

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans there are to bring down the amount of lead in United Kingdom drinking water in line with the World Health Organisation guideline of 10 micrograms per litre.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Wakefield (Mr. Hinchliffe) on 20 January, at column 265.

Climate Change

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations have been made by his Department to the United Nations on the provision of verification of compliance within the framework convention on climate change following the United Nations conference on environment and development.

Mr. Maclean: The United Kingdom believes that effective mechanisms for reporting and review of measures taken under the framework convention on climate change are vital for its effective implementation. We reiterated this point at the December 1992 meeting of the intergovernmental negotiating committee on the convention—INC—which took decisions on a plan of work in preparation for the first meeting of the parties to the convention. Among the issues which the INC will consider is the review of information communicated by developed countries on policies and measures for the mitigation of climate change.

Pit Closures

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has to recognise special needs in coal mining areas more quickly; and how quickly it is intended to make such assistance available where collieries close arising from the current coal review.

Mr. Robin Squire: My Department is making available £5 million under the coalfield areas fund for assistance for areas which may be affected by possible closures. A total of £1·8 million is being made available to the Tyne and Wear development corporation, to support projects aimed at making land quickly available for manufacturing jobs. We are considering enterprize zone designation in areas affected by the possible closures.

These initiatives are part of the substantial packages of measures announced by the President of the Board of Trade on 13 and 19 October 1992. Decisions on the implementation of these measures will be taken in the light of the outcome of the coal review.

Urban Programme

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what consultations he has had with local authorities and their associations concerning the conduct of the review of urban programme authorities and the use of 1991 census information; and what plans he has for further consultations;

(2) what work has so far been undertaken by his Department in relation to the review of the list of authorities eligible for funding under the urban programme and successor arrangements;

(3) what draft criteria have so far been devised for use with the 1991 census data for reviewing the list of authorities eligible for funding from the urban programme and successor arrangements.

Mr. Robin Squire: The Department has commissioned research into the compilation of an index of urban conditions using 1991 census and other data. The purpose of the index is to consider the needs of urban areas, and it will be used to inform decisions on the future share of urban policy, including the review of urban priority areas. The local authority associations were represented on a steering group to oversee preliminary work on the index. We have since done further work to produce a range of indicators, which will include factors such as unemployment, housing and education. We will be offering the local authority associations the chance to comment on these shortly.

Urban Programme

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library copies of all letters sent out by his Department dealing with bids for urban programme funding for 1993-94 between 15 October and 13 November 1992.

Mr. Robin Squire: I will write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each urban programme authority how much funding Gateshead has received under the urban programme at 1992 prices for each of the last three years; how many projects have been supported; and how many people have been employed by them in jobs and in training schemes.

Mr. Robin Squire [holding answer 21 January 1993]: I refer the hon. Gentleman to my replies to his previous questions on 14 January, Official Report, column 766, and 13 January, Official Report, column 656.

Whales

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to support proposals prepared by the French Government for discussion at the next meeting of the International Whaling Commission in relation to the creation of a whale sanctuary in the seas around Antarctica.

Mr. Curry: I have been asked to reply.

The French proposal for a whale sanctuary in the Antarctic, put to the International Whaling Commission

—ICW—at its 44th meeting in Glasgow last June, is due for further consideration when the Commission meets in Kyoto in May of this year. The United Kingdom was one of the countries which encouraged the IWC to undertake further work on this and related issues. We shall play a full part in its further consideration, liaising with other IWC contracting parties and with the environmental organisations with whom we work closely.

Oil and Gas Exploration

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps are being taken to protect wildlife sites and sites of special scientific interest in the Wash, north Norfolk coast, Cardigan bay, the Dorset heritage coastline and Flamborough head from oil exploration and possible oil contamination arising from the Department of Trade and Industry's 14th round of offering oil and gas exploration licences.

Mr. Maclean: I am satisfied that the consultations carried out before issue of oil and gas exploration licences, and the special conditions attached to those issued by my right hon. and learned Friend safeguard such environmentally sensitive areas.

Local Government Review

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the costs to the Exchequer in connection with the present local government review.

Mr. Robin Squire: The main cost to the Exchequer is that of the Local Government Commission, estimated at £3·259 million for 1993-94, its first full year of operation. A small staff commission is also planned. Within this Department there are seven administrative staff working mainly on local government reorganisation issues, at an annual salary cost of around £160,000.

Frogs and Toads

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what evidence he has of any change in the population of frogs and toads; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: Within Great Britain the Joint Nature Conservation Committee advise that the conservation status and recent trend for each species is as follows:

	Population status	Trend
Common frog	Widespread	Slight increase
Common toad	Widespread	Slight decrease
Natterjack toad	Threatened	Slight decrease

All three species are given protection by the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981. The common frog and common toad are covered by provisions relating to sale. As a species, the natterjack toad is fully protected under the Act. In 1992, English Nature announced that the natterjack toad would be included in its "recovery" programme. The objectives of the recovery project are to maintain existing populations and re-establish the species on suitable sites.

Waste Management

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many court cases have occurred to date relating to section 33 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990; and of these cases, how many have resulted in successful prosecutions.

Mr. Maclean: The offences provided by section 33 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 were partially implemented on 1 April 1992; summary information on prosecutions for this period is not, as yet, available.

Housing Revenue Account Subsidy

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing the entitlement to housing revenue account subsidy for each local housing authority in England in 1993-94, indicating separately the housing element and the housing benefit element and the amount by which HRA subsidy falls short of the total to which the authority would be entitled if rent rebate costs were met in full by subsidy and also the housing stock in the area and the average weekly contribution per tenancy towards the cost of rent rebates in each authority.

Mr. Baldry: While broad estimates can be made at national level, it is not possible to provide the information requested for each authority. The housing benefit element of HRA Subsidy claims for 1993-94 will depend on yet to be taken decisions by local authorities on their rents for that year and on the take up of benefit. The housing element of HRA subsidy claims will also, to a lesser extent, be affected by authorities' own decisions. I will write to the hon. Member after April when information on 1993-94 subsidy claims is available.

Council Tax

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will bring forward proposals to provide that builders of new houses are not liable to make council tax payments unless they are designated occupiers of the new-build houses.

Mr. Robin Squire: No.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will issue new guidance to local authorities on defining "substantially completed", in the context of the building of new houses and the liability of builders for community charge and council tax payments.

Mr. Robin Squire: No. For the purposes of the council tax, billing authorities will serve a completion notice where the new building in question can reasonably be expected to be completed within three months.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will bring forward proposals to simplify the certification procedures for the buildres of new houses currently in force in relation to the council tax.

Mr. Robin Squire: Billing authorities will serve a completion notice on the owner of a new building when the work remaining to be done can reasonably be expected to be completed within three months. This brings the procedure for serving completion notices in respect of domestic property into line with current practice in respect of non-domestic property.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what reduction in council tax will be available to disabled persons in band A properties.

Mr. Robin Squire: I refer the hon. Member to the written answers I gave the hon. Member for Rossendale and Darwen (Ms. Anderson) on 5 November 1992, Official Report, column 370, and 18 November 1992, Official Report, column 203.

Water Metering

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many representations he has received to his consultation paper "Using Water Wisely" to date; and how many of these representations have expressed opposition to a United Kingdom water metering scheme.

Mr. Maclean: We have received 343 responses to the consultation paper. Forty-eight respondents indicated opposition to metering. It is for each company to decide the method of charging its customers.

Birds

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what evidence he has as to changes in the population of robins and other species of British birds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The British Trust for Ornithology's common bird census report for 1991 revealed significant declines in the populations of 20 species, including robins, little owls, skylarks, blackbirds, songthrushes, house martins, bullfinches and yellowhammers. Five species including sparrowhawks and kestrels had increased in numbers. The BTO report indicated declines over a wide range of habitats.

For many species the declines are considered to be normal fluctuations and numbers could be expected to be regained quickly. The bad climatic conditions in the spring of 1991 was a factor and some migrant warbler species wintering in Africa were affected by drought conditions there.

Timber

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has made to the convention on international trade in endangered species to secure the inclusion of additional timber species on its lists, since May 1992.

Mr. Maclean: None. Additions to the appendices to the convention are considered at the biennial conferences of the parties. At the conference last March, we proposed successfully that African teak (Pericopsis elata) should be listed. We also supported the listing of American mahogany (Swietenia mahogani), Lignun vitae (Guaiacum officinale), and Brazilian rosewood (Dalbergia nigra).

We shall be considering what proposals to put to the 1994 conference in due course, on the basis of scientific evidence.

Manchester Olympics Bid

Mr. Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on Government support for the Manchester 2000 Olympics bid.

Mr. Redwood: The Government are backing wholeheartedly Manchester's bid for the 2000 Olympic games and the Prime Minister and other Ministers are actively involved in promoting it. We are providing up to £75 million support. Of this, £2 million is in aid of the bid itself, matching private funds raised; and up to £73 million is towards the construction of an Olympic arena, a national cycling centre and the acquisition and preparation of the site for the main Olympic stadium.

We look forward to welcoming members of the International Olympic Committee when they visit Manchester over the coming months in preparation for their decision on the host city in September 1993.

Valuation Officers

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what advice he has given to valuation officers with regard to rating as one unit households which include a granny flat so that children can care for their parents at home.

Mr. Robin Squire: The Council Tax (Chargeable Dwellings) Order 1992—SI 1992/549—requires listing officers to treat as a dwelling for the purposes of council tax each self-contained unit constructed or adapted for use as separate living accommodation. Granny flats are therefore treated in the same way as all other domestic property. The council tax bill for one resident will be subject to a 25 per cent. discount. The bill will be further reduced—in some cases to zero—by council tax benefit, depending on the income and circumstances of the resident.

Bed-and-Breakfast Accommodation

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many families were placed in bed-and-breakfast accommodation, annually, in each year since 1987, (a) England and (b) each English housing authority.

Mr. Baldry: Estimates for the calendar years 1987 to 1991 of the average number of households in England who were being dealt with under the homelessness provisions of the Housing Act 1985 and were temporarily placed in bed-and-breakfast accommodation are given in the table.

Average for year ending December	Households in bed-and-breakfast
1987	10,430
1988	11,080
1989	11,500
1990	11,810
1991	12,470

At 30 September 1992 the number of households in bed-and-breakfast accommodation had fallen to 10,390 households.

I have today placed in the Library a table giving the information as reported by local authorities in England for each year from 1987 to 1991, the last complete year available.

Councillors (Attendance Allowances)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many local authority councillors have claimed attendance allowance in the last financial year.

Mr. Robin Squire: My Department does not collect this information.

Thorne Moors

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to sign the English Nature/Fison's/Department of Environment agreement on Thorne Moors; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 8 December 1992 to the hon. Member for Doncaster, North (Mr. Hughes), at column 575.

PSA Building Management

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will offer the PSA Building Management businesses for sale.

Mr. Redwood: I am pleased to announce that I am today offering the five PSA Building Management businesses for sale by competitive tender. This follows the sale of PSA Projects last month, and marks the start of the final stage in the privatisation of PSA Services.

The sale will be advertised in the United Kingdom and other EC countries from tomorrow. Copies of the sale memoranda will be available from my advisers, Coopers and Lybrand. These will be sent, on request, to all bona fide prospective purchasers.

I would prefer to sell each of the five BM businesses to a different purchaser. However prospective purchasers will be permitted to bid for more than one business.

Preliminary bids need to be submitted by 9 March. Shortlisted bidders will then be provided with more detailed information and invited to make final offers.

Earth Summit

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those nations known by her Majesty's Government to have ratified agreements made at the Earth summit, stating for each which agreements have been ratified; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean [pursuant to the reply, 4 December 1992, c. 580.]: I understand that Canada has also ratified the conventions on climate change and biological diversity.

Helping the Earth

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the cost of the Helping the Earth campaign.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 19 January 1993]: The cost of the three-year domestic publicity campaign is about £14 million. Each reduction of 1 per cent. in the country's energy expenditure saves some £500 million.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the difference in expenditure, for each new Commonwealth child, required and identified within standard spending assessments; and how this figure was calculated.

Mr. Robin Squire [holding answer 19 January 1993]: There are a number of elements within standard spending assessments—SSAs—where ethnicity is used in combination with other factors as a measure of social conditions. At no point are the children of heads of household born in the new Commonwealth identified as a separate ethnic category. It is not therefore possible to identify the separate contribution of these children to SSAs. The weight given to social indices within SSAs follows extensive analysis and discussion with local authority representatives.

Mains Drainage

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many communities (a) in England and Wales and (b) in the Thames Water Utilities Ltd. area, and having 125 or more close-built properties, are not on mains drainage; whether it is his policy to ensure that such communities are put on mains drainage; and in what circumstances any communities will be put on mains drainage other than by requisition.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 21 January 1993]: Information about the numbers of communities of 125 or more close-built properties not on mains drainage is not held centrally.

The circumstances in which communities may be connected to mains drainage other than by requisition are explained by the Office of Water Services, in its "Information Note (No. 11) on First Time Rural Sewerage", copies of which have been placed in the Library.

The Department encourages first time connections to mains drainage and mains water supplies in rural areas by providing a grant covering 35 per cent. of eligible scheme costs in response to requisitions by local authorities or owners or occupiers.

In the light of concerns that have been expressed to me about the arrangements for rural water and sewerage services I am considering whether any changes to the legal and financial framework are desirable.

Written Answers to Questions

Tuesday 26 January 1993

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Magistrates Courts

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what information he has on the proportion of cases postponed by magistrates because of the non-appearance of essential people or documents.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The information is not collected centrally.

Legal Aid

Mr. Michael: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department into which category of offence the six most expensive legally aided cases or groups of cases fell in each of the last five years.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Information is available for only the last four years. An analysis of criminal legal aid payments in respect of cases heard in the Crown court indicate that the six most expensive cases fell into the following offence categories:

Offence type	1988-89	1989-90	1990-91	1991-92
Fraud	2	2	4	4
Obtaining by deception	1	2	1	1
Handling stolen goods	1	1	—	—
Revenue law offences	1	—	1	—
Murder	—	—	—	1
Drugs offences	—	1	—	—
Other offences	1	—	—	—

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will estimate for each area committee the number of applicants who will no longer be eligible for legal aid after 1 April.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Whether or not an individual is eligible for legal aid depends both on the details of his or her financial means and the merits of the case he or she wishes to bring or defend. The only estimates that are made are of the number of certificates likely to be issued in England and Wales as a whole.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to introduce new rules regarding the granting of legal aid in complex fraud cases; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Legal aid will continue to be granted, subject to the applicant's means, where the court considers that it is in the interests of justice.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list for each area committee for each year since 1985 (a) the annual budget for legal aid in current and 1985 prices, (b) the number of legal aid cases granted aid and (c) the number of legal aid cases not granted aid.

Mr. John M. Taylor: It has not been possible to obtain the information requested in the time available. However, I will write to the hon. Member.

Fraud Trials

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to reduce the time taken to conclude long fraud trials; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor's Department, the Home Office and the Law Officers' Department issued a consultation paper on 3 December seeking views on how to reduce the length of criminal trials, particularly those involving fraud. The consultation paper considers the causes of all types of long trials and seeks views on a wide range of options available which might help to reduce their length. The paper asks for responses by 28 February 1993. A view will then be taken as to which particular proposals and options commend themselves. In addition, we await with interest the report of the Royal Commission on criminal justice.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make it his policy to introduce a properly structured system of plea bargaining, with safeguards, for long fraud trials; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: I refer the hon. and learned Member to my reply to him on 7 July 1992, at columns 93-94. The Lord Chancellor and I are considering the matter, but there are no plans to introduce a structured system of plea-bargaining in long fraud trials, or any others, at the present time. However, our recent evidence to the Royal Commission on criminal justice has explored the issues raised by this suggestion.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Recruitment and Assessment Services

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will give details of the cost per job created in the civil service by the use of Recruitment and Assessment Services in Basingstoke.

Mr. Robert Jackson: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the chief executive of Recruitment and Assessment Services. I have asked him to write in reply.

Letter from Michael D. Geddes to Mr. David Hanson, dated 25 January 1993:

I have been asked to reply to your recent question to the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster enquiring about the cost per job created through the use of this Agency. I assume that you are referring to the cost per vacancy filled.

It is not possible to give a precise answer to your question as RAS provides a wide range of recruitment and related services. In some cases we prepare only further particulars of a post and place an advertisement; in other cases we provide a full service including perhaps an individual assessment service or a full-scale Assessment Centre. Departments and the Civil Service Commissioners are not required to use the services of RAS. We negotiate an agreed price for each particular project which we undertake which reflects the amount of work requested by the customer department.

In 1991/92 we processed more than 100,000 applications as well as over 150,000 general enquiries. We filled 2,989 vacancies through the provision of comprehensive recruitment schemes (Many of which were for multiple vacancies) and participated in one way or another in a further 66 partial schemes. We also provided 803 consultancy days. The total cost of the Agency, including overheads, was £11·9 million. Statistics for the current year will be given in our 1992/93 Annual Report, which will be published in the middle of the year.

I hope that this provides you with the information which you require, but please let me know if you would like any further details.

Her Majesty's Stationery Office

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list those occasions in each of the past five years in which officials with responsibility for placing printing contracts in (a) HMSO headquarters and (b) HMSO, Llanishen, Cardiff, have been subject to disciplinary proceedings leading to (i) suspension on full pay,
(ii) suspension without pay, (iii) summary dismissal and (iv) criminal proceedings.

Mr. Robert Jackson: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to HMSO under its chief executive. I have asked him to write to the hon. Member direct.

Letter from Paul Freeman to Mr. Rhodri Morgan, dated 25 January 1993:

As you are aware, your Parliamentary Question to the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, about disciplinary action against officials with responsibility for placing printing contracts, has been referred to me for reply.

There has been just one such case at HMSO Headquarters during the past five years. The officer concerned was dismissed, and criminal proceedings are pending. There was also one such case at HMSO Cardiff. In this case the officer concerned was also dismissed, but I understand that the police, who have seen the papers, are not pursuing the matter further.

I should add that both officers were dismissed for using their official position to personal advantage, and not for any improprieties in the placing of printing contracts.

Research Council

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the meeting of European Research Ministers on 9 December 1992 and on the United Kingdom's presidency of the Research Council.

Mr. Waldegrave: I am pleased to report that following the meeting of Research Ministers on 9 December under my chairmanship, member states were able to reach agreement on a common orientation to supplement the funding of the third R and D framework programme by 900 million ecu in the years 1993 and 1994. This supplement increases the total funding guaranteed from 5·7 becu to 6·6 becu and represents an important interim measure to ensure the continuity of R and D activities under the objectives for the third framework programme, in the approach to the implementation of a successor programme, thereby avoiding a potential reduction in R and D funding over this period.

In addition, I chaired an in-depth discussion at the Council meeting on 12 October, on the evaluation of the second framework programme on the basis of a report prepared under United Kingdom chairmanship, in preparation for a first orientation debate on the fourth framework programme at the Council on 9 December.

There was also an informal discussion at the December Council of how to improve the management of EC research programmes on the basis of a paper presented by the United Kingdom. The Commission agreed to respond to these ideas before the next Council of Research Ministers.

ENVIRONMENT

Housing, Sandwell

Mr. Snape: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the total provision from central funds received by the Sandwell metropolitan borough authority in support of capital expenditure on housing for each year since 1979.

Mr. Baldry: The amounts of capital grants paid to Sandwell MBA in the years 1981-82 to 1991-92 in support of housing capital expenditure, including any adjustments for over or under payment in previous years, were as follows:

Years	£ thousand
1981-82	110
1982-83	233
1983-84	328
1984-85	187
1985-86	119
1986-87	238
1987-88	88
1988-89	94
1989-90	−5
1990-91	3,826
1991-92	8,360

Figures for earlier years could be provided only at disproportionate cost. The significantly higher payments in 1990-91 and 1991-92 reflect the revised arrangements for private sector renovation grants introduced on 1 April 1990.

The Government also influence housing capital expenditure by local authorities through housing investment programme—HIP—allocations and supplementary credit approvals. Those for Sandwell for the years since 1979-80 are given in the table, which also gives total housing capital expenditure by Sandwell MBA in these years.

[1] Allocations for 1989-90 and earlier years are final allocations, i.e. the initial allocation plus any increases to the initial allocation made in-year. The figures for 1990-91 and subsequent years cover the housing investment programme allocations (housing annual capital guidelines and specified capital grants) issued prior to the start of the financial year and any supplementary credit approvals subsequently issued.
[2] From 1990-91, under the new capital finance system, the housing investment programme allocation is an assessment of relative need for housing capital expenditure rather than a direct borrowing approval. Borrowing approval is now conveyed by the single, all service, basic credit approval.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will recalculate his proposals for 1993-94 standard spending assessments for every authority on the notional basis of the Isle of Wight becoming a unitary authority comprising the present county council and district councils from 1 April 1993; and if he will make a statement on the effects on SSAs of local government reorganisations, in particular any changes in SSAs of those authorities not being reorganised being brought about by the impact on non-linear SSAs of data in respect of reorganised authorities being aggregated or disaggregated.

Mr. Howard: No; it is too early to produce such figures. The detailed implications of local government reorganisation for standard spending assessments will be discussed with representatives of the local authority associations in due course.

Standard Spending Assessments

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the increase in the area cost adjustment factor compared to the overall increase in standard spending assessment for 1993-94.

Mr. Robin Squire: These figures are not yet available. I will write to the hon. Member when final 1993-94 standard spending assessments are announced.

Mr. Pope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list (a) the total number of pupils used in the calculation of standard spending assessments, (b) the allocation of standard spending assessment for primary, secondary and post-16 pupils and (c) the standard spending assessment per pupil for (i) Essex, (ii) Hampshire, (iii) Kent, (iv) Lancashire and (v) all shire county education authorities.

Mr. Robin Squire: The information requested is as follows, on the basis of provisional SSAs for 1993-94.

Local authority	Total pupils	Primary Education SSA £ million	Secondary Education SSA £ million	Post-16 Education SSA £ million	Total of primary secondary and post-16 Education SSA £ per pupil
Essex	205,308	203·468	240·749	34·788	2,333
Hampshire	191,786	203·178	219·978	11·352	2,266
Kent	206,183	201·057	235·907	47·953	2,352
Lancashire	190,639	193·978	211·551	18·347	2,223
All shire counties	3,900,976	3,827·319	4,317·165	658·495	2,257

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimates of the number of elderly people on income support for each local authority area in 1992-93 and 1993-94 were used in determining standard spending assessment levels.

Mr. Robin Squire: Estimates of the number of elderly people on income support in shire counties, metropolitan districts and London boroughs are produced by the Department of Social Security from its quarterly 1 per cent. sample inquiries of claimant records for use in the calculation of standard spending assessments. The estimates relate to the average number of persons over eight quarters who are, or whose partner is, aged 60 years and over and in receipt of income support. For 1992-93 SSAs, the eight quarters cover the period May 1989 to February 1991; and for 1993-94, they cover the period May 1990 to February 1992.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to change the standard spending assessment formula to include direct measures of unemployment and proxies for wealth, including levels of car ownership.

Mr. Robin Squire: The Secretary of State will shortly be announcing his final decisions regarding the 1993-94 revenue support grant settlement. For 1994-95 there will be a review of the indicators used in the calculation of standard spending assessments as a result of the new information available from the 1991 census.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the area cost adjustment factor as a percentage of the standard spending assessment for each year from 1990-91 to 1993-94.

Mr. Robin Squire: The total amounts allocated on the basis of the area cost adjustment factor as a percentage of standard spending assessments for each of the last three years is as follows:

	Total SSA £ million	Total allocated on area cost adjustment factors £ million	Percentage allocated on area cost adjustment factors
1990-91	29,805·3	836.5	2·8
1991-92	35,586·7	1,152·1	3·2
1992-93	37,992·7	1,314·5	3·5

Final standard spending assessments for 1993-94 will be announced shortly. I will write to the hon. Member with the corresponding figures for 1993-94 when these are available.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the average standard spending assessment for each year from 1990-91; and which local authorities and by how much in each case benefited from the area cost adjustment factor in that year.

Mr. Robin Squire: The total of standard spending assessments and the average per head of resident population for each year since 1990-91 is as follows:

	Total SSA (£ million)	Average per head (£)
1990-91	29,805·3	627
1991-92	35,586·7	746
1992-93	37,992·7	794
1992-93[1]	35,584·3	744
1993-94[2]	36,622·2	762

[1] Adjusted.
[2] Provisional.

There was a reduction in SSAs between 1992-93 and 1993-94 because of the transfer of some local authority responsibilities, mainly in respect of further education. The table also, therefore, shows 1992-93 figures on an adjusted basis, taking account of these transfers for comparison with the 1993-94 figures. The 1993-94 figures are based on those announced on 26 November for the purposes of consultation. Final settlement figures will be announced shortly.

On the area cost adjustment, I have placed in the Library a table showing the figures requested in respect of the three years 1990-91, 1991-92, and 1992-93. Corresponding figures for 1993-94 are not yet available. I will write to the hon. Member with final figures for 1993-94 shortly.

Urban Programme

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what central Government support Coventry can expect in addressing its inner-city problems.

Mr. Robin Squire: My Department and others have a range of complementary programmes to address the problems of Coventry and other urban priority areas totalling some £4 billion a year. As far as my own Department's programmes are concerned, in addition to substantial resources to tackle housing problems, in the current financial year, Coventry has been allocated £4·6 million under the urban programme and task force funding of almost £1·3 million.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the urban programme as a source of support for voluntary organisations in Coventry working in the poorer areas; how much has been provided to those organisations under the urban programme; and what arrangements he has made to continue support for voluntary organisations when the urban programme is phased out.

Mr. Robin Squire: The urban programme—UP—has, and will continue to, support in Coventry and other urban priority areas some excellent projects developed by voluntary sector and other organisations. The city council's annual report indicates that £2·1 million was spent on voluntary sector projects in Coventry in 1991-92. Commitments arising from voluntary sector projects approved as part of Coventry's UPs in 1992-93 and previous years will be honoured in full. In addition, the urban partnership fund, part of the capital partnership programme, will provide up to £20 million in 1993-94 in uncommitted UP resources to support capital and directly linked revenue projects in the 57 urban priority areas. It is open to local authorities to involve voluntary organisations in particular projects.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy that Coventry will be granted inner area status from 1994-95 onwards.

Mr. Robin Squire: The circumstances of Coventry and all other authorities in England will be considered as part of a review of urban priority areas later this year using 1991 census and other data. The review will inform decisions on geographical targeting and the balance of programmes required to tackle the needs of urban areas.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what detailed studies were conducted prior to the Government's decision to wind up the urban programme; and if he will place copies of their findings in the Library.

Mr. Robin Squire: There will continue to be a substantial urban programme—UP—in 1993-94 amounting to £176 million which will fund existing commitments and provide £20 million for the urban partnership fund. Decisions on the new UP arrangements were taken having regard to all the relevant factors.

Repair Grants

Ms. Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 19 January, Official Report, column 167, what steps he takes to monitor the effectiveness of the mandatory repair grant scheme in improving unfit houses.

Mr. Baldry: The Department collects regular quarterly and annual statistics of the number and value of mandatory renovation grants approved and paid by local authorities. It has recently completed research to monitor the early operation and effectiveness of the new grant system, including the extent of targeting of expenditure on unfit houses. The 1991 English house condition survey will also provide data on the impact of mandatory grant expenditure in improving housing conditions.

Crown Land (Planning Procedures)

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment has been carried out by his Department concerning the effectiveness of the non-statutory planning procedures which have been operating over the development of Crown land; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: The non-statutory procedures for Crown development are generally considered to work well in practice. But in the interests of greater accountability and openness, the Government believe that a more formal system is now appropriate.

In reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Colchester, South and Maldon, (Mr. Whittingdale) my hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Planning announced on 24 June 1992, Official Report, column 202, that the Government believe that it is now appropriate to bring Crown exemption under the planning system largely to an end. A public consultation paper on the removal of Crown immunity from planning law was issued on 5 November 1992 and we are currently considering responses. Any changes will be embodied in primary legislation when a suitable opportunity arises.

Empty Homes

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to allow local authorities to buy empty housing properties from the private sector; and what evaluation he has made of the comparative cost-effectiveness of doing so as against using temporary accommodation.

Mr. Baldry: The provision of new social housing is now mainly the responsibility of housing associations, with local authorities concentrating on the management of their existing stock and on their broad enabling role. The Government expect local authorities to make the most efficient use of all permanent housing stock available to them, so as to reduce to a minimum the need for temporary accommodation. Nevertheless, authorities are able to acquire empty private sector housing, in line with their priorities for the use of available resources.

Building Regulations

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has to amend part L of the Building Regulations 1991 to encourage the conservation of fuel and power; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: I am today issuing a consultation paper setting out proposals for strengthening the requirements of part L of the Building Regulations 1991 for the conservation of fuel and power. The aim is to reduce the CO emissions from buildings by incorporating cost effective measures, but to do so in a way which does not introduce unacceptable technical risks and maintains some flexibility for designers. We estimate that adoption of these proposals would improve the energy performance of space and water heating in houses by some 25 to 35 per cent. compared with current building regulations standards, with similar improvements in the non-domestic sector.

Among the proposals is one to require an energy rating for all new dwellings and house conversions. This would be a major step forward in increasing energy awareness among house buyers. A copy of the consultation papers has been placed in the Library of the House.

Education Spending

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each education authority in England the standard spending assessment for education per pupil, the actual spending per pupil, the cash difference and the percentage of education SSA this difference represents for the last three years for which figures are available.

Mr. Robin Squire [holding answer 21 January 1993]: The standard spending assessment for education consists of five sub-blocks, only three of which concern pupils—primary, secondary and post-16. It is not possible to provide expenditure figures on a basis which would allow comparison with these three elements.

TRANSPORT

Aircraft (Smoking)

Mr. Fry: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is Her Majesty's Government's policy with respect to the International Civil Aviation Organisation's recommendation to ban smoking in aircraft from 1996.

Mr. Norris: The Government believe that the question of smoking on aircraft should remain a matter for the airlines, which would have to implement any ban.

Nuclear Material (Transport)

Mr. Horam: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the safety of the arrangements for nuclear waste to be transported by train; and if he will make it his policy to collect information about the quantity of nuclear material transported through each parliamentary constituency.

Mr. Freeman: Safety regulations for the transport of all radioactive materials in this country are based on stringent internationally agreed standards laid down by the International Atomic Energy Agency. These require safety to be "built in" to the design of the container used for transport, so that the contents would not present a significant radiological hazard even in the event of a severe accident. The IAEA standards are kept under continuous review, and major revisions take place every 10 years, the most recent one being in 1985. I have no plans to collect information about the quantity of nuclear material transported through each parliamentary constituency.

Plutonium

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, North (Ms. Walley), Official Report, 11 January, column 531, on what basis he described the quantities of plutonium exported, to which he refers, as small.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Individual shipments of radioactive material are not notifiable to the Department when transported in type B(U) packages containing an activity equal to or less than 3000 A_1 or 3000 A_2, as appropriate, or 1000 terabecquerels, whichever is the lower. The terms A_1 and A_2 are defined in the International Atomic Energy Agency regulations for the safe transport of radioactive material, a copy of which is available in the library of the House.

Fishing Vessels

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what inquiries are made in respect of fishing vessels requested to be registered as British to establish that beneficial ownership resides in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Norris: The registrar has to make such inquiries as he considers necessary to establish that ownership of the vessel meets the qualifying criteria and that the vessel is operated and managed from within the United Kingdom.

For the latter he will usually look to any existing management agreement to see that the basic requirements of section 14(1)(b) of the Merchant Shipping Act 1988 are met.

Merchant Ships

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will review the registration of merchant ships under flags of convenience; and what steps he intends to take to assist the development of the British register of merchant ships.

Mr. Norris: The issue of flag state responsibility is better tackled by effective international action in the International Maritime Organisation and elsewhere aimed at ensuring that all flag states discharge their responsibilities properly. This is already in hand.

As for assisting the British register, we are implementing the recommendations of the joint working party on British shipping of 1990, and to this end the Government will be supporting the Merchant Shipping (Registration etc.) Bill of my hon. Friend the Member for Hertfordshire, South-West (Mr. Page) at its Second Reading next month. We shall also continue to press in the European Community for measures to increase commercial opportunities for EC merchant fleets and to remove their competitive disadvantages.

Greater Manchester Buses

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what further representations he has had about the future of Greater Manchester Buses from the Greater Manchester passenger transport authority; what reply is being sent; what action he will be taking; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Since the Secretary of State issued a direction that Greater Manchester Buses—GMB—should be split, I have met the chairman and other representatives of the Greater Manchester PTA and the chief executive of GMB. There has also been a meeting at official level.

We discussed the reasons for requiring GMB to be split, possible options, and how the splitting and subsequent sale might be progressed.

I am keeping in touch with the PTA.

Motorways

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list those instances where two motorways travel side by side in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Many interchanges between motorways involve motorway slip roads running alongside the main carriageway with which they merge. In addition a skewed interchange between two motorways such as the M6 and M42 near Coleshill, or motorways merging such as the M26 where it joins both the M20 and the M25, can result in a short distance of parallel running.

M62, Ferrybridge

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what will be the length of the proposed route of the A1 from the M62 junction 33 to the next proposed interchange with the M62 at Ferrybridge, West Yorkshire.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The proposed route of the A1(M) crosses over the M62 approximately half a mile west of junction 33. From this point, the new A1(M) would run alongside the M62 for a distance of approximately one mile to the proposed interchange at Ferrybridge.

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the distance between the planned route of the A1 and the M62 where they run side by side in Ferrybridge, West Yorkshire.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The distance varies. While precise details of the separation will depend on detailed design, the routes would run as closely together as practicable.

A38

Mr. Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he intends announcing the options for possible routes for the A38 trunk road improvement between Saltash and Trerulefoot; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The public will be consulted on possible routes for the improvement of the A38 trunk road between Saltash and Trerulefoot later this year.

Mr. Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects construction work to begin on the Dobwalls bypass section of the A38 trunk road improvement between Liskeard and Bodmin; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The Dobwalls bypass is one section of a much larger trunk road scheme which would link the A38 Liskeard bypass to the A30 Bodmin bypass. Construction could start in the latter part of the decade, depending on satisfactory progress with statutory procedures and the availability of funds at the time.

Mr. Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he intends announcing his Department's preferred route for the A38 trunk road improvement between Liskeard and Bodmin immediately to the west of Dobwalls; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I expect to announce the preferred route for the remaining section of the A38 Liskeard to Bodmin improvement scheme before Easter.

Pescado

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on developments in respect of investigations into the loss of the fishing vessel Pescado since the report of the marine accident investigation branch; what further information he has regarding submarine activity in the area at the time; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Steven Norris: The circumstances surrounding the loss of the Pescado have been investigated by the marine accident investigation branch. Action on the seven recommendations made by MAIB is being urgently pursued. The Ministry of Defence provided details of warship movements in the area from 25 February to 5 March 1991. Two submarines were in surface transit during that period.

Eastgate to Bishop Auckland Line

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received regarding environmental impact of transfer of current traffic from rail to road as a result of the planned closure of the Eastgate to Bishop Auckland line.

Mr. Freeman: I have received no specific representations about the withdrawal of cement traffic from the Eastgate to Bishop Auckland line. However, some correspondents have mentioned the loss of cement traffic when raising various rail freight issues generally with my Department.

Traffic Projection Figures

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he intends to publish revised traffic projection figures.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The current national road traffic forecast was published in 1989. The forecast is kept under constant review, but I have no present plans to publish a revision.

MV Braer

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the product licence status in respect of each dispersant used to date in dispersing oil spilled from MV Braer.

Mr. Curry [holding answer 14 January 1993]: I have been asked to reply.

The information requested is as follows:

Business Expansion Scheme

Mr. Battle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many new lettings from investments under the business expansion scheme there were in (a) each region and (b) the United Kingdom as a whole; and what percentage these figures represent of (i) all privately rented property and (ii) all rented property, for each year of its existence.

Mr. Dorrell: The business expansion scheme was extended to include investment in privately rented housing in 1988-89. Reliable estimates by regions are available for years up to 1990-91. These and preliminary estimates for the United Kingdom total in 1991-92 are shown in the table.

Bicycles (Ministers)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to amend the rules for ministerial expenses to encourage the use of bicycles by Ministers on official duties; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: None.

Tobacco Sales

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has of the amount of tax the Government received from cigarettes sold illegally to people under age in the last financial year.

Sir John Cope: Evidence on the consumption of cigarettes by children aged under 16 is provided by the survey "Smoking among secondary school children in 1990" carried out by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys. But we have no estimate of the proportion of total consumption that is met from cigarettes illegally sold to people under age as children also acquire cigarettes from parents and other sources. Nor do we have an estimate of the proportion of cigarettes illegally sold to children for consumption by parents or other adults.

EC Sales Statements

Mr. Beith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 17 December 1992, Official Report, columns 378-79, what authority to impose civil penalties for failure to submit EC sales statements is contained in (a) section 82 of the Finance Act 1992 and (b) paragraph 82 of schedule 3 to the Finance (No. 2) Act 1992.

Mr. Lamont: The authority to impose civil penalties for failure to submit European sales lists derives from an amendment to the Finance Act 1985—enforcement provisions in relation to value added tax. Section 82 of the Finance (No. 2) Act 1992 amends the 1985 Act by the introduction of a new section 17A covering European sales list penalties—for failure to submit.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 13 November 1992, Official Report, column 1003, what is the maximum penalty under sub-paragraph 6(c) of paragraph 82 of schedule 3 to the Finance (No. 2) Act 1992, for failure to submit an EC sales statement.

Mr. Lamont: The maximum penalty—for third and subsequent default—is £1,500.

Tax Evasion

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many people have been employed by (a) the Inland Revenue and (b) Customs and Excise specifically to tackle tax evasion in each of the last five years;

(2) how much money has been allocated by his Department to (a) the Inland Revenue and (b) Customs and Excise to tackle tax evasion in each of the last five years.

Mr. Dorrell: In Customs and Excise officials with responsibility for tackling tax evasion may have other duties. This is true, to a lesser degree, of the Inland Revenue, where most counter-evasion work is carried out by inspectors of taxes. On this basis, the approximate numbers of staff units/year engaged in such work, and the related costs to their respective Departments, were as follows:

	Staff Units		Cost £ million
	IR	C&E	IR	C&E
1987-88	2,800	7,000	70	111
1988-89	3,100	7,100	79	125
1989-90	3,200	7,300	89	139
1990-91	3,300	7,300	102	152
1991-92	3,600	7,200	115	166

Foreign Vessels

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received about bringing the tax regime and rates for foreign vessels registered in the United Kingdom and the companies running them into line with those applying to United Kingdom-owned vessels and companies.

Mr. Dorrell: We receive representations on this subject from time to time.

Autumn Statement

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will publish expanded versions of tables 2B.2, 2B.3 and 2B.4 of his "Autumn Statement 1992", Cm. 2096, which (i) subdivide technical adjustments into (a) transfers of function, (b) changes of financing responsibility, (c) classification changes reflecting changes in the way public expenditure is measures, (d) other technical changes and (e) cyclical social security; (ii) subdivide other changes into (a) revised estimates of the costs of existing policies, (b) expenditure changes resulting from policy changes and (c) other and (iii) provide technical notes as to which of these categories of adjustment have occasioned restatements of outturn-year figures in Cm. 2096;

(2) if he will publish (a) an analysis of the factors underlying the trend in table 2B.1 of his "Autumn Statement", Cm. 2096, of the net effects of the changes from charging all accruing superannuation costs to civil and defence departmental budgets over the period 1987-88 to 1994-95 and (b) an analysis by departmental programme of accrued pension liabilities at 31 March 1993; and for what reasons it is judged appropriate to take the differences between payments and accruals outside the new control total;

(3) if he will publish an analysis comparable to that in table B1 of Cm. 1920, of the accounting adjustments shown for the years 1987-88 to 1995-96 in table 2A.3 of his "Autumn Statement 1992", Cm. 2096, to show which components have been unaffected by the switch from the planning total to the new control total and which are a direct consequence of that switch;

(4) if he will publish in the statistical supplement to the 1992 "Autumn Statement" planning figures for total local authority expenditure in 1993-94, 1994-95 and 1995-96 by territory and economic category, in the format of table 5.7 of Cm. 1920, and by function, in the format of table 5.8 of Cm. 1920;

(5) if he will publish a table, consistent with table 2A.11 of his 1992 "Autumn Statement", Cm. 2096, showing (a) local authority debt interest and (b) total local authority expenditure, for the planning years 1993-94, 1994-95 and 1995-96;

(6) if he will publish an analysis of the effects of transfers of function between spending sectors, changes of financing responsibility between sectors, classification changes, estimating changes and policy changes on the 1992-93, 1993-94 and 1994-95 figures for (i) central Government support for local authorities and (ii) total local authority expenditure, as given in table 2.6 of his "Autumn Statement 1992", Cm. 2096;

(7) if he will publish a reconciliation between the figures given by table 2B.1 of his "Autumn Statement 1992", Cm 2096, for classification changes in 1992-93, 1993-94 and 1994-95 and those given by each of tables 2B.2, 2B.3 and 2B.4;

(8) if he will publish (a) a compositional analysis in the form of table 2A.3 of Cm 2096 of the figures provided by table 2A.1 for the new control total in 1984-85 to 1986-87, (b) a compositional analysis in the form of table 1A.3 of Cm 1729 of the figures provided by table 2A.1 for the new planning total, that is, after 1990 redefinition, in 1984-85 to 1993-94, and (c) totals for the old planning total, that is, pre-1990 redefinition, for whichever of the years 1963-64 to 1995-96 such data can be provided on the comparable public expenditure measurement basis as table 2A.1 of Cm 2096;

(9) if he will publish (a) the series of money GDP published in rounded form in table 2A.1 of his "Autumn Statement 1992", Cm 2096, (b) the adjusted money GDP figures which underly the calculated adjusted series, index (1990-91 = 100) in table 2A.1 and (c) the detailed adjustments to money GDP which constitute the difference between the two series, for the years 1963-64 to 1995-96, to the nearest pounds million; and how future such tables will be affected by the replacement of the community charge by the council tax on 1 April 1993.

Mr. Portillo: Analyses of public expenditure will be published in the "Statistical Supplement to the 1992 Autumn Statement" on 29 January 1993.

Corporate Taxation

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to adjust the United Kingdom's corporate tax take in line with the average for Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries.

Mr. Dorrell: The level of tax on companies is considered each year in the Budget, and international comparison is one of the factors taken into account. The United Kingdom's main rate of corporation tax is currently the lowest of the EC and G7 countries, and one of the lowest of the OECD.

Underground Economy

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate for the loss to the Exchequer due to the activities of the underground economy in the United Kingdom in each of the last five years.

Mr. Dorrell: Reliable estimates are not available.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will outline the measures taken by his Department to tackle the underground economy in the United Kingdom since 1986.

Mr. Dorrell: I refer the hon. Member to the chapter entitled "Deterring and tackling non-compliance" in the annual reports of the Board of Inland Revenue, which may be found in the House of Commons Library.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to launch a commission of inquiry into the underground or ready-money economy in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Dorrell: The Government have no such plans. We do not believe that a commission of inquiry would add significantly to our knowledge and understanding of the "hidden economy".

VAT (Children's Clothes)

Miss Lestor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the size specifications governing VAT zero-rating of children's clothes, including shoes, were first fixed; and when they were last reviewed.

Sir John Cope: Since the inception of VAT, zero-rating for young children's clothing and footwear has been decided by reference to a schedule, published by Customs and Excise, of minimum measurements reflecting the average body sizes of children up to their 14th birthday. The continuing relevance of the size specifications in the schedule is monitored against the results from surveys by the British Standards Institution: the most recent of which is BS 7231/1990. The schedule of garment and shoe sizes was laid reviewed by Customs and Excise in 1985. A further review is currently in progress.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has as to what percentage of gross domestic product in the United Kingdom is accounted for by the underground economy.

Mr. Nelson: By its very nature, the underground economy cannot be measured directly or estimated with any precision. An evasion adjustment is made in the United Kingdom national accounts to allow for that part of income which is concealed but where the corresponding expenditure is not. This results in an addition to factor incomes of around 1¼ per cent. in recent years.

The evasion adjustment applied in the calculation of GDP does not attempt to encompass the whole of the underground economy. Estimates of the size of the underground economy made by a number of researchers show wide variation.

MEPs' Allowances

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the travel and office allowances for Members of the European Parliament will be treated for tax purposes in the same way as for hon. Members.

Mr. Dorrell: A ruling of the European Court of Justice in 1981 said that expense allowances paid by the European Parliament to its Members are not liable to United Kingdom tax. That ruling does not apply to Members of this House.

Gifts to Employees

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how the Inland Revenue ensures that all additional gifts to employees are declared under the Taxes Management Act 1970.

Mr. Dorrell: Employers are required to make returns of taxable gifts to employees. Employees are required to declare their taxable income. The Inland Revenue audits the operation of PAYE by employers, and investigates possible under-declarations both in business accounts and personal tax returns.

Gross Domestic Product

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the total percentage contribution to gross domestic product in (a) the latest year for which figures are available, (b) 10 years previously and (c) 20 years previously of (i) manufacturing industry, (ii) the construction industry, (iii) banking, insurance and financial services and (iv) the energy industry.

Mr. Nelson: The available information is shown in the table:

Share of gross domestic product

Per cent.

Industry	1971	1981	1991
Manufacturing	31·2	25·1	21·0
Construction	6·4	6·0	6·8
Banking, insurance, finance, business services and leasing	10·3	11·4	17·7
Energy and water supply	5·3	10·8	5·7

Balance of Trade

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what has been the net United Kingdom/European Community trade balance, at current values, in all goods and services in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available;

(2) what has been the net United Kingdom trade balance, at current values, in all goods and services in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available.

Mr. Nelson: The United Kingdom's balance of trade in goods and services is available from published sources. The requested information is available in the 1992 edition of the Central Statistical Office's United Kingdom balance of payments publication—the Pink Book. The latest estimate for the United Kingdom's total balance on trade in services in 1991 is in the "Monthly Review of External Trade Statistics". Copies of these publications are available in the Library of the House. The data can also be found on the Central Statistical Office's database which can be accessed through the House of Commons Library.

Industrial Investment

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by how much investment in manufacturing industry has grown in percentage terms in each of the OECD countries since 1979.

Mr. Portillo: Data on manufacturing investment may be obtained from the OECD's "National Accounts, Volume II" and the Central Statistical Office's database which is accessible through the House of Commons Library.

Small Businesses

Mr. Simon Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions he has had with the clearing banks on their policies on lending to small businesses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lamont: In recent months much concern has been expressed both that banks have been failing to pass on cuts in base rates to their small business customers and more generally that they have acted in a way that is damaging to the small business sector. That concern has been brought home to me in many letters from small firms and in representations from MPs. I therefore asked the Bank of England to repeat the survey of bank lending to small businesses that it undertook in June 1991. I have discussed the results with the main clearing banks and the president of the British Bankers Association.

The Bank has now carried out its study and I am placing a copy of its report in the Library. The main findings are:

- the number of small business accounts is about 4·1 million, of which two-thirds are in credit;
- around a quarter of continuing borrowers (ie those who were borrowing both in June 1991 and November 1992) have seen their bank facilities reduced, against a third who have seen an increase;
- around 60 per cent. of small business borrowers benefited from the full 4·5 per cent. reduction in base rates seen between June 1991 and the completion of the survey, and around a further 10 per cent. actually saw their borrowing margins reduced. Margins widened on 30 per cent. of accounts, about half by more than 0·5 per cent.;
- there has been little movement in average margins, but there is a wide variation in average margins between different banks;
- three banks operate minimum interest rate floors, but none have yet come into play;
- the trend towards greater implementation of fees and charges has been maintained and some banks have raised their levels;
- the proportions of lending at fixed rates and for specified terms (as opposed to overdrafts) has increased slightly.

The Bank's survey is the most comprehensive and recent guide to the interest rates charged by banks to small businesses. It confirms, as did the survey in June 1991, that the majority of small businesses have seen their interest rates come down in line with the reductions in base rates over the last year. This finding is supported by the Nottingham university study recently published by the Forum of Private Businesses. This is welcome news, because it means that the benefits of falling interest rates are being passed through to small businesses which have a vital part to play in bringing about economic recovery.

I welcome the moves a number of banks have made to increase the number of borrowers on term rather than overdraft finance. That can bring greater certainty to borrower and lender alike. I believe there is also a place for more fixed rate lending. I was disappointed, therefore, that the survey showed that interest rates offered on fixed rate loans had remained very much higher, at around 15 per cent., despite the fall in base rates and longer-term market rates. I am pleased that several banks have reduced their fixed rates since then and I hope that they will keep these rates under review.

Although the broad picture on interest rate margins is reassuring, there is no doubt that many small businesses remain dissatisfied with their banks, so, when I met the bank chairmen and chief executives, I explained the concern that has been expressed in letters to me and others.

The banks stressed the importance of the small business sector to them. They pointed out that the number of complaints is small by comparison with the overall number of customers and transactions and that tensions are bound to arise between banks and some customers in a recession. They argued also that they have had to make heavy provisions for losses on loans to small businesses and that they have to take that into account in their judgments on credit risk and pricing.

I pointed out that the complaints that I have received bear more widely on the quality of service offered to small businesses. It was in response to such complaints that I asked the banks to publish codes of practice for their small business customers and set out seven principles which codes should satisfy. All the major Scottish and English clearing banks have now produced such codes. Small firms and their representatives have generally welcomed this development and the willingness by banks to work to ensure greater transparency in relationships with customers. I know that the banks will continue to keep their codes under review and to assess how their relationships with their customers might be further improved; recently, for example, Lloyds substantially revised its code in response to customer pressure. I am pleased also that all the banks have introduced—or will introduce in the course of 1993—pre-notification of charges. This is a further positive step.

One important element of each code is to set up a clear procedure by which small businesses can take up complaints which cannot be resolved at branch level. The chairmen of the banks have assured me that they ensure that such complaints are looked into closely. Most have established special units to this end and the chief executives and chairmen themselves review a large number of cases personally. These procedures deal successfully and quickly with a great many complaints by explaining the basis of decisions clearly or by putting right mistakes that have been made. I hope therefore that small businesses, and MPs and others with whom they may correspond, will take up complaints directly with the banks, if necessary at the highest level.

There will, of course, be a number of customers who remain dissatisfied. Many will dispute the banks' judgment on how much they should be lent or on what terms. Such arguments have to remain a matter of negotiation between the banks and their customers. It is not for the Government or any other third party to second-guess the banks' commercial judgment on such matters.

However, a number of complaints I have received allege maladministration, for example charging incorrectly or the changing of terms without proper warning. In most cases, complaints of this sort can be resolved through the banks' internal procedures. But in the minority of cases where that is not so, personal customers and unincorporated businesses can take their case to the banking ombudsman. Small incorporated businesses cannot.

The Jack committee on banking services in 1989 recommended that the ombudsman scheme should be extended to cover incorporated businesses because they often faced identical problems and constraints. At that time, the change was resisted by the banks and not accepted by the Government. In view of the continuing level of complaints, I have taken the matter up again with the largest banks and with the president of the British Bankers Association. They have agreed that the scheme should be extended to cover small incorporated businesses with a turnover of less than £1 million a year. They will now propose this change to the council and board of the banking ombudsman.

Given the continuing interest in the financing of small firms, I have also asked the Bank to continue to monitor from time to time developments in the provision of bank finance to this sector.

Central Government Staff

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the number of staff in post in central Government Departments at 1 October 1992.

Mr. Portillo: On 1 October 1992 there were 567,850 staff in post in central Government. Of those 510,651 were non-industrials and 57,199 were classified as being in industrial work. A summary showing staff in post by Department has been placed in the Library.

Exchange Rate Mechanism

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement outlining the position underlying the oral statement of the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, the right hon. Member for Watford (Mr. Garel-Jones), on 18 January, Official Report, column 144, concerning a possible obligation on the United Kingdom to rejoin the exchange rate mechanism at any particular date.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 22 January 1993]: I have nothing to add to the memoranda submitted by Her Majesty's Treasury to the Treasury and Civil Service Committee—appendices 1 and 5 to the first report of the Treasury and Civil Service Committee for the Session 1992-93, HC 201.

European Community

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimates have been made of the additional cash contributions from the EC which will accrue to each member state in consequence of the decisions taken at the Edinburgh meeting of the European Council; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Cope [holding answer 18 January 1993]: The Edinburgh European Council agreed the following allocation of expenditure from the European Community budget:

	(billion ecu—1992 prices) 1992	1999	increase
(a) Commitment ceilings
Agriculture (guideline)	35·30	38·40	3·00
Cohesion Fund	—	2·60	2·60
Structural Funds—Objective 1	11·00	19·30	8·30
Other Structural operations	7·50	8·10	0·60
Other internal policies	3·90	5·10	1·20
External policies	3·90	5·60	1·70
Administrative expenditure	3·20	3·90	0·70
Repayments	0·90	—	−0·90
Monetary reserve	1·00	0·50	−0·50
Reserves for external policies	—	0·60	0·60
Total expenditure commitments	66·90	84·10	17·20
(b) Own resources ceiling
as percentage of GNP	1·20	1·27
becu[1 2]	64·90	80·60	15·70

[1] The own resources ceiling expressed in ecu is calculated using the Commission's growth assumptions which were available to the European Council.

[2] The expenditure commitment ceilings sum to more than the own resources ceiling. Although the Edinburgh European Council conclusions limit the own resources ceiling (and hence payments from the Community budget) to 1·27 per cent. of community GNP in 1999, commitments were constrained to 1·335 per cent. of GNP. This is possible because first, some commitments will in practice not be taken up and so will not result in payments being made; and second, there is in some cases, a considerable time-lag between commitments and payments. As long as the European economy continues to grow in nominal terms, such expenditure commitments will represent a smaller proportion of Community GNP when the payments are made than when the commitments were given.

As the existing financial perspective ended with 1992, it is not possible to say what would have happened to Community expenditure over the next seven years if no agreement had been reached at Edinburgh.

However, until there was agreement the revenue available to the Community would have continued to be subject to the 1988 own resources decision, with the own resources ceiling limited to 1·20 per cent. of GNP. The revenue which the Community could call up could therefore have grown in line with growth in the Community economy. On the basis of the growth assumptions available to the Edinburgh European Council, the revenue from a 1·20 per cent. own resources ceiling would allow payments of up to 76·1 billion ecu in 1999. In effect, therefore, the decision of the European Council to increase the own resources ceiling from 1·20 per cent. to 1·27 per cent. of GNP increased the permissible level of payments from the Community budget by 4·5 billion ecu a year by 1999.

It is not possible to estimate with any certainty how each member state would benefit from this additional 4·5 billion ecu by comparison with decisions which might have been made in the absence of agreement in Edinburgh.

Debt Relief

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 30 November, Official Report, columns 49-50, if he will provide figures on the amount of United Kingdom debt relief provided under the Trinidad terms which has been counted as official bilateral development assistance.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I have been asked to reply.

The Paris club has so far granted Trinidad terms to 13 countries. After a framework agreement is reached at the Paris club, each creditor must negotiate a separate bilateral agreement with the debtor. Not all of the United Kingdom's bilateral agreements have been concluded, but provisional figures suggest that these agreements will reduce debts to the United Kingdom by around £200 million. In accordance with directives agreed by the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development, all debt relief under Trinidad terms is counted as bilateral official development assistance.

SCOTLAND

Community Care

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the preparedness of local authorities in Scotland to implement the new community care arrangements in April.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Local authorities have been implementing the new community care arrangements in phases since 1991. All authorities now have complaints procedures and arm's length inspection units. The mental illness specific grant introduced in 1991-92 has built up community facilities for mentally ill people. All authorities, except one, have prepared community care plans which form the basis of discussions between them and the Scottish Office community care implementation unit. In the next phase, starting in April 1993, local authorities will assume responsibility for assessing individual's needs and purchasing residential and nursing home care. Preparations for this are well in hand, but systems will continue to develop and be refined with experience of the new arrangements.

Disabled People

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the individuals and organisations which he consults on matters relating to the needs and rights of disabled people in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The number of bodies consulted on these important matters is extremely lengthy and I am therefore arranging for a list to be placed in the Library of the House.

Constituency Sizes

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing, in descending order, the geographical area, expressed in hectares, of parliamentary constituencies in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is as follows:

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what guidelines he has issued, or plans to issue, to further education colleges regarding creche facilities; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Provision of creche facilities in further education colleges is currently the responsibility of education authorities. From 1 April 1993 that responsibility will rest with individual college boards of management.

We have no plans to issue guidelines to boards of management on the provision of creche facilities.

My right hon. Friend expects to announce shortly the names of the non-executive directors of the Grampian HealthCare, Monklands and Bellshill, and Yorkhill trusts.

Trust boards themselves appoint, and determine the salaries of, executive directors and information on this is not held centrally.

In addition to the remuneration payable, the chairmen and non-executive directors are entitled to claim travelling and subsistence allowances at rates set for members of public bodies. There is no specific weekly time commitment but trust board directors are expected to give about three days per month to the board's work.

Crime, Paisley

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will visit Paisley to discuss policing and crime.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No. It is the responsibility of the chief constable of Strathclyde police to take operational decisions on the policing of Paisley. My right hon. and learned Friend the Minister of State had a meeting with the hon. Members for Paisley, South and for Paisley, North (Mrs. Adams) on 20 October 1992 in the course of which he described the initiatives being taken by Strathclyde police to deal with Paisley's crime problems.

Hardy Nursery Stock

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to launch an initiative to promote the export of hardy nursery stock, including roses, heaths and heathers, from Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: My right hon. Friend has no plans to introduce an export promotion initiative for Scotland's hardy nursery stock.

I am pleased to say that this sector of the industry continues to demonstrate steady progress and, by its own efforts, is responding positively to the opportunities afforded at home and by the opening up of European Community markets.

Excellent examples of this progressive attitude to marketing are the Scotgrow exhibition, now an established annual event, and the Scotgrow's directory of Scotland's ornamental nursery stock growers. Both these and other initiatives are proving to be highly successful in promoting quality Scottish produce.

Child Abuse

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make it his policy to give victims of abuse, or their representatives, forewarning of the release date from prison of the offenders.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Directors of social work are notified in advance of the release of offenders when a person has been convicted of an offence under schedule 1 to the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1975 against children under the age of 17 years. This includes incest or other forms of sexual assault and cruel and unnatural treatment of children. Local authority social work departments will determine in the light of individual cases if victims or their representatives should be advised of the release of an offender. In addition the Scottish Prison Service informs the police and social work departments of the release of all prisoners on parole.

Poll Tax

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people were (a) registered to vote and (b) registered to pay the poll tax in each Scottish parliamentary constituency in the financial year 1992-93; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Information about electoral registrations by parliamentary constituency in 1992 is given in OPCS's "1992 Electoral Statistics"—series EL NO 19—published by HMSO, a copy of which is in the Library. Electoral registers in Scotland are published on 16 February each year.

No information is available centrally about the number of persons within parliamentary constituency areas who are on the community charge register.

Ecological Steering Group

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what arrangements he has made to set up the ecological steering group referred to in his statement of 11 January; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: I plan to establish as soon as possible an ecological steering group on the oil spill in Shetland with the terms of reference shown below. Professor W. Ritchie, professor of physical geography, vice principal of the university of Aberdeen, has accepted my invitation to be the chairman. I shall make a further announcement about the membership of the group in due course. The terms of reference are as follows:

To monitor environmental work arising from the incident and to provide a focus for liaison and advice;

To assess the impact of the incident on the ecology of the Shetland Islands;

To develop urgently the best strategies in the short and longer term for dealing with the implications of the incident as they affect the ecology of the Shetland Islands and to report to the Secretary of State for Scotland on these at an early date;

To oversee special studies for monitoring the impact on and subsequent recovery of the environment in order to advise the Government of the lessons to be learned which could be applied more widely, whether in the United Kingdom or elsewhere.

Water Services

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much capital investment on water services in Scotland has been paid for by private finance.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 22 January 1993]: Identified private sector contributions to capital investment on water sewerage services in Scotland amounted to £1·5 million in the financial year 1991-92.

Land Access

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many public access agreements have been concluded in Scotland in each of the last three years in respect of Forestry Commission holdings sold to the private sector; and what percentage of total sales these figures represent.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 18 January 1993]: The arrangements for securing continued public access to woodlands sold by the Forestry Commission were introduced in October 1991. Three of the woodland areas considered under these arrangements have been sold so far. None of the sales was subject to an access agreement.

Museums and Galleries (Attendance)

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what were the attendance figures for 1992 reported by the national museums and galleries in Scotland, broken down into the individual institutions but including their outstations, with figures in each case of the percentage increase or decrease on the attendances figures for 1991.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 19 January 1993]: The information is as follows:

	1992	Percentage change since 1991
National museums of Scotland	1,005,316	-6·12
National galleries of Scotland	759,102	+10·00

The national museums of Scotland comprise the Royal Museum of Scotland buildings at Chambers street and Queen street, Edinburgh, the Scottish agricultural museum, the Scottish united services museum, the Museum of Flight and the Museum of Costume. The national galleries of Scotland comprise the National Gallery of Scotland, the Scottish National Gallery of Modern Art and the Scottish National Portrait Gallery.

National Testing

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he has taken to implement national testing in schools in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: [pursuant to his reply, 2 November 1992, c. 153-54]: National testing is an essential part of the Government's education strategy. It ensures for parents that the progress of their children in school is checked against national standards.

The new arrangements for national testing announced last November and set out fully in The Scottish Office Education Department's circular 12/92, were widely welcomed in Scotland. National tests will now be given in primary schools in Scotland whenever pupils are considered by their teachers to have largely completed a level of the curriculum in mathematics, reading and writing. From January 1994, these arrangements will apply also to pupils in S1 and S2.

Education authorities were asked to confirm that they would implement these arrangements. They have now done so, in response to which regulations have been laid before Parliament today to revoke the regulations on national testing currently in force.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Yugoslavia

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what has been the United Kingdom contribution to United Nations funds for United Nations relief in the former Yugoslavia; and whether these funds came from the existing Overseas Development Administration budget.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Out of a total of £70·5 million so far committed towards humanitarian relief for the former Yugoslavia, £23·6 million has been provided for the United Nations humanitarian relief programme. These funds come from the United Kingdom aid programme.

UN Relief Operations

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has for additional help for United Nations relief operations in Afghanistan, Iraq and the former Yugoslavia.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In 1992 we committed £8·25 million to Afghanistan, of which £4·5 million was provided for United Nations relief operations; £10·84 million to Iraq of which £6·5 million was provided for UN relief operations; and £70·5 million to the former Yugoslavia, of which £23·6 million was provided for UN relief operations. Our future responses towards these crises depend on the assessment of needs and we are maintaining a close dialogue with the UN on this.

Aid-Trade Ratios

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what estimate he has made of the ratio of the amount supplied as British overseas aid to the amount generated in extra trade; and if he will set out the basis for the estimate.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In 1991, 74 per cent—£934 million—of our bilateral aid commitments were tied to British goods and services. We estimate that for every £1 we commit to multilateral agencies—£918 million in 1991—an average of £1·40 is spent on British goods and services. More widely our aid supports economic growth and liberalisation in developing countries, helping to provide a better climate for trade and investment.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 12 November 1992, Official Report, columns 932-44, which of the treaties listed, under each of the side headings, have been signed but not ratified by Her Majesty's Government.

Iran

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the relationship of Iran with the Hizbollah and Hamas.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Hizbollah has itself stated the importance it attaches to its relationship with Iran. Both Hizbollah and Hamas attended the conference the Iranian Government organised in October 1991 in opposition to the middle east peace process.

Iraq

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 15 January, Official Report, columns 853-54, what consultations he had with representatives of the telecommunications company concerned before allowing the visas to be issued.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs wrote to a representative of the parent company twice during 1992 and stressed that he would not be prepared to put forward a project of the type proposed to the United Nations sanctions committee.

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 15 January, Official Report, columns 853-54, what steps he took to ensure that any equipment being discussed was incapable of military application before granting the visas.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: It was made clear to representatives of the company concerned on a number of occasions that only goods approved by the United Nations sanctions committee could be exported to Iraq.

Gibraltar

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Spanish Government as to transport/passenger delays at the Spanish-Gibraltar border.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The Spaniards are well aware of our view that there should be the maximum possible free movement of EC nationals at internal borders commensurate with controlling the movement of terrorists, drug smugglers, other international criminals and illegal immigrants.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects to announce the name of the future Governor of Gibraltar; and what discussions on this appointment he has had with the Government of Gibraltar.

Mr. Garel-Jones: We hope in the near future to be in a position to announce the name of the new Governor of Gibraltar. The appointment is a matter for Her Majesty's Government, but we are in touch with the Gibraltar Government.

Immigration

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many (a) men and (b) women in (i) Bombay, (ii) New Delhi, (iii) Karachi and (iv) Islamabad, were seeking entry visas to join spouses in the United Kingdom as at 14 January; and what is the average current waiting time at each post.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The number of men and women waiting for an interview for entry clearance to join their spouses in the United Kingdom in Bombay, New Delhi, Karachi and Islamabad on 14 January, and the waiting time for interview, was as follows:

	Men Numbers	Women Numbers	Waiting Time Months
Bombay	87	90	3
New Delhi	10	105	3
Karachi	44	42	2
Islamabad	1,195	411	3

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement outlining the kinds of transactions which may be undertaken with Iraq and Iraqi nationals on humanitarian grounds under the current sanctions regime for Iraq.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The only transactions with Iraq permitted in the UK are those humanitarian exceptions permitted under UN Security Council resolutions 661 and 687 agreed on a case-by-case basis by the UN sanctions committee. Such exceptions include foodstuffs, medicine, medical and surgical equipment, basic human requirements—for example, toiletries, cooking requisites, tents, blankets and other items for the construction of basic shelter—and equipment necessary to restore basic local services—clean water, sanitation and agriculture.

Israel

Mr. Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list in sequence the actions taken by Her Majesty's Government over the decision of the Israeli Government to expel the Palestinians to the Israeli-occupied south Lebanon; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Since the decision of the Israeli authorities to expel the Palestinians, we have issued two EC statements as presidency and supported United Nations Security Council resolution 799. In addition, the Foreign Secretary has written to the Israeli Foreign Minister, I have made our views clear to the Israeli ambassador, and EC ambassadors in Tel Aviv have made representations to the Israeli Foreign Minister. On 23 January RAF helicopters provided support to an International Committee of the Red Cross humanitarian mission to the deportees. Our position on the deportations remains clear: they are illegal and we will continue to urge the Israelis to comply with Security Council resolution 799 which calls for the immediate and safe return of the deportees.

EDUCATION

Behaviour Policies

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) how many local education authorities have developed strategies for supporting the behaviour policies of their schools which meet the standards expected by his Department;

(2) how many local education authorities have schools which have whole school behaviour policies, as recommended in the Elton report on discipline in schools; what information he has on the percentage of such schools in each LEA; and to what extent they meet the standards expected by his Department.

Mr. Forth: This information is not collected centrally.

Parents' Civil Liabilities

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what research he has commissioned on the impact of imposing on parents' civil liabilities for the acts of their children in schools.

Mr. Forth: None.

Languages (Communication)

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what assessment he has made of how many local education authorities and schools in each of these local education authorities communicate with parents in languages other than English in accordance with the recommendations of the Elton report.

Mr. Forth: This information is not collected centrally. It is for local authorities and schools to consider the need for communication with parents in languages other than English in the light of local needs and circumstances. The Government have made the necessary statutory provisions to enable schools and LEAs to make governors' annual reports, pupils' reports and other documents for parents available in translation where this is appropriate.

Nursery Education

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what criteria are employed by his Department in distinguishing full-time and part-time nursery education for statistical and other purposes.

Mr. Forth: There is no statutory definition of these terms and the Department has not attempted to define full-time or part-time nursery education as such for statistical purposes. In its published pupil statistics it distinguishes those nursery pupils who usually attend for the length of the school day throughout the week, from those—the majority—who attend on mornings or afternoons only or on some other pattern.

Counselling Courses

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many LEAs have provided courses on basic counselling skills in the last two years; what information he has on the percentage of staff in each LEA which have been on such courses; and what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of such courses.

Mr. Forth: This information is not collected centrally.

Management Consultancy Services

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many local education authorities provide management consultancy services for head teachers and support services for the professional development of teachers which meet the standards expected by his Department.

Mr. Forth: It is for individual local education authorities to decide what services of these kind to provide, in the light of demand from the schools and colleges which they maintain.

School Discipline

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what assessment he has made, following the Elton report of discipline in schools, of the equitable distribution of teaching and other resources across the ability range in schools and of how local education authorities are taking this recommendation into account when funding schools.

Mr. Forth: None.

Ethnic Minorities

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education, pursuant to his answer of 11 January, Official Report, column 573, if he will take steps to introduce a DFE grant for new projects to meet the education needs of the ethnic minority population of all ages.

Mr. Forth: No. My right hon. Friend has no plans to introduce a separate DFE grant for new projects to meet the educational needs of the ethnic minority population.

Ballots

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education in what circumstances a parent entitled to a list of parents who can vote in a school's opt-out ballot may be required to give an undertaking before receiving a copy of such a list.

Mr. Forth: The Education Reform Act provides that where a parent makes a request in connection with any proposal that a ballot should be held in accordance with section 61 of this Act, the parent is entitled to a copy of the list of the names and addresses of other parents. An appropriate fee may be charged for the cost of supply of the list.

Special Needs Education

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what measures he is taking to reduce the time taken in the issuing of statements of special needs for children.

Mr. Forth: The Education Bill presently before the House provides for the Secretary of State to set statutory time limits governing local education authorities' conduct of assessments and the making of statements of special educational needs. The Bill also provides for a statutory code of practice including criteria and guidance to which LEAs should have regard in carrying out those duties.

Home Economics

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what representations he has received concerning the practical input in home economics in the national curriculum; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend has received conflicting representations about the place of aspects of home economics in the national curriculum. In addition to those aspects included in national curriculum mathematics and science, the proposals for a revised national curriculum technology order, which my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Education and for Wales issued for consultation in December, make clear their view that pupils should learn to apply designing and making skills to textiles and food, as to other materials, as part of the programmes of study for this subject.

English Test Papers

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education when he was first aware that national newspapers were in possession of this summer's key stage 3 English test papers; if he will carry out an inquiry into the circumstances; and if he will now defer the tests or treat them as a pilot exercise.

Mr. Forth: The tests for English will go ahead as planned. In the light of the leak of the current question, my right hon. Friend has asked Lord Griffiths, chairman of the School Examinations and Assessment Council, to draw up new test papers, based on the successful model developed over the last two and a half years.

My right hon. Friend first learnt that the current tests for English had become public on 20 January. He fully expects SEAC to establish how the leak occurred, to ensure that it does not happen again.

Truancy

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for Education, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Delyn (Mr. Hanson) on 20 January, Official Report, column 282, if he intends to provide schools with a national definition of what constitutes (a) truancy and (b) an unauthorised absence.

Mr. Forth: Truancy and unauthorised absence are terms which are largely interchangeable. They may be defined as absence from school without leave from a duly authorised person. Guidance as to what constitutes authorised absence was given in DFE circular 11/91, published in July 1991. A copy is available in the Library.

Child and Family Guidance

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is his policy towards the funding of child and family guidance services by local education authorities.

Mr. Forth: It is for individual local education authorities to make provision for child and family guidance services in the light of local needs and circumstances.

Lord Griffiths

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will dismiss Lord Griffiths from his post as chairman of the School Examinations and Assessment Council.

Mr. Forth: No.

DEFENCE

Vulcan Bombers

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Chislehurst (Mr. Sims) of 16 November 1992, Official Report, column 44, what sustainable sponsorship proposals to accept financial responsibility for keeping the Vulcan XH 558 in flying condition he has received; what would be the required annual financial contribution and any non-recurring costs; what steps he has taken to inform potential sponsors of these costs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: Officials have met and corresponded with representatives of the campaign to keep the Vulcan flying on a number of occasions since 16 November, to explain in detail the implications of its continued operation. We have received no new sponsorship proposals during this period.

The estimated costs of continuing to operate the Vulcan remain as set out in the answer that I gave to my hon. Friend on 26 October 1992, Official Report, column 507.

I have decided that, without viable sponsorship, there is no further justification for delaying the sale of the aircraft, and tenders will be issued during the next week.

European Defence

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what assessment he has made of a continuing role for NATO alongside an independent European defence policy;

(2) what is his policy in respect of the establishment of permanent forces of the WEU, in respect of their effect on the role and position of NATO.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Government welcome the development of a European defence identity and fully support the development of the Western European Union (WEU) as a means to strengthen the European pillar of the Atlantic alliance. NATO will remain the principal guarantor of stability throughout the North Atlantic area and the forum for agreement on policies bearing on the security and defence commitments of its members. We do not advocate the establishment of permanent WEU forces or headquarters. Our approach, which is reflected in the WEU's Petersberg declaration of June 1992, is that WEU member states should make available military units from the whole spectrum of their conventional armed forces for the WEU's use in situations where NATO is not involved. These units will be drawn from forces with national and NATO roles, in the latter case after consultation with the alliance.

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what will be the effect of the new European defence proposals, involving rapid deployment of forces, potentially over long distances, on the United Kingdom defence budget.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Petersberg declaration of June 1992 made it clear that military units which will be made available to the Western European Union will be drawn from the forces with national and NATO roles. NATO's new strategic concept emphasises the need for armed forces to be mobile and flexible. The defence budget agreed in the 1992 public expenditure survey took account of the restructuring of Britain's armed forces in line with the requirements of the strategic concept.

HMS Ark Royal

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the estimated initial and subsequent cost of the deployment of the Ark Royal group and the units deployed therewith; and how much of that cost will be reimbursed to his Department by the Foreign Office.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The estimated additional cost is expected to be some £30 million if the deployment lasts for one year. It is not possible at this early stage to produce a meaningful breakdown of costs given the variable nature of the operation. No decision has yet been taken on which Department will bear the cost.

Merchant Seamen

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy to mark the 50th anniversary of the battle of the Atlantic by taking steps to commemorate the contribution to the war effort made by merchant seamen.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My Department is working closely with the Chamber of Shipping to ensure that the Merchant Navy and merchant seamen are properly represented at the commemoration of the 50th anniversary of the battle of the Atlantic on Merseyside at the end of May.

Anti-air Warfare Frigate

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the future development of the Franco-British anti-air warfare frigate.

Mr. Aitken: A preliminary co-operative phase for a common Franco-British AAW frigate, to enter service early in the next decade, was launched in November 1991 and is due to conclude in the autumn of this year. I am pleased to be able to inform the House that the French Minister of Defence, Mr. Pierre Joxe and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence have recently agreed proposals for the procurement and project management of project Horizon, as it is now termed. Discussions are continuing with Italy. The three chiefs of staff of the French, Italian and Royal Navy signed a joint staff requirement for the frigate in December 1992.

Joint Planning and Training

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy towards joint planning and training between the members of NATO and the other members of the North Atlantic Co-operation Council.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Areas of defence co-operation agreed by all members of the North Atlantic Co-operation Council (NACC) are outlined in the "Statement issued at the meeting of Defence Ministers at NATO Headquarters on 1 April 1992" and in the NACC statement of 18 December 1992. Both these documents are in the Library of the House. These guidelines cover discussion with NACC partners on members' approaches to planning and training, but not on joint planning and training.

Defence Trade

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made towards a NATO code of conduct in defence trade; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: Discussions are continuing with out allies on a NATO code of conduct in defence trade, with the aim of moving towards a more open defence equipment market within the alliance. We fully support this objective.

NATO

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to receive the results of the review currently being undertaken of NATO's force structure.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: NATO Ministers expect to see an interim report on the implications for the new NATO structure of changing force levels among alliance members at their next meeting in the spring.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the consequences for NATO's force structure of the proposals by Belgium, the Netherlands and Spain to reduce their domestic forces.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: An assessment of the consequences of our allies' proposals for NATO's force structure will be made once their reviews have progressed.

Polaris

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the technical maximum number of warheads capable of deployment on Polaris missiles when they first entered service; what change took place in connection with the deployment of Chevaline; and what is the technical maximum currently.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The 16-missile Polaris submarines each entered service with the Royal Navy carrying 48 warheads. The Chevaline development provided warheads that are hardened against the effects of anti-ballistic missile defences, together with penetration aids, and the ability to manoeuvre the payload in space. It is long-standing policy not to divulge specific warhead numbers either current or planned; but the Government made clear at the time that Chevaline did not involve any increase in the number of warheads associated with the Polaris force.

Royal Yacht Britannia

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much of the refit of the royal yacht Britannia in 1987 was spent on (a) the superstructure, (b) the engines and (c) the royal apartments.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The work carried out during Britannia's refit in 1987 falls into the following categories:

	Per cent.
Structure	22·0
Propulsion	7·2
Royal apartments	17·3
Other	53·5

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the annual costs published for the royal yacht Britannia include the cost of personnel; and what is the personnel cost for the latest available year.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The annual costs published for the royal yacht Britannia do include the cost of personnel. The personnel costs for 1991-92 were £3,904,000.

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the planned service life of the royal yacht Britannia.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: HMY Britannia had a routine refit in Portsmouth last year costing some £6 million to £7 million. This was designed to keep her safe, seaworthy and up to date for the next few years. In view of her age, it is obviously sensible to consider her future. This consideration is at an early stage and it is too soon to speculate as to its outcome.

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on how many days the royal yacht Britannia was used by members of the royal family for public engagements and private purposes in each year since 1989.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: During the period specified, HMY Britannia has been used by members of the royal family, as follows:

	Total number of days
1989	55
1990	42
1991	31
1992	27

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on how many days the royal yacht Britannia was used for military manoeuvres in each year since 1989.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: During the period in question HMY Britannia was not required to participate in military manoeuvres.

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on how many sea-days the royal yacht Britannia was used for conferences and seminars to attract business for Britain in 1991 and 1992.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: HMY Britannia hosted six such sea-days during the period in question, three in each year.

Royal Flight

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many flights were undertaken by the royal flight in 1991; and how many aircraft of what type are in the flight.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Queen's Flight undertook 1,220 passenger-carrying flights in 1991. The flight currently comprises three BAe 146-100 executive jet aircraft and two Wessex helicopters.

Parachute Training

Ms. Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give details of training in first aid, and specifically in the symptoms of head injury, given to personnel involved in the supervision of service men and women undertaking parachute training.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: All non-commissioned officer parachute training instructors are required to obtain a first aid certificate during basic training as a physical training instructor; this includes recognition of some forms of concussion.

Trainees have immediate access to fully qualified medical officers the moment they feel unwell and during all forms of parachute training a fully qualified medical attendant and ambulance are available at all times. Furthermore, individual trainees are instructed to report sick if they consider themselves unfit to continue further training.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Waste Exports

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 9 November 1992, Official Report, column 587, if he will indicate (a) the type of waste sent to each country, (b) the ports utilised to transfer the waste, (c) the original producer of the waste within the United Kingdom, (d) the responsible authorities for each producer of waste and port of exit for waste exports and (e) the companies receiving the waste after its export.

Mr. Eggar: It is not possible to answer the question without disproportionate cost. However, a certain amount of the information is available in the public domain, and may be obtained from HM Customs and Excise through their appointed marketing agents. Broad statistics on exports of waste products are contained in Business Monitor (MM20)—"Overseas Trade Statistics of the United Kingdom", a copy of which is available in the House of Commons Library.

Plugs

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what recent statements his Department has made on the Plug and Socket (Safety) Regulations 1987 in respect of pre-fitted plugs; and when he expects to lay further regulations.

Mr. Leigh: Following my Department's review of the Plugs and Sockets (Safety) Regulations 1987, I announced on 30 January 1992 a proposal to revise these regulations and to include a requirement that domestic electrical appliances be supplied fitted with a correctly fused 13-amp plug. This matter is currently the subject of consultation.

No decision on the progress of the revised regulations can be taken until full consideration has been given to the responses received from the public consultation.

Bank of Credit and Commerce International

Mr. Vaz: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether he is considering an application made under section 172 of the Insolvency Act for the removal of the liquidators of BCCI.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Representations have been made which ask that the liquidators be removed under the powers contained in section 172 of the Insolvency Act 1986 and these are being considered.

Computer Programmes Regulations

Mr. Peter Griffiths: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what representations he has received from the EC Commission regarding the wording of the draft Copyright (Computer Programmes) Regulations 1992; and if it is his intention to reconsider the wording of the regulations;

(2) if the draft Copyright (Computer Programmes) Regulations 1992 meets all the requirements of the relevant EC directive.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 25 January 1993]: No representations have been received from the European Commission on the draft regulations laid before Parliament, but the wording of those regulations took account of representations from the Commission and from interests in the United Kingdom on an earlier, consultative draft. Following approval of the draft regulations by both Houses, they have been published as the Copyright (Computer Programs) Regulations 1992 (SI 1992 No. 3233). The Government consider that the regulations meet all the requirements of the relevant Council directive and have no plans to reconsider their wording.

Oilseed

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what current research projects are being undertaken by his Department to study the viability of producing oilseed for non-food uses, with particular reference to the development of bio-diesel.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 25 January 1993]: My Department has commissioned work at the energy technology support unit which assesses the economics of the production of oilseed rape and its conversion to bio-diesel. This review of the potential of bio-diesel as a transport fuel will be published shortly by HMSO.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions he has held with his European counterparts about the development of bio-diesel through the growth of oilseed; and if he will list the number of hectares devoted to oilseed growth specifically for the development of bio-diesel in each EC member state.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 25 January 1993]: I chaired the Council of Energy Ministers on 30 November 1992 which discussed a proposal for a decision concerning the promotion of renewable energy sources in the Community (ALTENER programme). The United Kingdom presidency secured political agreement to this programme which, inter alia, aims to secure for bio-fuels, such as bio-diesel, a market share of 5 per cent. of total consumption by motor vehicles by 2005. Bio-diesel can be derived from any oil-seed rape, thus areas grown specifically for bio-diesel cannot be separately indentified.

Logic Control Systems

Mr. Barnes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he has received a report from the disqualification unit of the insolvency service following the move into receivership of Logic Control Systems of Clowne, Derbyshire, in July 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neil Hamilton [holding answer 25 January 1993]: The Insolvency Service, acting on behalf of the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, has responsibility for considering reports made by insolvency practitioners on the conduct of directors of failed companies to determine, with advice from lawyers as appropriate, whether it is expedient to bring disqualification proceedings. This process, with regard to Logic Control Systems Ltd, is continuing.

"Managing into the '90s"

Mr. Wigley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many workshops have been held in Wales as part of his Department's "Managing into the '90s" campaign to date; and how many are planned for 1993.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 25 January 1993]: Since the launch of the "Managing into the '90s" programme in 1989 there have been 12 events held in Wales under the programme variously described as conferences, seminars and workshops. A further four are so far planned for 1993.

In addition, workshop-type activities occur in visits to demonstration companies—63 in the period 1989-92, with a further 43 planned for 1993—and at the presentations at the touring Strategy Roadshow—12 in the period 1989-92, with a further 16 so far planned for 1993.

Iraq

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Amber Valley (Mr. Oppenheim) on 11 January, Official Report, column 555, if he will supply the corresponding information about the export of machine tools to Iraq in (a) 1985, (b) 1986 and (c) 1990.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 18 January 1993]: For ease of reference the information requested for the major countries supplying machine tools to Iraq from 1985 to 1990 is set out in the table:

Airline Bookings

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will bring forward proposals to require that bookings made and confirmed with airlines can be changed only on the personal instructions of the passenger.

Mr. Norris: I have been asked to reply.

There are circumstances in which airlines have to change confirmed reservations for reasons beyond their control. The Government do not wish to introduce undue rigidities, but we are aware of cases in which passengers with confirmed reservations have been transferred to alternative flights before they have presented themselves for boarding, even though the flight on which they were booked had not been cancelled. Unlike passengers who are transferred at the check-in desk, such passengers are at present not entitled to compensation under EC law (Council Regulation (EEC) No. 295/91 on Denied Boarding Compensation).

My Department is looking into this matter to see whether a change to the EC regulation might be desirable and practicable.

PRIME MINISTER

Engagements

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 26 January.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister is making official visits to India and Oman.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Prime Minister which Minister will be heading the British delegation to the European population conference to be held in Geneva in March; and which Government officials and experts will make up the British delegation to the conference.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply.

These matters have not yet been finally decided. An announcement will be made shortly.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Prime Minister if the country statement for Britain for the European population conference will be made available to hon. Members before the conference.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply.

The United Kingdom country statement will be placed in the Library before the conference begins.

Treaty of Rome

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list each of the provisions of the treaty of Rome which confer on the institutions of the Community a power (a) to pass legislation by regulation or by directive or (b) to incur expenditure, binding on member states, indicating in each case where applicable the principal United Kingdom Government Departments and areas of policy involved; and if he will give the same information in respect of the treaty on European Union.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply.

It is clear from the wording of the articles of the treaty of Rome which of them authorise the Council or the Commission to adopt legislative measures. The same is true of the additional articles inserted into the treaty by title II of the treaty on European union. The articles do not, however, determine whether or not measures adopted under them are capable of involving expenditure from the Community budget. This depends on the nature of the individual measure concerned. Indeed, any measure is capable of having implications for the Community budget, even if only in terms of administrative costs. Nor is it possible to detail in advance which Government Departments will have principal responsibility for areas of Community legislation. This information is supplied in the explanatory memorandum submitted to Parliament in respect of each specific proposal for EC legislation.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Disability Allowances

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many case files for (a) attendance allowance, (b) mobility allowance and (c) disability living allowance were lost within the Benefits Agency handling system during 1992.

Mr. Scott: The administration of disability benefits is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from M. Bichard to Mr David Hinchliffe, dated 25 January 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking how many claim files for (a) Attendance Allowance (AA), (b) Mobility Allowance (MobA) and (c) Disability Working Allowance (DWA) were lost within the Agency during 1992.

For AA and MobA I should explain that there are no central records available on the number of case files which are mislaid. I am sure you will appreciate, however, that when vast numbers of cases are being handled it may sometimes be difficult to locate a particular file immediately.

When files have been mislaid a special search is instigated as soon as possible so that the enquiry can be answered. If the procedures for locating mislaid files are unsuccessful a duplicate file is created and replacement evidence gathered to determine the claim with the aim of minimising any further delay.

The measures we have introduced to clear the backlog of AA claims have already reduced the number of outstanding cases to manageable proportions and location of files should be more straightforward in future.

There have been no instances of DWA case files being lost.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report. A copy will also be placed in the Library.

Alzheimer's Disease

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations his Department has had from the Alzheimer's Disease Society in regard to the independent living fund; what reply has been sent; what action he will be taking; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The Department received a letter from Mr. Harry Cayton, the director of the Alzheimer's Disease Society, on 8 December 1992. We also received several letters from the Alzheimer's Disease Society (Scotland). Replies have been sent to all letters, explaining the new arrangements for independent living.

The principal concern raised in the letters is that of the restriction of the fund to new applicants aged between 16 and 65. This decision was taken in order that the fund could be targeted towards people whose usual pattern is to live and work in the community and who have therefore often lost the opportunity to earn and save.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

National Lottery

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what advice he has received from registered pools promoters about the effects of the National Lottery Bill on their business if enacted unaltered.

Mr. Brooke: Since the publication of the Bill, the pools companies have directed their concerns to the press.

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what further research he has commissioned from the GAH Consulting Group since 7 October 1992, into the effects of a national lottery.

Mr. Brooke: None.

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what percentage of pools turnover is retained by the promoters as profit after payment of pool betting duty and contributions to the Football Trust and Foundation for Sport and the Arts.

Mr. Brooke: That is a matter for the individual companies.

Press Regulation

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what representations he has had from the Guild of Newspaper Editors in relation to the Freedom and Responsibility of the Press Bill promoted by the hon. Member for Hammersmith (Mr. Soley).

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 15 January 1993]: We have received no representations from the Guild of British Newspaper Editors specifically relating to the Freedom and Responsibility of the Press Bill. But earlier this month the guild joined forces with the Newspaper Society to produce "Blindfolding the Watchdog", a pamphlet on freedom of the press, copies of which were sent to the Department.

EMPLOYMENT

European Works Council

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when she next expects to discuss with other EC member states and the European Commission the proposed Council directive on the establishment of a European Works Council in Community-scale undertakings or groups of undertakings for the purposes of informing the counselling employees; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The proposed European works council directive has not been discussed by the Labour and Social Affairs Council of the European Community since December 1991. I am not aware of any plans for EC Ministers to discuss this proposal in the near future.

Equitable Wages

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what discussions she has had with representatives of other EC member states and the European Commission on the proposed opinion on the introduction of an equitable wage by the member states; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The draft opinion is mainly concerned with improving the transparency of the labour market, removing discrimination and encouraging high skill, high productivity jobs in member states. The UK Government endorse these principles. However, the opinion will represent only the views of the European Commission and will have no legal force whatsoever. Member states do not have to endorse it or take any action that is not appropriate in light of their own circumstances. The Commission has not discussed the draft opinion with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State, or with other European Community Ministers.

Greenbank Project

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will visit the Greenbank project in Mossley Hill, Liverpool, to discuss the provisions of training places for disabled people on Merseyside.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has no plans to visit Liverpool in the near future.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what information she has concerning the percentage of the work force, whole-time equivalent, which is currently employed in manufacturing industry in (a) each member country of the European Community, (b) the United States of America and (c) Japan;

(2) what information she has concerning the percentage of the work force, whole-time equivalent, which is currently employed in the banking, finance and insurance industry in (a) each member country of the European Community, (b) the United States of America and (c) Japan;

(3) what information she has concerning the percentage of the work force, whole-time equivalent, which is currently employed in the construction industry in (a) each member country of the European Community, (b) the United States of America and (c) Japan.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Department does not provide estimates of whole-time equivalents.

The information required is available from the civilian employment tables in "Labour Force Statistics 1970-1990" (OECD), a copy of which is in the Library. For Great Britain, the latest estimates for 1990 of civilian employment as a percentage of total civilian employment are as follows:

Great Britain: June 1990—not seasonally adjusted

	Per cent
Manufacturing	20.7
Banking, finance and insurance	12.2
Construction	6.9

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people, whole-time equivalent, have been employed in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available in (a) the construction industry, (b) manufacturing industry and (c) banking, finance and insurance industry; and what percentage of the total work force those figures represent in each of those years.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Department does not provide estimates of whole-time equivalents.

The available information is for Great Britain. Employees in employment data can be obtained from the NOMIS database which is accessible from the Library. Historical data for self-employed people is available in the Library on page 54 of Historical Supplement No. 3, issued with the June 1992 edition of Employment Gazette. Recent estimates for the self-employed are as follows:

Self-employed people—Industrial Analysis: June 1992

Great Britain	Thousand
Construction	585
Manufacturing industries	279
Banking, Finance and insurance	416

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the current United Kingdom figure for unemployment on the International Labour Organisation International basis.

Mr. McLoughlin: Estimates of unemployment on the ILO definition are available from the Department's labour force survey (LFS) which is conducted quarterly for Great Britain and annually for Northern Ireland. In addition the OECD uses the quarterly LFS estimates as benchmarks to calculate a monthly seasonally adjusted unemployment rate for the United Kingdom on the ILO definition. The latest available information is as follows:

Labour Force Survey

	Spring 1992/Summer 1992			OECD November 1992
Level of unemployment (thousands)	Great Britain	United Kingdom	Great Britain	United Kingdom
Unadjusted	2,649	2,732	2,797	—
Seasonally adjusted	2,649	[1]—	2,758	—
Unemployment rate (percentage of the labour force)
Unadjusted (per cent)	9·6	9·6	10·0	—
Seasonally adjusted (per cent.)	9·5	[1]—	9·9	10·5

[1] LFS figures for United Kingdom compiled at spring of each year only, therefore not seasonally adjusted.

Industrial Employment

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if she will make a statement outlining those steps which have been taken by her Department since 9 April 1992 specifically to encourage employment in the United Kingdom construction industry; and what future action she intends to take to assist the construction industry;

(2) if she will make a statement outlining those steps which have been taken by her Department since 9 April 1992 specifically to encourage employment in the United Kingdom manufacturing industry; and what future action she intends to take to assist the manufacturing industry.

Mr. McLoughlin: The overall policy of the Department is to promote a free and flexible labour market that is designed to help encourage employment in all sectors. In addition, the Department provides a range of employment and training programmes and local initiatives, through the employment service and training and enterprise councils to help people increase their skills, and equip themselves for work in all sectors including manufacturing. From April 1993 this range of measures is being enhanced and expanded.

Employment Training

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of people graduating from employment training courses have gone on to full-time work in each year since the scheme was set up.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information required is given in the following table:

Employment training: Great Britain
Full-time work—Three months after leaving
Trainees completing agreed training

Period of leaving	In full-time work[2] Per cent.
July 1989[1] to March 1990	35
April 1990 to March 1991	29
April 1991 to March 1992	26

Source: Employment Training National Follow-up Survey.
[1] First month follow-up results available.
[2] Including self-employment.

Disabled People

Sir John Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans she has to introduce an employment White Paper in respect of measures to revise and improve employment prospects for disabled people.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: A consultation paper will be issued as soon as possible following our review of the funding arrangements for the sheltered employment programme.

Unemployment Benefit Disqualification

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information is available regarding the lengths of periods of unemployment benefit disqualification imposed by adjudication officers in the area which includes Alyn and Deeside.

Mr. McLoughlin: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. Fogden to Mr. Barry Jones, dated 26 January 1993:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to write to you direct to respond to your Parliamentary Question to her about the length of periods of unemployment benefit disqualifications in the Alyn and Deeside area. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

All decisions on claims for unemployment benefit are made by the independent adjudicating authorities.

Information about the length of disqualification periods imposed is not collated or published as each is decided in the light of the circumstances surrounding the individual case. Without knowledge of these circumstances no meaningful interpretation of the information could be made.

I hope this is helpful.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

Careers Service

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans she has to increase the profile and the role of the careers service; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: New legislation which opens up a range of options for management of careers services is proposed in clause 33 of the Trade Union Reform and Employment Rights Bill. These options are intended to make careers services more responsive to local needs and conditions.

The Government intend to set and ensure the meeting of challenging standards of service. Careful attention is being paid to the issue of quality in the context of the arrangements resulting from the new legislation.

Fraud

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) how many people were prosecuted for fraud by her Department in the latest year for which figures are available;

(2) what is the number of whole time equivalent staff employed by her Department and its agencies to detect and prosecute suspected fraud; and what is the cost of their employment;

(3) how much her Department has saved from the investigation of fraud in the latest year for which figures are available; and what are the targeted savings for the next financial year.

Mr. McLoughlin [pursuant to his answer, 28 October 1992, column 716]: The chief executive of the Employment Service has written further to the hon. Member.

Letter from M. Fogden to Mr. Donald Dewar, dated 26 February 1993:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to write to you direct to respond to your Parliamentary Questions about

(i) how many people were prosecuted for fraud by the Department in the latest year for which figures are available,

(ii) what is the number of whole time equivalent staff employed to detect and prosecute suspected fraud, and what is the cost of their employment,

(iii) how much the Department has saved from the investigation of fraud in the latest year for which figures are available, and what are the targeted savings for the next financial year.

Unfortunately our reply of 28 October contained a factual error about the cost of the fraud operation. The original reply quoted the half yearly cost which was £13·24 million, however, the total yearly cost of the operations was £21·54 million. The following reply now contains the correct information. Please accept my apologies for any inconvenience this has caused.

The latest year for which figures are available is that of the financial year ending 31 March 1992 during which a total of 2,265 people were prosecuted for fraud. We currently have 1,300 people, of whom 780 are Inspectors, employed in the detection and prosecution of benefit fraud. The total cost of our fraud operations amounted to £21·54 million. The net savings from our investigations into benefit fraud amounted to £34·34 million. We do not set targets for benefit savings accrued from benefit fraud investigation. Our performance is measured by the number of claims withdrawn following investigation by Inspectors and our target is for 58,000 such claims to be withdrawn by the end of the present financial year.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Community Care

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what provisions are made for residential care and treatment for drug and alcohol misuse under the new community care arrangements to be introduced in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: From April 1993 the needs of drug and alcohol misusers in Northern Ireland will be met through revised community care arrangements. Health and social services boards will be responsible for assessing individual needs and for arranging appropriate care, including residential care, to meet that need. All care costs will be met from a board managed budget which will include the social security resources which would have been used to support people entering residential accommodation under existing arrangements. Services available to alcohol and drug misusers will not therefore be diminished as a result of the new arrangements for community care.

Child Care

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many day nurseries, playgroups or childminders have registered with each of the health and social services boards in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Hanley: At 31 March 1991, the latest date for which figures are available, the information requested is as follows:

Type of Facility	Number of Premises
Eastern Board
Day nursery	21
Pre-school play group	244
Child minding	2,231
Northern Board
Day nursery	11
Pre-school play group	148
Childminding	874
Southern Board
Day nursery	14

Type of Facility	Number of Premises
Pre-school play group	90
Child minding	373
Western Board
Day nursery	9
Pre-school play group	102
Child minding	381
Total	4,498

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how the new grant to support the start-up costs of new day care services for school age children will apply in Northern Ireland; who will be responsible for the administration of the grants; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The recently announced arrangements for Great Britain are presently being examined in the light of Northern Ireland's needs.

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list by area the number of day nurseries, play groups or childminders who have been refused registration by the health and social services boards in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Hanley: Information in the form requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Electricity Interconnector

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what actions have been taken by his Department in relation to the proposed electricity interconnector with Scotland.

Mr. Atkins: The decision to sign heads of agreement for an electricity interconnector to Scotland was taken by the board of Northern Ireland Electricity and being a major project the approval of the Department of Economic Development was obtained. NIE and the Department jointly submitted an application to the EC for funding under the structural funds programme.

Royal Ulster Constabulary

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many applications from (a) male and (b) female Roman Catholics were made for posts in the RUC and RUC Reserve in each year since1974; what was the percentage figure of all applications; what numbers were recruited; and what percentage this represents of the total recruited.

Mr. Mates: Comprehensive statistics about the religious composition of the Royal Ulster Constabulary and the Royal Ulster Constabulary reserve, full time and part time, have been collected only since January 1990 when religious monitoring was introduced by the force.

The information available is set out in the following tables and is derived from information provided by applicants as to which schools they attended. This means that the figures provided are to some extent still based on perceptions. This form of monitoring is consistent with the requirements of the fair employment legislation.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table of all ranks in the RUC and the RUC reserve for each year since 1974 indicating the total number and numbers of males and females in each rank, and the number of Roman Catholics, male and female, in each rank as a percentage and as an absolute figure.

Mr. Mates: Comprehensive statistics about the religious composition of the Royal Ulster Constabulary and the Royal Ulster reserve, full time and part time, have been collected only since January 1990 when religious monitoring was introduced by the force.

WALES

Trauma Treatment Centres

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the hospitals in Wales designated as major trauma treatment centres indicating which of them have (a) intensive care units and (b) resuscitation units.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: At present there are no designated major trauma treatment centres in Wales, within the definition of the Royal College of Surgeons report on the management of patients with major injuries in November 1988.

A decision on whether to designate such a Welsh centre will be made once the results of the pilot project in England are evaluated.

Disability

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what action is currently undertaken by his Department to monitor the application by social services departments of the sections within the Children Act 1989 and the subsequent guidance notes relating to disability issues in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The social services inspectorate, Wales, published in October 1992 the report of a survey conducted in August 1991 "Organisation of Social Services for Children with a Disability", a copy of which is in the Library of the House. The inspectorate proposes to hold a follow-up workshop for local authority staff in the early part of this year. Social services departments' reports on inter-agency collaboration under the Children Act, including services to children in need who are disabled, have begun to arrive in the Welsh Office in response to the request for such returns in the Department's circular 26/91. A summary of the information provided by authorities will appear in a future report to Parliament under section 83(6) of the Act.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what level of additional resources have been granted to social services departments in Wales to enable them to carry out obligations relating to disability issues laid out in the Children Act 1989.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Local authorities' responsibilities under the Children Act are taken into account in setting standard spending assessments as part of the annual local government revenue settlement. These resources are not hypothecated to individual services. In addition, a specific grant was introduced to support the training of staff to implement the Act's provisions. Grant available for that purpose was £200,000 in 1990-91 and £240,000 in 1991-92 and is included within the child care staff training grant of £635,000 for 1992-93.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much has been allocated by his Department to publicise the Children Act 1989 and the relevant guidance notes to organisations of and for disabled people in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Some £70,000 has been spent on guidance about the Children Act—including volume 6 on children with disabilities—which was distributed free of charge to local authorities and relevant voluntary organisations in Wales.

Oral Hygiene

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures are being taken to make children aware of the importance of oral hygiene.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The protocol for investment in health gain covering oral health issued in November 1992 contained many challenging targets to secure health gain in this area. One of the targets specifically aimed at children is that:

"Family Health Service authorities and health authorities will by 1997 be able to report that at least 50 per cent. of children by the age of 5 have an understanding of basic oral health principles and at least 75 per cent. by 2002."

This advice is being taken forward in the local strategies for health prepared jointly by those authorities in collaboration with others.

The Health Promotion Authority for Wales is presently developing a health promotion resource entitled "Cledwyn's Castle" aimed at pre-school children. The package is currently being produced following extensive testing. One module of the programme covers dental health which includes oral hygiene. The authority has also held a symposium on dental health education in the national curriculum. A further symposium is expected to be held in the forthcoming financial year. These aim to ensure that consistent advice is given within the curriculum. A range of dental health promotion literature is available from the authority.

The Department is also providing financial support for Pembrokeshire NHS trust community dental service to carry out two pilot projects aimed at improving the oral health of children. The first aims to produce cross-curriculum health promotion materials in both English and Welsh for each attainment target group in primary education. The second project aims to produce materials which can be used in each season of the year in playgroups.

Housing

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the number of houses built by local authorities, housing associations and the private sector in 1979, 1990, 1991 and 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The available information is published in "Welsh Housing Statistics Volume 12", a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Graduate Engineers

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his policy for funding for postgraduate study for graduate engineers; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The funding that we are making available to the Higher Education Funding Council for Wales includes provision for postgraduate study within higher education in Wales. In addition, the Science and Engineering Research Council makes discretionary awards availble to postgraduate students in the engineering field.

Used Motor Oil

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the waste disposal authorities in Wales which currently provide no facilities for the collection of used motor oil from the public.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: This information is not maintained centrally.

Valleys Initiative

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when the design and printing contract for the valleys initiative leaflets was put out to tender; if the tender was advertised as an open competition; how many firms made bids; and if the winning bid was the lowest tender.

Mr. David Hunt: Time available for the production of the original publicity material in 1988 for the valleys initiative was very limited. The companies which carried out the printing and design work, and which also did subsequent revisions of the publicity material, were not selected by competitive tender.

Publicity

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was his total expenditure on each of (a) exhibitions, (b) leaflet design, production and distribution, (c) stationery supplies and general publicity for each of the last 10 years.

Mr. David Hunt: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson) on 2 June 1992. Records do not enable expenditure on leaflet design, production and distribution to be separately identified.

Figures for expenditure on stationery are not available for the years 1981-82 to 1985-86. Figures for expenditure on exhibitions cannot be disaggregated for the years 1981-82 to 1989-90. Expenditure for succeeding years is set out in the following table.

£000

	Stationery	Exhibitions
1986-87	205·6	n/a
1987-88	260·9	n/a
1988-89	301·9	n/a

Mr. Roy Bichen

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 19 January, Official Report, column 198, if he was aware of the legal action being taken against Mr. Roy Bichen in the United States of America when he appointed him deputy chairman of the Welsh Development Agency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I have nothing to add to the answer which I gave to the hon. Gentleman on 19 January at column 198.

Contracts

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the 10 largest design, printing, publicity or stationery supply contracts awarded by his Department since 1 April 1988 and the names and business addresses of the suppliers.

Mr. David Hunt: Records are kept in a form which would not enable this information to be extracted except at disproportionate cost.

Charter Contracts

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on what dates contracts for designing and printing the leaflets for the patients charter and parents charter were put out to tender; on what dates and in which publications the tender was advertised; how many design and printing companies were invited to tender; and if the winning bid was the lowest tender.

Mr. David Hunt: The information is as follows:

Design work

Tenders were invited for the parents charter on 23 August 1991 and the specification was revised on 6 September 1991. Three companies submitted prices and work was commissioned from the firm which offered the lowest hourly price. Work for the similarly designed patients charter was undertaken within one month by the same company on the basis of the hourly charge quoted for the parents charter.

Printing work

Printing contracts were managed by the Central Office of Information. Quotations were invited for the patients charter on 1 October 1991 and the specification was revised on 2 October 1991 and 21 October 1991. Eleven printing firms were invited to quote and the work was awarded to the company offering the lowest price. Quotations were invited for the parents charter on 12 September 1991. The specification was revised on 19 September 1991 and a revised tender issued on 30 September 1991. Eight printing firms were invited to quote. The company offering the lowest price proposed a printing process which required a "web" or roll of paper which was not immediately available; the tender was awarded to the company offering the lowest price for printing on normal paper sheets.

It is not normal practice to advertise tenders for work of this type and value.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Farm Employees

Mr. Cox: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the number of people employed full time in the farming industry in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Curry: The number of people employed full-time on agricultural holdings in England as at June for each of the last 10 years is shown in the table.

Inshore Fishing

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received, and from whom, against the Inshore Fishing (Prohibition of Carriage of Monofilament Gill Nets) (Scotland) Order 1986.

Mr. Curry: I received recently representations from the National Federation of Fishermen's Organisations drawing attention to their continued concern about the effect of the order, which prohibits the carriage or use of monofilament gill nets within six miles of Scotland by any United Kingdom fishing vessel, on the Grimsby gill net fleet. I replied on 15 January 1993.

Farm Incomes

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish the net farm income figures for (a) English, (b) Welsh, (c) Scottish and (d) Northern Irish hill livestock farm enterprises over the past five years for which figures are available, at constant prices, shown as a percentage of full-time manual earnings for the United Kingdom for the same period.

Mr. Curry: Net farm income is not a measure of farmers' cash earnings which in general will be higher. It is not, therefore, comparable with the average earnings of manual workers. The following table shows the latest estimates of the level of farm income for each accounting year since 1988-89 and the average earnings of full-time adult manual workers as at April each year in nominal terms and deflated by the retail prices index.

Hill Farming

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the subsidy and price support available to hill farming enterprises over the last five years for which figures are available; and how they have varied in value at constant prices in relation to farm input costs and retail prices index over the same period.

Mr. Curry: The figures on the following table show the information requested for the direct livestock subsidies available to hill farmers. Support for beef producers has also been available through intervention during this period, but it is not possible to apportion this to hill farmers.

Bananas

Sir Donald Thompson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of whether the agreement on bananas reached at the Council of Agriculture Ministers on 17 December 1992 will be carried through and agreed unchanged by the Council by 1 March.

Mr. Channon: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking with the Danish Presidency and other Community members to ensure that the agreement on bananas reached in December 1992 should be carried forward along with the new single market regime for bananas; and what representations he had received from Caribbean Governments on this issue.

Mr. Curry: I understand that the Danish presidency will invite the Agriculture Council on 9-10 February to consider a complete text of the proposed common regime for bananas which incorporates the external trade provisions agreed by the Council under the United Kingdom presidency. My right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food has had extensive contacts with a wide range of Caribbean interests about bananas.

School Milk

Mr. Michael: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether the EC subsidy for school milk will continue after March 1994.

Mr. Curry: The Commission has indicated that it has no plans to end the EC subsidy on school milk after March 1994.

Tenant Farmers

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to alter the legislation regarding tenant farmers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: I refer the hon. and learned Member to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Cirencester and Tewkesbury (Mr. Clifton-Brown) on 3 December 1992 at column 368.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on farm incomes.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to the reply 5 November 1992, column 340-41]: A brief summary of the provisional estimates of income, output and productivity of United Kingdom agriculture in 1992 is set out in three tables which I have placed in the Library of the House. I am pleased to say that the forecasts of income show a welcome recovery in real terms from the downward trend in recent years.

Real total income from farming, after declining during the 1980s, rose by more than 10 per cent. in 1992. Moreover, this was from a higher level for 1991 than was predicted this time last year. This has been a difficult period for farmers and we should not overstate this improvement, however welcome. But now that the reform of the CAP has been decided and a number of other uncertainties, such as the future of the agrimonetary system resolved, I believe that farmers will be able to build on these results and plan for the future with more confidence.

In detail, the figures show the following changes relative to 1991:

the values of the industry's gross output and gross input at current prices have risen by 2·3 per cent. and 1·4 per cent. respectively, largely as a result of price rises in both cases. The volume of the industry's output, as indicated by gross output at constant prices, has risen by 0·5 per cent. while the volume of the industry's gross input has fallen by 1·0 per cent. These changes have resulted in increases of 3·2 per cent. in gross product and 5·2 per cent. in net product, at current prices; with the continued decline in interest rates the industry's interest charges fell by a further 16·1 per cent. However, although the number of farm workers continued to fall, the total cost of hired labour rose by 1·4 per cent.;

as a result of these changes total income from farming, representing the total income from agriculture of farmers, partners, directors and their spouses and family workers, is forecast to have risen by 15·5 per cent. or by 11·4 per cent. expressed in real terms (deflating by the retail prices index). Farming income, which covers only farmers and their spouses, is forecast to have risen by 23·6 per cent. or by 19·2 per cent. in real terms; the two corresponding measures of cash flow, which may reflect more closely the variations perceived by farmers and farm households, show much smaller increases between 1991 and 1992. Cash flow for the wider group is forecast to have risen by 3·6 per cent., while that for farmers and their spouses has risen by 3·8 per cent. In real terms however, these measures have remained virtually unchanged since 1991; the industry's productivity has continued to rise. The index of gross product per whole-time man equivalent is forecast to have risen by 3·8 per cent. over the last year and by 47·7 per cent. over the last decade. However, this index does not take into account changes in inputs other than labour. An alternative measure, gross output per unit of all inputs, is forecast to have risen by 3·3 per cent. over the last year and by 23·9 per cent. over the last decade;

Incomes were higher on most types of farm over the last year though, as usual, there was some variation in the fortune of different types of farm throughout the United Kingdom. The net farm income on dairy farms has risen and higher levels of subsidy have contributed to increases on most hill and upland livestock farms over the past two years. However, on lowland livestock farms there is considerable variation between different parts of the country and from year to year, with farms having a higher proportion of cattle than sheep tending to perform better. Cropping farms, particularly those specialising in cereals, have benefited from higher output prices. The intensive livestock sector has been affected by low egg prices and increasing feed costs which have almost offset the effects of higher pigmeat prices.

The tables also contain revised estimates for 1991. These show that total income from farming rose in 1991 by 4·3 per cent. rather than fell by 6 per cent.—the forecast last year. Similarly, farming income is now estimated to have risen by 1·1 per cent. in 1991, against last year's forecast of a fall of 14 per cent.

More detailed information will be contained in "Agriculture in the United Kingdom 1992" which this year will be available in March. This change in the month of publication is designed to improve the quality of the forecasts for the latest year. "Farm incomes in the United Kingdom 1991-1992", which contains details for individual farm types and aggregate dates for each country of the United Kingdom, will also be available in March.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prison Service

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the costs incurred in cancelling the contract for the new prison service headquarters in Derby.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: It will not be possible to assess the full cost of cancelling the development agreement for the new prison service headquarters until the developer's claim for compensation has been examined and discussed with him. This is likely to take some time. We have spent a little over £11·5 million so far.

Gambling

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has about the per capita spending on gambling in other EC countries.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No figures on net consumer expenditure on gambling—that is, amount staked less winnings—in other EC countries is held by the Department. However, a report published by the European Commission in July 1992, "Gambling in the Single Market—A study of the current legal and market situation", contained estimates for gross expenditure—that is amount staked—in each member state in 1989. The figures expressed on a per capita basis are as follows:

Country	Estimated gross turnover ECU (million)	£ (million)[1]	Population[2] (million)	Turnover/ head/year £
Belgium	1,032	693	9·9	70·0
Denmark	343	230	5·1	45·1
France	9,254	6,217	56·0	111·0
Germany	9,269	6,227	61·7	100·9
Greece	996	669	10·0	66·9
Ireland	588	395	3·5	112·9
Italy	2,565	1,723	57·5	30·0
Luxembourg	78	52	0·4	130·0
Netherlands	315	212	14·8	14·3
Portugal	525	353	10·3	34·3
Spain	7,781	5,227	38·9	134·4
United Kingdom	13,111	8,808	57·2	154·0

[1] £1 = 1·4886 ECU (1989 average).
[2] Estimates 1989.

These figures should be treated with caution for two reasons. First, the authors of the report pointed to the difficulty in obtaining reliable information on gambling turnover. Secondly, it is in the nature of gambling that, because there are winning as well as losing bets, any sum of money may be gambled several times over before it is lost. Consequently, the total amount staked is not a reliable guide to actual consumer expenditure.

Crime, Northumbria

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many house burglaries were reported in Blyth Valley in (a) 1991 and (b) 1992; and what was the crime detection rate for house burglary in Blyth Valley in each of those years;

(2) what was the total number of crimes committed in Blyth Valley in each year since 1983.

Mr. Jack: The information requested is not collected centrally for the Blyth Valley area.

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many crimes involving the use of firearms have been committed in Blyth Valley and in the Northumbria police area in the last five years.

Mr. Jack: Information is not available centrally on the number of crimes in Blyth Valley. The number of notifiable offences recorded by the Northumbria police in which firearms were reported to have been used was:

Prevention of Terrorism

Mr. Bell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average detention time of persons held without charge in Great Britain under the provisions of the Prevention of Terrorism Acts in each year since 1974.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The information which is readily available dates from 1979 and is as follows:

Mr. Bell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons have been (a) charged and (b) detained in Great Britain under the provisions of the Prevention of Terrorism Acts in each year since 1974.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Information on the numbers detained and charged in Great Britain under the provisions of the Prevention of Terrorism Act is published quarterly in the Home Office Statistical Bulletin, "Statistics on the operation of the Prevention of Terrorism legislation", copies of which are in the Library.

Mr. Bell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons have been excluded from mainland United Kingdom under the provisions of the Prevention of Terrorism Acts in each year since 1974.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Information on the number of exclusion orders made in Great Britain under the provisions of the Prevention of Terrorism Act is published quarterly in the Home Office Statistical Bulletin, "Statistics on the operation of the Prevention of Terrorism legislation", copies of which are in the Library.

Mr. Bell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons are at present excluded from mainland United Kingdom under the provisions of the Prevention of Terrorism Acts.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: There are at present 80 individuals excluded from Great Britain under the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989.

Mr. Bell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has had with regard to the Prevention of Terrorism Acts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have received representations on this subject on many occasions, both from Members of this House and from the public. On 19 January, column 142, I invited interested parties to submit written observations by 5 February to Viscount Colville of Culross who is currently conducting the annual review of the Act. The House will shortly have the opportunity to debate the Act when it is laid before Parliament for renewal.

Child Abuse

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has to amend the law in potential child abuse cases when it is impossible to determine which parent was responsible; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: The Government have no current plans to amend the law in this area. The privilege against self-incrimination, which may sometimes be a relevant factor in cases of this kind, is, however, a matter within the terms of reference of the Royal Commission on Criminal Justice and the Government will wish to consider carefully any general recommendations the commission may make concerning that privilege.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many records are permanently retained by the security services only for the purpose of resolving complaints, concerning the content of the record, made under the Security Service Act 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: It is not the practice to disclose such information which is, in any event, not readily available because of changes in record-keeping procedures by the security service in order to meet the needs of the Complaints Tribunal and the Security Service Act.

Crime Statistics

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) business frauds, (b) cheque, credit and cash card frauds, (c) thefts from companies, (d) thefts from employees, (e) offences of shoplifting, (f) offences of vandalism against business and (g) assaults at the work place were committed (i) in England and Wales and (ii) in each police force area in 1991.

Mr. Jack: The only available information for notifiable offences is contained in the table. The British crime survey provides an estimate of some 350,000 assaults which occurred at the work place in 1991, many of which will have been between co-workers. There were about 80,000 incidents said to be because of the nature of the work being undertaken, most of them perpetrated by clients and customers.

Fines

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the unit fine system introduced under the Criminal Justice Act 1991; if he will list the drawbacks or unfair effects that have been indentified by practical experience of the operation of the Act; and what steps he intends to take to ensure that the system operates with increased fairness and efficiency.

Mr. Jack: The unit fine scheme was successfully trailed before its full scale introduction in all magistrates' courts on 1 October 1992. Full details of the pilot project are given in Home Office Research Paper 59 in 1990. It is too early to make any meaningful assessment of its effectiveness nationally, but the scheme is being closely monitored.

Seized Assets Fund

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on how much money is in the seized assets fund; where the money has been spent to date; and where it will be targeted in future.

Mr. Jack: A total of £3·2 million has been distributed from the seized assets fund in 1992-93, the first year of its operation, to enforcement agencies and a variety of individual projects directed against drug misuse. We are considering the possibility of further funding being made available from this source for similar purposes during the next financial year. The final amount available to the fund for distribution will depend on the success of international operations to confiscate the assets of drug traffickers.

Drug-related Crimes

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of people serving prison sentences for drug-related crimes in total, and as a percentage of all prisoners, at the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Figures for the population in Prison Service establishments by offence group are published annually in "Prison Statistics, England and Wales", Table 1.8 of the Volume for 1990 (CM1800). Provisional figures for 30 June 1991 show that 2,850 prisoners were recorded centrally as being sentenced for drug offences, nearly 10 per cent. of the total sentenced population for which an offence was recorded.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the seizures of class A drugs made in the last full 12-month period for which figures are available by weight and as a percentage increase on the previous year.

Mr. Jack: The information requested is contained in Table 2.4 of the Home Office Statistical Bulletin "Statistics of Drugs Seizures and Offenders Dealt With, United Kingdom, 1991", a copy of which is in the Library. There was a 27 per cent. percentage increase in the weight of class A drugs seized in 1991 over 1990 excluding LSD and MDMA ("Ecstasy"). From 1991 onwards only dosages have been recorded for LSD and MDMA, and thus no comparable figures are available.

Criminal Justice

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will introduce legislation to amend section 10 of the Criminal Justice Act 1987 to enable judges to direct, where appropriate, that the prosecution's notice to admit facts, and a defendent's response to it, should be put before the jury; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what plans he has to allow the prosecution to present the jury with a short document briefly setting out their case before the commencement of a long fraud trial; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: The Lord Chancellor's Department, the Home Office and the legal secretariat to the Law Officers issued a consultation paper on 3 December 1992, seeking views on a number of proposals for reducing the length of some criminal trials, particularly those involving fraud. These include a proposal that case statements should be provided to the jury, by both the prosecution and the defence. Such case statements would aim to clarify the issues involved before the commencement of a trial. The consultation paper also seeks views on the effectiveness of preparatory hearings in fraud trials and the need to provide greater assistance to the jury in understanding the case.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation to create a general fraud offence to cover those types of fraudulent conduct which are not adequately caught by the existing scheme of substantive offences and to replace the existing common law offence of conspiracy to defraud; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: We are not aware of deficiencies in the substantive criminal law in this area and as a consequence have no plans to amend it.

HEALTH

Homerton Hospital, Hackney

12. Ms. Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she next plans to visit Homerton hospital, Hackney to discuss health needs in Hackney.

Dr. Mawhinney: I have visited all the main hospitals serving Hackney in recent weeks including two visits to both the Homerton and St. Bartholomew's.

NHS Trusts

13. Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evidence she has received of the response of patients to NHS trusts.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: A survey of patient satisfaction in eight trust hospitals, commissioned by the Central Office of Information, showed that 96 per cent. of patients were satisfied with the quality of service they had received, 48 per cent. felt that the service had improved and 44 per cent. felt that the service had remained the same.

20. Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she last met representatives of North East Thames regional health authority to discuss progress in establishing NHS trusts.

Dr. Mawhinney: I have regular meetings with all regional health authority chairmen at which many issues, including national health service trusts, are discussed. The last meeting took place on Wednesday 20 January.

26. Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the effects on patients of the introduction of national health service trusts.

Dr. Mawhinney: In the first 12 months of the reforms, the number of patients treated in the national health service as a whole increased by 7·2 per cent. In trust units the increase was 8·2 per cent. Waiting time figures for the first wave trusts show that in the six months to March 1992 trusts reduced their numbers of over one year waiters by nearly 60 per cent. compared with just 50 per cent. in directly managed units.

Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many hospitals or units became national health service trusts in (a) April 1991 and (b) April 1992; how many will become trusts in April 1993; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Fifty-seven national health service trusts became operational from 1 April 1991 and a further 99 from 1 April 1992. The 133 third wave trusts already announced will become operational from 1 April 1993 bringing the total to 289. This confirms that trusts are clearly the right way to manage hospitals and with each successive wave, enthusiasm and support among management, medical staff and patients themselves is increasing.

Hospitals (Bed Closures)

14. Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many hospital beds were temporarily closed in the three months October to December 1992.

Mr. Sackville: The health service measures performance by patients treated not number of beds. More patients are being treated than ever before and long waiting times are coming down. These are achievements to be proud of.

Tomlinson Report

15. Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the total cost of implementing the Tomlinson report for (a) the reconfiguration of remaining hospitals, (b) the cost of redundancy payments, (c) the cost of primary care facilities and (d) the cost of retraining and redeployment of staff.

16. Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimates have been made of the range of possible costs relating to redundancies arising from implementation of all or part of the Tomlinson report.

23. Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the total costs of Government proposals for implementing the Tomlinson report for (a) reconfiguration of remaining hospitals, (b) cost of redundancy payments, (c) cost of primary care facilities and (d) cost of retraining and redeployment of staff.

Dr. Mawhinney: We intend to make a statement on the future of the health service in London shortly. This statement will make clear the Government's response to Tomlinson's proposals and will set out how we wish to see the NHS in London evolve and improve.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the capital sums required by London FHSAs for the number of new primary care facilities required to implement Tomlinson report proposals; and if she will list the number of new facilities required, by FHSA.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State gave the hon. Member for Walthamstow (Mr. Gerrard) today.

Post-operative Convalescence

17. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many health districts in London provide beds in the community or attached to hospitals for post-operative convalescence.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not collected centrally. It is up to each health authority to commission appropriate health care for its patients. If necessary that could include post-operative convalescent care.

Diabetic Insulin

18. Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make it her policy to ensure that all diabetic insulin delivery systems, including needles, are available free of charge.

Dr. Mawhinney: Since insulin-dependent diabetics are exempt from prescription charges disposable syringes with needles are available to them on general practitioner prescription free of charge. The inclusion of insulin injection pens and needles in the GP prescribable list must, like other new additions to the list, be subject to the availability of resources.

Hospital Beds, West Midlands

19. Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total number of hospital beds in the west midlands (a) in 1979 and (b) in the latest year for which figures are available.

Dr. Mawhinney: Between 1979 and 1991-92 the number of patients treated in hospital in the west midlands increased by 55 per cent.; the number of day cases by 202 per cent. and the number of out-patients treated by 14·9 per cent.

West Midlands RHA

21. Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make public the reports received by her Department in the last 18 months with respect to the affairs of the South Birmingham and West Midlands regional health authorities.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Department frequently receives a wide range of reports on health and management matters from West Midlands regional health authority and districts. Where appropriate these have been made public.

28. Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the terms of Sir Donald Wilson's appointment as temporary chair of the West Midlands regional health authority.

Dr. Mawhinney: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State appointed Sir Donald Wilson as chairman of the West Midlands regional health authority until 30 April 1993.

NHS Services

22. Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on her plans to improve the quality of NHS services.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Government have taken a number of measures designed to improve the quality of services to patients, and this was the driving force behind the reforms.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State recently announced a continuous quality improvement initiative. As part of this we aim to take the very best examples of good quality service and disseminate them widely. The initiative will also incorporate the experiences and perspectives of service users.

Mentally Handicapped Patients

24. Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement regarding the quality of care given to mentally handicapped patients in mental hospitals and the quality of management in such hospitals.

Mr. Yeo: Over the years there has been a significant improvement in standards in the long-stay hospitals, but there is no room for complacency. Guidance issued last October reminded health authorities of the need to ensure that whilst these hospitals remain a satisfactory level of care must be maintained. They should aim to ensure through contracts with providers that the quality of care in these hospitals improves at least in line with improvements in the quality of care generally.

Junior Doctors

25. Mr. Hague: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether she is monitoring the progress of the regions in implementing the new deal for junior doctors; and if she will make a statement.

27. Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made in reducing the hours of duty of junior doctors.

Dr. Mawhinney: The ministerial group on junior doctors' hours, which I chair, receives regular reports from regional task forces which were established to oversee and support implementation of the new deal at local level.

We have set a target date of 1 April 1993 for eliminating posts with maximum contracted hours of more than 83 per week. The latest reports from task forces show that at 31 August 1992, 3,234 junior hospital doctors and dentists, out of a total of more than 25,000 in England, were contracted for a maximum average of more than 83 hours a week. This represents a fall in the number of doctors contracted for the longest hours of more than 2,000 since last February and more than 10,000 since September 1990.

We look to authorities and trusts to continue their progress in eliminating these posts and then to deliver the next phase of the hours reduction programme. This involves reducing maximum average contracted hours to no more than 72 per week for those junior doctors working on on-call rotas in hard-pressed posts—the busiest jobs; 64 per week for juniors working on partial shifts; and 56 per week for juniors working on full shifts.

We are determined that junior doctors will see real and demonstrable benefits from the new deal and as well as reporting progress in reducing hours I am pleased that task force reports show significant progress in improving the living and working conditions of junior doctors and dentists.

Beds Shortage (Emergencies)

29. Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the yellow bed alert issued in early January in the North East Thames health region because of a shortage of beds for emergency admissions.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the replies I gave the hon. Members for Newham, South (Mr. Spearing) and for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) on Monday 18 January at columns 85-86.

Mersey Regional Health Authority

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will hold an urgent inquiry into the running of the Mersey regional health authority.

Dr. Mawhinney: We have no plans to do so.

Community Care

Mr. Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the implications of the creation of health trusts for the implementation of the community care changes.

Dr. Mawhinney: National health service trusts will play their full part in implementing the community care reforms, together with the rest of the NHS.

GP Fund Holders

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the management fee paid, or estimates thereof, to (a) first, (b) second and (c) third wave GP fundholders per family health service authority/regional health authority and nationally in each year since their establishment up to 1992-93.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information held centrally is in the table. The number of fourth wave fund holders is not yet available as the application period is still open. Information about numbers at FHSA level is held by regional health authorities.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information available centrally is in the table.

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make it her policy that the full details of the budget allocations to general practitioner fund holders will be published annually.

Dr. Mawhinney: The total amount of resources allocated to fund holders forms part of the annual financial statement of each regional health authority and family health services authority, which are public documents.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will introduce legislation to make general practitioner fund holders legally liable in the event of inadequate community care services being provided to their clients after 1 April.

Dr. Mawhinney: General practitioner fund holders will be responsible for purchasing within the resources available a range of community health services, including district nursing and health visiting. Regional health authorities will be required to set budgets for this purpose and ensure that the level of services purchased is consistent with the level of funding. Local authorities and district health authorities will be responsible for purchasing other community care services.

Tobacco Advertising

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer to the hon. Member for Cambridgeshire, South-East (Mr. Paice) of 28 October 1992, Official Report, column 728, what estimate she has made of the direct effect of tobacco advertising on consumption.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Department's discussion document on the effect of tobacco advertising on tobacco consumption was published on 28 October 1992. Comments on the report have been invited before 29 January 1993. It is unclear whether additional restrictions on tobacco advertising in the United Kingdom would contribute to a further reduction in tobacco consumption given the fall in smoking in the United Kingdom from 45 per cent. of the population in 1974 to 30 per cent. in 1990, and the existing controls on tobacco advertising through the voluntary agreement on tobacco advertising and promotion.

Smoking

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether she will introduce legislation to protect non-smokers against passive smoking in public places and at work.

Dr. Mawhinney: No. The "Health of the Nation" White Paper sets targets of 80 per cent. of public places being covered by effective no-smoking policies by 1994 and for the large majority of employees to be covered by a no-smoking policy by 1995. Good progress is being made by voluntary means, but, if this does not continue, we will consider taking statutory powers.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many working days are lost to British industry, per year, from smoking-related sick leave; and how much this costs.

Dr. Mawhinney: In its report "Smoking or Health" published in 1977, the Royal College of Physicians estimated that as many as 50 million working days may be lost in industry every year as a consequence of cigarette smoking. No current estimate is available.

Tuberculosis

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what provisions are made for regional health authorities that have terminated the universal BCG immunisation programme of children to inform parents of their rights to have their children vaccinated against tuberculosis.

Mr. Sackville: Local arrangements for childhood immunisations, and for providing information on their availability, are the responsibility of individual health authorities.

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many regional health authorities have informed her Department that they have terminated the blanket immunisation programme for children against tuberculosis due to lack of resources; and if she will name those regional health authorities which no longer offer the BCG vaccination to children on a universal basis.

Mr. Sackville: No regional health authority has terminated the BCG immunisation for school children although an anonymised study by the public health laboratory service published in the "British Medical Journal" on 29 August 1992, reported that a small number of district health authorities are no longer routinely immunising children.

Children in Care

Dame Jill Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what assessment she has made of the working of the Children Act 1989 as it relates to young persons leaving local authority care;

(2) what reports she has prepared under section 83(6) of the Children Act 1989 relating to research and returns of information.

Mr. Yeo: We are closely monitoring how local authorities are exercising their powers and duties under the Act as a whole, including their responsibilities to young people leaving care. This has been achieved through special commissioned research, new statistical returns and a number of surveys, including a national monitoring survey of all local authorities undertaken by the social services inspectorate. Information derived from these sources will form the basis of the Government's first report to Parliament on the working of the Act in England and Wales. We expect to publish the report next month.

There will be a further response under section 83(6) later in 1993 which will draw more extensively on the regular statistical sources and provide the first in the statistical abstracts reporting the position after the Act was implemented. These will replace the reports covering children in care of local authorities for periods before the Act was implemented. The report of the year ending 31 March 1990 was published in July 1992 under section 83(6) and the last of these reports, for the year ending 31 March 1991, will be published this week under section 83(6).

Dame Jill Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will take steps to ensure that all young people leaving local authority residential care are monitored until social services departments are confident they are housed and able to manage by themselves.

Mr. Yeo: Local authorities have a statutory duty under the Children Act 1989 to prepare all children for the time when they are to leave care, and have a range of powers and duties to provide aftercare support to care leavers who seek their help. Comprehensive guidance has been issued on ways in which these powers and duties might best be exercised. The implementation of the Act will continue to be kept under review.

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many children in care have been child migrants in each year from 1967 up until the present; from which areas of the country they came; and what countries were their destinations.

Mr. Yeo: This information is not collected centrally.

Abortion

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the number of recorded (a) perforations and ruptures of the uterus following abortion and (b) ectopic pregnancies for 1967, 1972, 1977, 1982, 1987 and the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Sackville: Figures relating to perforation of the uterus following abortion are shown in table 1 for the years 1972, 1977, 1982, 1987 and 1991. Table 2 shows the available data relating to ectopic pregnancies for the years 1982, 1987-88 and 1990-91. The number of ectopic pregnancies increased gradually between 1987-88 and 1990-91 due in part to the improvement in data recording in the hospital episodes statistics (HES) system. Data for 1967, before legal abortions were performed, and the full time series requested for ectopic pregnancies cannot be provided without incurring disproportionate cost.

Prescriptions

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the items listed on schedule 10 which cannot be prescribed on a national health service prescription and the date of which such item was first placed on that schedule.

Dr. Mawhinney: These items are listed in schedule 10 to the National Health Service (General Medical Services) Regulations 1992. A copy of this list with the dates on which the relevant entries were made has been placed in the Library.

Orthopaedic Services

Mr. Hoon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the total number of people currently on the waiting list for orthopaedic services in the Ashfield area.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman of the Nottingham health authority for details. Information about waiting times by district health authority and specialty is given in the publication "Hospital Waiting List, In-Patients and Day Cases" (ISBN 1 85839 003 6), a copy of which is available in the Library.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to compensate patients waiting for admission to hospital until the new financial year, for the pain and suffering which will result from deferral of their treatment.

Mr. Sackville: This year some hospitals have exceeded contracted levels of performance. This means patients are being treated earlier than would otherwise have been possible.

Mental Illness

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action she is taking to protect those released into the community from psychiatric institutions; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: From 1 April 1991 all district health authorities were required to initiate, in collaboration with local social services departments, explicit individually tailored care programmes for all in-patients about to be discharged from mental illness hospitals and all new patients accepted by the specialist psychiatric services.

Under this initiative, known as the care programme approach, the needs of each patient should be systematically assessed and the appropriate arrangements made. These include the appointment of a key worker to keep in close touch with the patient and to monitor that the agreed health and social care is given.

The rescources being devoted to the care of mentally ill people in the community have increased significantly in recent years. Gross spending on local authority social services for mentally ill people increased by 86 per cent. in real terms between 1978-79 and 1990-91 to £116·5 million. National health service provision in the community has also increased, for example, the number of community psychiatric nurses rose by 227 per cent. between 1981 and 1991, from 1,100 to 3,600.

The Royal College of Psychiatrists has recommended that the Mental Health Act 1983 be amended to incorporate a community supervision order. Following discussions with the college and other professional and voluntary organisations, we are urgently considering whether new powers are needed to ensure mentally ill people in the community get the care they need. We will also consider whether the present legal powers in the Mental Health Act 1983 are being used as effectively as they can be, and what action could be taken in advance of any new legislation to ensure that they are.

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 26 January

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This morning I had a meeting with ministerial colleagues and others. Later in the morning I launched the patients charter regional health information service at the BT Telecom tower. Earlier this afternoon I answered first order questions and attended Prime Minister's questions. Later today I will be answering an Opposition motion in the House.

Malaria

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what statistics she has about the incidence of malaria in Britain.

Mr. Sackville: Imported malaria cases reported to the public health laboratory service's malaria reference laboratory as occurring in the United Kingdom are shown in the table:

Revenue and Capital Allocations for RHAs in 1993-94

Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the revenue and capital allocations for regional health authorities in 1993-94.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [pursuant to her reply, 8 December 1992, columns 635-36.]: I am pleased to announce how the regional totals for the national health service main capital spending for 1993-94 will be allocated.

The main capital planning total of £1,543 million will be deployed as follows: £880 million for spending by national health service trusts; and £663 million for spending by regional health authorities.

In addition £289 million has been earmarked for central budgets, the majority of which will also be allocated to health authorities and national health service trusts. The central budgets provide for national priorities including regional secure units, day surgery facilities, advanced diagnostic equipment, information technology, and community health facilities jointly financed with local government.

Taking these amounts together, a total of £1,832 million, the highest figure ever, will be allocated in 1993-94 for national health service capital spending. In addition over £150 million of receipts from the disposal of surplus assets will be available to trusts and health authorities.

The following table shows the main capital allocations for each regional health authority and the regional totals for main capital spending by national health service trusts. Details of the central budget allocations will be announced separately.

Disabled People

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions she has had recently with the Association of Metropolitan Authorities and the Association of County Councils on the new arrangements for providing personal assistance services to people who would previously have been eligible for funding from the independent living fund; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: I last met the Association of Metropolitan Authorities and the Association of County Councils on 17 December 1992. The subject of the independent living fund was not raised.

Officials from the Department and the Department of Social Security will be meeting officials of the local authority associations shortly to discuss the new arrangement.

Neurosurgery

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients underwent neurosurgical operations between 1979 and the change in regulations in 1981 governing the disposal of surgical equipment.

Mr. Yeo: Guidance on the disposal of surgical equipment was issued by the Department of Health in November 1981 and has recently been updated. The figures in the table are for the three years 1979, 1980 and 1981. Parts of years cannot be identified separately.

EC Funding

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what support she expects to receive from EC institutions, including finance, under the proposed article 129 of the treaty of Rome, in respect of public health, including finance; whether private or national health service trust hospitals in the United Kingdom will be eligible; and what benefits over existing arrangements she has assessed as, accruing from paragraphs 2, 3 and 4 of article 129, respectively.

Dr. Mawhinney: We expect the benefits to be greater co-operation between member states and between the community and competent international organisations in the sphere of public health.

Budget lines already exist for particular programme areas within public health, but it is too early to predict the extent to which any funding from the EC would flow into the United Kingdom as a result of this new article.

Dentistry

Ms. Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what studies her Department has conducted into the role of dentists in the detection and prevention of oral cancer, thyroid-related illness, gum disease and other health problems.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 22 January 1993]: The Department provides funding for studies relating to oral cancer. The Eastman dental hospital is currently in the second year of a three-year research programme examining the validity of screeing for oral cancers and pre-cancers. The United Kingdom working group on screening for oral cancers and pre-cancers, also based at the hospital, has been reviewing the literature and examining the feasibility of national screening. Its report is expected before Easter.

Dentists are fully trained in the detection and treatment of gum diseases. They are also trained in the recognition of oral manifestations of systemic diseases and other health problems.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Iraq

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 15 January, Official Report, columns 853-54, what consultations he had with the United Nations prior to allowing the visas to be issued; and what opinion they gave as to whether these discussions contravened agreed sanctions.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: As I said in my answer to the hon. Member for Coventry, North-East (Mr. Ainsworth) on 19 January, there is no reason why British firms should not hold such discussions with the Iraqis. But we made clear to GEC that, since Iraq is in breach of the terms of United Nations Security Council Resolution 687 setting out the terms of the formal ceasefire at the end of the Gulf war, there is no immediate prospect of sanctions being lifted and therefore no prospect of GPT being in a position to fulfil any contract with the Iraqis. We also told them that we were not therefore ready to put an application to the United Nations Sanctions Committee. There was therefore no need for discussions with the United Nations prior to granting visas.

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 15 January, Official Report, columns 853-54, what investigations he has made as to the military ranks or civil positions held by D. Jallo, M. Abdul Razak, B. Sabae, D. Yasin, A. Saad Gismail, M. Saddin, M. Abdul Sadar and C. Stefanou.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Seven of the eight applicants sponsored by GPT were described as engineers. The eighth was a merchant. All applications were fully investigated by relevant FCO departments and inquiries made of other Government Departments which have an interest.

Biological Weapons

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish the full text of his and his United States counterpart's letter to President Yeltsin on the Russian biological weapons research programme; and what response he has received.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There has been a series of exchanges over the last two years between the United Kingdom, the United States and Russia (formerly the Soviet Union) about the Russian biological weapons programme. These exchanges took place on a confidential basis. We have no plans to publish them.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Legal Aid

Mr. Michael: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what was the sum paid out in legal aid in the six most expensive fraud cases in each of the last five years.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Currently, interim payments cannot all be linked on the computer to the individual cases in which they are made. However, the position with regard to the most prominent fraud cases in recent times is as follows:

Guinness trials
Total costs have yet to be determined. Around £1·7 million has been paid to date in respect of the first and second trials.
Barlow Clowes
Total costs were £5·3 million.
Blue Arrow
Not all claims have been determined. £9·7 million has been paid out to date.
Britannia Park
Total cost yet to be determined.
Marconi Defence
Total cost yet to be determined.

The above costs include payments made from central funds in addition to payments from the legal aid fund.

Housing Repossessions

Mr. Battle: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many actions for possession for 1992 were initiated by (a) building societies, (b) banks and (c) other lenders in each county court area.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The information is not available in this form. The only available breakdown of possession actions taken by county court is between those taken by local authorities and those initiated by private lenders. The latter includes banks, building societies and other private lenders.

Trial Delays

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the current delay for trials in the commercial court, other courts of the High Court and the Court of Appeal, civil and criminal divisions, and as regards the latter, distinguishing between cases involving custody and non-custodial cases.

Mr. John M. Taylor: For longer cases the current waiting time in the commercial court is 10 to 11 months though urgent cases may be expedited. Shorter cases can be listed for hearing within three months. Cases are generally fixtures and a date for hearing is supplied to the parties, taking account of the time they need to prepare.

In the Queens Bench Division waiting times vary between one month for warned list cases and 13 months for fixtures likely to last over two months.

In the Family Division the average waiting time for cases likely to last between a half day and one day is six weeks in the High Court list. Cases of five days or more in duration can be heard within 20 weeks.

In the Chancery Division the waiting times vary between eight months for cases under three days in duration and 23 months for long cases in the part I list.

In the Court of Appeal (Civil Division) the average waiting time between set down and disposal is 7·7 months.

At present there are no figures available to show the time between receipt of a case within the Criminal Appeal Office and final disposal in that court. However, from receipt in the list office to final disposal, the approximate waiting times for appellants in custody were, at the end of December 1992, 4·3 months for appeals against conviction and 2·3 months for appeals against sentence. For those not in custody, the waiting times were 6·6 months and 3·9 months respectively.

In the crown office the waiting times are available only from the date of entry into the warned list to the date of hearing. They are, for the divisional court list 8·3 months, for the single judge list 16·5 months and for the planning court list 9·3 months.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Rail Services

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made towards implementation of the recommendation contained in the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report of December 1990 on rail services in Northern Ireland provided by Northern Ireland Railways Limited; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The initial response, announced to the House on 3 July 1991, indicated that there had been a positive reaction to the Commission's recommendations and that none of them had been rejected. The follow-up response, which I have today placed in the Library of the House, confirms that 22 of the 34 recommendations have already been implemented and that the remaining 12 are in the process of implementation. The response was produced in consultation with the Northern Ireland Transport Holding Company and Northern Ireland Railways.

There have been several important developments since the initial response. Northern Ireland Railways appointed a new managing director in August 1992. A total of 22 salaried posts have now been abolished. To fulfil the commitment in the Northern Ireland citizens charter, the Government have commissioned a study into the scope for introducing a private element into the management and operation of Northern Ireland Railways. Substantial progress has been made by management and the trade unions as regards industrial relations. Northern Ireland Railways published a more challenging passengers charter in November 1992. Together, these, and the other matters dealt with in the response, should result in a significant improvement of services to the public and the management of the company.

The Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland will continue in dialogue with the Transport Holding Company and Northern Ireland Railways about the implementation of the recommendations and I shall report on progress to the House in due course.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Racial Attacks

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Attorney-General if he will establish a review of the procedures for ensuring that the Crown prosecution service handles race attack cases without racial prejudice.

The Solicitor-General: In all its actions the Crown prosecution service is committed to avoiding discrimination on the ground of race. A system is currently being established to monitor the implementation of its policy guidance on racial attack cases.

Crown Prosecution Service

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Attorney-General how many cases involving allegations of criminal offences have been considered in each of the past three years by the Crown prosecution service; and how many of these resulted in prosecutions being brought.

The Solicitor-General: Statistics at present available relate to cases handled in the 31 areas of the service but do not include the numbers of cases of specialist work undertaken at Crown prosecution service headquarters. The table sets out in respect of each of the past three years the number of cases received (column 1), the number of cases which were proceeded with (column 2), and the number of cases not proceeded with (column 3). The figures for 1992 are for the first nine months only.

	Column 1 Case received	Column 2 Proceeded with	Column 3 Not proceeded with
1990	1,638,751	1,298,158	301,048
1991	1,575,021	1,241,434	351,090
1992	1,193,294	895,582	285,181

The number of cases received in a particular period does not equal the number of cases finalised in that period (column 2 and 3) because incomplete cases are carried forward from period to period. The term "not proceeded with" includes cases discontinued, cases in which no evidence was offered, cases adjourned sine die and those not concluded because the defendant could not be traced. The figures also include cases submitted for advice only and some non-criminal proceedings (eg forfeiture under section 3 of the Obscene Publications Act 1959).

Mr. Bashir Uddin

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Attorney-General what examination he has made of the accuracy of the statements concerning witnesses in the case made by the Crown prosecution service to lawyers representing Mr. Bashir Uddin in connection with a case heard at Inner London crown court in mid-January.

The Attorney-General: The Director of Public Prosecutions has received a full report on the case concerning Mr. Bashir Uddin and a letter explaining statements made by the Crown prosecution service concerning witnesses has been sent to his solicitors. A copy of this letter has been placed in the Library.

Miss Lindi St. Clair

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Attorney-General what consideration is being given to the prosecution of Miss Lindi St. Clair for wasting police time.

The Solicitor-General: I understand that the Sussex police are conducting an investigation into certain matters relating to Miss Lindi St. Clair. The question of prosecution will be considered at the conclusion of that investigation. At this stage I cannot predict whether any prosecution will be initiated.

UDR Four

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Attorney-General what was the date of the Appeal Court hearing in Northern Ireland at which three of the UDR Four were released; what were the recommendations of the court about prosecutions of persons involved in the case; and what action is being taken by the Director of Public Prosecutions for Northern Ireland.

The Attorney-General: The Court of Appeal for Northern Ireland delivered its judgment in the appeal of R v. Neil Fraser Latimer, James Irwin Hegan, Noel Richmond Bell and Alfred Winston Allen on 29 July 1992.

The court made no recommendations in respect of prosecutions. The court directed that its judgment be sent to the Director of Public Prosecutions for Northern Ireland so that he may consider the bringing of prosecutions against officers who he considers committed criminal offences in connection with the trial of the appellants.

The Director of Public Prosecutions for Northern Ireland issued an interim direction on 5 August 1992 to the Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary requesting that certain reports and information be obtained. When these matters have been received and considered the director will take decisions as to whether or not to institute proceedings. I refer the hon. Member to the reply which I gave to the hon. Member for Sunderland, South (Mr. Mullin) on 11 November 1992 at columns 835-36.

TRANSPORT

Passenger Rolling Stock

Mr. Dickens: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has for the provision of passenger rolling stock after the privatisation of British Rail.

Mr. Freeman: The private sector must ultimately take the lead in providing rolling stock. Using its financing and management skills is the best way to ensure the right rolling stock is available at the right time for the best possible price.

The Government recognise that there may be some uncertainty in the market until the railway is established in the private sector. In a consultation document "Railway Privatisation: Passenger Rolling Stock" published today, we indicate that we are considering a number of measures which will help to get a rolling stock market up and running. There must be no hiatus in railway investment during the transition to a franchised railway.

M1-M62 Link

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to decide a timetable for proposals for an M1-M62 link road; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The results of the public consultation for this complex scheme are being assessed. An announcement about the scheme will be made after the completion of the assessment.

Community Transport

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what budgets were available, for each passenger transport authority, for community transport provision in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Freeman: This is a matter for the Passenger Transport Executives. The PTE's three-year plans indicate that 1991-92 expenditure was:

	£ million
Greater Manchester	2·900
Merseyside	0·676
South Yorkshire	1·300
Tyne and Wear	1·460
West Midlands	1·782
West Yorkshire	0·764

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what level of direct grant funding for community transport is provided, by region, in England.

Mr. Freeman: This is a matter for local authorities. Separated details are not available.

Roads, Manchester

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if it remains his policy that public consultation on the three separate stages of the Greater Manchester western and northern relief road will be undertaken together.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: No. Public consultation on stage 2 of the relief road (M56-M62) is underway. It is hoped to follow with consultation on route options for stage 3 (M62 Eccles to Whitefield) in late spring.

Consultation on stage 1 (M6-M56) took place during 1989. Statutory orders for this section have now been published.

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will extend the period of public consultation on the proposed Greater Manchester western and northern relief road (M56-M62 link) so as to allow consultation with residents of Irlam and Cadishead.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport will consider all comments made—including those received after the close of consultation—before deciding whether to proceed with a scheme.

M3 Extension

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will estimate at current prices the total amount of separately identifiable expenditure by Her Majesty's Government over the last 25 years relating to all aspects of the proposed M3 extension; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The information requested is not readily available for the period prior to the financial year 1981-82. The total amount of expenditure since that date to end December 1992 on all aspects of the proposed M3 extension between Bar End and Compton at current prices is as follows:

	£ million
Design and supervision	10·6
Works	6·2
Land	0·3
Total	17·1

Oil Spills

225. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has regarding the status and use in other European Community and European Economic Area nations of the oil dispersants (a) Dispolene 34S, (b) Dasic Slickgone LTSW and (c) BP Enersperse 1037; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: The Department does not hold information on the status of particular dispersants in other countries. During the Braer incident it was established that Dispolene 34S was approved for use in Norway but, as in the United Kingdom, this dispersant expired from the list of approved products in September 1990 when it was re-submitted for testing by the manufacturer who had changed the proportions of the constituents and designated its dispersant Dispolene 36S—which is currently approved. It has not been necessary to withdraw previously approved stocks, which still meet current standards. The contracting parties to the Bonn agreement —United Kingdom, France, Netherlands, Belgium, Sweden, Denmark, Germany, Norway, and the EEC—share a common approach for the selection and approval of the particular dispersants which may be used. They have also agreed in principle on a mutual acceptance of individually approved dispersants in the case of an emergency.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has on the amount of oil spilled off the Kent coast in the last six months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: There were no major oil pollution incidents off the Kent coast during the last six months. Motor tanker Perfecto spilled some 200 gallons of gasoil during an incident at Shellhaven on 20 July 1992, and the fishing vessel Our Sarah Jane spilled 600 gallons of diesel at Whitstable on 18 July 1992. Both these incidents were dealt with by the appropriate port authorities who also investigated them with a view to prosecution. The marine pollution control unit monitored these and 21 reports of possible minor pollution by ships in the United Kingdom waters off the Kent coast. The majority concerned the sighting of oil-like sheens in the wakes of suspect ships and almost all were reported by other vessels or aircraft. It is impossible to quantify reliably the small amounts of oil discharged in the wakes of ships. As a result of MPCU action, four vessels were given port state control inspections at their next ports of call and two, bound for remote parts of the world, were put on the European register for inspection should they return to north European waters.

Driving Test Costs

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the cost of a driving test in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The cost for each type of driving test over the last ten years is given in the following table:

From	'L' test	Motorcycle test		Vocational tests
		Accompanied	Part I	Lorry	Bus
	(£)	(£)	(£)	(£)	(£)

[1] This fee came into effect on 27 September 1982.
[2] This fee came into effect on 1 September 1982.
[3] This fee came into effect on 12 March 1984.
[4] The accompanied motorcycle test was introduced on 2 October 1989. Prior to that the fee for the part II motorcycle test was the same as for the 'L' test.
[5] The part I motorcycle test was phased out after the introduction of compulsory basic training in December 1990 with a six month overlap period ending on 31 May 1991.

Shipping

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he makes of the risk to the shore and to marine life in the North sea of cargoes carried by ships lost by accident; what steps he is taking to implement regulations to reduce the risks; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 25 January 1993]: The risk to the shore and marine life resulting from the loss of ships' cargoes is taken into account when developing international regulations for the design of ships and their equipment and national procedures for dealing with pollution incidents. International convention requirements are implemented in the United Kingdom through merchant shipping legislation.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Offences Against Business

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total value of (a) business frauds, (b) cheque, credit and cash card frauds, (c) thefts from companies, (d) thefts from employees, (e) offences of shoplifting and (f) offences of vandalism against business in the most recent year for which information is available and for each of the previous 10 years.

Mr. Jack: The only available Home Office statistics on value are for certain types of theft offences, as recorded by the police. Figures for 1981-1990 have been published annually in chapter 2 of "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales"—copies of which are available in the Library. For 1991, the total value of property stolen in offences of theft by an employee was £29,848,000. The corresponding figure for offences of theft from shops was £20,902,000.

The Association for Payment Clearing Services (APACS) estimates credit card, cheque and cash card fraud losses by major retail banks at over £165 million in 1991. Corresponding figures for 1988-90 were published in crime prevention unit paper 26 entitled "The Prevention of Cheque and Credit Card Fraud" (also available in the Library). In addition, we have not received detailed accounts of losses to building societies, to finance houses who manage storecards, from fraudulent purchase of goods by phone, and from unguaranteed cheques in excess of the guarantee limit.

However, the British Retail Consortium has estimated that internal and external crime costs the retail industry in the region of £2·5 billion each year.

Safer Cities Projects

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will set out the budget of the safer cities programme at a constant price basis for each year since its inception, together with a forecast for 1993-94.

Mr. Jack: The expenditure on the safer cities programme for each year since it began in 1988 is as follows:

	Cash £	1993-94 prices £
1988-89	211,000	278,000
1989-90	3,295,000	4,074,000
1990-91	6,349,000	7,270,000
1991-92	7,217,000	7,730,000
1992-93	[1]7,358,000	7,560,000
1993-94	[2]5,785,000	5,785,000

[1] estimated.
[2] planned.

In 1993-94 expenditure is reduced while existing projects are winding down. It is expected to rise in later years as new projects come on stream.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what evaluation has been made of the current safer cities projects; what external consultants are involved in this process; and if he will place a copy in the Library.

Mr. Jack: Evaluation is being carried out at three levels: of individual crime prevention schemes, of each project and of the programme as a whole. Project co-ordinators monitor the individual schemes promoted by their projects and assess effectiveness as work progresses. Thematic reviews drawing on this information are planned, the first of which, on the use of closed circuit television in car parks, is to be published shortly and will be placed in the Library. At project level, a study of the progress of projects in promoting local community safety strategies was published in December 1992 ("Safer Cities and Community Safety Strategies", crime prevention unit paper No. 38), a copy of which is in the Library. For the programme as a whole, an evaluation by the Home Office research and statistics department is in progress, focusing primarily on the impact of safer cities on crime rates and the fear of crime.

The report "Safer Cities and Community Safety Strategies" was written by Mr. Nicholas Tilley of Nottingham Polytechnic. Professor K. Pease (Manchester university), Professor Murray Stewart (Bristol university) act as external academic consultants to the programme level evaluation. Dr. R. Wiggins (City university) provides advice on data analysis.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the current safer cities projects, indicating when they commenced and their planned completion dates.

Mr. Jack: The information requested is as follows:

Safer Cities Programme

Project	Date established	Date of planned completion of HO funding[1]
Birmingham	August 1989	March 1994
Bradford	November 1988	March 1994

Wolverhampton	February 1989	March 1994

[1] This is the date by which, on present planning, Home Office funding is due to cease. Projects may continue beyond this date if other resources can be secured locally to support them.

Metropolitan Police Overtime

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the estimated expenditure on overtime for the Metropolitan police for 1992-93.

Mr. Charles Wardle: A total of £71·2 million.

Prison Education

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what have been the costs incurred by prison establishments and prison headquarters in mounting the exercise "competing for quality" in connection with competitive tendering in prison education.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The need for competitive tendering for the future provision of education services in prison establishments is consequent upon the changes in the responsibilities of local education authorities under the Further and Higher Education Act 1992. The exercise is also wholly consistent with the Government's policy on competition.

Information on the staffing and other costs that have been incurred in establishments is not held centrally. In establishments and at prison service headquarters for the most part existing resources have been re-deployed to undertake the exercise. The current estimate of those additional costs which can be identified is £96,000. This comprises consultancy costs, legal costs, staff and travel and subsistence costs, the hire of accommodation, photocopying and postage.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what provision was made for prison education in 1992-93; what are the forecast costs for 1993-94; which vote will bear the costs of the 1993-94 provision; and what forecast he has made of the change in the number of hours of education provided in 1993-94 over 1992-93.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Provision for prison education in England and Wales is as shown:

Budget 1992-93 £ million	Provisional budget 1993-94 £ million
33·3	35·5

The 1993-94 costs will be borne on the prisons, England and Wales vote, class VIII, vote 2. The provisional budget for 1993-94 is based on maintaining the existing volume of education provision.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) which organisations will be contracted to provide education in prisons between 1 April and 30 September;

(2) which organisations will be contracted to provide education in Her Majesty's prison Maidstone between 1 April and 30 September; for how many prisoners classes will be provided; and what will be the average number of hours education per prisoner per week.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information is not yet available. Existing providers of education in prison establishments have been asked to let the prison service know by 29 January whether or not they are willing to continue with present arrangements until 31 August 1993.

Life Sentence Prisoners

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to introduce a tribunal system for mandatory life sentence prisoners along the lines of the tribunals for discretionary life sentence prisoners; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: We have no plans at present to introduce a tribunal system for mandatory life sentence prisoners.

Drug Misuse Services

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if partnership arrangements between the probation service and community services will apply to all drug services (a) generally or (b) where a health service-managed drug misuse service is the only local specialist provision.

Mr. Jack: We envisage that each probation service will be responsible for developing plans with the voluntary and private sector to ensure that there is a wide and effective range of schemes in the area for dealing with offenders in the community, and funding them accordingly. Guidance on the implementation of these partnership arrangements is still be prepared in consultation with the relevant representative bodies. It is not the intention that statutory services should be funded by these arrangements. Voluntary and private sector schemes directed at the needs of drug misusing offenders will however be within their scope.

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how he plans to fund probation orders with conditions of residence for drug misusers from 1 April.

Mr. Jack: A probation order may include a requirement to receive treatment for drug or alcohol misuse only if the court is satisfied that arrangements have been made for such treatment to be given. A wide variety of possible treatments may be covered by such a requirement, with funding from different sources. Where treatment is to be provided under community care arrangements, which come into effect on 1 April 1993, the probation service will need to liaise with the appropriate local authority over the provision of resources to meet the offender's social care costs. Alcohol and drug misusers who are receiving treatment prior to 1 April and are eligible for income support will generally have preserved rights after 1 April to their existing level of benefit.

When an additional requirement of a probation order is that an offender should reside at an approved probation hostel, a weekly charge for the accommodation will be payable by the person concerned, for which benefits may be available in the usual way.

Prisoner Escorts

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what conditions to guarantee security he requires when he invites tenders from private contractors to contract for work escorting prisoners being transported; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: A copy of the operational specification for the court escort service in the east midlands and Humberside area has been placed in the Library of the House. It outlines general principles which cover all aspects of running a secure service. Once appointed, a contractor is obliged to submit his detailed operating procedures for approval by the Home Office. The standards required of contractors are no less than those applicable to the escorting of prisoners by police and prison officers. In addition, the extensive use of custom built cellular vehicles will give an improved level of security.

Yugoslav Entrants

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many people from the former Yugoslavia seeking to enter the United Kingdom as dependent relatives have been refused entry since January 1992; how many have lodged appeals against such refusal; what representations he has received concerning policy matters affecting the definition of dependency; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what recommendations he has made regarding policy in defining dependency with particular regard to those from the former Yugoslavia seeking to obtain visas to join relatives in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement;

(3) how many dependent relatives originating from the former Yugoslavia have been permitted to enter or join other relatives in the United Kingdom since January 1992; how he defines the categories of dependents permitted to enter the United Kingdom, within or outside the immigration rules, to join relatives in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 19 January 1993]: In the period 1 January to 30 November 1992 a total of 1,160 dependants accompanied principal asylum applicants from the former Yugoslavia who applied at the ports, and about 400 dependants were associated with applicants who were already in the United Kingdom at the time of their applications. Except for cases refused on safe third-country grounds, all these principal applicants and dependants are being allowed to stay while their applications are considered.

There is no entitlement under the immigration rules for a person to come to the United Kingdom, whether from former Yugoslavia or elsewhere, as the dependent relative of a person who is here as a visitor or as any asylum applicant. Dependent relatives are not normally permitted to join an asylum applicant until either he or she has been recognised as a refugee under the terms of the 1951 United Nations convention on the status of refugees or has completed a period of four years' residence in the United Kingdom with exceptional leave to remain.

My right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary has, however, decided that close dependants of the 1,000 former detainees will be allowed to join them for the duration of their stay. Generally, close dependants are regarded as the spouse and children under 18. However, in respect of the former detainees we are also prepared to consider applications for visas from fully dependent and unmarried daughters over 18 and under 21; from elderly or sick parents; and from other relatives living in the most exceptional compelling compassionate circumstances.

The available information on other dependants of asylum applicants is that since the introduction of the visa requirement for nationals of certain parts of the former Yugoslavia on 6 November 1992 about 20 people from the former Yugoslavia have been granted entry clearance to join relatives in asylum-related cases.

In addition, under the arrangements I announced to the House on 30 November 1992, 130 close dependants of former detainees have so far been granted clearance to come to the United Kingdom. Sixty-five applications by more distant relatives have been refused.

Applications from other people from the former Yugoslavia for a visa to join a relative in the United Kingdom will be decided in accordance with the immigration rules.

Available information on other people from the former Yugoslavia admitted to the United Kingdom as spouses or dependants is given in the following table. Information on refusals and appeals is not identifiable separately in the statistics.

Squatting

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what steps have been taken to reduce squatting by increasing housing provision;

(2) what consideration has been given to providing alternative accommodation for squatters if squatting is criminalised;

(3) what study he has made of the measures taken by local authorities to secure homes and otherwise deter squatting through damaging their properties.

Mr. Baldry: I have been asked to reply on behalf of the Secretary of State for the Home Department.

We do not accept that there are valid arguments in favour of squatting; it is wrong that legitimate occupants should be deprived of the use of their property by squatters. If squatters meet the criteria of priority need under the homelessness legislation, they will be entitled to be found accommodation by the local authority in the same way as any other homeless applicant. There are no plans to change this. No study has been made of measures taken by local authorities to discourage squatters.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Food Hygiene

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will visit the Stanley wholesale meat market, Prescot road, Liverpool, in order to discuss the impact of EC food hygiene legislation.

Mr. Soames: No. The Department is currently considering an application from the Stanley wholesale market for a licence under the Fresh Meat (Hygiene and Inspection) Regulations 1992 and I shall write to the hon. Member about it.

CAP Prices

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on how CAP prices are affected by a realignment of currencies in the exchange rate mechanism.

Mr. Curry: Under the previous agrimonetary system, large monetary gaps between green rates and market exchange rates could build up in the period between two realignments within the exchange rate mechanism and these were automatically eliminated by green rate devaluations over a period of up to four years. Under the new agrimonetary arrangements which came into force on 1 January, green rates are kept broadly in line with market rates, so monetary gaps are limited in size. Any gaps that are created by an ERM realignment will be reduced according to the rules of the new system: these are different for currencies within the narrow-band of the ERM and for other currencies but in both cases are designed to prevent the retention of monetary gaps in excess of two percentage points. The resulting green rate devaluations will increase CAP support prices.

Salmon

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many salmon were caught in England, Scotland and Wales during the season 1991 and the season 1992, by (a) rod and line, (b) commercial nets and (c) north-east coast drift net fishing.

Mr. Curry: Details of reported salmon catches in 1991 are given in the table. Comparable data for 1992 are not yet available.

Reported Catches of Salmon in England, Scotland and Wales in 1991 by Method of Capture

	England	Scotland	Wales
Rod and line	9,452	45,136	4,522
Commercial nets[1]	34,631	20,057	3,044
(of which N.E. coast drift nets)	(22,463)
Total	44,083	65,193	7,566

[1] Includes reported catches of salmon by all methods other than by rod and line.

Common Agricultural Policy Prices

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what effect the fall in the rate of exchange since the pound sterling left the European monetary system has had on common agricultural policy prices in terms of the pound sterling; and if he will publish a table showing for each CAP commodity the sterling price (i) immediately prior to the United Kingdom's withdrawal from the EMS and (ii) currently.

Mr. Curry: The devaluations of the green pound since the pound sterling left the exchange rate mechanism have increased CAP support prices by 18 per cent. The information requested on the sterling prices of CAP commodities is given in the table:

	to 16 September 1992	from 1 January 1993
Common Wheat (buying-in price per tonne)	122·24	[1]148·54
Feed Wheat/Barley (buying in price per tonne)	116·14	[1]141·34
Beef (intervention price per 100 kg)	272·83	322·09
Beef Special Premium Scheme (per head)	31·82	[2]56·34
Butter (intervention price per 100 kg)	232·88	274·94
Target price for milk (pence per litre)	21·96	25·93
Sheep Basic Price[3] (per 100 kg)	336·42	[4]392·97
White Sugar Intervention Price (per tonne)	431·28	509·15
Basic Sugar Beet Price (per tonne)	31·82	37·56
'A' Quota Minimum Sugar Beet Price (per tonne)	32·43	38·29
'B' Quota Minimum Sugar Beet Price (per tonne)	20·50	24·20

[1] These buying-in prices reflect monthly variations as well as green rate changes.

[2] The increase in the Beef Special Premium reflects an increase in the amount of the premium in ECU as well as the changes in the green rate.

[3] The final rate of annual ewe premium payable for 1992, calculated according to the basic price in effect on 3 January 1993, will be decided on in March. The basic price for 1-3 January 1993 was £397·17 per 100/kg.

[4] Price wef 4 January 1993.

Scottish Fishing Fleet

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will give details of the methodology used to determine how much of the £25 million decommissioning package announced for the United Kingdom fishing fleet is to be allocated to the Scottish fishing fleet; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will give details of how the £11·25 million of the decommissioning package allocated to the Scottish fleet is to be divided between sectors; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will publish the basis of the calculations on which the proportion of the £25 million decommissioning fund to be allocated was decided as between English and Scottish allocations; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how the proportion of his decommissioning package allocated to the English fleet is to be divided (a) between sectors and (b) between ports; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: The Government will shortly be laying a statutory instrument before Parliament setting out the rules for the decommissioning scheme. It is proposed that, in order to secure the best value for money, vessel owners should be invited to submit tenders, and funds will be allocated accordingly irrespective of port of registration. It follows that there will be no sub-division of the funds on a territorial basis.

Farm Incomes

Mr. Cox: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the average farm income in each of the last three years in England and Wales.

Mr. Curry: There are a number of measures of farm incomes which are published on a regular basis in "Farm Incomes in the United Kingdom". "Net farm income" is the measure for which there is the longest series. This is a measure which represents the returns to the farmer and spouse for their manual and managerial input and a return on tenant type capital. It is not comparable with the cash income from employment. The following table shows estimates of the average level of net farm income for all farm types derived from survey results. It should be borne in mind that there is considerable variation around these averages.

Average Net farm income for all farm types

£'000

	England	Wales
1989-90	17·2	12·3
1990-91	16·3	10·5
1991-92	17·3	14·0

Milk Quota Transfers

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will set a final date for the notification of milk quota transfers in England and Wales in 1992-93.

Mr. Curry: Following consultations with the industry and in exercise of powers provided by the Dairy Produce Quotas Regulations I have decided that transfers of unused milk quota notified after 16 April will have no effect on the calculation of supplementary levy liability for 1992-93, even if they are notified as having occurred during that year.

Similar deadlines have operated for the past four years. These have encouraged producers to notify quota transfers in good time and have thus assisted in the smooth running of the quota system.

HEALTH

National Health Service Staff

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of national health service staff in London are women.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information available centrally is given in the table.

National Health Service directly employed staff in Thames Regions as at 30 September 1991

	Total number	Female number	Female per cent.
Professional staff	186,866	151,582	81·1
	Whole-time equivalents	Whole-time equivalents
Non-professional staff	76,394	49,825	65·2

Notes:
1. Excludes agency staff and locums.
2. Includes National Health Service trusts.

Abortion

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total number of maternal deaths following abortion since 1968, together with the causes of death.

Mr. Sackville: In the period 1968 to 1987 a total of 98 maternal deaths related to legal abortion were recorded in England and Wales by the confidential inquiry into maternal deaths. Of these, 27 were due to embolism, 12 were due to haemorrhage and related conditions, 14 were associated with the use of anaesthetic, and the remaining 45 were attributed to various other causes. Full details are given in the reports of the confidential inquiry into maternal deaths, copies of which are available in the Library.

Pelvic Inflammatory Disease

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the incidence of pelvic inflammatory disease for 1967, 1972, 1977, 1982, 1987 and the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Sackville: The available data are of new cases of pelvic infection and epididymitis reported by genito-urinary medicine clinics. In England in 1990-91 there were 5,700 cases. Data for 1987 and earlier years are not available.

Dentistry

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients have been de-registered by their dentists for NHS treatment in Leeds to date.

Dr. Mawhinney: During the period 3 July 1992 to 15 January 1993, 2,484 adult patients and 59 child patients were deregistered by their dentist in Leeds. In the period 30 June 1992 to 30 November 1992, the total number of adults and children registered with a national health service dentist in Leeds increased by over 12,000 to 451,268. Anyone who needs help in obtaining NHS dental treatment should contact Leeds family health services authority, who have been able to arrange NHS dental treatment for anyone who has approached them.

Remand Prisoners (Escorts)

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what was the cost to the health service in the latest year for which information is available of hiring police or other security personnel to escort remand prisoners from hospital to court;

(2) on how many occasions in the latest year for which information is available remand prisoners were escorted from hospital to court by nurses without any police presence.

Mr. Yeo: This information is not collected centrally.

Drug Addicts

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of the population were notified drug addicts in (a) Riverside, (b) Parkside, (c) Bloomsbury, (d) Islington, (e) City and Hackney, (f) Newham, (g) Tower Hamlets, (h) West Lambeth, (i) Lewisham and North Southwark and (j) England at the latest available date.

Dr. Mawhinney: The table shows the number of notifications received to the addicts index by the Home Office from doctors during 1991 (the latest year for which figures for district health authorities are available centrally), and the number expressed as a rate per million population.

The addicts index includes only those drug addicts who are notifiable under the terms of the Misuse of Drugs (Notification and Supply to Addicts) Regulations 1973. This covers 14 controlled drugs, mainly opiates and cocaine, which are specified in the regulations.

Number of Notifications to the Home Office; England and selected District Health Authorities[1], January to December 1991; and rate per million population

District Health Authority	All notifications	Mid 1991 population	Rate per million population

[2] Bloomsbury and Islington merged in September 1990.

Nursery and Child Care

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received about the impact of the Children Act 1989 on private sector nursery and child care provision; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Fulham (Mr. Carrington) on 11 January at columns 604-05. In 1992 we replied to over 300 representations from hon. Members about the impact of the Children Act on private and voluntary providers of day nurseries, playgroups, out of school clubs and holiday schemes and on childminders.

Psychiatric Hospitals

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether she will list (a) which psychiatric hospitals and units have been sold since April 1990, (b) the value of the sales and (c) the purchasers of each hospital or unit.

Mr. Sackville: The management of the national health service estate and the disposal of surplus assets has been delegated to health authorities and trusts. The information requested is therefore not available centrally.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what obligation is laid on each newly-established NHS trust to establish an inventory of physical assets; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: There is no specific obligation but trusts have to draw up inventories for two practical reasons, one as part of the system of transferring assets from a health authority to a national health service trust and the other for valuation purposes to facilitate the assessment of the trusts' originating capital debt.

GP Fund Holders

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the general practices which are fund holding in the Leeds area.

Dr. Mawhinney: The management of the general practitioner fund holding scheme in Leeds is the responsibility of the Yorkshire regional health authority. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman, Sir Bryan Askew, for details.

Hypothermia

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many deaths from hypothermia took place in each region in 1992 among (a) men aged 65 years and over and (b) women aged 60 years and over.

Mr. Sackville: The information requested will not be available before the end of April 1993.

Hospital Deaths

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the procedure for the issuing of a death certificate to bereaved families in cases when the death occurs in hospital; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: The medical certificate of cause of death is issued by the doctor who attended the patient whilst in hospital or, if this is not possible, by Her Majesty's coroner. Departmental guidance suggests that hospitals should provide written local instructions, and appropriate training, to help staff advise bereaved families on such issues as collection of death and cremation certificates, registration of death and cases which require referral to the coroner.

Joint Consultative Committees

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what guidance has been issued to joint consultative committees in respect of implementing community care policies;

(2) what roles joint consultative committees will fulfil in the future operation of health and community care management;

(3) what guidance has been issued governing the make up of the joint consultative committees in areas where opt out hospitals, purchasing authorities and health authorities co-exist;

(4) what steps she plans to improve joint planning and joint working arrangements between local authorities and health care providers;

(5) if joint consultative committees' rules and responsibility are uniform throughout England and Wales; and if she will make a statement;

(6) what steps she proposes to avoid duplication of function between health provider and local authority joint consultative committee arrangements and other management mechanisms for health and community care delivery.

Mr. Yeo: The community care reforms introduce new incentives and requirements for joint planning and working between health and local authorities both for purchasers and providers. Detailed guidance has been issued to authorities to enable them to develop their arrangements.

The policy guidance issued in 1990, which followed up the White Paper "Caring for People", made it clear that authorities should find the framework for developing joint planning and joint working which best suited them. Joint consultative committees will continue to advise health authorities and local authorities on the planning and operation of services which are of common concern to both. Their functions include making recommendations for payments by health authorities in connection with community care and other projects promoted by local authorities and other bodies.

The statutory provisions relating to joint consultative committees including their composition are set out in Sections 22 and 28A of the National Health Service Act 1977 and in the Joint Consultative Committees Order 1985 (SI 1985 No. 305) which have effect in England and Wales. Recent guidance concerning joint consultative committees and their functions has been issued in circulars HSG(92)43 and LAC(92)17. Copies of all these documents are available in the Library.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Battersea Power Station

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when officials from English Heritage last inspected Battersea power station.

Mr. Brooke: An inspection took place on 7 October. A further inspection is being arranged and is likely to take place next month.

B Sky B

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he has anything to add to his oral answer of 7 December 1992 regarding the market share of B Sky B, Official Report, columns 584-85.

Mr. Brooke: No.

Concessionary TV Licences

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage (1) what recent representations have been received by his Department from local authorities and others regarding the concessionary television licence fee;

(2) what representations have been received regarding the disparity of treatment for concessionary television licences for pensioners who moved into accommodation before and after May 1988.

Mr. Brooke: I have received 108 letters from right hon. and hon. Members, 12 from local authorities and 174 from members of the public about the concessionary television licence scheme. Some of these will have raised the effect of the preserved rights provisions of the 1988 regulations but separate figures are not readily available.

Cable Franchise (Stockport)

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will take steps to ensure the cable franchise for Stockport is proceeded with rapidly.

Mr. Leigh: I have been asked to reply.

Responsibility for monitoring and, if appropriate, enforcing compliance with the build obligations contained in a cable operator's licence issued under the Telecommunications Act 1984 is a matter for the Director General of Telecommunications.

Works of Art

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list the items for which the issuing of export licences was withheld on the recommendation of the Reviewing Commitee on the Export of Works of Art during the half year ended 31 December 1992, specifying in each case the valuation and whether an item was exported or retained, with particulars in the latter event of the acquiring institution; whether he will list any items for which licences have been withheld but the final disposal of which is not yet decided, specifying in each case (a) the valuation and (b) the relevant time limit; and if a press notice will be issued by his Department covering the information given in his reply, including that relating to the outcome in individual cases.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 19 January 1993]: The information is as follows:

Details of the items on which decisions were deferred were given in press notices issued at the time the reviewing committee's recommendations were accepted.

Windsor Castle (Fire)

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage on what criteria Sir Alan Bailey has been appointed to head the inquiry into the fire at Windsor castle; what are his qualifications; and what will be the scale and basis of his remuneration and expenses.

Mr. Key [holding answer 25 January 1993]: Sir Alan Bailey has been appointed to chair the inquiry into the adequacy of fire protection measures at all the royal palaces for which the Department of National Heritage has financial responsibility. His professional experience as a senior civil servant fits appropriately with the requirement for this inquiry, as others, to bring together, analyse, assess, and advise on, the variety of issues involved. In particular, Sir Alan, as Permanent Secretary at the Department of Transport, was closely involved in the response to the recommendations of the Fennell inquiry following the Kings Cross fire. Sir Alan will be paid on a daily fee basis of £398 plus expenses.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Serjeant at Arms Residence

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee if he will make a statement on the policy adopted towards the removal of panelling from the former residence of the Serjeant at Arms in Speakers Court as part of the conversion process to offices; what was the decision-taking authority for such removals; and how such panelling has been disposed of.

Mr. Ray Powell: This is a matter for the Director of Works; and I shall ask him to write to the hon. Member.

Doorkeepers

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, representing the House of Commons Commission, if he will make a statement on the implementation of the review of doorkeepers' responsibilities; and if the Commission will carry out a review of hours worked by doorkeepers.

Mr. Beith: The House of Commons Commission approved the recommendations of the Board of Management on the report of the staff inspector on the Doorkeeper grades on 9 December 1991. The recommendations did not cover doorkeepers' responsibilities as such, although they did propose changes concerning their manning levels. Subsequently detailed discussions were held between management and trade union representatives and agreement was reached on the implementation of the staff inspector's review.

The agreement included a reduction in manning levels, to be achieved by natural wastage over a period of time. I understand this has still some way to go. It also made provision for close monitoring of the working hours of doorkeepers, particularly if and when the House sat very late on frequent occasions. The Commission has asked the Serjeant to keep working patterns of doorkeepers under review, and has received no representations from him that the manning reductions are not working satisfactorily. Until the full implementation of the recommended reductions has been achieved, it does not seem appropriate to carry out a further review.

PRIME MINISTER

India

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it his policy during his visit to India to raise the matter of the conditions under which India would join the nuclear non-proliferation treaty.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply.

During his visit my right hon. Friend, the Prime Minister, has discussed with Prime Minister Rao the attitude of the Indian Government towards the treaty on the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons, and has emphasised the importance we attach to universal membership of the treaty.

Machine Tools (Iraq)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Amber Valley (Mr. Oppenheim), of 11 January, Official Report, column 555, what information he has on the sale of machine tools from Germany to Iraq in 1987, 1988 and 1989, based on the standard international trade classification.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply.

I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade to the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, Central (Mr. Cousins) on 26 January.

Genetically Modified Material

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Prime Minister which Department has the responsibility for the licensing and control of premises using genetically modified material for research, development and production purposes for industrial, medical or educational uses.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply.

The Secretary of State for Employment has responsibility for the Genetic Manipulation Regulations 1989, which require all those intending to use premises for the first time for genetic modification work to notify the Health and Safety Executive (HSE). Notification requirements also apply to the subsequent activities involving genetic modification.

A range of additional requirements, which are the responsibility of a number of Departments, apply to specific products which may be genetically modified. The products include medicines, plant pathogens, food additives, veterinary medicines and agricultural pesticides.

Correspondence

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister when he expects to provide a substantive reply to the letter sent to him by Mr. Barrington of Clist road, Bettws, Newport, on 30 November 1992.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply.

A reply was sent by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister's office on 10 December 1992. A reply to the hon. Member's constituent's letter of 13 January 1993 will be sent in due course.

Iraq

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will seek time at the United Nations for reconsideration of sanctions against Iraq.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 26 January 1993]: I have been asked to reply.

The Security Council reviews sanctions against Iraq every 60 days in compliance with United Nations Security Council resolution 687.

The most recent review meeting took place on 25 January at which the Security Council concluded that conditions did not exist for the modification or lifting of sanctions against Iraq.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

International Rescue Corps

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what financial and other support he gives to the international rescue operation dealing with the immediate aftermath of natural catastrophes; and if he will meet their representatives to discuss a programme to assist them.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The International Rescue Corps is an independent organisation which has not sought financial assistance since September 1989 when ODA funds were provided to move an IRC team to Montserrat after Hurricane Hugo. ODA regularly offers assistance through our embassies in clarifying IRC's status and bona fides when it is aware IRC services are being offered to an overseas country. ODA and IRC officials are in frequent contact.

Baltic States

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what new proposals he has to extend the use of the know-how funds to the Baltic states.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We are considering a range of new proposals within our priority sectors, which are food processing and distribution, financial services, small business creation and energy.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Chartermark Awards

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will commission the National Accreditation Council for Certification Bodies to examine the Government's running of the Chartermark award scheme.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have no plans at present to involve the National Accreditation Council for Certification Bodies in the accreditation of the Chartermark scheme.

Following the 1992 scheme, MORI was commissioned to carry out an independent review of the Chartermark scheme to find out reactions to the scheme, and to highlight any areas where improvements could be made for future years. MORI concluded its research at the end of November and its findings have been used in devising the 1993 Chartermark scheme; details of which will be published next month.

Citizens Charters

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list and summarise briefly each of the initial commitments in the citizens charters which are environmental standards or targets; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: The citizens charter commitment to high quality services also extends to a clean and safe environment—for example:

Explanatory guides on "Green Rights and Responsibilities" have been published in England, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland. These explain citizens' rights and responsibilities on environmental issues; and offer guidance on how to complain if standards are not being met.

Under the council tenants charter all local authorities are expected to publish a statement advising tenants how their individual councils deal with environmental nuisances, such as graffiti and noisy parties.

In addition the Government intend to publish a local environment charter in the spring which will detail citizens, rights to high environmental standards from their local authority.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Correspondence

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects to reply to the letter of 23 October 1992 from the hon. Member for Amber Valley about redundancy arrangements for miners.

Mr. Eggar: I replied to my hon. Friend on 25 January.

Chemical Weapons

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what examination he has given to whether the United Kingdom national authority under the chemical weapons convention will require additional powers in order to examine work and scientific research in the chemical industry.

Mr. Heseltine: The United Kingdom national authority will not have the role of verifying compliance with the chemical weapons convention, and it will therefore not require powers to examine work and scientific research in the chemical industry. Verification will be the responsibility of the Organisation for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons (OPCW), an international body to be set up under the United Nations' auspices. Primary legislation will be required to allow the OPCW to verify compliance in the United Kingdom.

Coal Industry

Mr. Cummings: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will ensure that British Coal provides recent analysis of reserves at Vane Tempest and Easington collieries to companies charged by his Department to investigate current reserves under the terms of the energy review.

Mr. Eggar: As part of the coal review, Boyds have undertaken assessments of the viability of each of the 21 pits included in the coal review, including Easington. Their report was published on 22 January.

British Coal provided Boyds with recent information on coal reserves at each of the pits concerned, for use in this work. I understand that British Coal is providing similar information to Boyds for use in the assessment we have commissioned from them of the 10 pits currently the subject of consultation, which includes Vane Tempest.

Nuclear Industry

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what recent meeting he has had with the chairman or other officials of British Nuclear Fuels plc to discuss the present and future financing of Sellafield.

Mr. Eggar: I meet the chairman and other board members of British Nuclear Fuels plc from time to time and discuss a range of matters on these occasions. The question of financing the company's business, both at Sellafield and elsewhere, is considered in the context of BNFL's corporate plan.

Miners' Redundancy Payments

Mr. Cummings: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what effect the extension of the consultation period will have upon the guarantees applied to redundancy payments for miners at the 10 pits currently undergoing the 90-day statutory consultation period.

Mr. Eggar: None. The current redundancy terms will remain available throughout the consultation period.

Endangered Species

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make it his policy to prohibit the import into the United Kingdom of all species defined as endangered or threatened under the International Union for the Conservation of Nature.

Mr. Needham: No. The principal instrument for the regulation of international trade in wildlife species is the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species of Wild Fauna and Flora (CITES). However, in considering proposals to bring further species within the scope of CITES controls, the Government would take account of any designations made by the International Union for the Conservation of Nature together with any other relevant scientific information.

Membrane Technology

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what reasons underlay his refusal of a grant of £150,000 to the Coal Research Establishment for the development of membrane technology for the clean burning of coal.

Mr. Eggar: My Department has considered a proposal from the Coal Research Establishment of the British Coal Corporation for development of membrane technology for the separation of hydrogen from carbon dioxide, as a method of capturing carbon dioxide formed during the combustion of coal or other fuels. It was concluded that in advance of the results of a major study which includes an assessment of a range of technical options for separation of carbon dioxide, it would be inappropriate for my Department to fund development work on one particular approach. The £1·8 million major study (involving 14 countries and the Commission of the European Community) is being carried out under the auspices of the International Energy Agency, with British Coal as the operating agent. My Department and British Coal took the lead in setting up this study, and National Power and PowerGen are also participating.

Uruguay Round

Mr. Fry: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will take steps to ensure a fairer international trade environment for the British and other European Community footwear manufacturing industries before the conclusion of the Uruguay round of GATT negotiations.

Mr. Needham: We and our Community partners fully support the objectives of the Uruguay round of multilateral trade negotiations in GATT, which include the specific aim of the reduction or elimination by all participants of high tariffs and non-tariff measures.

The European Commission negotiates for the Community in GATT. It has details of all the concerns expressed to us by the United Kingdom footwear industry, and these have been carefully taken into account in the formulation of the Community's position in the negotiations.

Iraq (Machine Tools)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 11 January to the hon. Member for Amber Valley (Mr. Oppenheim) at column 555, if he will supply the corresponding information about the export of machine tools to Iraq in (a) 1985, (b) 1986 and (c) 1990.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 18 January 1993]: For ease of reference the information requested for the major countries supplying machine tools to Iraq from 1985 to 1990 is set out as follows:

G6 and Swiss exports of machine tools to Iraq 1985-1990

Manufacturing Industry

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement outlining those steps which have been taken by his Department since 9 April 1992 specifically to assist the United Kingdom manufacturing industry; and what future action he intends to take to assist manufacturing industry.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 26 January 1993]: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade, my ministerial colleagues and I have ensured that manufacturing industry's concerns are fully taken into account across the full range of the Government's decisions, and we shall continue to do so.

Particular initiatives since 9 April have included:

the re-organisation of the DTI so as to relate more closely to individual sectors of industry and facilitate an informed dialogue between Government and industry, and the creation of a unit on industrial competitiveness;

the launch of the one-stop shops competition, where bids are due by noon on 29 January;

the strengthening of DTI's support for exporters including recruiting 100 export promoters from the private sector;

the launch of the Business in Europe campaign;

steering the single market to completion;

a full and active part in working for an early and successful completion of the Uruguay round of trade talks;

a further £700 million of ECGD cover;

co-ordination across Whitehall of the enhanced deregulation initiative to identify and remove unnecessary burdens on business; and numerous specific individual decisions and actions have also been taken in the light of the Government's interest in manufacturing industry.

The Government fully appreciate the part played by manufacturing industry in securing the United Kingdom's long-term prosperity.

Nuclear Installations

Mr. Flynn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to improve the off-site emergency plan regulations for areas adjacent to nuclear installations.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 25 January 1993]: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade, together with the Secretary of State for Scotland, has responsibility for the proposed Off-Site Emergency Plan (Licensed Nuclear Installations) Regulations. Following the Health and Safety Commission's consultations, consideration is being given to possible changes. I await HSC's advice on the matter.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what communications have been sent to local authorities from his Department concerning changes to the detailed emergency planning zones in areas adjacent to nuclear installations.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 25 January 1993]: There have been no recent changes in detailed emergency planning zones or resulting communications with local authorities. These zones are however kept under continuous review by HSE's HMNII as part of the licensing process for nuclear installations. I understand that HSE will set out the existing arrangements in the guidance to accompany the proposed Off-Site Emergency Plan (Licenced Nuclear Installations) Regulations.

Hinckley Point A

Mr. Flynn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to introduce new safety regulations following the decision to re-license Hinckley Point A Magnox reactor.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 25 January 1993]: I am informed by the Health and Safety Executive's Nuclear Installations Inspectorate (NII) that there is no specific requirement to re-licence or introduce new safety regulations at Hinckley Point A. However, following assessment of Nuclear Electric's (NE) long term safety review of Hinckley Point A the NII agreed (in December 1991) that the station could continue in operation up to 30 years (ie 1995) subject to completion of the programme of work specified in its assessment and compliance with NII safety requirements.

British Coal

Mr. Tipping: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what budget provisions exist in the financial year 1993-94 to extend British Coal's present enhanced redundancy scheme.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 26 January 1993]: It was announced at the time of the autumn statement that a provisional external finance limit of £1,900 million had been set for British Coal for 1993-94. The limit will be re-assessed in the light of the outcome of the coal review but the provisional increase of £1,400 million above previous plans for 1993-94 reflects provision being made on a prudent basis for higher restructuring and/or operating costs than previously assumed, including payments under the terms of British Coal's present redundancy scheme.

Criminal Liability (Companies)

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to introduce legislation to extend the circumstances in which a company may be held criminally liable for the acts of its officers.

Mr. Neil Hamilton [holding answer 26 January 1993]: I have no plans to introduce such legislation.

Industrial Innovation Support

Mr. Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the funding of the club research and development programme; and what proportion of funding for industrial innovation support schemes remains uncommitted (a) for the remainder of the present financial year and (b) for the year 1993-94.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 14 January 1993]: Club research and development is one of a number of forms of collaboration accepted by the Department of Trade and Industry when providing financial assistance towards innovative research and development carried out by companies. It caters for collaborative efforts where one organisation undertakes the work on behalf of a number of others who contribute to the costs. It does not constitute a scheme on which separate expenditure figures are collected.

Research and Development

Mr. Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish a list of each research and development scheme grant-aided through the Club research and development scheme, the LINK scheme, the SMART—small firms merit award for research and technology—scheme and the SPUR—support for products under research—scheme.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 15 January 1993]: The Department's schemes for supporting industrial R and D are: LINK, EUREKA, advanced technology programmes (ATP), general industrial collaborative programmes (including Club research and development), technology transfer, SMART and SPUR.

Further support for industrial R and D is available from the SPACE budget, energy budgets, and civil aircraft and aeroengine research and demonstration budget (CARAD).

WALES

Mental Illness

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what resources are allocated for the support and treatment of those who suffer from schizophrenia.

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what resources are available to provide support for Alzheimer victims and their families; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: It is not possible to separately identify resources allocated to schizophrenia or to the support of people with Alzheimer's Disease and their families. An estimated £211 million is being spent on mental illness services in Wales and an additional £6·3 million is available this year through the mental illness strategy. The Welsh Office is also making available some £110,000 to enable the National Schizophrenia Fellowship to operate in Wales and some £26,000 similarly for the Alzheimer's Disease Society.

Secondary School Places, Mid-Glamorgan

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate is available to his Department of the number of secondary school places required in Mid-Glamorgan in each school year between now and 2000; and what is the existing number of places.

Sir Wyn Roberts: I currently have no forward estimates of the number of secondary school places required by local authorities. However, the Education Bill includes proposals which would require local authorities and the Schools Funding Council to review school provision annually and to report the results to my right hon. Friend.

My current estimate of the number of places in maintained secondary schools in Mid Glamorgan is 43,308.

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many known Alzheimer sufferers live in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Alzheimer's disease is often indistinguishable during life from other forms of dementia. The estimated number of dementia sufferers in Wales is 29,000.

Citizen's Advice Bureaux Budgets

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will increase his allocation of cash to local authorities in Wales for funding of citizen's advice bureaux budgets; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The local authority revenue settlement covers all local authority expenditure. It is for individual authorities to decide how to apportion those resources between and within services in accordance with their statutory obligations and their own priorities. I will shortly be presenting my final proposals for the 1993-94 settlement for the approval of the House.

Schools (Surplus Places)

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the latest estimate of the number of surplus places in (a) primary and (b) secondary schools in Mid Glamorgan; and on what basis such estimates are made.

Sir Wyn Roberts: My estimate of surplus school places (as at 1 January 1991) for Mid Glamorgan is shown as follows:

Primary
13,416
Secondary
7,409

The data is based on information provided by the local authority, and is currently being updated.

HIV

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many children were born HIV positive in Wales in each year since 1980.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Since reporting of HIV/AIDS began in 1984, 10 children have been reported from Wales as born to an HIV infected mother, three in 1989, two in 1990, three in 1991 and two in 1992. In two of the 10, one of whom has developed AIDS, HIV infection has been established, and another two have been shown to be uninfected. The infection status for the remaining six is unknown as it is not yet possible to determine whether these children are infected or whether their seropositivity is due to passive transfer of maternal antibody.

Schools (Excluded Pupils)

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many local education authorities have schools with conditional re-entry agreements as a means of re-admitting excluded pupils to schools; and what assessment he has made of their effectiveness.

Sir Wyn Roberts: This information is not available centrally.

Elton Report

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many local education authorities have formal systems of communication within their schools and between schools and parents, governors, their communities and outside agencies, as recommended in the Elton report on discipline in schools; what percentage of schools have such systems of communication; and to what extent they meet the standards expected by his Department.

Sir Wyn Roberts: This information is not available centrally.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consideration he has given to the need for further legislation to clarify the legal basis of teachers' authority referred to in the Elton report on discipline in schools.

Sir Wyn Roberts: None. The position of teachers is sufficiently safeguarded by existing legislation.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made, following the Elton report on discipline in schools, of the equitable distribution of teaching and other resources across the ability range in schools and of how local education authorities are taking this recommendation into account when funding schools.

Sir Wyn Roberts: No assessment has been made of these matters.

School Governors

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many local education authorities provide regular training courses for school governors which meet the standards expected by his Department.

Sir Wyn Roberts: All local education authorities provide training courses for school governors. The content of these courses is primarily a matter for the authority concerned. The Department has not set down standards in connection with such training.

Teaching Hours

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the length of the school teaching day.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The length of the school day is a matter for school governing bodies. Current advice on this and related issues are contained in Welsh Office Circular 43/90 "Management of the School Day" a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Educational Psychologists

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many local education authorities have developed working relationships between schools and educational psychologists to provide advice on the management of behaviour in groups and in schools as a whole which meet with the standards expected by his Department.

Sir Wyn Roberts: This information is not available centrally.

Local Authority Borrowing

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list for each of the boroughs and districts the borrowing limit for householders for 1991-92, 1992-93 and 1993-94, giving the increase or decrease as a percentage.

Mr. David Hunt: Details of Welsh local authorities' annual borrowing are not held centrally. The Local Government and Housing Act 1989 and regulations specify the sources from which each local authority may borrow and set parameters for temporary and longer term borrowing. The legislation requires the authority to determine annually the cash figure within which its borrowing is to be kept and the extent to which that may come from short term loans and from variable interest borrowing.

School Management

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many local education authorities have schools which take formal account of ascertaining the views of pupils on matters relating to school management; and whether these arrangements meet the standards expected by his Department.

Sir Wyn Roberts: This information is not available centrally.

Schools (Police Liaison Projects)

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he has taken to monitor the way in which local education authorities have assessed the number of schools in their areas which would particularly benefit from school-police liaison projects; and what percentage of such schools in each local education authority have these projects.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The Education (No. 2) Act 1986 requires governing bodies to report annually to parents on steps taken to strengthen links with the community, including the police. Generally, I would expect them to foster good relationships with their local police force.

Education Targets

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to establish national education and training targets for Wales to cover (a) foundation and (b) lifetime learning.

Mr. David Hunt: The national education and training targets, proposed by the CBI and others, have been endorsed by the Government. I shall be sending a letter today to education, training and employers' organisations throughout Wales emphasising the importance of the targets to the Welsh economy. My letter declares the need for Wales to sustain an ambitious rate of progress towards the Great Britain targets, and explains that I shall be encouraging progress and reviewing the position annually. A copy of my letter is being placed in the Library of the House.

Engineering and Technology Courses

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the courses on engineering and technology available within each university college in Wales indicating the number of applicants for each course in each of the last five years.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The Department does not collect information on the applicants to courses for the University of Wales.

However, this information can be found in the guide "University Entrance" produced by the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals of the Universities of the United Kingdom from information supplied by the Universities Central Council on Admissions (UCCA), a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Partnership Sourcing Initiatives

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the partnership sourcing initiatives currently established involving companies from Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: This information is not readily available but the Welsh Development Agency administer a major relevant intiative known as Source Wales.

Counselling Skills

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many LEAs have provided courses on basic counselling skills in the last two years; what information he has on the percentage of staff in each LEA which have been on such courses; and what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of such courses.

Sir Wyn Roberts: In the academic year 1991-92 nineteen counselling-related courses were run by colleges in seven local authorities in Wales. This is the latest year for which information is available.

No information is available centrally about the percentage of LEA staff which have been on such courses or about their effectiveness.

Rail Privatisation

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the representations he has received from individuals and organisations in Wales in support of the Government's rail privatisation proposals.

Sir Wyn Roberts: There has been a fair degree of interest in the franchising of services in Wales but no details can be provided, for reasons of commercial confidentiality.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list those schools in Wales which have (a) balloted parents in pursuit of grant-maintained status, (b) received approval to pursue grant-maintained status from such a ballot and (c) been granted grant-maintained status.

Mr. David Hunt: Fifteen schools have held a ballot of parents. They are:

i. Primary Schools
Cefnpennar Infants, Mid Glamorgan
Llanerfyl, Powys
Caergeiliog, Gwynedd
Derwen, Clwyd
Penybryn, Clwyd

ii. Secondary Schools
Queens, Gwent
Cwmcarn, Gwent
Bishop Vaughan, West Glamorgan
Gowerton, West Glamorgan
Olchfa, West Glamorgan
Brynmawr, Gwent
Emrys ap Iwan, Clwyd (twice)
Maelor, Clwyd
Stanwell, South Glamorgan
John Beddoes, Powys

I refer the hon. Gentleman to my right hon. Friend the Minister of State's reply of 19 January 1993 to the hon. Member for Alyn and Deeside (Mr. Jones), Official Report, columns. 193-94, for details of those schools where the ballot was in favour of seeking grant-maintained status and of those schools whose proposals have been approved by my right hon. Friend.

Municipal Waste Water Directive

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to publish a list of the sensitive areas defined under the European municipal waste water directive.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Under the terms of the Urban Waste Water Treatment Directive member states must identify sensitive areas by 31 December 1993.

EDUCATION

Higher Education

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement outlining the mechanism by which tuition fees for students in higher education institutions are transferred from his Department via local authorities to the institutions, setting out the costs involved, and time scale of payments; and if he will estimate the moneys outstanding to the institutions at the latest available date.

Mr. Boswell: The Education (Mandatory Awards) Regulations specify the tuition fees to be paid by local education authorities on behalf of award-holding students. For most courses, the regulations require the fees to be paid promptly in termly instalments by specified dates or within one month of the receipt of a valid request for payment, whichever is the later. For academic year 1992-93, the specified dates are 10 December 1992, 10 February 1993 and 30 April 1993, and the total amount of fees payable is estimated to be nearly £1,590 million. Information is not routinely collected by the Department on the amounts of any fees outstanding at a particular date.

The Department reimburses the whole of authorities' mandatory awards payments, under section 209 of the Education Reform Act 1988. Specific grant is paid to authorities in termly instalments for the fee elements, shortly before each specified date. The Department's administrative costs are met from within its overrall running cost provision. Authorities bear their own administrative costs. No current estimate is available of the administrative costs attributable to the payment of fees.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education pursuant to his answer of 7 December 1992, Official Report, column 477, if he will make a statement on the reasons why he has not been able to publish an updated version of the table in annex 2 of "Higher Education: A New Framework" (Cm1541), setting out projections of home student numbers in Great Britain.

Mr. Boswell: The Government's policy, as set out at the time of the autumn statement, is to maintain the current record level of participation by young people in higher education over the next three years. The figures given by my predecessor, my hon. Friend the Member for Carshalton and Wallington (Mr. Forman) in his reply of 7 December 1992 at column 477 are consistent with that. Progress to a participation rate of one in three by 2000 will be at a rate determined in future public expenditure rounds.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education, pursuant to his answers of 20 January, Official Report, columns 280-82, if he will list institutions not referred to in his answers which are funded by the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council or Universities Funding Council together with the authorities which are authorised to award (a) degrees for higher courses and (b) degrees for research courses which commenced in September 1992 at those institutions.

Mr. Boswell: The following institutions, all of which are funded by the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council, were not referred to in my reply of 20 January—Official Report, columns 280-81.

The Secretary of State publishes a list of recognised degree awarding bodies in The Education (Recognised Bodies) Order. Bodies listed in that order are authorised to award degrees in relation to any of the above institutions. The Education (Recognised Bodies) Order is currently being revised and we expect it to be re-issued by the end of February.

Dronfield School

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education when he will be acknowledging and replying to the letter of 3 January from the hon. Member for Derbyshire, North-East headed Dronfield school.

Mr. Forth: A fully reply has now been sent. The Department has not called for a report on the ballot at Dronfield. Any correspondence which the Department considers requires the comments of the governors will be sent to the chairman of governors for comment.

Primary Education, Brent

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will carry out an investigation into primary school education in the London borough of Brent.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend has no plans to carry out such an investigation.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what representations he has received from Brent primary schools head teachers as to the adequacy of the budget from Brent council for the education service in Brent in 1993-94; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend has received a small number of such representations. Brent council is solely responsible for determining its education budget, and within that total, the proportion of resources allocated to primary schools.

University Education

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will give details of the charges made for the last five years to those applying through Universities Central Council on Admissions for university education; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Boswell: The application fees (including VAT) charged by UCCA to those applying for admission to universities for the last five academic years are as follows:

Application Fee	Year of Admission
£6	1989-90
£6	1990-91
£6	1991-92
£7	1992-93
£7	1993-94

UCCA is to merge with PCAS later this year to establish a joint admission system to be called the universities and colleges admissions service (UCAS). The application fee for admission in 1994-95 has yet to be determined.

Nursery Education

Mrs. Currie: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list for each local education authority in England in rank order (a) the number of nursery school places per 1,000 population and (b) the spending on nursery school places per 1,000 population.

Mr. Forth: Information on the expenditure on nursery places or on the numbers of nursery places available is not collected centrally. I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave on 21 January 1993 to the hon. Member for Wallsend (Mr. Byers) at column 353, on the latest available information on the numbers of pupils in nursery classes and schools in each local education authority, expressed as rates per 100 population aged three and four.

EMPLOYMENT

Health and Safety

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will make a statement on Government policy towards the proposed Council regulation establishing a European agency for safety and health at work and the location of such an agency.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The United Kingdom believes that the European Community has an important role in disseminating best practice on health and safety in areas such as risk assessment, new health and safety techniques, research and the impact of Community legislation. A wide range of views was expressed at the Labour and Social Affairs Council on 3 December 1992, which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State chaired, as to whether it was desirable to establish a new agency to take this work forward or whether alternatively it could be pursued through existing institutions or bodies, through Community programmes, through intergovernmental co-operation or otherwise. There was no discussion of the location of a possible agency. The Government's view is that the case for such an agency has yet to be clearly demonstrated.

Youth Training

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many eligible young people in Leeds have currently been unable to obtain a place on a youth training scheme.

Mr. McLoughlin: Information on the total number of young people eligible for youth training is not available. It is not, therefore, possible to say how many of this group are unable to obtain a place.

Low Pay

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what were the levels of pay of the lowest decile of (a) male and (b) female workers in (i) Wales and (ii) England at the latest available date.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information requested is published in part E of the 1992 New Earnings Survey, tables 116.2 and 116.3. A copy is available in the Library.

SCOTLAND

Hospital Waiting Times

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what provisions are made within the citizens charter programme to ensure that the waiting times of outpatients is minimised.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: In accordance with the provisions of the patients charter all health boards introduced, with effect from 1 April 1992, local targets for waiting times for first appointments at outpatient clinics. Health boards are at present reviewing these targets with the objective of converting them into guarantees to take effect from 1 April 1993. The patients charter also included the commitment that patients should be seen within 30 minutes of the appointment time they have been given or should expect to receive an explanation for the delay and an idea of how much longer the wait is likely to be.

Folk Music

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on his Department's policy on conserving, developing and promoting the cultural heritage of Scotland through folk music.

Mr. Brooke: I have been asked to reply.

Support for Scottish folk music is the responsibility of the Scottish Arts Council. Since 1984 the council has provided annual revenue support for the Traditional Music and Song Association of Scotland. Financial assistance has also been given to a growing number of traditional music and folk festivals. This year, the sum allocated was £53,385.

In addition, in 1992 the council established a traditional music development fund which, as well as supporting a number of education projects, supports the Greentrax Record Company which is re-releasing valuable traditional music source material. The fund totals £50,000.

This year the council also provided financial support for Gaelic arts amounting to £73,880.

Disabled Employees

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many (a) physically disabled and (b) sensorily disabled people are employed in his Department; and what percentage they are of the total work force.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 14 December 1992]: There are currently 94 disabled staff employed by my Department, which represents 1·4 per cent. of the total work force. Of these, 78 are physically disabled and 16 sensorily disabled.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Mortgage Interest

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to introduce measures to compel mortgage lenders to renegotiate fixed interest rates arrangements with mortgagors.

Mr. Nelson: No. The terms on which mortgage lenders make loans are matters for their commercial judgment.

Ministerial Cars

Mr. Beith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what special tax provisions apply to Ministers of the Crown in respect of (a) availability of a car for private use, (b) provision of a chauffeur in connection with a car made available for private use and (c) provision of any amount of petrol for private use of the car described in (a) above and in what aspects these provisions differ from that set out in chapters 11 and 15 of booklet 480, detailing the relevant statutory or extrastatutory concessions for Ministers of the Crown.

Mr. Lamont: There are no special tax provisions for cars, chauffeurs or fuel provided for Ministers of the Crown. They are subject to the same tax rules as employees generally.

Competitive Tendering

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has had from business organisations representing health service and local authority private contractors to underwrite losses on contracts secured under compulsory competitive tendering legislation where the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 were ruled to apply after the commencement of the contract; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: I have received no representations on the matter. Contracting out has taken place for many years with no question of any losses being underwritten by the Exchequer.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what reasons underlay his introduction of a new national accounts adjustment for NHS trusts' debt remuneration in table 2B.1 of his 1992 "Autumn Statement" (Cm 2096) and the treatment of hospital trusts as public corporations outside general Government; and if he will publish an analysis of this national accounts adjustment by the programmes for Health, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland, together with the underlying calculations of interest payments on outstanding debt and of dividends on public dividend capital.

Mr. Portillo: The reasons are set out in paragraphs 2B.19 to 2B.23 of the 1992 "Autumn Statement" (Cm 2096). The forecasts of provision for debt interest and dividends are the responsibility of the individual health departments.

Vehicle Excise Duty

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received calling for a reduction in vehicle excise duty for commercial vehicles.

Sir John Cope: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer has received a number of representations on this subject which he will consider carefully during the run up to the Budget.

Investment

Mr. Hain: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the amount for each year since 1979 invested in (a) property and (b) manufacturing industry; and what was the cumulative total over the period for each category, at constant prices.

Mr. Portillo: Estimates of manufacturing investment may be obtained from the Central Statistical Office database accessible through the House of Commons Library. Figures showing investment by the property sector are not available separately; these are combined on the CSO database with other industries in the financial sector.

Value Added Tax

Dr. Marek: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which countries in the EC impose a standard rate of VAT on books, newspapers and magazines.

Sir John Cope: Denmark is the only EC country to apply a standard rate of VAT to books and magazines. No EC country applies a standard rate of VAT to newspapers.

Mr. Olner: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many businesses have been fined for late payment of VAT in each of the last four years; and how much revenue has been raised by the Treasury by these means.

Sir John Cope [holding answer 26 January 1993]: Information is held about the number of VAT default surcharge assessments issued but not of the number of businesses which have been surcharged which will be smaller, as a business may be surcharged more than once in any year. The available information is as follows:

Number of surcharge assessments issued

	Number
April 1988-March 1989	426,000
April 1989-March 1990	415,000
April 1990-March 1991	451,000
April 1991-March 1992	490,000

The amount of default surcharge paid in the period from 1 April 1988 to 31 March 1992 was £337 million.

Textile Imports

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 20 January, Official Report, column 260, when he expects to make a determination of country of origin of the textile products imported by Dewhursts of Driffield which were held at port in December 1992.

Sir John Cope: Customs tell me that inquiries are continuing. I will therefore let the hon. Member have a full reply when matters are finalised.

Departmental Returns

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects the 1993 departmental reports to be published.

Mr. Portillo: Proposed publication dates for 1993 departmental reports are as follows:

House Prices

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 10 December 1992, Official Report, column 777, if he will publish figures for the percentage change in regional house prices to earnings ratios in each region between the third quarter of 1992 and the third quarter of 1991.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 26 January 1993]: Information on average earnings is collected each April for both Great Britain and Northern Ireland through the new earnings survey. Until April 1992, quarterly data were not available. Since then, quarterly estimates for Great Britain have been produced by projecting the results of the April survey by the monthly average earnings index (AEI). There are no quarterly estimates for Northern Ireland because the AEI covers Great Britain only. The following table therefore only shows regional figures for the third quarter of 1992. For Great Britain as a whole, the average earnings to house price ratio was 3·89, some 9 per cent. lower than in the third quarter of 1991.

Average house price to earnings ratio third quarter 1992

Region
Great Britain	3·89

Yorkshire and Humberside	3·72

Industrial Investment

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what amounts of money have been invested in British manufacturing industry in cash and real terms in each year since 1979.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 26 January 1993]: Estimates of manufacturing investment at current and constant prices may be obtained from the Central Statistical Office database accessible through the House of Commons Library.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the source of investment funds for British manufacturing industry in percentage terms from (a) banks, (b) the stock exchange, (c) self-generated and (d) other in each year since 1979.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 26 January 1993]: A statement of sources and uses of capital funds for all United Kingdom industrial and commercial companies is published in "Financial Statistics" table 8.2. Manufacturing companies are included in industrial and commercial companies but statements of sources and uses of capital funds for manufacturing companies, or for manufacturing industry, are not available.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the total level of industrial investment as a percentage of national output in each of the last 20 years for which figures are available.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 26 January 1993]: Estimates of industrial investment and of gross domestic product may be obtained from the Central Statistical Office database accessible through the House of Commons Library. Consistent information is available only from 1978.

Inflation

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has concerning the average level of inflation experienced by each member country of the European Community, by the United States of America, and by Japan, over the last five-year period for which figures are available; and if he will rank those countries by order of magnitude of the level of inflation.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 26 January 1993]: Consumer price inflation data are published in the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development's "Main Economic Indicators" and the Central Statistical Office's "Economic Trends".

Stock Exchange

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what amount and percentage of the funds invested on the stock exchange goes into new issues or rights issues; and how this has changed in each year since 1979.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 26 January 1993]: Details of money raised on the stock exchange are published by the stock exchange in the Stock Exchange Quarterly.

DEFENCE

European Defence

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what forecast he has made of the number of jobs in the defence industry that will be gained or lost as a result of the new proposals for European defence.

Mr. Aitken: I am unaware of any new proposals for European defence which are likely in themselves to affect employment in the defence industry.

Correspondence

Mr. Temple-Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when Ms. Gill Linscott of Wood View, Hope-under-Dinmore, Hertfordshire HR6 0PP, can expect a reply to her oral and written complaint to his Department on 14 October 1992, concerning low flying RAF aircraft under Ministry reference SEC(AS) 92/10/280.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Officials from my Department will write to Ms. Linscott once the investigation into her complaint being conducted by the RAF police has been completed.

Bosnia

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the additional 89 personnel to be deployed with British Forces in Bosnia as set out in his oral statement of 14 January, Official Report, column 1057, will be under United Nations command; and which vote will meet the costs of their deployment will be met by the Foreign Office vote.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Yes. The additional specialist personnel deployed to Bosnia are an integral part of the British force and as such subject to the same command arrangments as currently apply to the battalion group as part of the United Nations protection force. The same will apply to the forces now available with the carrier group led by HMS Ark Royal if these have to be deployed ashore. It has not yet been decided which Government Department will meet the cost of this deployment.

Tracked Vehicles

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many tracked vehicles, and of what type, are to be deployed as part of the artillery contingent to be sent to the Adriatic on Argus; and what armoured protection such vehicles possess.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Seven armoured personnel carriers and 29 vehicles designed for cross country use in winter conditions are deploying to the Adriatic. While it is not our practice to comment on the detail, they have the armoured protection assessed as necessary to enable them to undertake their tasks.

RAF Kemble

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the future plans for RAF Kemble, Gloucestershire; what consideration is being given to maintaining its present use; and what plans there are to sell all or part of the base.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Current plans envisage the Army continuing to use RAF Kemble for the temporary storage of vehicles until 31 March 1994. Further defence used of RAF Kemble after this date is currently under review. No decisions are expected until later this year. In the light of the Army's current use and the longer term uncertainty no plans exist to sell all or part of the base although we continue to liaise with the local authorities to determine their views against the eventuality that the site may be declared surplus to defence requirements in due course.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what further plans Her Majesty's Government have to provide technical and operational assurance to Russia to assist in the safe dismantlement of nuclear weapons following the START II agreement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We have no plans to provide assistance to Russia beyond that announced by my hon. Friend the Minister of State for Defence Procurement on 11 November at column 823. We will however continue to discuss issues relating to dismantling surplus nuclear warheads with the Russian authorities as necessary.

Experimental Establishments

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of the turnover at the Ministry of Defence proof and experimental establishment at Pendine is work carried out for the Ministry of Defence; and what percentage is for work carried out for private companies.

Mr. Aitken: The proof and experimental establishments (P and EEs) are maintained primarily for the conduct of proof and trials work for the Ministry of Defence; work for private companies at Pendine, and at the other P and EEs, accounts for less than 10 per cent. of their turnover.

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what would be the estimated cost of relocation of the work now being carried out at the Ministry of Defence proof and experimental establishment at Pendine.

Mr. Aitken: The estimates of relocation costs for the work now being carried out at each of the proof and experimental establishments are not yet complete. They will be an important factor in our review of test and evaluation activities.

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which proof and experimental establishments (land systems) are being considered for closures.

Mr. Aitken: The Director General of Test and Evaluation (DGT&E) is conducting a wide-ranging review of the Department's test and evaluation activities and facilities. This will look at each of his 40 test and evaluation establishments, including all the proof and experimental establishments. DGT and E is due to report his findings in May. Decisions on his recommendations will be taken by Ministers after full consultation with the trade unions, hon. Members and others.

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the turnover for 1991-92 and forecast turnover for 1992-93 for each of the five Ministry of Defence proof and experimental establishments (land systems); and what comparisons he has made of their cost effectiveness.

Mr. Aitken: It is not possible to produce figures on an exactly comparable basis for the two years in question because of changes in the Department's accounting practice and some rationalisation of facilities.

Subject to these provisos, the running cost details are as follows:

£ million

	1991-92	[1]1992-93
Cold Meece	1·8	2·4
Eskmeals	8·0	8·0
Environmental Test Centre Foulness	3·6	4·5
Pendine	7·6	7·0
Shoeburyness	11·7	17·2

[1] Projected.

The figures for Shoeburyness include P and EE Lavington which is a satellite of the former.

Cold Meece is scheduled to close on 31 March 1993.

Each establishment has different specialist capabilities and whilst the Department seeks to ensure that all are cost effective, comparisons on a purely financial basis would be misleading.

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate he has made of the construction cost in today's prices of building a facility to the same specifications as the 1500-metre test track at the Ministry of Defence proof and experimental establishment at Pendine.

Mr. Aitken: We are assessing our exact requirements for test-track facilities, and the cost of re-providing them should that prove necessary, as part of the review of test and evaluation facilities. Accurate cost figures are not yet available.

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give individual cash estimates as to the amount of work carried out for customers in the private sector at the Ministry of Defence proof and experimental establishment in Pendine in the last financial year.

Mr. Aitken: Estimates of the cost of work undertaken for private customers are confidential to the Department and the companies concerned.

Job Losses

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total number of jobs lost at Ministry of Defence establishments for each year since 1989-90 to the present and projected to 1996-97 for (a) Dyfed, (b) Wales and (c) Great Britain.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The information requested is set out in the table.

Net changes in the number of posts since 1989-90 in Dyfed, Wales and the United Kingdom

	Dyfed	Wales (including Dyfed)	United Kingdom (including Wales)
1989-90	−81	+11	+56
1990-91	−102	−54	−1,173
1991-92	−103	−9	−745
[1]1992-93	−50	−27	−3,300
[1]1993-94	+35	+17	−4,000
[1]1994-95	−176	−109	−2,900
[1]1995-96	−205	−135	−4,750
[1]1996-97	0	+73	−800

[1] These figures are based upon announcements made to date; they are therefore susceptible to change. It should also be noted that as establishments and units are Market Tested further changes may occur.

Nuclear Fuel Cores

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish the conclusions of the studies carried out into the relative safety of keeping used fuel cores on board decommissioned submarines or storing on land.

Mr. Aitken: The safety of used fuel cores, both on board decommissioned submarines and stored on land, has been confirmed by rigorous independent safety assessments.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when it is expected that the used fuel core from HMS Revenge will be removed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: I refer the hon. Lady to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) on 14 December at column 81.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans there are for the long-term disposal of used fuel cores from nuclear-powered submarines which are currently stored at Sellafield.

Mr. Aitken: It is planned to continue with the safe storage of nuclear submarine used fuel cores currently held at BNFL Sellafield. No decisions have been taken on their long-term disposal.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the usual time scale for submarines taken to Rosyth for decommissioning before being defuelled; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: There is no usual timescale; we have only previously taken one submarine to Rosyth for decommissioning.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give details of the minimum and maximum time period which submarines taken to Rosyth for decommissioning have had to wait before being defuelled; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: Only one submarine has been taken to Rosyth for decommissioning and defuelling has not yet commenced.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the expected time scale for any submarines taken to Rosyth in the future for decommissioning before being defuelled; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: We plan for a six-month timescale, but this will depend on the availability of docks for defuelling.

HMS Valiant

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when HMS Valiant is expected to return into service on completion of repairs at Rosyth dockyard; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: This is expected in May 1993.

HMS Renown

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost of the recent refit of HMS Renown at the time the contract was placed; what the final cost was on completion; and what are the reasons for the difference.

Mr. Aitken: The total estimated cost of the project at the time the contract was placed was just over £152 million at 1992-93 prices. Final cost certificates have not yet been presented but the current estimate of cost is in the region of £200 million.

The difference between these figures is due mainly to a change in the method of assessing costs following commercialisation—this refit straddled vesting day—programme delays and additional equipment improvements.

Weapons Proliferation

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his current assessment of the likely course of Iraq's nuclear weapons programme had they not been interrupted, in the light of information received from the United Nations inspection teams.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The United Nations inspection teams have found incontrovertible evidence that Iraq was developing a crude nuclear warhead design. The earliest that Iraq could have completed its first nuclear weapon, had its programme not been interrupted, would have been by 1993.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the countries which in his judgment currently possess (a) nuclear and (b) ballistic missiles.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Currently, strategic nuclear weapons are deployed in the United Kingdom, United States, France, China, Russia, Ukraine, Belarus and Kazakhstan. Countries possessing ballistic missiles, excluding NATO members, include Afghanistan, Belarus, Bulgaria, China, the Czech Republic, Egypt, Iran, Iraq, Israel, Kazakhstan, Libya, North Korea, Poland, Romania, Russia, Saudi Arabia, Slovakia, South Korea, Syria, Ukraine, United Arab Emirates, Vietnam and Yemen.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his current assessment of the countries who (a) possess chemical weapons, (b) possess biological weapons and (c) are engaged in research in developing chemical and biological weapons.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is assessed that approximately 20 countries either possess or may be developing an offensive chemical warfare capability. It is assessed that about 10 countries either possess or seek to acquire an offensive biological weapons capability.

SOCIAL SECURITY

London Weighting

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what London weightings are applied to social security benefits.

Mr. Burt: The social security system provides a comprehensive set of national benefits. Regional variations are therefore not generally appropriate, except where benefits reflect actual expenditure, such as those offering help with housing costs. A Greater London extension is available in income support for people in nursing and residential care homes.

Ozone Depletion

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many catastrophic leaks of ozone-depleting substances have occurred within his Department's buildings in the last five years.

Miss Widdecombe: Our records do not show that any such incident has occurred.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much funding has been allocated or spent to specifically deal with measures to reduce his Department's consumption of ozone-depleting substances.

Miss Widdecombe: Expenditure is mainly incurred as part of the capital works and building maintenance programmes. It is not possible to identify the extent to which environmental measures formed part of these programmes.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what the latest available figures are for his Department's total purchase of CFCs and HCFCs;

(2) how many CFC and HCFC installations are contained within his Department's buildings.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is currently not available. We are considering how this information can be collected to enable us to meet the commitment, in our green housekeeping strategy, to eliminate the use of ozone-depleting substances.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many portable halon fire extinguishers are contained within departmental buildings; and what measures are being taken to ensure their recycling and replacement.

Miss Widdecombe: Information about the number held is not available. Replacement of extinguishers is being undertaken by contractors who are working to professional codes of practice.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many CFC domestic fridges are contained within his Department's building.

Miss Widdecombe: Information about domestic fridges is not available centrally.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what guidance has been sought and received on alternatives or substitutes to the ozone-destroying chemicals in use by his Department.

Miss Widdecombe: Advice and guidance on the environmental aspects of ozone-depleting substances in buildings is provided by the Department of the Environment. Advice relating to particular buildings is provided by the managing contractors or agents responsible for the maintenance of the building or the suitably qualified consultants.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what proportion of his Department's consumption of ozone-depleting substances become controlled waste in terms of section 33 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990;

(2) what action has been taken to ensure that ozone-destroying substances consumed by his Department are identified as controlled wastes when they are no longer in use;

(3) what measures have been taken to ensure that ozone-destroying substances in use by his Department identified as controlled waste under the Environmental Protection Act 1990 do not reach the atmosphere.

Miss Widdecombe: Information about the quantity of ozone-depleting substances in use in the Department is not available. Such substances, when no longer in use, are removed by contractors who are required to comply with the relevant legislation and associated codes of practice.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how the departmental Green Minister has promoted protection of the ozone layer with specific policy measures; which possible measures have been considered and rejected; and on what grounds;

(2) what targets have been set for the recycling of ozone-depleting chemicals within departmental buildings.

Miss Widdecombe: A green housekeeping strategy, setting out the Department's policy for the use of its resources and designed to ensure that full account is taken of the needs of the environment, was adopted in 1992. All members of staff have been made aware of the strategy and an action plan for its implementation will be in place by the end of March. This will include, wherever possible, targets for the various measures. The policy will be reviewed periodically, and no possible measure has been rejected.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many refrigeration and air conditioning systems in his Department are equipped with automatic leak detection systems.

Miss Widdecombe: There is refrigerant leakage detection installed on some equipment but information on the number is not readily available.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what is the quantity of ozone-depleting substances recycled within his Department and returned to the manufacturer;

(2) if he will provide details from the maintenance and servicing record of the quantity and type of ozone-destroying chemicals used annually in his Department's refrigeration and air conditioning equipment for servicing and in leakages; and what proportion is removed for recycling.

Miss. Widdecombe: The information requested is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Our policy is to eliminate the use of these substances.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security by what date his Department's use of ozone-depleting chemicals will conform to EC regulations on limits on these chemicals.

Miss Widdecombe: Target dates for the recovery, recycling and phasing out of ozone depleting substances will be included in the Department's action plan, which will be in place by the end of March, for the implementation of our green housekeeping strategy. The aim will be to have taken all the appropriate measures to meet the phase out dates agreed at the European Council of Ministers on 15 December.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security which current uses of ozone-depleting chemicals by his Department are considered essential.

Miss Widdecombe: Information is not currently available, but we will be identifying uses of ozone-depleting substances in implementing our green housekeeping strategy.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make it his policy to purchase only ozone-friendly fridges that do not contain CFCs or HCFCs for his Department.

Miss Widdecombe: It is our existing policy to ensure that our purchasing activities take environmental considerations fully into account.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what quantity of HCFC 22 is purchased by his Department per annum.

Miss Widdecombe: The information is not available but it is our policy to purchase environmentally-friendly products where appropriate.

Means-tested Benefits

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the number of people made eligible for means-tested benefits because of the Government's imposition of a 1·5 per cent. pay limit for public sector workers; and what will be the total cost of payments of these extra benefits.

Mr. Burt: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Cumbernauld and Kilsyth (Mr. Hogg) on 30 November 1992 at column 68.

Cold Weather Payments

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the period of cold weather between 10 and 14 January; what was the average temperature during the period; what was the lowest temperature during the period; in which areas the payment of cold weather allowances was triggered; and what was the cost to the Exchequer.

Mr. Scott: The information is available in the Library.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the current level of cold weather payments; how it is calculated; how often it is uprated; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: Payments of £6 are made automatically to eligible people for every period of seven days where the average temperature is 0°C or below. The amount is designed to provide a significant contribution to extra heating costs and is kept under review. The main source of help with heating costs is provided through income support, and is uprated annually.

Income Support

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what extra money is to be given from April 1993 to those who currently receive the terminal-illness level of income support and are cared for by registered private nursing homes.

Mr. Burt: The income support personal expenses allowance will be uprated by the Rossi index (retail prices index less certain housing costs.) In addition £1 million has been transferred from the Social Security budget to the Department of Health for 1993-94 to ensure that additional funds are directed specifically to terminally ill people in hospices. This is in addition to the £1 million transferred for each of the years 1992-93 to 1994-95.

From April 1993, under the community care scheme, all new residents of nursing homes who need public support will have their needs assessed by the local authority who will contract with individual homes for their fees.

Invalid Care Allowances

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people would benefit each year and what is his estimate of the cost, of amending the present contribution conditions so as to allow contributions paid in any previous tax year, instead of the previous two, to count towards invalid care allowance recipients' entitlement to unemployment benefit.

Mr. Burt: The information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Claimants, Liverpool

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much unemployment benefit has been paid to claimants in the Liverpool travel-to-work area in the last 12 months and for each of the previous years for which figures are available.

Mr. Burt: The information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Industrial Diseases

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what recent representations he has had in regard to the Industrial Injuries Advisory Council's recommendation to him in August 1992 to prescribe emphysema and chronic bronchitis in relation to underground coalminers; what replies he is sending; what action he has so far taken in regard to the report; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: We have received a number of inquiries from Members of Parliament and members of the public about the council's recommendation and its implementation. Our response and the action we are taking are summarised in my reply to the right hon. Member on 14 December 1992 at column 76.

Actors

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether work within the acting profession may be classified as full time for the purposes of his Department's rules and regulations concerning income support and unemployment benefit claims.

Mr. Burt: People working less than 16 hours a week may qualify for income support provided they are available for work for not less than 24 hours a week. The rules apply in the same way to people who are employed or self-employed, whatever type of work they are engaged in.

Unemployment benefit may be payable for each day of unemployment in which a person earns £2 or less. But it is not payable for any week in which a person earns not less than £54 (the weekly earnings limit for national insurance contributions).

ENVIRONMENT

Construction Industry

14. Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has had with representatives of the construction industry as to possible changes in the present system of holding retention moneys; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: I have had no discussions about the general system of retention money. I am aware of concerns about this matter and welcome moves within the industry to examine alternatives. This is one of the matters that we expect to be considered in the proposed joint Government-industry review of contracting and procurement arrangements in the construction industry.

Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of increased activity in the housing and construction industry following the Chancellor of the Exchequer's autumn statement.

Sir George Young: Depending on the way local authorities spend the funds available, and the extent of the private sector funding attracted, we estimate that the additional spending generated by the autumn statement could generate between 40,000 and 90,000 employees years of employment in the construction industry in 1993-94.

We also estimate that the 1 per cent. cut in interest rates announced in the statement could result in an increase of 1 per cent. in construction output on all private works. In the short-term, with interest rates at their lowest since 1978, this will mainly benefit the housing sector.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement outlining those steps which have been taken by his Department since 9 April 1992 specifically to assist the United Kingdom construction industry; and what future action he intends to take to assist the construction industry.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 26 January 1993]: During this year's public expenditure round my Department was active in making the case for maintaining capital spending and infrastructure spending. Measures which will assist the industry include:

- £750 million to support the Housing Corporation
- £1·75 billion of spending from local authority capital receipts
- retention of provision for the Jubilee line extension
- relaxation of the rules for private and joint financing of infrastructure and other projects
- a capital partnership scheme to assist local authorities in levering private sector contributions to projects
- special tax and capital allowances

We have supported export efforts by the industry. Ministers led trade delegations to Indonesia and Vietnam. We have worked with industry and the DTI to support building material task forces for specific countries.

We have maintained an active research programme and increased industry collaboration during the year. We have established working groups with the industry to improve knowledge and understanding of new legislative developments—here and in the European Community. We have established an advisory committee to improve the coverage of construction statistics and the use made of them.

We have continued to advance the interest of building material producers in the development of the Construction Products Directive and other associated European standards.

We have introduced new building regulations which reduce the regulatory burden on the industry while giving greater flexibility for designers.

I have also established a fortnightly series of meetings at which representatives of the industry can put to me any matters of concern to them.

Superquarries

15. Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his Department's policy in respect of superquarries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: I believe that coastal superquarries could provide an increasing contribution to aggregates supplies in England. Their potential has been taken into account in the current review of "Mineral Planning Guidance Note 6" which is now the subject of public consultation.

Local Authority Fraud

16. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate he has made of the cost to public funds of local authority fraud; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: Auditors of local authorities report to the Audit Commission all cases of fraud of £500 or over. On this basis, the amount reported for 1991-92 was £930,000; and for the first nine months of 1992-93 is estimated at £2·5 million.

Armed Forces (Housing)

17. Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the impact on the demand for local authority housing of the acceleration of retirement from the armed forces under the "Options for Change" programme.

Sir George Young: Inquiries by my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence about the intentions of people leaving the armed forces under the "Options for Change" programme indicate that they will be dispersing around the country. This means that the number of housing applications to any individual authority is unlikely to be significant. Officials will continue to monitor the position in succeeding phases of the programme.

Aggregate Mining

18. Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received in respect of the recently issued new guidelines on aggregate mining in England.

Mr. Baldry: No representations have yet been received. The consultation period runs until the end of March.

Sewerage

19. Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress he has made on fulfilling undertakings made at the North sea conference regarding treatment of sewerage prior to discharge into the sea.

Mr. Maclean: The United Kingdom will be fulfilling the North sea conference commitments through complying with the 1991 EC Urban Waste Water Treatment Directive. This requires the provision of sewage treatment at dates between 1998 and 2005. The Department, the National Rivers Authority and the water industry have for 18 months been working together very closely on the action needed to implement the directive.

House Building

20. Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many council houses and how many housing association houses were built in 1979 and in the latest year for which figures are available.

Sir George Young: The Department's latest estimates show that housing associations completed 23,400 dwellings in Great Britain during the 12 months ending November 1992, and local authorities and new towns completed 4,400 dwellings. Housing association completions are due to rise to over 66,000 in the financial year 1992-93.

The comparable figures for 1979 are 17,800 completions by housing associations and 85,000 by local authorities and new towns.

Local Government Finance

21. Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make adjustments to standard spending assessments for the financial year 1993-94.

Mr. Robin Squire: We have now completed the formal period of consultation in respect of the proposals for the 1993-94 settlement which were announced by my right hon. Friend on 26 November 1992. The Government's final decisions based on a careful consideration of all of the representations received will be laid before the House shortly.

27. Mr. Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from the local authority associations about the standard spending assessments for each local authority since 26 November 1992.

Mr. Robin Squire: The Secretary of State has received detailed representations from each of the local authority associations. Full consideration has been given to all of the issues raised by them together with those raised by individual local authorities. The "Local Government Finance Report for 1993-94" incorporating final decisions on standard spending assessments will be laid before the House very shortly.

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what criteria are used in assessing the area costs allowance of standard spending assessments for local authorities; and if he will make a statement on their application to Gloucestershire.

Mr. Robin Squire: The area cost adjustment is based on an analysis of relative earnings in different parts of the country using the new earnings survey. The analysis focuses on those occupational groups which are most relevant to the labour markets in which local authorities operate. The information is adjusted to remove any distortions which might arise from variations in the mix of occupational groups in different areas. The area cost adjustment also allows for the assumed proportion of expenditure on each service likely to be related to labour costs.

Because the new earnings survey is based on a relatively small sample, the underlying analysis can provide sufficiently robust results only at regional level. This analysis has shown that only London and the south-east face labour costs which are consistently and significantly above the national average. Hence Gloucestershire, along with all other authorities outside the south-east, does not benefit from the area cost adjustment.

Gulf War (Ecological Recovery)

22. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment his Department has now made of the length of time taken for the Gulf environment to make a full ecological recovery from military action in the Gulf war.

Mr. Maclean: My Department has made no specific assessment. The June 1992 report of the United Nations Secretary General—a copy of which has been placed in the Library—summarised the results of action to assess and ameliorate the Gulf ecology. It notes some quick and effective recovery in air quality and vegetation. On the details of the impact on the marine environment we await the report of a three-month research vessel cruise carried out in 1992.

Air Quality

23. Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what new proposals he is considering to tackle the problems of air quality affecting British cities.

Mr. Maclean: We set out our proposals in chapter 11 of the White Paper "This Common Inheritance: The Second Year Report" (Cm. 2068), published last October. They include tighter standards on emissions from vehicles and industry, increased effort on air quality monitoring in our cities, and development of new standards and guidelines for a range of pollutants.

Oil Transport

24. Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how he intends to ensure that environmental considerations are in future taken into account in establishing rules for maritime transport of oil.

29. Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how he intends to ensure that environmental considerations are in future taken into account in establishing rules for the maritime transport of oil.

Mr. Howard: The International Maritime Organisation has been taking environmental considerations into account in establishing rules for maritime transport since at least the time of the Torrey Canyon disaster in 1967. In the United Kingdom, we shall be considering what further changes are desirable in the light of the report of the inquiry by Lord Donaldson of Lymington into the further measures needed to protect the United Kingdom coastline from pollution from merchant shipping. At the European level, following Monday's extraordinary joint Environment/Transport Council, both Ministers of the Environment and the Ministers of Transport will be considering how to improve the regulation of shipping in the light of proposals from the EC Commission.

Rented Accommodation

25. Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent representations he has received over the shortage of affordable rented accommodation.

Sir George Young: We receive many representations about provision of affordable rented housing, we are pursuing a number of policies, both through provision of new units and through measures to maximise use of existing property, to ensure that a decent home is in reach of every family.

Council Tax

26. Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of local government expenditure in 1993-94 it is estimated will be financed by the council tax.

Mr. Robin Squire: The precise proportion of local government expenditure which will be financed by the council tax in 1993-94 will not be known until all local authorities have set their budgets.

Lead-free Petrol

28. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the current percentage of lead-free petrol sales; and how this figure compares with the three previous years.

Mr. Maclean: At the end of November last year, sales of unleaded petrol accounted for 49·2 per cent. of the United Kingdom market, compared with an average of 19 per cent. in 1989, 34 per cent. in 1990 and 41 per cent. in 1991.

House Building

30. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the latest figures for house building in the public sector.

Mr. Baldry: It is provisionally estimated that housing associations completed 6,700 new dwellings in England during the three months from September to November 1992. Over the same period some 500 new dwellings were completed by English local authorities. The number of completions by housing associations is due to rise to 66,000 in the financial year 1992-93.

River Pollution

31. Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he has taken to ensure that any proposals to close collieries do not lead to river pollution.

Mr. Maclean: It is for the British Coal and the National Rivers Authority, in the first place, to assess any environmental effects of pit closures and what measures might need to be taken to avoid pollution. My officials and the staff of the NRA have been in frequent contact about pollution from closed mines, and arrangements have been made between British Coal and the NRA for effective liaison over any proposed closures.

Recycling, Chelmsford

32. Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the development of recycling in the Chelmsford local authority area.

Mr. Maclean: The Government are responsible for national policy on recycling but it is the duty of each waste collection authority to produce a recycling plan for its area. Chelmsford district council has submitted such a plan to my Department. The Department told the council on 11 November 1992 that it could publish its plan, which should now be made available for public inspection. I suggest that my hon. Friend contacts the council and asks to see its plan, if he has not already done so.

Local Government Employees

33. Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total number of employees in local government in England and Wales.

Mr. Robin Squire: There were 2,406,383 employees in local government in England at June 1992. This is the equivalent of 1,848,607 full-time staff.

Staffing levels of local authorities in Wales are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Local Government Finance, Barnet

34. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about the standard spending assessment and capping limits of Barnet council for 1993-94.

Mr. Robin Squire: I met a delegation consisting of councillors and officials from Barnet council on Monday 21 December. I have given careful consideration to the various points which Barnet has raised, both at that meeting and in correspondence, as I have to all representations received during the consultation period, before reaching final decisions on the revenue support grant settlement and relevant notional amounts, which I intend to announce very shortly.

Environmental Protection

35. Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made in environmental protection over the last year.

Mr. Maclean: The second year report on the 1990 Environment White Paper, published in October 1992, describes progress made over the last year on over 400 environmental commitments.

Local Authority Corruption

36. Mr. Couchman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on his plans to eliminate local authority corruption.

Mr. Robin Squire: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave earlier today, Official Report, col. 1022, to my hon. Friends the Members for Colne Valley (Mr. Riddick) and for Elmet (Mr. Batiste).

House Condition Survey

37. Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will publish the English house condition survey.

Sir George Young: The results of the English house condition survey will be published this year.

Colleges, Nottingham

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the reduction in financial support for Nottinghamshire county council as a result of colleges funding themselves; and what has been the effect on Nottingham of the area cost adjustment.

Mr. Robin Squire: The Education element of the standard spending assessment (SSA) for Nottinghamshire county council for 1993-94 reflects the responsibilities which remain with the authority following the transfer of further education. I estimate that in 1992-93 the education SSA element in Nottinghamshire would have been £47·8 million less if the transfer had taken place in that financial year.

Nottinghamshire do as not benefit from the area cost adjustment. Analysis has shown that only London and the south-east face labour costs which are significantly above the national average.

Timber Species

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to support the listing of threatened tropical timber species under the proposed revision of the European Community regulation relating to the implementation of the convention on international trade in endangered species, flora and forna; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Those species of tropical timber which are listed on CITES are already controlled under EC regulations implementing the convention in the Community. We shall seek to ensure that these species are given at least the same level of protection in the new regulation. We shall also support the inclusion of further tropical timber species whenever this is justified by the application of sound scientific criteria relating to their conservation status.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will seek to secure that all timber species are included within annex D of the new EC regulation on the trade in wild plants and animals.

Mr. Maclean: We support the European Commission's proposal to list timber species already protected under CITES in annexes A, B and C of the new regulation. We are also prepared to support the listing of further species in these annexes or in annex D if they meet relevant scientific criteria.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what account his decision on the authorisation for the licensing of the thermal oxide reprocessing plant at Sellafield will take of the letter sent to him in October 1992 by the chairman of the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee, on the ways in which radioactive waste arising from reprocessing foreign spent fuel at Sellafield will be handled.

Mr. Maclean: In accordance with the provisions of the Radioactive Substances Act 1960, there has been extensive consultation on the draft authorisations for the Sellafield site. All representations will be taken into account by the chief inspector of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution, my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State in exercising their powers under the Act.

Hydrochlorofluorocarbons

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will outline the main recommendations which will be submitted by his Department to the Council of Ministers in June 1993 concerning the phasing-out of hydrochlorofluorocarbons by chemical companies.

Mr. Maclean: In discussions on hydrochlorofluorocarbons control within the European Community, the Government will continue to press for stricter controls than those in Copenhagen. These will include a 2015 phase out, and a consumption cap of 2·5 per cent.

Ferro-Alloys, Glossop

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what have been the results, on a week-by-week basis, of the monitoring that has been carried out by his Department of the emissions from the Ferro-Alloys chimney in Glossop, Derbyshire, since August 1992.

Mr. Maclean: Ferro-Alloys Ltd., Glossop is required to monitor continuously the emission from its stack for the rate of release of sulphur dioxide. The maximum permitted emission is 113 kg per hour. Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution (HMIP) is provided with the monitoring results on a monthly basis. The results so far are as follows:

September average for the month	97 kg/hr
October average for the month	105 kg/hr
November average for the month	105 kg/hr
December average for the month	98 kg/hr

Check monitoring carried out by HMIP suggests that the monitor over-estimates the actual emission by 10 per cent. This is considered to give a generous safety factor.

Chlorofluorocarbons

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to place a ban on the manufacture and import of foams made with chlorofluorocarbons.

Mr. Maclean: The Government's policy on CFCs, which follows the approach in the Montreal Protocol and the relevant EC legislation, is to eliminate them by controlling their production and supply rather than their use. We therefore have no plans to ban products containing CFCs.

Project Assessment

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to extend the range of projects for which an environmental assessment will be required.

Sir George Young: We hope to lay regulations before Easter to implement the proposals announced on 16 December 1992 in my answer to the hon. Member for Windsor and Maidenhead (Mr. Trend).

Local Government, Liverpool

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many people were employed (a) full time and (b) part time in local government in Liverpool in each year since 1987.

Mr. Robin Squire: The information is as follows:

Numbers employed in local government in Liverpool
At June of each year

	(a) Full-time	(b) Part-time
1987	20,912	10,356
1988	20,680	10,394
1989	19,360	10,394
1990	19,085	9,705
1991	18,887	9,797
1992	17,532	9,659

Environmental Statements

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he plans to publish the proposed new good practice guide on the improvement of the quality of environmental statements.

Sir George Young: We expect to issue guidance later this year on the preparation of environmental statements for projects subject to planning control.

Wild Plants and Animals

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to seek to amend clauses on proof monitoring and the list of species included within the European Community regulations on the trade in wild plants and animals.

Mr. Maclean: Negotiations on the proposed new EC regulation on the wildlife trade are continuing. The lists of species to be included on the annexes have yet to be considered in detail. We hold that the principal controls should be extended to non-CITES species where there are sound scientific reasons, and support a simple system of wider monitoring. The system adopted, including the requirements for proof, must be enforceable and kept as simple as possible.

Planning Policy

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement outlining the Government's response to the recommendations on planning policy contained in the CBI report "Shaping the Nation".

Mr. Baldry: The Government's response to this report was set out in the speech my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment gave at the CBI's national conference on 9 November 1992. In that speech, he welcomed the CBI's report and endorsed most of its recommendations. In particular, he welcomed the recommendations on the need for business and local planning authorities to work more closely together, on the importance of a strategic approach based on regional planning guidance and flexible development plans, and on the need for local authorities to set out clear statements of the service they propose to offer to their customers. He indicated that the Government could not agree to the proposal for an annual policy paper with a five-year forward core funding commitment on infrastructure expenditure. A copy of the speech is available in the Library of the House.

Homelessness

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many families are in temporary accommodation in Nottingham as a result of mortgage repossessions; and what proportion this constitutes of the overall figure for homelessness in Nottingham.

Mr. Baldry: During the year ending September 1992, 5 per cent. of homeless families accepted in priority need at Nottingham had been the subject of mortgage repossession. The number of such families currently in temporary accommodation is not available.

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to reduce homelessness among single people without children who are below the age of retirement and other groups of people not accepted as statutorily homeless by local authorities.

Mr. Baldry: Under the Government's rough sleepers initiative in central London we have made £96 million available over three years to provide 950 new places in hostels for people sleeping rough, and 2,900 places in more permanent accommodation for people in hostels to move on to.

My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced in his autumn statement that further resources of £86 million would be made available over the next three years to build on the success of the rough sleepers initiative in assisting people who sleep rough in central London. On 18 January my hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Planning issued a discussion paper on the future of the initiative to groups in the voluntary sector and other interested parties. An announcement about the future of the initiative will be made in the light of responses to that paper.

Nationally, the Department makes grants under section 73 of the Housing Act 1985 to support the national homelessness advice service and some 150 projects run by voluntary organisations throughout England that provide direct, practical help to homeless people. Resources in 1993-94 will be increased to £6·5 million, from £6·1 million this year.

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the average cost for keeping families in (a) permanent council accommodation and (b) temporary accommodation in Nottingham in each of the last three years.

Mr. Baldry: I regret that this information is not available to the Department.

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on which local authorities in Great Britain have voluntary appeals procedures for people to appeal against a council's decision to turn them away as not meeting statutory homeless criteria; and if he will issue model criteria for assessing those appeals.

Mr. Baldry: The Department does not hold the information requested. Our code of guidance to local authorities about operating the homelessness legislation recommends that authorities should have appeals procedures in place; that any review of a decision should be carried out by a senior officer who should ensure that the case has been properly processed; and that authorities should consider establishing appeals panels at member level with a chairman who is independent of the decision process. Decisions by local authorities about homelessness applications are open to challenge in the courts.

Urban Regeneration

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if the financial memorandum which he proposes to issue to the urban regeneration agency requires the agency to consult (a) training and enterprise councils, (b) urban development corporations or (c) chambers of commerce in areas affected by its proposals before the preparation of its corporate plan;

(2) if the financial memorandum which he proposes to issue to the urban regeneration agency requires the agency to consult local authorities affected by its proposals before the preparation of its corporate plan.

Mr. Robin Squire: We will be issuing clear guidance to the agency about consultation with local authorities, the private sector and other bodies involved in regeneration. It will be for the agency to decide how to put that into effect.

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will provide a breakdown of urban regeneration expenditure by region in the most recent year for which data is available.

(2) if he will publish a breakdown of urban regeneration expenditure, by category of expenditure, for each year since 1980 in constant prices.

Mr. Robin Squire: Since 1980, my Department's urban group of programmes has spent as follows:

	Outturn prices £ million	At 1992-93 constant prices £ million
1981-82	162	303
1982-83	283	494
1983-84	325	542
1984-85	450	715
1985-86	436	656
1986-87	442	644
1987-88	[1]514	711
1988-89	598	771
1989-90	[2]816	987
1990-91	969	1,083
1991-92	987	1,031
[3]1992-93	1,016	1,016

[1] Includes task forces and Docklands light railway operating costs from 1987-88 onwards.
[2] Includes city action teams from 1989-90 onwards.
[3] Estimated.

Individual programme expenditure for 1992-93 is expected to be as follows:

	Estimated outturn £ million
City challenge[1]	63·5
Urban programme	243·1
City grants	59·6
Derelict land (net of receipts)[2]	94·6
Urban development corporations and Docklands light railway (net of receipts)	514·5
Manchester Olympic bid	13·1
Task forces	23·0
City action teams	4·4
	1,015·8

[1] Programme also supported by £19 million a year from the Housing Corporation.
[2] Includes provision for derelict land research.

Programme information for previous years is available in relevant Public Expenditure White Papers and the Department's annual reports; the 1993 annual report will be published shortly.

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish an estimated breakdown of the total urban home expenditure for 1993-94 between (a) city challenge, (b) urban programme, (c) urban development corporations and (d) other.

Mr. Robin Squire: In 1993-94, my Department will be providing specific urban resources as follows:

	1993-94 £ million
(a) City challenge[1]	213·5
(b) Urban programme	175·6
(c) Urban development corporations and Docklands light railway	337·4

[1] Programme also supported by £19 million a year from the Housing Corporation.
[2] Includes city grants, derelict land grant, Manchester olympic bid, task forces and city action teams.

Further information will be published shortly in the Department's 1993 annual report.

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if the resources for the constituent programmes of the urban regeneration agency next year will be subsumed within the total urban block expenditure of his Department.

Mr. Robin Squire: Following the autumn statement, my right hon. and learned Friend announced that £177 million would be made available from within the urban block for city grant and derelict land grant programmes in 1993-94, including DLG receipts and administrative set up costs for the urban regeneration agency. These programmes, together with DTI's English Estates, will transfer to the new agency when it comes into being.

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a breakdown of the proposed urban block expenditure in the current year and next year by region.

Mr. Robin Squire: Expected breakdown of proposed urban block expenditure, for the current year, is as follows:

Region	£ million
North West	166·1
Northern	148·5
Eastern	4·0
South East	1·2
South West	30·4
London	[1]318·2
East Midlands	33·8
Merseyside	62·7
Yorkshire/Humberside	94·9
West Midlands	142·1
Not yet attributable	28·3
Total	[2]1,030·2

[1] Includes Dockland Light Railway operating costs.
[2] Total for city challenge pacemakers excludes £19 million from the Housing Corporation.
[2] Total includes £14·4 million derelict land grant receipts.

A regional breakdown of 1993-94 urban block expenditure is not yet available.

Nottinghamshire (Funding)

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what method of calculation has been used to establish the reduction in funding for Nottinghamshire county council arising from further education colleges funding themselves in future.

Mr. Robin Squire: The standing spending assessment (SSA) element for education in 1993-94 reflects the responsibilities of local authorities for all aspects of education, including those of further education which will remain the responsibility of authorities. There has been no reduction in the 1993-94 SSA. for 1992-93, £2·3 billion was implicitly allowed for further education within SSAs of which it is estimated that £47·7 million was attributable to Nottinghamshire.

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how long it is planned to take for affected areas in Nottinghamshire to receive proposed extra money to deal with their special needs in the event of pit closures going ahead.

Mr. Robin Squire: My Department is making available £5 million under the coalfield areas fund and considering enterprise zone designations for areas which may be affected by possible closures. We have already received bids in respect of the coalfield areas fund from local authorities in Nottingham and elsewhere, in order that resources can be made available as soon as decisions are taken following the coal review.

These initiatives are part of the substantial packages of measures announced by the President of the Board of Trade on 13 and 19 October 1992. Decisions on the implementation of these measures will be taken in the light of the outcome of the coal review.

Housing Associations

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take steps to prevent housing associations from buying new commercially built property; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: We have no plans to prevent housing associations from buying new commercially built property, providing such property offers good value for money in addressing local housing needs.

As part of the £750 million package to boost the housing market in the United Kingdom, which was announced by the Chancellor of the Exchequer in the autumn statement, £580 million was made available to the Housing Corporation to enable housing associations to purchase new, empty and repossessed properties in England.

The proportion of new properties bought so far is high, but this is because these are the deals which can be completed most quickly. The corporation expects the proportion of private treaty and repossession sales to increase significantly. All purchases will reduce the current over-supply of homes on the market and so have a beneficial effect in stabilising prices and stimulating confidence.

I am delighted with the rapid progress of the package so far, which has seen 11,812 purchases approved by 22 January. I congratulate the Housing Corporation and the housing associations involved.

Housing, Hampshire

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total number of housing starts in Hampshire in each year since 1987 by (a) local authorities, (b) housing associations and (c) private companies.

Mr. Baldry: Estimates of housebuilding starts by sector for each local authority area in Hampshire are shown in the publication "Local Housing Statistics". Figures for 1987 to 1991 are shown in tables 1(c) to 1(g) of the October 1992 edition—issue number 103. A copy of this publication is in the Library.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many households were accepted as homeless and in priority need in each Hampshire district council area in each year since 1987.

Mr. Baldry: Local authorities in England report the number of households they accept as homeless and in priority need in their annual housing investment programme (HIP1) returns.

The available information for individual authorities in Hampshire for 1987, 1988 and 1989 are in column C1B of the "HIP1 All Items Prints" for those years, for 1990 and 1991 in column C2D1 of the "HIP1 All Items Prints" for those years and for 1992 in column C2A1 of the "1992 HIP1 All Items Print".

Copies of all documents are in the Library.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the average level of housing association rents in Hampshire in each of the years 1987 to 1992 expressed in (a) actual prices and (b) 1989 prices.

Mr. Baldry: The averages on a weekly basis of registered fair rents for unfurnished housing association accommodation, and of assured tenancy rents for housing association lettings, in Hampshire are as follows:

£ per week including services

Sulphur Dioxide Emissions

Mr. Cann: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the current level of sulphur dioxide emissions in the United Kingdom; and what the level was two years ago.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the oral answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Govan (Mr. Davidson) earlier today.

Repossession Orders

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many mortgage possession actions were entered in county courts in England and Wales in 1992; how many suspended orders were made; and how many outright orders were made.

Mr. Baldry: The information has been published today and placed in the Library.

Manchester Housing Committee

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what reply the Minister for Housing and Planning is making to the letter sent to him on 18 January by the chairman of Manchester's housing committee; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: My hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Planning has today written to the chairman of Manchester city council's housing committee explaining that the figure of 5,000 empty council homes in Manchester, which he quoted in his interview with Brian Walden on 17 January, is based on the council's own returns. It represents the total number of vacant council properties and does not distinguish between capital voids (ie properties awaiting demolition or improvement) and management voids (ie. units of accommodation which became vacant through the movement of tenants).

Landfill Pricing

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will publish the report on landfill pricing commissioned by his Department in the summer of 1992.

Mr. Maclean: I intend that the report will be published by Her Majesty's Stationery Office next month.

Crime Prevention

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Leicester, East (Mr. Vaz) of 11 January, Official Report, column 656, how much of the funding of each urban programme authority listed was spent on crime prevention work for each of the last three years.

Mr. Robin Squire: This information is not available.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much funding each city challenge authority received at 1992 prices for each of the last three years; and how much of this was spent on crime prevention work.

Mr. Robin Squire: A total of £7·5 million will be made available to each city challenge authority in 1992-93, which is the first year of city challenge funding.

City challenge expenditure covers a wide range of activities contributing to urban regeneration. Each city challenge action plan reflects local needs and opportunities. Some plans place high priority on crime prevention expenditure. However, it is not possible to quantify accurately expenditure directed solely at crime prevention.

HIP Allocations

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what housing improvement programme bid was made by Darlington borough council, and what was the actual allocation given for each year since 1983.

Mr. Baldry: Information on the housing investment programme is given in the table. The figures for 1990-91 and subsequent years are not directly comparable with those for earlier years because of the revisions to the capital finance system introduced in April 1990.

These figures do not include any supplementary credit approvals issued during the year.

[2] From 1990-91, under the new capital finance system, the HIP allocation is an assessment of relative need for housing capital expenditure rather than a directly borrowing approval. Borrowing approval is now conveyed by the single, all service, basic credit approval.

[1] Allocations for the years up to and including 1989-90 are final allocations, ie the initial allocation plus any increases to the initial allocation made in-year. The allocations figures for 1990-91 and subsequent years are the HIP allocations (housing annual capital guidelines plus specified capital grants) issued prior to the start of the financial year. These figures do not include any supplementary credit approvals issued during the year.

[3] The regional expenditure totals do not sum to the overall England totals as these totals include some expenditure (eg the housing element of the urban programme, leasing) for which regional estimates are not available and because the England totals have been reconciled with other expenditure data reported by authorities.

City Grant

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list by region the city grant projects funded in each of the last three years, and the amount of funding allocated.

Mr. Robin Squire: I have today placed in the Library of the House details of city grant projects approved in each of the last three financial years by region. The list excludes projects which were approved but where the applicant did not proceed.

Chemical Industry

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the first tranche of the process guidance notes for the chemical industry sector processes prescribed under part I of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 will be available.

Mr. Maclean: I am pleased to report that nine notes, which are the first tranche of the chief inspector's guidance to inspectors in the chemical industry sector, are published today. These notes cover organic chemical processes, and have been drawn up following completion of research reviews. Relevant industries and other bodies have been given the opportunity to put forward their comments. The notes will provide a sound network within which inspectors can assess applications for the authorisation of new processes and existing processes. They represent a further stage in the introduction of integrated pollution control.

A set of the notes will be placed in the Library of the House as soon as they are published.

The preparation of guidance notes for the second and third tranches of chemical industry processes to come under control is well advanced. Further notes will be published later in the year.

House Purchases

Mr. Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many houses have so far been purchased under the special package announced in the autumn statement; and from whom they have been brought.

Mr. Howard: Of the £750 million announced in the autumn statement to boost the housing market in the United Kingdom, £577 million went to the Housing Corporation to enable housing associations to purchase new, empty and repossessed properties in England. The latest figures from the corporation show that by 22 January approvals had been granted for the purchase of 11,812 properties; 3,394 from private individuals; 425 from mortgage lenders in possession; 7,724 from builders or developers, and 269 from other sources.

Another £20 million was made available to the corporation to support the tenants' incentive scheme and £30 million to local authorities to support the cash incentive scheme, to encourage housing association and local authority tenants in England to move out and buy their own homes.

Waste Disconnections

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many families with children were disconnected from water supplies due to non-payment of water rates in 1992.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 25 January 1993]: Information on disconnections of water supplies to families with children is not available. Total numbers of domestic disconnections for 1991-92 were given in my answer to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Hillsborough (Mrs. Jackson) on 4 November 1992, Official Report, columns 234-35. Information on domestic disconnections for the six month period from 1 April to 30 September 1992 was given in my answer to the hon. Member for Bow and Poplar (Ms. Gordon) on 18 November 1992, Official Report, columns 204-5.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has concerning the average annual percentage growth in productivity in the (a) manufacturing and (b) construction industry in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available in each member country of the European Community.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 26 January 1993]: A comparison of labour productivity in the manufacturing industry between the United Kingdom and its major trading partners can be found in the Treasury Bulletin dated summer 1992, a copy of which can be found in the Library of the House. The available figures for other members of the European Community are set out in the table:

Contaminated Land

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury of 20 January, Official Report, column 264, for what reasons he has decided not to place copies of responses to the first consultation exercise on contaminated land in the Library prior to his decision being announced.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 26 January 1993]: In my previous answer of 20 January, Official Report, column 264, I indicated that we are still considering the way forward on the proposals. We are still receiving representations on the issues set out in our first consultation paper, which were subsequently modified in our second paper. We will publish responses once a final decision has been taken on the whole question of registers.

Written Answers to Questions

Thursday 28 January 1993

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Justices of the Peace

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many justices of the peace are aged (a) under 30 years, (b) under 40 years, (c) under 50 years, (d) under 60 years (e) over 60 years.

Mr. John M. Taylor: This information can be supplied only at disproportionate cost. The aim of the advisory committees which advise the Lord Chancellor and the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on the appointment of justices of the peace is to find as many candidates as possible under the age of 55, and particularly those in their 30s and 40s, in order to maintain a balanced age structure.

House Buying

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make it his policy to propose amendments to current legislation in order to secure that any commitment to buy or sell a house made orally, or in writing, is legally enforceable in England and Wales.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The law already allows any house buyer and seller to enter into a binding contract once the terms of that contract have been agreed. The Government do not propose to alter the legal requirement that contracts for the sale or other disposition of an interest in land shall be made in writing.

Magistrates Courts

Mr. Cox: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when he expects to publish his Department's proposals for the reorganisation of the magistrates courts service in outer London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: A consultation paper on the future geographical and structural organisation of the magistrates' courts service in the Greater London area will be published by my Department next month. decisions will be made following the three-month consultation period in the light of responses received.

Magistrates Courts

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what proposals he has received for removing the necessity for defendants to be represented at unopposed adjournment hearings in the magistrates courts; and what estimate he has made of the savings that might thereby be achieved.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Law Society has made such a proposal. The Lord Chancellor will be considering how best to take it forward. Estimates of the likely financial effect will be produced in the course of that consideration.

Law Centres

Mr. Hoon: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans the Lord Chancellor's Department has to promote the development of law centres.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Law centres are primarily a local service and as such their development is primarily a local concern. However, the Legal Aid Board and the Law Centres Federation have recently established a working party to examine ways in which new arrangements could be made for the payment of legal aid work by law centres and other agencies which employ solicitors involved in providing advice, assistance and representation.

Legal Aid

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the amount of legal aid paid out in North Yorkshire for each of the last four years; and if he will give the number of cases supported in each of those years.

Mr. John M. Taylor: I refer my hon. Friend to the replies I gave to the hon. Member for York (Mr. Bayley), on 20 January, at columns 261-62. North Yorkshire is covered by two Legal Aid Board area offices at Newcastle-upon-Tyne and at Leeds. It is not possible to distinguish between assisted persons residing in North Yorkshire and other areas served by those offices.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what proposals he has received for cost penalties to be imposed on legal aid matrimonial litigants when their non-co-operation has led to delays occasioning increased costs; and what estimate he has made of the savings that might thereby be achieved.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Law Society has made such a proposal, which it acknowledges needs further thought. Estimates of the likely financial effect will be produced in due course.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what proposals he has received to limit the availability of legal aid for the costs of (a) counsel being attended by a solicitors' representative and (b) two counsel when a QC is assigned; and what estimate he has made of the savings that might thereby be achieved.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Law Society has made such proposals, though they have been under consideration in the efficiency commission for some time and it has hitherto been difficult to secure any restraint on costs as a result. The Lord Chancellor will be considering how best to take these proposals forward. Estimates of the likely financial effect will be produced in the course of that consideration.

Legal Fees

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what proposals his Department has received for fees for legal work to remain at the levels set in April 1992; and what estimate he has made of the savings that might thereby be achieved.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Both the General Council of the Bar and the Law Society have proposed that the statutory rates for legal aid work in 1993-94 should remain at 1992-93 levels. This proposal formed part of a series of measures put forward by the professions as an alternative to measures to control legal aid expenditure announced by the Lord Chancellor. However, as the Lord Chancellor had not intended to propose an uprating for 1993-94 the professions' proposal would not achieve any savings other than those already considered by the Lord Chancellor.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Witness Protection

Mr. Butcher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will review rules of evidence procedures, exchange of statutory requirements and court procedures in order to provide better protection of witnesses who are called to aid the prosecution of violent offenders.

Mr. Jack: A number of safeguards have been introduced to protect victims and other witnesses from intimidation or fear of intimidation. These include measures to prevent an individual's address appearing as a matter of course on witness statements; to delay, except in certain circumstances, disclosure of the address until the start of summary trial, full committal or Crown court trial; to allow child witnesses to give evidence in certain cases by closed-circuit television and to allow a video recording of an earlier investigative interview with a child witness to be accepted as evidence in chief; and to provide anonymity for victims of rape and other specified sexual offences. The operation of these, and other, safeguards is kept under general review, but we have no present plans for a more formal exercise.

Bail Offences

Mr. Butcher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what figures he has on the level of offenders re-offending while on bail, for the latest convenient period.

Mr. Jack: Such figures are not held centrally. Our research indicates that although the absolute number of offences committed by people on bail has risen by about 26,000 between 1985 and 1990, as the number of people granted bail has increased, the proportion of those found guilty of offences committed while they were on bail has remained at about 10 to 12 per cent.—"Offending whilst on bail: a survey of recent studies", Home Office research and planning unit paper 65, February 1992.

The incidence of offending on bail is a matter of concern and work is in hand to tackle the problem. This includes action research which is being undertaken in five areas and is designed to identify the scope for improving the bail decision-taking process, and thus minimising the risk of offending on bail.

Leicestershire Police

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what asssessment he has made of the effects of reductions in funding of Leicestershire police force on the number of posts and the level of overtime; and what representations he has received on the subject.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The force is currently holding 29 vacancies against an authorised establishment of 1,853. Overtime levels have been reduced as part of measures to keep within budgetary constraints. No representations have been received on this subject.

Prison Transfers

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of the prisoners transferred between 1982 and 1992 from prisons in Northern Ireland to prisons in Great Britain were convicted of scheduled offences.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information on the nature of the offences of prisoners transferred between United Kindom jurisdictions is not held centrally.

I will write to the hon. Gentleman with the information requested.

Immigration

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when an application for entry clearance made on 2 July 1992 to the Islamabad high commission can be processed; what is the average waiting time for an interview with the immigration service; and how long the average waiting time is for the report to be sent to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and for a decision to be made.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Where the entry clearance officer refers an application for inquiries in the United Kingdom by the immigration service, these inquiries should normally be completed within three months of receipt. If the hon. Member is concerned about the time taken to deal with any individual case, I shall be willing to look into it.

President Clinton

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from the new United States Administration concerning inquiries undertaken by his Department over whether Mr. Clinton had applied for United Kingdom citizenship.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: None.

Prisoners' Complaints

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he can report progress on his plans for the independent review of prisoners' complaints.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I am pleased to announce that I have now agreed arrangements to appoint a prisons ombudsman to consider grievances from prisoners who have failed to obtain satisfaction from the present internal complaints system. He or she will have a wide remit to consider issues affecting individual prisoners. It will extend to grievances relating to contracted out prisons. It will not include complaints about non-prison bodies—the courts, the police and the Parole Board for example.

The prisons ombudsman will be able to consider the merits of cases as well as the procedures involved. He or she will make recommendations to the chief executive of the Prison Service, and to myself as necessary. The ombudsman will publish an annual report which will be laid before the House.

I will look to the prisons ombudsman to maintain good liaison with Her Majesty's chief inspector of prisons and with the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration. The rights of prisoners to approach the latter through a Member of Parliament will of course be unaffected by this new appointment. The post will be publicly advertised shortly. My aim is to announce an appointment in the spring in order to have the new office operating and considering grievances by the end of this year.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Mortgage Interest

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what analysis he has made of the benefits arising out of the operation of the scheme that gives tax relief for mortgage interest payments and of whether this represents value for the revenue forgone when compared with the cost of a scheme of universal housing benefits.

Mr. Dorrell: We keep the costs and benefits of all tax reliefs under continuous review. Mortgage interest relief helps some 9·8 million borrowers to buy their own homes, and is estimated to cost £5·2 billion in 1992-93.

Cigarette Consumption

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the tax revenue implications of the target to reduce the consumption of cigarettes by at least 40 per cent. by the year 2000 in the Department of Health White Paper, "Health of the Nation".

Sir John Cope: As part of the "Health of the Nation" commitment to reduce the consumption of cigarettes, the Government have undertaken at least to maintain the real level of taxes on tobacco products. A 40 per cent. fall in consumption of tobacco products would produce a 40 per cent. fall in the tobacco excise duty base. For the present real level of excise duties on tobacco products, this would represent an annual loss to the Exchequer of around £2·4 billion, in 1992-93 prices.

National Lottery

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer at what rate he intends to tax the national lottery.

Sir John Cope: My right hon. Friend will make an announcement about the rate in due course.

Autumn Budget

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects purdah to commence for Treasury Ministers in advance of the autumn Budget.

Mr. Lamont: I shall be deciding that in due course.

Value Added Tax (Charities)

Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the income to the Treasury in each of the last five years as a result of VAT levied on registered charities.

Sir John Cope: Information about the amount of VAT borne by charities is not collated centrally, but it is estimated that charities now pay up to £250 million in VAT each year.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Aid

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those countries, for each of the last 10 years, where International Monetary Fund conditionality has been imposed for receipt of United Kingdom unilateral aid.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 11 January 1993]: It is not possible to list all those occasions on which individual British aid commitments were made in association with International Monetary Fund reform programmes. But British balance of payments aid is usually provided only to countries that have programmes of structural adjustment agreed with the International Monetary Fund and the World bank in place. In doing so, we often act in concert with other donors. The objective is to enable recipients to purchase urgently needed imports to sustain or improve production and assist economic recovery. Commitments of such aid in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available were made to the following countries:

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Iraq

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received from Arab countries neighbouring Iraq about the recent bombing raids.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have received no formal representations from Arab countries neighbouring Iraq about the recent bombing.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the nuclear installations declared by Iraq to the International Atomic Energy Agency up to July 1990 and those subsequently identified by United Nations inspectors.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 25 January 1993]: Parts of Iraq's principal nuclear site, Tuwaitha, were declared to the IAEA before July 1990. These facilities were covered by a safeguards agreement.

Details of nuclear installations subsequently identified by United Nations inspectors are contained in the reports of inspections carried out by the IAEA under the terms of Security Council resolution 687. Copies of these reports have been placed in the Library of the House.

Japanese Labour Camp Survivors

Mr. Stott: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will support the claim of the Japanese Labour Camp Survivors Association for compensation from the Japanese Government.

Mr. Goodlad: Her Majesty's Government sympathise deeply with those who suffered so dreadfully as prisoners of war of the Japanese during the second world war. We owe a great debt of gratitude to them. However, the question of compensation was settled in the 1951 peace treaty with Japan.

Although the Government could not directly associate itself with the private attempts of groups to obtain further compensation, we would not, of course, impede or obstruct these attempts, with whose aims we sympathise.

Entry Clearance

Mr. Peter Shore: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many additional entry clearance officer posts it is planned to create in Dhaka in 1993 and 1994.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Entry clearance staffing at posts abroad is based on current and forecast demand for entry clearances. We review such staffing at all posts during the first quarter of each year, and in the case of larger posts such as Dhaka, at quarterly intervals thereafter.

Mr. Peter Shore: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the present waiting time for first interview for the four categories of applicants in Dhaka, Bangladesh; and what were the waiting times for the same categories one year and two years earlier.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The waiting time in months for first interview waiting times at the end of 1992, 1991 and 1990 were:

	Q1	Q2	Q3	Q4
1992	3	6	7	9
1991	3	5	6	10
1990	2	3	3	9

Queue 1: Applicants with a claim to British citizenship, aged dependants over 70, compassionate cases;
Queue 2: Spouses and dependent children under 18;
Queue 3: Other dependants; fiance(e)s, others for settlement;
Queue 4: Reapplicants.

Mr. Peter Shore: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current entry clearance officer staffing at the British high commission in Dhaka; and what is the full staffing complement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The ideal entry clearance officer establishment in Dhaka is 12; there are currently 12 in post.

Mr. Peter Shore: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many entry clearance officers in Dhaka are immigration officers on secondment from the immigration service.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: There are currently eight immigration officers on secondment as entry clearance officers in Dhaka.

TRANSPORT

Fuel (Tax Differentials)

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the effect of the decision at the last Budget to widen the tax differential between diesel and other fuels on the use of (a) diesel fuel and (b) diesel vehicles.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: At the last Budget the duties on diesel fuel and unleaded petrol were both increased in line with inflation—4·5 per cent.—while the duty on leaded petrol was increased by an extra 3 per cent. It is too early to assess the impact of the changes in duty. However, the number and proportion of cars and light vans using diesel fuel have increased rapidly over the last 10 years and this trend is expected to continue.

Airports (Night Restrictions)

Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what review he carried out of the night restrictions which currently apply at Heathrow, Gatwick and Stansted airports; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: The current night restrictions were set in 1988 for a five year period. They end this year and if the current regime is not extended or replaced there will be no night restrictions. I have therefore carried out a wide-ranging review.

I have taken the opportunity to include Stansted in the review so that local people there should have the same level of protection against aircraft noise at night as people living around the other two airports.

The proposals maintain the policy of continuing to protect local communities from excessive exposure to aircraft noise at night without imposing unnecessary restrictions on the airline industry.

The aviation industry makes an important contribution to the economy of the south-east and to the United Kingdom as a whole. It is important for us to make reasonable provision for this—otherwise airlines and airports abroad will seize the business and the prosperity that goes with it. Equally, it is important that those who live around our airports should be able to enjoy a good night's sleep.

Our proposals for a new regime of night restrictions at Heathrow, Gatwick and Stansted are set out in a consultation paper, issued today. The proposals seek to give more flexibility to airlines but have been designed expressly to favour movements by the quieter types.

We are asking for comments on the proposals to be with us by Friday 30 April.

Transport and Environment Ministers

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the outcome of the joint meeting of Transport and Environment Ministers in Brussels on 25 January.

Mr. MacGregor: The United Kingdom supported calls for an early meeting of EC Ministers to consider the implications of the oil pollution incidents at La Coruna and on Shetland and took a leading part in the proceedings. The United Kingdom was represented by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland, my noble Friend the Minister for Shipping and myself.

Prior to the meeting, the United Kingdom circulated a report on the Shetland oil spill. I am placing copies of this report in the Library. In it we drew attention to the work we have set in hand following this incident, including the accident investigation by the marine accident investigation board, the inquiry under Lord Donaldson of Lymington and the ecological steering group being set up in Scotland. We called for concerted action at national, European and global levels, emphasising the importance of the international Maritime Organisation—IMO—and by flag states throughout the world if real improvements in ship safety and pollution prevention are to be secured. We suggested early ratification by member states of the protocols to the international liability and fund conventions agreed at the diplomatic conference in London last year which provide for increased compensation amounts, and ratification of the salvage convention; and we encouraged early adoption of the EC directive concerning requirements for vessels carrying dangerous or polluting goods which was agreed last month during the United Kingdom presidency. We also suggested urgent examination of other possible measures including additional guidance to tanker operators and masters, routing measures, extension of radar coverage and vessel traffic service schemes, the role of salvage tugs and further port state control action.

The Council commended the United Kingdom on its prompt and effective response to the Braer incident. It recognised that further concerted action at national and Community level and in the IMO is essential to minimise threats to the marine and coastal environments from oil and hazardous cargoes. It urges the Community and member states to support the on-going work in IMO relevant to this objective. The United Kingdom has been urging the Commission to bring forward as a matter of urgency its communication "A Common Policy for Safe Seas". This now now expected to issue next month. The full text of the Council conclusions will be placed in the Library when it is available.

Station Car Parks

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to ensure that the existing level of car parking spaces are maintained at railway stations following their sale, franchise or vesting in Railtrack.

Mr. Freeman: Where stations are being managed by franchisees, any conditions about the level of car parking spaces could be imposed through the franchise contract. Otherwise, car parking arrangements will be subject to the general oversight of the independent regulator.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy that charges for car parking spaces at railway stations should not rise above the equivalent, in real terms, of charges as at February, following either their sale, franchise or vesting in Railtrack.

Mr. Freeman: Where stations are being managed by franchisees, any restrictions on car park charges could be imposed through the franchise contract. Otherwise, car parking charges will be subject to the general oversight of the independent regulator.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will list the location of track, stations and ticket offices owned or managed by Briitsh Rail which provide facilities to London Underground on an agency basis;

(2) if he will list the location of track, stations and ticket offices owned or managed by London Underground which provide facilities to British Rail on an agency basis.

InterCity Rail Services

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what subsidy the Government propose to make to InterCity rail services following rail privatisation or franchising.

Mr. Freeman: Any subsidy required will be determined by competitive bidding for a franchise.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what subsidy the Government propose to make to Railtrack in respect of track, tunnels and bridges which are used by InterCity rail services following rail privatisation or franchising.

Mr. Freeman: We shall expect Railtrack to recover its economic costs in providing and maintaining the railway infrastructure from the track access charges it will levy on future rail service operators. Operators awarded franchises may require a subsidy as a condition of operating their services.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will make it his policy that InterCity executive rail services are maintained for each route now existing north of Glasgow and Edinburgh following franchising or privatisation;

(2) if he will make it his policy that InterCity executive rail services are maintained in respect of the whole of the west coast route from London to Glasgow, via Preston.

Mr. Freeman: Under our rail privatisation proposals, it will be for the franchising director to decide the precise specification of all services, including current InterCity services, to be offered for franchising in line with the guidance given to him by the Secretary of State. As we made clear in the consultation document "The Franchising of Passenger Rail Services" published in October, objectives for the franchising director will include basing the pattern of services to be provided on BR's existing service levels.

A12/M12

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to receive and publish the consultant's report on the proposal to build the M12 or upgrade the existing A12; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: We expect to receive a report from our consultant this summer. The report will provide information about route options on which we hope to consult the public in late 1993. Information about the scheme studies will be available for inspection during the consultation.

A11

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to make an announcement following the simultaneous inquiries into the improvements of the A11 to Abington and the A505/A11 and A604 junction; and when he expects work to commence.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I expect the announcement to be made in the next few weeks. Further progress will depend on the nature of the decisions, completion of the necessary statutory procedures and the availability of funds.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects work to resume on the A11 improvement between Newmarket and Four Westways.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The work of dualling the A11 between Newmarket and Four Wentways was halted when the contractor, Lilley Construction Limited, went into administrative receivership. The receiver has received a number of offers from interested firms to complete the work. Until those negotiations are complete it is too soon to say when work can resume. The contractual completion date of the end of 1993 can still be met.

Railways Bill

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will initiate a study of the operation of the railways run by the British Railways Board to identify those services or operations which can be made more effective or efficient consequent to the enactment of the Railways Bill.

Mr. Freeman: All passenger and freight services should be capable of more effective or efficient operation as a result of our reform proposals.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will identify those requirements for transport by rail, by general character, or on specific routes, currently provided by the British Railways Board that will be capable of being provided under the provisions of the Railways Bill, indicating in each case if they would be capable of realising a commercial return or be a charge on public funds.

Mr. Freeman: All rail services currently provided by the British Railways Board could be provided under the provisions of the Railways Bill. The competitive tendering process will determine the amount of subsidy, if any, required for any franchise service. Freight services will be provided on a commercial basis.

Jubilee Line

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if loans from the European investment bank will count towards the £400 million private sector contribution required for the Jubilee line extension.

Mr. Norris: It will be for the administrators of Olympia and York to determine sources of finance to enable them to make the agreed contribution.

Rail Depots

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport by what method he expects to allocate passenger rolling stock maintenance and stabling depots which are compatible with competitive services on the routes currently served by the respective depots.

Mr. Freeman: Where the depot concerned is dedicated to a passenger service which is to be let as a single franchise, the depot will usually be leased for the period of the franchise to the incoming franchisee. Where one franchisee will be the predominant user of the depot, he will usually acquire the lease subject to conditions requiring him to make facilities available to other operators. In some cases, it may be feasible to divide a depot into separate parts for use by different operators, or to lease a depot to a third party maintenance operator.

WALES

Elton Report

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he has taken to develop a post-school education strategy aimed at promoting socially responsible parenthood as recommended in the Elton report on discipline in schools.

Sir Wyn Roberts: This is an issue to which further and higher education institutions should give consideration in their overall provision for students.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of how many local education authorities and schools in each of these LEAs communicate with parents in languages other than English or Welsh in accordance with the recommendations of the Elton report.

Sir Wyn Roberts: None. It is for local education authorities and schools to consider the need for communication with parents in languages other than English or Welsh in the light of local needs and circumstances.

School Lunch (Supervision)

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many local education authorities provide lunch-time supervision; what percentage of schools in each local education authority provide such supervision; how much is spent; and what assessment he has made of the extent to which this supervision meets the standards expected by his Department.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Arrangements for lunchtime supervision are the responsibility of local education authorities and the governing bodies of those schools with delegated budgets. Information about these arrangements is not held centrally.

Primary Education

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what plans he has to propose greater use of specific subject teaching;

(2) if he will make a statement on the effectiveness of teaching in relation to the time spent on various aspects of the curriculum;

(3) what measures he proposes to achieve a match of work to pupil's needs;

(4) if he will make a statement concerning the primary school curriculum and teaching methods;

(5) if he will make a greater use of specialist teaching; and if he will make a statement;

(6) what plans he has to introduce setting in schools; and if he will make a statement.

(7) if he will make a statement on whole-class teaching.

Sir Wyn Roberts: In February of last year I launched a debate on primary education in Wales with the publication of a report by Her Majesty's inspectorate on classroom organisation and teaching methods. That report addressed, among other things, issues concerned with whole class and specialist teaching, classroom management and teaching methods appropriate to the needs of individual pupils and the national curriculum.

The debate was taken forward by the Curriculum Council for Wales, CCW. Following a series of seminars attended by teachers throughout Wales, the Curriculum Council for Wales published in November a guidance document "Aspects of Primary Education in Wales". The document has been issued to all Welsh primary schools. I also sent a copy to all hon. Members in Wales. Further guidance is being prepared by the council on aspects of planning and managing the primary curriculum including teaching methods and the use of specialist staff. Schools will need to consider all this advice carefully and ensure that it is taken into account so that they can implement the national curriculum successfully.

It is obviously important that we should keep under review how this is being taken forward to schools and provide further guidance as necessary. I have therefore asked Her Majesty's chief inspector for Wales to include, as part of his programme of work in 1993-94, a further investigation into primary education teaching methods and practices and report to me by April 1994. I have placed a copy of my letter in the Library of the House. I will consider whether further action is necessary in the light of that report. I also intend to ask the Curriculum and Assessment Authority for Wales which, subject to parliamentary approval, will succeed the Curriculum Council for Wales, to take part with the Schools Curriculum and Assessment Authority in the rolling review of national curriculum subjects which was announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education on 18 January.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what new guidance he proposes to issue concerning primary education in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply my right hon. Friend the Minister of State gave to the hon. Member for Alyn and Deeside (Mr. Jones) on 28 January.

Land Use

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to produce an annual policy paper on land use and infrastructure planning in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: No. My right hon. Friend publishes policies on land use and infrastructure in a range of documents, including planning policy guidance notes and circulars. These documents are regularly reviewed and updated.

Investors in People

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the companies within Wales which have (a) already been accredited and (b) pledged to work towards the targets outlined in the investors in people programme.

Mr. David Hunt: Nine companies have achieved the investors in people standard and 106 are committed to working towards it, but lists of individual companies are not collected centrally.

Productivity

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to adopt a target of increasing productivity rates in Wales by at least 5 per cent. in each year for the forthcoming decade.

Mr. David Hunt: I intend to continue the policies that have created the framework within which manufacturing productivity in Wales has risen from 7 per cent. below the United Kingdom average, in 1980, to 6 per cent. above the United Kingdom average, in 1990. Over this same period, United Kingdom manufacturing productivity itself grew faster than in any other country in the G7, including Japan.

Rural Areas

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much money has been allocated by the Welsh Development Agency in 1992-93 to its rural affairs division for expenditure in the west Wales task force area; and how much is planned to be spent in 1993-94.

Mr. David Hunt: It is estimated that WDA expenditure within the task force area in 1992-93 will be £1·7 million.

For 1993-94, I announced earlier this week that the agency will spend a total of £3·7 million on its urban and rural activities. The agency will also administer a £250,000 programme under the EC Leader scheme in south Pembrokeshire.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total planned expenditure by the Welsh Development Agency on its rural affairs division programme in 1992-93; and what is the planned expenditure for 1993-94.

Mr. David Hunt: The WDA's rural affairs division is expected to spend £4·55 million in 1992-93, and the allocation for 1993-94 is £6 million.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the planned expenditure by his Department on the rural initiative in Wales and each of the counties in Wales for 1993-94.

Mr. David Hunt: The budget provision of the rural initiative capital grants scheme in 1993-94 is £6·6 million. The 297 bids submitted by local authorities throughout Wales under the 1993-94 round are currently being assessed. I will make an announcement in due course.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the expenditure on the rural initiative programme in Wales in 1992-93 in each of the counties of Wales and in total.

Mr. David Hunt: Expenditure in the current year on projects approved under the 1992-93 round of the rural initiative capital grants scheme is not yet complete. The round has an allocation of £6 million shared as follows:

	£ million
Dyfed	3·30
Gwynedd	1·12
Powys	0·73
Clwyd	0·44
Gwent	0·21

Note: Figures are rounded.

Environmental Protection

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has for alignment of the eastern boundary of the Wales region of the Environment Protection Agency in Wales in the area of nonconformity of the National Rivers Authority water catchment area boundary with that of other statutory environmental protection agencies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Government have already said that there will need to be an appropriate presence by the agency in Wales. No decisions have been taken on the detailed regional structure of the agency, including its relationship to the England/Wales border.

Valleys Programme

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a breakdown of the valleys programme spending by sub-programme for each year since 1988-89.

Mr. David Hunt: The table sets out the information requested.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects the pay review of the general manager and senior manager grades of NHS trusts in Wales, announced in the letter of 25 November 1992, from the Director of NHS Wales, to the chairmen of NHS trusts in Wales to be completed; how the current public sector pay policy will affect its implementation in 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The review of the pay arrangements, for NHS general and senior managers is ongoing and is expected to be completed later this year. Any implementation of possible changes during the period of the current public sector pay policy would be subject to the overall limits on wage settlements for this group.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he will announce his decision on the 1993-94 local government settlement and relevant notional amounts.

Mr. David Hunt: I have given careful consideration to the representations I have received on my provisional settlement proposals. I have also chaired two meetings of the Welsh Consultative Council on Local Government Finance at which settlement issues were discussed.

I acknowledge that my plans for 1993-94 will mean local authorities in Wales having to make hard budgeting decisions and rigorously pursuing efficiency savings. Having taken account of all the representations made to me on the settlement, I remain of the view that my proposals represent the most that the country and local taxpayers can afford in the present economic circumstances. I have therefore decided to set total standard spending —TSS—at £2,599·8 million and aggregate external finance —AEF—at £2,344·2 million for 1993-94. Both TSS and AEF will include the additional resources of £1·6 million that I announced to the House on 14 December 1992 to take account of changes in the independent living fund arrangements.

AEF will comprise £1,669·3 million in revenue support grant, £470·2 million in distributable non-domestic rates, and £204·7 million in specific and supplementary grants. My decisions are, of course, subject to the approval of the House.

The TSS I have announced for 1993-94 represents an increase of 3·1 per cent. on 1992-93 plus an additional £35·9 million for care in the community. It means an increase of almost 29 per cent. for the three financial years since 1990-91. My plans mean that 90 per cent. of all local authority revenue expenditure in Wales would be met by central Government and should ensure a reasonable level of council tax for local taxpayers in Wales.

I trust that local authorities will budget prudently and play their part in restraining public expenditure.

On the matter of notional amounts in lieu of budgets for 1992-93 I have considered all the representations made to me by local authorities and have made amendments to the provisional figures issued in December where I have considered it appropriate to do so. My Department has today written to all local authorities informing them of their standard spending assessments for 1993-94 and their notional amounts. I have placed details of the figures in the Library of the House.

I propose to lay the Local Government Finance Report (Wales) 1993-94 and the Limitation of Council Tax and Precepts (Relevant Notional Amounts) Report (Wales) 1993-94 before the House, for its approval, early next week.

Alcohol Projects

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps will be taken to ring fence money for residential alcohol projects in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones [pursuant to his reply, 21 January 1993, c. 364]: Unfortunately, owing to a typing error, a word was omitted from the answer. The correct answer is as follows. Resources being transferred for residential facilities under the care in the community arrangements will not be ring fenced. The Department will continue to support individual projects aimed at combating alcohol misuse.

EDUCATION

Under-fives

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what percentage of children under five years received nursery education (a) in 1979 and (b) in 1992.

Mr. Forth: In January 1979, 18 per cent. of three and four-year-olds were in maintained nursery schools or nursery classes in maintained primary schools in England. In January 1991, the latest year for which information on participation rates is available, the proportion was 25 per cent.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list the number of three and four-year-olds in each local authority who were attending a primary school in January 1992.

Mr. Forth: The numbers of three and four-year-olds in nursery classes and infant classes in maintained primary schools in each local education authority in England in January 1992 are shown in the table.

Surplus School Places

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he has included places located within (a) temporary or mobile classrooms, (b) other temporary accommodation and (c) laboratories or workshops in the figures he has published for each local education authority concerning surplus places in schools.

Mr. Forth: The survey of school capacity, carried out during the 1990-91 academic year, measured surplus places in schools using the more open enrolment formula promulgated for primary and secondary schools in, respectively, circulars 6/91 and 11/88, both of which are available in the Library. The formula for primary schools contained in circular 6/91 took account of both permanent and temporary accommodation, including mobiles. Workshops or laboratories deemed by the admissions authority to be unsuitable for general teaching purposes were omitted. The formula for secondary schools contained in circular 11/88 took account of all available teaching space, whether permanent or temporary, including mobile classrooms. Laboratories and workshops were also included, but the formula allowed each workplace in such rooms to be a greater area than in a general teaching space in recognition of the additional space requirements of practical subjects.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what evidence he has about the buying of books by grant-maintained schools following the grant of grant-maintained status.

Mr. Forth: The results of surveys of grant-maintained schools conducted by the grant-maintained schools centre suggest that schools are able to spend substantially more on books following incorporation. The annual report of HM senior chief inspector of schools, "Education in England 1990-91" referred to the improved book stock in many grant-maintained schools.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what level he has decided for the annual maintenance grant payable to grant-maintained schools (a) in Cambridgeshire and (b) elsewhere; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: The consultation period on the proposals for calculating annual maintenance grant for grant-maintained schools in 1993-94 closed on 7 January. We are now considering the responses received and will make our final decisions as soon as possible. I will write to my hon. Friend when the decisions are announced.

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what representations he has received from the headmaster of George Dixon school in Birmingham about the benefits of grant-maintained status for black pupils at inner city schools; what response he has made; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend has received no such representations from the headmaster of George Dixon school in Birmingham. The advantages of grant-maintained status are becoming increasingly obvious as more schools opt for the autonomy it brings, as evident not least, from schools which have become grant-maintained in Birmingham. Pupils from all ethnic and social backgrounds in inner city schools can and do benefit from their schools becoming grant-maintained.

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many Roman Catholic schools have (a) been approved for grant-maintained status, (b) applied for such status and (c) expressed interest in such status.

Mr. Forth: Full information is not collected centrally. Aggregated figures for voluntary aided, voluntary controlled and special agreement schools are as follows: 97 are operating or have been approved for grant-maintained status; 43 more have published proposals which are before the Secretary of State for his consideration; 28 have voted yes in parental ballots but not yet published proposals; 23 have ballots pending. Of the 97 operating or approved for grant-maintained status, 20 are Roman Catholic.

Schools Curriculum and Assessment Authority

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education when he will announce the appointment of the chairman and chief executive of the Schools Curriculum and Assessment Authority.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend hopes soon to announce his choice for the chairmanship of the Schools Curriculum and Assessment Authority. The selection of the chief officer will follow. Both appointments will be subject to the passage of the Education Bill now before Parliament.

St. Mary's School, Rawtenstall

Ms. Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will publish details of the supplementary credit approval granted to Lancashire county council in respect of St. Mary's Church of England primary school, Rawtenstall; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: A supplementary credit approval of £76,000 was issued to Lancashire county council in 1991 in recognition of its expenditure needs at St. Mary's Church of England primary school, Rawtenstall. A further £906,000 within annual capital guidelines was allocated in 1992-93, followed by £556,000 for 1993-94, making a total sum of £1,538,000. These resources were allocated in respect of St. Mary's in response to a delegation to the then Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Mr. Fallon, from representatives of the school expressing concern about the state of the building. The allocation given was in line with the authority's cash bid. I am very concerned that the resources we have allocated have not so far been used for the urgent purpose of rebuilding the school.

Primary Schools, Charlesworth

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education when he expects to make a decision on the request from Charlesworth primary school and St. John's Church of England primary school, Charlesworth, to merge.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend hopes to announce a decision shortly.

PRIME MINISTER

Business Regulation

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Prime Minister if his inquiries into regulation as a burden on business will extend to (a) the rules which require a business person to be or remain outside the United Kingdom in order to obtain leave to set up a business in the United Kingdom and (b) the removal of rights of appeal from business visitors refused leave to do business in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply.

As announced by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Corporate Affairs, on 12 January 1993, Official Report, columns 711-12, Government Departments are examining the whole body of regulation for which they are responsible. All measures with an impact on business will be covered.

Engagements

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 28 January.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 28 January.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister is making official visits to India, Saudi Arabia and Oman. I am pleased to advise the House that following discussions with the Sultan of Oman, my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister announced that Oman is to purchase the Challenger 2 as its new main battle tank, together with its armoured repair and recovery vehicle. I am sure the whole House will want to join me in congratulating Vickers Defence Systems on this well-deserved success, which is the first export order for the Challenger 2.

Edinburgh Summit

Ms. Glenda Jackson: To ask the Prime Minister how many letters he received from individuals concerned that third world needs would not be discussed at the Edinburgh summit.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister received a number of representations. Issues of major concern to developing countries were discussed, including the need for a successful conclusion to the GATT negotiations and for renewed growth in the economies of the European Community. Both of these would help to increase the export earnings of many developing countries significantly.

HEALTH

Hospital Care, Northumberland

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the cost to the national health service, per patient per night, for each of the five regions in Northumberland, during the last five years, of patients staying at least one night in hospital.

Mr. Sackville: Information in the precise form requested is not collected centrally. Information derived from annual financial returns submitted to the Department by the Northumberland district health authority is shown in the table:

Northumberland district health authority

	Average daily cost per patient using a bed[1] £ (cash)
1987-88	30
1988-89	39
1989-90	43
1990-91	48
1991-92
Northern and Mental Health Unit	85
Northgate Unit	59
South East Northumberland Unit	130
Tynedale Unit	81

[1] Inpatients and day cases.

Notes:

1. The figures are average costs for all specialties provided. Those for 1991-92 are provisional.
2. There are discontinuities between the data for 1991-92 and those for earlier years. For the years 1987-88 to 1990-91 specialty cost returns were submitted on a district basis and covered treatment and diagnostic costs only. For 1991-92 the returns were submitted on a Directly Management Unit (DMU) basis and covered total costs (ie inclusive of estate and support services costs which were formerly excluded).
3. Daily costs will inevitably vary widely between specialties and individual patients. The average costs of particular DMUs will also be influenced by the range of specialties provided by the Unit and other local factors.

Smoking

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her estimate of the number of cases of peripheral vascular disease, leading to amputation, that were caused by smoking.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not held centrally.

Electromagnetic Radiation

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what studies have been sponsored by her Department on modifications introduced in melatonin production in human cells arising from exposure to electromagnetic radiation.

Mr. Sackville: No such studies have been sponsored by the Department. However, the National Radiological Protection Board's advisory group on non-ionising radiation proposes to monitor any developments in this area in the light of recent work carried out in the United States.

Abortion

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what follow-up studies concerned with physical complications associated with abortion have been undertaken or funded by her Department;

(2) what information she has regarding abortion as a cause of (a) infertility in women and (b) spontaneous miscarriage in subsequent pregnancies.

Mr. Sackville: The Department has funded a major long-term study of the short and long-term sequelae of abortion. This has been undertaken by the Manchester research unit of the Royal College of General Practitioners.

In an article published in the "British Journal of Obstetrics and Gynaecology, October 1991", volume 98, pages 1015-24, the researchers concluded that

"Overall, induced abortion was not associated with any important effect on the three measures of adverse outcome in the subsequent pregnancy".

The three main outcome measures were: non-viable outcome—spontaneous or missed miscarriage, ectopic pregnancy or stillbirth—birthweight and length of gestation.

In their study on the effect of induced abortion on subsequent fertility, the researchers concluded that "Induced abortion was not related to future fertility".

Cancer Treatment

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many consultant cancer physicians are employed by the national health service; if she will list their location by hospital and region; and what is their average salary.

Dr. Mawhinney: The medical and dental census records the following number of consultant medical oncologists and radiotherapists and general surgeons in England in whole-time equivalents, as at 30 September 1991:

	Medical oncologists	Radiotherapists	General surgeons
Northern	1·0	10·0	74·9

North West Thames	7·4	14·0	61·9
North East Thames	5·8	18·2	75·1
South East Thames	2·8	17·2	71·8
South West Thames	0·0	7·9	49·6
Wessex	2·1	11·4	48·7
Oxford	2·5	9·3	46·7
South Western	0·0	16·3	60·5
West Midlands	1·0	17·0	100·4
Mersey	1·6	10·7	47·8
North Western	2·2	16·2	88·4
SHAs	2·2	10·7	9·6
Total	31·6	202·6	910·8

Information on their average salary and the number of consultants in individual units is not held centrally.

Cardiac Specialists

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cardiac specialists were employed in the NHS for the years 1979, 1989 and 1992.

Dr. Mawhinney: Numbers of doctors of all grades in the cardiology and cardiothoracic specialties in England for 1979, 1989 and 1991, by whole-time equivalent are given in the table. Data for 1992 are not yet available; figures supplied relate to 1991.

	1979	1989	1991
Cardiology	260·0	427·5	475·1
Cardiothoracic surgery	284·9	352·0	375·7
Total	544·9	779·5	850·8

This represents a 43 per cent. increase over the 10 years to 1989 and a further increase of 9·1 per cent. in the last two years.

Juvenile Offenders

Mr. Butcher: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many secure premises places are currently available for juvenile offenders; and what plans she has to increase the numbers of such places.

Mr. Yeo: I refer my hon. Friend to the replies I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Elmet (Mr. Batiste) on 20 January 1993 at columns 318-19.

South East Thames RHA

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to the answers given to the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn), of 17 December, 1992, Official Report, column 421, and to the hon. Member for Greenwich, 27 October 1992, Official Report, column 618, if she will make a statement on the number of administrative and clerical staff in the South East Thames region as at 30 September 1991; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to him on 27 October 1992 at column 618.

Undergraduate Education and Research

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the third (interim) report of the steering group on undergraduate medical and dental education and research will be published; and if she will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The report is published today, and copies are available in the Library. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and I are sending copies of the third (interim) report to all interested parties under cover of a message welcoming and endorsing the report's conclusions and recommendations. The steering group brings together all the main bodies involved in the organisation and delivery of undergraduate teaching and research, and we are grateful to the representatives of these bodies who have served on the group. This phase of the group's work has involved consideration of the arrangements for undergraduate medical and dental education and research against the background of the introduction of the national health service reforms, and we welcome the group's continuing emphasis on the need for close and effective co-operation between the universities, the NHS and research interests in order to achieve the common purpose of maintaining and improving standards of education and research. We have endorsed the report's recommendation that there should be a successor group to take forward the report's recommendations, which include extending the remit to enable it to consider additional issues which are likely to have an impact on undergraduate medical and dental education and research in the near future.

In Vitro Fertilisation

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is the global NHS budget for IVF treatment annually;

(2) what level of financial contribution was made by couples on IVF programmes in the last year for which figures are available;

(3) what was the expenditure level for each regional health authority for IVF treatments in the last year for which figures are available;

(4) how many women were placed on IVF programmes within the NHS for each regional health authority, in the last year in which figures are available.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

Ambulance Service, Greater Manchester

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish in the Official Report correspondence from Mr. P. A. Green, 45 Warwick avenue, Whitefield, Manchester, dated 18 January concerning the Greater Manchester ambulance service and her reply.

Mr. Sackville: Mr. Green's letter was received in the Department on 25 January 1993. A reply will be sent as soon as possible. Correspondence received by the Department is treated as confidential, but it is open to the recipient to make public the response he receives.

Gender Clinics

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will take steps to curb the activities of clinics which assist parents to determine the sex of their children.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what action she intends to take to stop the genetic techniques in use at the gender clinic, London; and if she will make a statement;

(2) what guidelines she intends to issue governing the development and introduction of genetic techniques to determine the sex of children.

Mr. Sackville: The Human Fertilisation and Embryology Act 1990 already controls clinics where sex selection involves in-vitro fertilisation or artificial insemination by donor. The need for controls on other activities of clinics which claim to be able to offer this service is under consideration. The Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority has issued a consultation document on the various issues raised by sex selection and the Government will carefully take the results of this exercise into account in deciding whether further action by the Government may be needed.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Tobacco Advertising

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate he has of the amount of money spent by the tobacco industry each year on advertising and promoting tobacco.

Mr. Leigh: The "Advertising Statistics Yearbook", published by the Advertising Association, contains figures on the amount of money spent on advertising tobacco products, excluding expenditure on sponsorship, sales promotion and billboard advertising.

The 1992 edition of the yearbook gives expenditure, at current prices, on tobacco advertising over the last five years as follows:

	£ million
1987	47·5
1988	47·1
1989	44·0
1990	50·0
1991	42·9

EC Energy Tax

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what assessment his Department is making of the relationship between (a) the balance between the carbon and energy elements of the proposed EC tax on carbon dioxide and energy, (b) the treatment of electricity and (c) the future market for British coal; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what analysis his Department is undertaking of the consequences of the proposed EC tax on carbon dioxide and energy in respect of (a) energy consumption, (b) economic activity and competitiveness and (c) social impact.

Mr. Eggar: The Government continue to examine carefully the European Commission's proposed directive on a tax on carbon dioxide emissions and energy. This is without prejudice to a decision on its eventual adoption.

Further clarification of a number of important aspects of the proposal, including the treatment of electricity and the question of exemptions in the industrial sector, is required before a full assessment can be made of the potential impact of the tax. These issues are the subject of continuing discussions with other member states and the European Commission, in which my Department is assisting.

However, preliminary analysis undertaken by my Department last year indicates that a carbon/energy tax along the lines proposed by the Commission, but assuming no exemptions for industry, could reduce energy demand by around 5 per cent., and CO_2 emissions by around 7 per cent. in 2,000, compared with projections set out in "Energy Paper 59". Different assumptions about the balance of the carbon and energy elements of the proposed tax would lead to different conclusions, with greater potential reductions coming from taxes weighted more towards carbon. Similarly, different bases for the treatment of electricity could lead to different effects.

The preliminary analysis also indicates that as coal is the most carbon-intensive fuel, the market for coal would bear a substantial share of any reduction in CO_2 emissions arising from the proposed tax. However, the analysis, which was carried out prior to the coal review, does not indicate the impact on coal mining in the United Kingdom because it does not distinguish between indigenous and imported coal.

The industrial competitiveness and social impacts of the proposed tax would depend on a number of factors. These would include the use made of the tax revenues, the extent to which other countries outside the Community introduced similar measures and the extent of any exemptions from the tax for industries which are disadvantaged by imports from countries without similar measures. In considering whether such a tax should be introduced, the Government would need to be satisfied that it would not have unacceptable impacts on any particular groups of households or on the competitive position of United Kingdom industry. My Department has separately sought the views of industry on the Commission's proposals: among the wide range of issues raised, the likely impact on industrial competitiveness was the main concern.

Timber and Paper Products

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many prosecutions have been brought under the Trade Descriptions Act 1968, concerning claims of the environmental friendliness and sustainability of timber and paper products in each of the last five years; and how many such prosecutions have been successful in each year.

Mr. Leigh: The Office of Fair Trading has been notified of 16 prosecutions by local authorities under the Trade Descriptions Act 1968 concerning claims of the environmental friendliness and sustainability of timber and paper products over the last five years, all of which were successful. The number of convictions in each year was as follows:

	Number
1988	6
1989	5
1990	3
1991	1
1992	1

Textiles

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps the Government are taking to protect and encourage the textile industry in north-east Lancashire.

Mr. Sainsbury: Under the United Kingdom presidency, the EC concluded extensions to all its bilatural multi-fibre arrangement agreements, which regulate textile imports. These extensions will last until it is possible to implement a GATT agreement on trade in textiles and clothing which would phase out quantitative restrictions over 10 years.

More generally, it is the Government's policy to assist British business to become and remain more competitive, both nationally and internationally. To that end, they have created an environment in which business can flourish, characterised by low inflation, low interest rates, competitive exchange rates and reduced administrative burdens on businesses.

Export Contracts

Mr. Wigley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the export contracts which have been secured through the involvement of Government since May 1992; and if he will indicate how much each export contract is worth in pounds sterling.

Mr. Needham: It is companies which secure export contracts, not the Government, but the excellent services provided by my Department, the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and other Departments, are regularly used by large numbers of companies in identifying opportunities and obtaining contracts abroad.

Sellafield

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the accident early in January at British Nuclear Fuels' Sellafield plant involving spillage of a litre of plutonium-contaminated solvent; when his Department was informed of the incident; and what radiological contamination occurred.

Mr. Eggar: The incident in question occurred in the Magnox reprocessing plant at Sellafield on 12 January when liquor overflowed into an instrument feed cabinet. Approximately one litre of the liquor, containing about a gramme of plutonium, leaked out of the cabinet and on to the floor below. The leak affected a small area of the workplace and was subsequently cleaned up. No worker was contaminated and there was no release of airborne activity.

The incident was reported to this and other interested Departments and relevant regulatory bodies on 13 January.

Details of the incident are contained in the Sellafield site's weekly newsletter, copies of which are available in the Library of the House.

Iraq

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what information Her Majesty's Government have on the engineering equipment originating in the United Kingdom installed in the Zaafaraniyah plant in Iraq.

Mr. Needham: The Government have asked the United Nations special commission and the International Atomic Energy Authority for confidential details of any evidence of involvement by British companies in Iraq's weapons for mass destruction programmes. Any indication of wrongdoing will be urgently investigated and if export controls have been breached, it will, if appropriate, be a matter for the courts.

Sizewell B

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations his Department has received concerning the safety of computer software for the proposed Sizewell B nuclear power station.

Mr. Eggar: I have received six letters from hon. Members forwarding representations from their constituents about the safety of the computerised primary protection system proposed for Sizewell B. In addition, my officials have replied to about 300 pre-printed postcards on this subject.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will require the nuclear installations inspectorate to conduct an independent investigation into the computer software system for the proposed Sizewell B power station.

Mr. Eggar: The Health and Safety Executive's nuclear installations inspectorate will ensure that any proposed software is fully validated as part of its independent assessment of Nuclear Electric's safety case for Sizewell B.

Standing Charges

Mr. Hain: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what would be the cost of abolishing standing charges for gas, electricity and British Telecom for (a) all pensioner households, (b) pensioner households on income support, (c) all households on income support and (d) all households on family credit.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood) on 27 October 1992—(Official Report, column 562.)

Shipbuilding

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which British shipyards and dockyards have the physical layout and capacity to build a ship of 70,000 gross registered tonnes and above.

Mr. Sainsbury: Depending on the specification and dimensions, a vessel of 70,000grt and above could be built by Cammell Laird Shipbuilders Limited, Birkenhead, Harland & Wolff Shipbuilding and Heavy Industries Limited, Belfast, Swan Hunter Shipbuilders Limited, Newcastle Upon Tyne and Vickers Shipbuilding and Engineering Limited, Barrow in Furness.

High Voltage Cables

Mr. Bowis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the most recent advice he has received about the health risks of high voltage overground or underground cables.

Mr. Eggar: The most recent advice received about the alleged hazards to health from electric and magnetic fields associated with high voltage electric power lines or cables is the report of the advisory group on non-ionising radiation, chaired by Sir Richard Doll, issued in March 1992. However, two reports of Swedish studies released in October 1992 have been referred to the advisory group and further advice from them is awaited.

Japanese Investment

Mr. Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what data he has available on the number, value and employment creation of Japanese inward investment projects in manufacturing industry in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) Germany, (c) France, (d) Italy and (e) Spain in the latest 12-month period for which data is available.

Mr. Sainsbury: According to Japanese Ministry of Finance figures, the number and value of Japanese inward investment projects in manufacturing industry in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) Germany, (c) France, (d) Italy and (e) Spain from April 1991 to March 1992, the latest 12-month period for which data is available, are as follows:

April 1991-March 1992

	Number	Value (US$ million)
United Kingdom	77	904
Germany	18	340
France	38	237
Italy	13	147
Spain	12	286

Source: Japanese Ministry of Finance.

Information on the employment creation of these investment projects is not available.

British Coal

Mr. Tipping: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the current directors of British Coal; when they were appointed to their current contracts and when these will terminate; if he will give details of their salary and other remunerations; and if he intends to review these contracts.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 26 January 1993]: The information is as follows:

	Current period of appointment/ re-appointment	Salary £
Mr. John Neil Clarke (Chairman)	1 January 1991 to 31 December 1995	234,360·00
Mr. Albert Wheeler CBE (Deputy Chairman)	1 April 1992 to 31 March 1993	110,000·00

Mr. Johannes Petrus Erbe	1 June 1992 to 31 May 1995	7,499·50
Mr. Antony Peverell Hichens	6 December 1991 to 5 December 1994	7,499·50

Apart from the normal process of consideration in respect of appointments which are due to expire, and to agree annual reviews of salary, I have no present plans to review these appointment.

Fraud

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to introduce a system whereby his Department should be able to bring proceedings in the civil courts to recover (a) compensation for victims, (b) punitive damages for dishonesty and (c) reimbursement of the costs of the proceedings in cases falling within certain categories of allegedly fraudulent conduct; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neil Hamilton [holding answer 26 January 1993]: Sections 6 and 61 of the Financial Services Act 1986 provide for application to the court for restitution on behalf of the victims of certain contraventions and offences under that Act. In addition, section 438 of the Companies Act 1985 permits the Secretary of State to bring proceedings in the public interest in the name and on behalf of a company if it appears to him from an inspector's report or information obtained under the investigation powers of the Act, the civil proceedings ought to be brought. I have no plans for further legislation along these lines.

Scotts Greys Travel Ltd

Mr. Milburn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action had been taken by his Department to investigate repeated late filing of accounts by Scotts Greys Travel Ltd., from 1985 prior to the company's collapse in 1992.

Mr. Neil Hamilton [holding answer 27 January 1993]: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the chief executive of Companies House executive agency for which my Department is responsible. I have, therefore, asked Mr. David Durham to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from David Durham to Mr Alan Milburn, dated 26 January 1993:

I refer to your Parliamentary Question concerning the action taken by Companies House Executive Agency to investigate repeated late filing of accounts by Scotts Greys Travel Limited from 1985 prior to the company's collapse in 1992. I have been asked to reply as Chief Executive and Registrar of Companies House Executive Agency.

If companies fail to file on time Companies House instigate a procedure for achieving compliance. This system has changed considerably over the last two years, and coupled with the introduction of late filing penalties in July 1992, has resulted in a marked improvement in timeliness.

Prior to July 1992 once companies filed, albeit late, all pursuit action ceased. This would have been the case in respect of this company.

The company's accounts for the period ending 31 December 1991 should have been delivered to me by 31 October 1992. No accounts were received and on 16 November a letter warning that the accounts were overdue was issued to the company at its Registered Office. No response was received and on 29 December 1992 a notice was issued to Mr David Scott at his home address warning him that if the document was not received within the next 28 days, criminal proceedings would be instituted against him.

However, on 19 January the Registrar received a copy of an order for the compulsory winding up of the company. The Official Receiver is now dealing with the liquidation and in the circumstances, Companies House will not pursue the outstanding accounts.

The role of Companies House is to maintain an up-to-date company register, to ensure that companies comply with the filing requirements of the Companies Act 1985 and to make this information available to the public. Companies House does not investigate the reasons for late filing once the document in question has been filed. It is not the responsibility of Companies House to scrutinise accounts filed beyond establishing that they comply with legal requirements. The records that Companies House make available to the public exist to provide anyone doing business with a limited company, information about its structure, ownership and financial standing. The absence of statutory documents on the file should be a warning to potential creditors.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action he is proposing to take following the collapse of Scotts Greys Travel Ltd.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 27 January 1993]: Scotts Greys Travel Ltd. was wound up by the court on 7 January 1993. The Official Receiver, who is also the liquidator, has a duty to investigate the causes of the company's failure and report any misconduct to the Secretary of State.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his estimate of how many customers have been affected by the collapse of Scotts Greys Travel Ltd.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 27 January 1993]: The Official Receiver has not yet obtained details of the total number of customers who have been affected by the liquidation of this company.

Offshore Licences

Mr. Ainger: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Pembroke of 21 January, Official Report, column 336, if he will give details of the special conditions that have been agreed with the Department of the Environment, the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the Joint Nature Conservation Council relating to blocks 103/2, 103/3, 103/6, 103/7, 106/25, 106/29, 107/21, 104/16, 104/17, 104/18, 104/19 and 104/21;

(2) pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Pembroke of 21 January, Official Report, column 336, if he will now place in the Library copies of the advice he received from the Countryside Council for Wales and the Joint Nature Conservation Committee on blocks 103/2, 103/3, 103/7, 106/25, 106/29, 107/29, 107/21, 104/16, 104/17, 104/18, 104/18, 104/19, and 104/21 prior to their inclusion in the 14 round of offshore drilling licensing.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 27 January 1993]: Consultation with other Departments and interested bodies, such as the Joint Nature Conservation Committee and the Countryside Council for Wales, was on the basis that the information they provided would be treated in confidence. As I have already indicated in my answer of 21 January, their comments were taken into account, and are reflected in conditions to be attached to these blocks if awarded. A copy of the indicative conditions for blocks 103/2, 103/3, 103/6, 103/7, 106/25, 106/29, 107/21, 104/16, 104/17, 104/18, 104/19 and 104/21 will be placed in the Library of the House.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Parliamentary Expenses

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will list the information available to him on the (a) salary, (b) various office costs allowances, (c) travel allowances and entitlements, (d) postage and telephone allowances, (e) entertainments allowances and (f) other free or subsidised facilities available to elected members of the parliamentary assemblies of (i) the United Kingdom, (ii) Germany, (iii) France, (iv) the United States of America, (v) Australia, (vi) Spain, (vii) Eire, (viii) Denmark and (ix) the European Parliament, basing his comparison on the exchange rates at the close of business on 1 January.

Mr. Newton: The information requested is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, last year the review body on top salaries carried out a review of the House of Commons office costs allowance (Report No. 32, Cm 1943, July 1992) which included in appendix E

"The secretarial, research and office accommodation and expenses of legislators in thirteen countries: a comparative survey 1991".

Calculations for this survey were based on the rate of exchange prevailing on 15 April 1991. This report is available in the House of Commons Library.

Select Committee Reports

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will list the (a) titles and (b) publication dates of reports by Select Committees which have not yet been debated by Parliament; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: Details of the debates on select committee reports are given in the Sessional Returns for each Session from 1987-88 to 1991-92, copies of which are in the Library.

The substantive reports from departmentally-related select committees this Session up to 25 January 1993 are as follows:

NORTHERN IRELAND

Ozone-depleting substances

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what proportion of his Department's consumption of ozone-depleting substances become controlled waste in terms of section 33 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990;

(2) what action has been taken to ensure that ozone-destroying substances consumed by his Department are identified as controlled wastes when they are no longer in use.

Mr. Atkins: The Environmental Protection Act 1990 does not extend to Northern Ireland. Ozone-depleting substances which become waste are disposed of in an environmentally acceptable way.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many catastrophic leaks of ozone-depleting substances have occurred within his Department's buildings in the last five years.

Mr. Atkins: None.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many chlorofluorocarbon domestic fridges are contained within his Department's buildings;

(2) how many CFC and HCFC installations are contained within his Department's buildings.

Mr. Atkins: The information is not recorded centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what measures have been taken to ensure that ozone-destroying substances in use by his Department, identified as controlled waste under the Environmental Protection Act 1990, do not reach the atmosphere.

Mr. Atkins: All relevant equipment is checked for leakage during routine planned maintenance.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what targets have been set for the recycling of ozone-depleting chemicals within departmental buildings.

Mr. Atkins: None.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will provide details from the maintenance and servicing record of the quantity and type of ozone-destroying chemicals used annually in his Department's refrigeration and air conditioning equipment for servicing and in leakages; and what proportion is removed for recycling.

Mr. Atkins: The information sought is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much funding has been allocated or spent to specifically deal with measures to reduce his Department's consumption of ozone-depleting substances.

Mr. Atkins: Funding is not specifically allocated for measures to reduce the Department's consumption of ozone-depleting substances. Where plant can be modified or is replaced zero or low ozone-depleting substances are used.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which current uses of ozone-depleting chemicals by his Department are considered essential.

Mr. Atkins: Use in certain refrigeration plant and refrigerators which have not yet reached the end of their useful lives.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what is the quantity of ozone-depleting substances recycled within his Department and returned to the manufacturer;

(2) what quantity of HCFC 22 is purchased by his Department per annum;

(3) what the latest figures are for his Department's total purchase of CFCs and HCFCs.

Mr. Atkins: The information sought is not available.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland by what date his Department's use of ozone-depleting chemicals will conform with EC regulations on limits on these chemicals.

Mr. Atkins: The Department's policy is to eliminate the use of ozone depleting chemicals if possible in advance of the dates set out in the EC regulation and the Montreal protocol.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make it his policy to purchase only ozone-friendly fridges that do not contain CFCs or HCFCs for his Department.

Mr. Atkins: Department policy is to purchase only those fridges which contain ozone-friendly refrigerants.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what guidance has been sought and received on alternatives or substitutes to the ozone-destroying chemicals in use by his Department.

Mr. Atkins: Guidance on alternatives or substitutes to ozone-destroying chemicals is obtained from the chemical and refrigeration industries, appropriate professional institutions, relevant official publications and the Building Research Establishment.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many portable halon fire extinguishers are contained within departmental buildings; and what measures are being taken to ensure their recycling and replacement.

Mr. Atkins: Information on the number of Halon fire extinguishers is not held centrally and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Where a Halon extinguisher has been discharged, damaged or reached the end of its recommended working life it is replaced with a carbon dioxide extinguisher.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many refrigeration and air conditioning systems in his Department are equipped with automatic leak detection systems.

Mr. Atkins: None.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how the Departmental green Minister has promoted protection of the ozone layer with specific policy measures; which possible measures have been considered and rejected; and on what grounds.

Mr. Atkins: I have promoted protection of the ozone layer by specific policy measures relating to the recovery and recycling of ozone-depleting chemicals. Other measures to reduce the use of these chemicals, or products containing them, include a purchasing requirement—whether for goods or services—to seek out and use suitable substitutes. A measure which has been rejected is the complete replacement of existing plant or supplies containing these substances, which would be cost prohibitive.

Environmental Information

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he plans to introduce legislation to transpose EC directive 90/313 on freedom of access to information on the environment into law.

Mr. Atkins: Regulations to introduce the directive will be introduced on 1 March 1993.

Prevention of Terrorism Acts

Mr. Bell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many persons are at present excluded from Northern Ireland under the provisions of the Prevention of Terrorism Acts.

Mr. Mates: Two.

Mr. Bell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many persons have been excluded from Northern Ireland under the provisions of the Prevention of Terrorism Acts in each year since 1974.

Mr. Mates: The information is as follows:

School Pupils

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many pupils are at each of (a) the primary and (b) the secondary schools in the constituency of Newry and Armagh in (i) the maintained, (ii) the controlled and (iii) the integrated sectors of education;

(2) how many pupils are at each of (a) the primary and (b) the secondary schools in the constituency of Strangford in (i) the maintained, (ii) the controlled and (iii) the integrated sectors of education.

Mr. Hanley: I refer the right hon. Gentleman to answers that I gave him on 15 and 16 June 1992, Official Report, columns 382-83 and 465-67. I will write as soon as the information in respect of 1992-93 becomes available.

Local Authority Performance Indicators

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to make local authorities publish performance indicators; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The Local Government Auditor will issue a consultation paper to all district councils in February 1993 setting out proposals for the introduction and use of performance indicators. Once decisions have been taken on the indicators to be used, councils—in common with local authorities in England, Wales and Scotland—will be required to publish the results. It is anticipated that publication of the first results will relate to the financial year 1993-94.

I am convinced that the publication of such information will benefit councils and ratepayers alike. Councils will set standards and targets to be achieved and ratepayers will be able to assess the performance not just of their own council but also how it compares with other councils.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Local Government Finance

Ms. Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make it his policy to disregard all income from compensation payments paid to people who had been held in Nazi concentration camps in calculations for community charge benefit and council tax benefit.

Mr. Burt: People who have suffered from National Socialist persecution already receive special recognition in all of the income-related benefit schemes, including community charge benefit and, from April 1993, council tax benefit. The first £10 a week of the pension they receive as a consequence of their persecution is completely ignored. We have no plans to change these rules.

Social Fund

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many and what proportion of social fund applications to visit a sick child in hospital were refused (a) in each district area and (b) nationally, for the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the latest available figures for expenditure on housing benefit to tenants in private rented accommodation and the level of income since the previous year.

Mr. Burt: The estimated outturn of expenditure for 1991-92 is £2,115 million. Planned expenditure for 1992-93 is £2,522 million.

Notes: The source of information is the 1992 Department Report published in February 1992. The 1993 Departmental Report, due to be published no later than 12 February 1993, will update the information contained in the reply. A copy will be placed in the Library.

Benefit Schemes

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 18 January, Official Report, column 101, what method was used to assess the value of a universal housing benefit scheme; and what other means are used in his Department to assess the benefits of proposals for social security schemes.

Mr. Burt: The Department has received various proposals for extending the housing benefit scheme. Departmental analysts assess the financial impact of a policy by using micro-simulation models to compare, for a sample of the population, estimated benefit entitlement before and after the proposed change.

The main data sources used are the Income Support Annual Statistical Enquiry, the Family Expenditure Survey, and forecasts produced by the Government Actuary's Department for caseloads of non income-related benefits.

Income Support

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Cumbernauld and Kilsyth (Mr. Hogg) of 18 January, Official Report, column 103, if he will publish an estimate of the regional and national distribution of claimants and payments of income support for mortgage interest.

Mr. Burt: The information is in the table.

Regions	Number of income support recipients with mortgage interest added in the assessment	Annual amount of mortgage interest added in the assessment £ millions
North Eastern	52,000	81
London North	80,000	247
South Western	40,000	107
Wales	27,000	49
Midlands	69,000	127
North Western	58,000	86
Scotland	18,000	33
London South	67,000	220
Great Britain	411,000	949

Notes:

1. Due to rounding the sum of the individual amounts for each region does not equal the total for Great Britain.
2. The regions are DSS administrative regions prior to 1991.

Local Offices, Paisley

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to develop and construct new premises in the Paisley area for the executive agencies responsible to his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: Plans to develop new premises in the Paisley area for the executive agencies of the Department of Social Security are matters for the chief executives of those agencies. Mr Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency will reply on their behalf to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from M. Bichard to Mr. Gordon McMaster, dated 27 January 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency (BA), it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about plans to develop and construct new premises in the Paisley area for the Department's Executive Agencies.

Of all the Department's Executive Agencies, including the planned Child Support Agency from April 1993, only the BA has plans to construct new premises in the Paisley area. It is planned that the building, in addition to BA staff, will also house staff from the Contributions Agency and Child Support Agency.

An application for planning consent has been lodged with Renfrew District Council and, subject to a satisfactory outcome, the sale of the site for the new office in Paisley, to replace the existing Social Security office, will then be concluded. It is hoped that matters will be cleared within the next six to eight weeks.

Funds are available for the construction of the new building and a start on site is expected immediately the site purchase is completed.

On current estimates the building should be ready for occupation by late 1994.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report. A copy will also be placed in the Library.

Disability Allowances

Mr. Robert B. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when Mrs. Elizabeth Snoxall (Ref. WA 237496B) can expect to receive a decision on her disability living allowance application.

Mr. Scott: The administration of disability living allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from M. Bichard to Mr Robert B. Jones, dated 27 January 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about Miss Elizabeth Snoxall's application for Disability Living Allowance (DLA).

I can confirm that outstanding action has now been completed on Miss Snoxall's claim which has been notified to her. The DLA Unit replied separately on 24 January to your earlier correspondence to them about the case.

Clearly your constituent has not received the standard of service which she has every right to expect from the Agency. I offer my sincere apologies for the delay in dealing with her claim and for the distress and frustration this must have caused. My letter of 19 October 1992 to all MPs explained the problems the Agency has faced since the successful launch of the new benefits and the positive steps taken to improve the situation. I can assure you that every effort is being made by staff and management to improve the response time and service to our customers.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will apper in the Official Report. A copy will also be placed in the Library.

Cold Weather Payments

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of how many people qualify for cold weather payments in each district.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from M. Bichard to Mr. Alan Milburn, dated 27 January 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking for an estimate of how many people qualify for Cold Weather Payments in each District.

An estimate of the number of Income Support recipients in each Benefits Agency District, based on figures for those claiming Income Support in November 1992, who may qualify for a Cold Weather Payment should the area be triggered is in the attached annex.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report. A copy will also be placed in the Library.

Registered Homes (Amendment) Act

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment has been made of the effect of the Registered Homes (Amendment) Act 1991 on the benefits of those who are currently part of adult fostering schemes, supported lodgings or adult placement schemes.

Mr. Burt: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Nottingham, North (Mr. Allen), 20 January 1993, Official Report, columns 294-95.

Retirement Pensioners

Mr. Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the number of people in receipt of the state retirement pension; what percentage of this figure (a) pays income tax, (b) pays no income tax but is not in receipt of income support and (c) is in receipt of income support.

Miss Widdecombe: The information is not available in the form requested as the data are not directly comparable. Figures for (b) are not available.

At 31 March 1992 (the latest date for which figures are available) 10,005,570 persons were in receipt of a contributory state retirement pension, 592,720 of whom were resident outside Great Britain.

I understand from the Inland Revenue that it is estimated that in the 1990-91 tax year 3·5 million persons in Great Britain in receipt of state retirement pension were liable to pay income tax.

At 31 May 1991 (the latest date for which figures are available) the number of income support claimants and partners in receipt of state retirement pension was (rounded to the nearest thousand) 1,383,000.

Care Allowances

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people would benefit and what is his estimate of the cost of extending entitlement to the carer premium to carers over retirement age who could establish underlying entitlement to invalid care allowance.

Mr. Burt: It is not possible for a person who becomes a carer after age 65 to establish entitlement to invalid care allowance. Information is not available on which to base a reliable estimate of the additional numbers who would qualify for the carer premium and the consequential cost.

Correspondence

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the hon. Member for Chelmsford can expect a substantive reply to his letters of 14 August, 5 November and 11 December 1992 to the chief executive of the Benefits Agency concerning his constituent, reference number DB103964.

Mr. Scott: I understand from Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency, that he replied in full to my hon. Friend on 27 January 1993 and apologised for the delay.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

GATT

1. Mr. Spearing: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimates he has made of the effects on British agriculture of the agreements so far reached in GATT.

Mr. Gummer: The agreement reached between EC and US negotiators last November takes full account of the common agricultural policy reforms agreed last May. A GATT deal based on that agreement would assure the future of the CAP support arrangements.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will place in the Library a detailed analysis of the effect of the GATT agreement on each sector of agriculture.

Mr. Curry: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Northampton, North (Mr. Marlow) on 30 November 1992 (Official Report, column 59). The Commission's paper has since been deposited in the Library of the House.

Battery Hens

13. Mr. Lewis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what procedures he intends to implement in order to improve the conditions under which battery hens are kept.

Mr. Soames: The Government's policy is that welfare standards for all systems of keeping hens should be set on a Community basis. We are pressing for major improvements in the current Community directive on battery hens.

Set-aside

14. Dr. Wright: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the progress of the set-aside scheme.

15. Mr. Pike: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress has been made in the new set-aside rules.

Mr. Curry: On 13 January, agriculture departments announced further details of the new arable payments scheme including claim procedures, rules on land transfers, a relaxation of the rules on set-aside in different yield regions and a more detailed EC regulation on non-food crops.

Tobacco

16. Mr. Gapes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how large are the current intervention stocks of tobacco held (a) in the European Community as a whole and (b) in the United Kingdom; and how much it costs (i) the European Community and (ii) the United Kingdom Government to purchase and store these stocks of tobacco.

Mr. Curry: The European Commission's most recent figures show 8,313 tonnes of tobacco held in intervention stores in Greece and Italy, the Community's main tobacco producers.

In 1991, the Community spent £37 million [54 million ecu] on storing tobacco, around 4 per cent. of CAP expenditure on tobacco for that year.

The United Kingdom does not produce or store tobacco. Our budgetary contribution is made to the EC budget as a whole.

Arable Aids Scheme

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about the recent food marketing seminar held at 10 Downing street.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the recent food marketing seminar held at 10 Downing Street.

Mr. Curry: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister chaired a seminar with leaders of the agriculture and food industries on 13 January. This considered ways to improve opportunities for British food suppliers to encourage our industries to become more competitive and to encourage investment in the UK.

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he intends to meet representatives of the British food industry to discuss the sale of food produced in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Curry: We meet the industry constantly. Last week alone there were three meetings specifically devoted to promote export and food marketing.

Mr. Curry: The Northallerton regional service centre, which covers North Yorkshire, has to date processed a third of the claims received for suckler cow premium under the 1992 scheme for payment. The remainder are being processed as quickly as possible.

Industrial and Marine Bacteria

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 17 December 1992, Official Report, columns 341-42, if he will give a breakdown of the use of the further £140,000 allocated to the work of the National Collections of Industrial and Marine Bacteria Ltd. for 1993-94; and what assessment he has now made of the long-term value of the collections as a national scientific resource.

Mr. Curry: The further £140,000 provided for NCIMB Ltd. is a reduction on the previous allocation but is the level of aid which will enable the company to remain in operation until March 1994. The Ministry has not stipulated the precise apportionment of this money between the various operating costs of the company but I understand the bulk of these funds will be used to pay the staff who maintain the collections.

The long-term value of the collections as a national scientific resource is being considered by the Office of Science and Technology and I refer the hon. Member to the answer that he received on 17 December from my right hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary to the Office of Public Service and Science (Official Report, column 351).

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Wray: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received on common agricultural policy costs to the United Kingdom in the last 12 months.

Mr. Curry: I receive numerous representations on all aspects of the CAP.

Forestry

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to develop a unified grant scheme to encourage and reward forest owners for developing conservation benefits to new and existing woods in the United Kingdom.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 25 January 1993]: I have been asked to reply.

The Government encourage forest and woodland owners to develop plans under the woodland grant scheme, which provides grants for the creation and management of woodlands to ensure that they yield a wide range of benefits, including conservation.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement outlining the timetable for the adoption of the Government's forestry strategy with special reference to restocking and replanting.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 25 January 1993]: I have been asked to reply.

The Government's aims and objectives for forestry, which include new planting and restocking, are described in the booklet "Forestry Policy for Great Britain", a copy of which is in the Library.

A number of forestry and environmental interests have suggested that the Government should prepare a forestry strategy which would set out how these aims and objectives are implemented. The Government will be considering the merits of preparing such a document in the light of discussions that the Forestry Commission are having with interested organisations.

SCOTLAND

Salmon

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the figures for the number of salmon caught in Scotland during the season 1991 and the season 1992, on rod and line and by commercial nets.

Sir Hector Monro: Details of reported catches of salmon in Scotland are published annually in The Scottish Office Statistical Bulletin—Fisheries Series. Copies of this publication are available in the Library. The reported catches of salmon in the 1991 season by method of catch (net and coble and fixed engine for netsmen and rod-and-line for anglers) are set out below.

Reported Catches of Salmon in Scotland-1991

Method	Reported Catch
Net and coble	9,528
Fixed engine	10,529
Rod-and-line	45,136

Figures for the 1992 season are currently being collated ready for publication in the summer of this year.

Child Abuse

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will produce an information leaflet on child abuse, setting out such matters as (a) the law on child abuse, (b) organisations that provide counselling and/or support, and (c) what a responsible adult should do if he/she suspects a child has suffered abuse.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: In guidance to local authorities and other agencies, my right hon. Friend has provided information on a wide range of aspects of child protection. He also provides direct financial suport for organisations such as Childline (Scotland) which provide information, advice and counselling about child abuse. In addition, local authorities produce public information on child care matters, including child protection.

Mr. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what guidance is provided by his office on the circumstances under which child abusers may or may not apply for access to the children they have abused.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: When a child is referred to a children's hearing and grounds which include abuse have either been accepted or found proved by the sheriff, the hearing has responsibility to determine in the light of the information before them whether the child needs compulsory measures of care to protect him or her from harm. If the hearing decides to make a supervision requirement, it has discretion to regulate access to the child according to its view of the child's best interest. It is open to the parents or the child to appeal to the sheriff against the terms of a supervision requirement.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make it his policy to end plea bargaining in cases of child abuse.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Decisions as to which pleas, if any, to accept in criminal cases, including cases of child abuse, are a matter for Crown counsel and procurators fiscal in the exercise of their independent discretion and having regard to all the circumstances. It would not be proper for the Secretary of State to attempt to interfere with the exercise of this discretion.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide guidance to social workers on avoidance of coercion when attempting reconciliation between victims of abuse and the offenders.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Cases of child abuse are often complex and give rise to conflicting interests and emotions, but social workers have to give primary consideration to the best interests of the child and to take account of the child's wishes and views. My right hon. Friend has recently established a working party to produce practice guidance to assist social workers engaged in all aspects of child protection.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will review the application of interdicts preventing access of abusers to child victims in order to estimate how successful they have been in protecting their safety.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish Law Commission has considered the working of section 14 of the Matrimonial Homes (Family Protection) (Scotland) Act 1981 relating to matrimonial interdicts in their Report on Family Law (Scot Law Com No. 135). Among other matters the commission recommends extension of the circumstances in which matrimonial interdicts and powers of arrest under the 1981 Act can provide protection for an applicant spouse or child of the family against domestic violence. The commission's recommendations are being considered.

Special Advisers

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how the salaries of special advisers in his Department are determined; how this relates to the civil service pay structure; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: The salaries of the special advisers in my Department are determined from guidance set out by the Cabinet Office and approved by HM Treasury. They do not relate to the civil service pay structure.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which of his special advisers are engaged in other remunerated employment outwith the civil service.

Mr. Lang: Two special advisers have been appointed to my Department; neither is engaged in other remunerated employment outwith the civil service.

Indigenous Plants

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to make available additional resources for the planting of indigenous species along the M8 corridor; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: It is the policy of the roads directorate of the Scottish Office Industry Department to appoint landscape consultants as part of the design team on motorway and trunk road schemes to ensure that all environmental aspects are considered and that, as far as possible, the planting is harmonious with the natural character of the local area. A strategy for enhancing the landscape of the M8 corridor between Newbridge and Newhouse was prepared in 1988. The roads directorate in partnership with a wide range of interests, including the local authorities, the Central Scotland Countryside Trust and Scottish Enterprise implemented a phased annual planting programme of predominately indigenous species. It is planned to spend £160,000 in Phase V in spring 1993. Further expenditure will be determined by the outcome of the "Future Strategy for the M8" study commissioned in December 1992.

Following consultation with the Royal Fine Arts Commission for Scotland and the local district council it has been decided to significantly expand the planting programme on the M8 to the west of Glasgow at the St. James interchange scheme. Detailed proposals have yet to be finalised but it is anticipated that indigenous species will be included where these are compatible with the aims of the design philosophy. The estimated cost is £500,000 and will be funded by the roads directorate and Strathclyde regional council.

Construction Industry (Taylor Report)

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, how many jobs have been created in the construction industry in Scotland as a result of implementation of the recommendations of the Taylor report on football stadium safety.

Sir Hector Monro: This information is not available centrally.

MV Braer

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has carried out an environmental impact study of the sinking of the MV Braer.

Sir Hector Monro: A range of specialist studies on the environmental effects is already underway. I understand that the Shetland Islands council is undertaking a substantial impact assessment. My right hon. Friend announced on 26 January the setting up of an ecological steering group under the chairmanship of Professor Bill Ritchie. One of its tasks will be to oversee these studies.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many veterinary checks have been carried out on Shetland livestock following the MV Brear oil spillage.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 27 January 1993]: A number of sheep which have been on contaminated grazing have been acquired for slaughter and laboratory examination for hydracarbon residues in the flesh.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his current estimate of the number of livestock affected and the number destroyed as a result of oil contamination in Shetland.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 27 January 1993]: My Department has estimated that some 2,000 sheep were on grazings contaminated by oil from the MV Braer; the majority have been moved to cleaner grazing or out of the affected area altogether; the remainder are being fed hay or other fodder; and none have had to be destroyed.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what studies he has commissioned on the aftermath of the Shetland oil spill.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 27 January 1993]: Work has begun on the systematic monitoring of fish, shellfish, seawater, soils, herbage, crops and livestock. Shetland Health Board and the Environmental health (Scotland) unit have in hand a detailed health survey, which includes the offer of a general clinical examination to some 600 people living near the wreck, with funding from the Scottish Office. Among the other bodies already active in this field are the Scottish agricultural colleges, Scottish Natural Heritage, the Royal Botanic Gardens (Edinburgh), the Institute for Terrestrial Ecology and Shetland Islands council. All these strands will be drawn together by the ecological steeing group which my right hon. Friend announced on 11 January.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what long-term studies of the ecotoxicology of oil are planned by his Department in relation to birds, fish, invertebrates, marine mammals and others.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 27 January 1993]: My right hon. Friend announced on 11 January that he intends to set up an ecological steering group to oversee studies of the ecological effects of the oil pollution caused by the wreck of MV Braer on the coast of Shetland. The chairman and terms of reference of the group will be announced shortly. It will certainly be taking an expert view on what long-term studies should be undertaken.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the sites of special scientific interest affected by the Shetland oil spill and the species found in them.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 27 January 1993]: The information is set out in the table. Many common species are found in these sites in addition to those which led to their notification. St. Ninian's is a site notified for its physiographical interest.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has about the risk of pollutants from the MV Braer oil spillage being passed via livestock to human beings through the food chain.

Sir Hector Munro [holding answer 27 January 1993]: The livestock in the affected area are cattle and sheep. The cattle are housed indoors at this time of year and it is unlikely that any contamination will reach them. However, the milk and the water supplies to the dairy farms are being regularly sampled and analysed and to date these results show that there has been no contamination. Very few, if any, of the sheep in the area would normally be going for slaughter at this time of year, and farmers have been advised not to send sheep for slaughter at present. In any case, post mortem inspection at the abattoir would reveal any pronounced taint in the meat and would be grounds for condemnation. In order to ascertain whether significant hydrocarbon residues remain in the tissues of sheep exposed to this contamination a sample number of animals have been obtained for slaughter and laboratory examination.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his best estimate of how long it will be before pasture vacated following oil contamination may safely be used for grazing.

Sir Hector Munro [holding answer 27 January 1993]: It is not yet possible to provide such an estimate. Much will depend on the extent of the contamination and the information arising from the programme of testing of sheep, herbage and soil samples now in progress. Monitoring and testing will continue as long as is necessary. The Scottish Office agriculture and fisheries department will provide advice with regard to safety in the light of the scientific evidence.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action he has taken to date, and what action he intends to take, to set up ecological studies into the short and long-term effects of the oil spill from the MV Braer oil tanker.

Sir Hector Munro [holding answer 15 January 1993]: My right hon. Friend announced in his statement to the House on 11 January that an ecological steering group was being established. He announced the terms of reference of that group, under the chairmanship of Professor Bill Ritchie, on 26 January. The group's immediate task will be to develop urgently the best strategies, both in the short and longer terms, for dealing with the implications of the incident for the natural environment of Shetland. The group will oversee special studies of the ecological effects of the incident and will advise on more general lessons which may be drawn for the future.

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what precautionary measures are being taken by his Department to ensure that foodstuffs are not being sold to the public which have been contaminated by the oil spill in the Shetland Islands.

Sir Hector Monro: The primary responsibility for the safety of foodstuffs on Shetland rests with Shetland Islands Council, as food authority. My Department has maintained contact with the Islands Council continuously since the grounding of the MV Braer, and I am satisfied that the council has taken all necessary steps within its power, for example by ensuring that contaminated vegetable crops do not reach the market and that milk supplies are monitored. In addition the Government has made an order under Part I of the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985 defining an area within which fishing and harvesting of farmed fish are prohibited. This designated area is constantly being kept under review on the basis of test results from water and fish sampling.

My Department has advised farmers not to send sheep for slaughter meantime, and has purchashed a sample number of sheep for slaughter and laboratory examination to assess whether any significant hydrocarbon residues remain in their tissue.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps are being taken to protect wildlife sites in the Minches against possible oil contamination.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 27 January 1993]: Coastal local authorities have agreed emergency contingency plans with the marine pollution control unit at the Department of Transport to deal with contamination by sea borne oil. In addition Scottish Natural Heritage stands ready to provide advice and practical assistance in any case where wildlife and wildlife habitats are affected by oil pollution. Similar help would also be available to those voluntary bodies who assist with the recovery and rehabilitation of wildlife in such circumstances. The Ecological Steering Group which is being established by my right hon. Friend following the grounding of the MV Braer will study the effects on wildlife habitats in the Shetland Islands of that incident and advise on the lessons to be learned which could be applied should a similar incident take place in future in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans have been drawn up for compensation payments in the event of delay in the slaughter of fatstock due to contamination by toxic residues arising from the MV Braer oil spillage.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 27 January 1993]: The Government have made available assistance to producers who are suffering economic hardship through a bridging fund, which will be operated for the Government by Shetland Islands council. Details of the Fund's operation were announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland in answer to a question from the hon. Member from Aberdeen, South (Mr. Robertson) on 21 January.

Sandeels

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will continue the ban on the industrial fishing of sandeels in Shetland waters into the 1993 season; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 26 January 1993]: The decision on whether to continue the closure of the Shetland sandeel fishery will be taken on the basis of the latest scientific analysis of the state of the stocks. I expect to receive the scientific advice within the next few weeks. We shall also have to take account of any implications of the recent oil spill from the MV Braer. The final decision will be taken after full consultation with all interested parties.

KPMG Management Consultants

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the contracts awarded by his Department to KPMG Management Consultants over the past 12 months.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 25 January 1993]: Two contracts were awarded by The Scottish Office to KPMG Management Consultants in the 12 months to 31 December 1992:

Evaluation of NHS trusts; and Advice on future administrative and information technology systems and procurement of IT systems for the Scottish Office superannuation division.

Scotland in Bloom Competition

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what support and assistance he provides to the Scotland in Bloom competition; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 27 January 1993]: The Beautiful Scotland in Bloom competition is run by Keep Scotland Beautiful and is funded through commercial sponsorship.

EMPLOYMENT

Disabled People

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what arrangements are in place to monitor the implementation of the Disabled Persons (Employment) Act 1944; how many complaints there have been in each year since 1985 alleging contravention of section 9(5) of the Act; how many of these have led to prosecutions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The provisions of the 1944 Act are monitored in a number of ways:

(i) by a rolling programme of inspections of employers quota records;
(ii) by undertaking an annual postal survey into the quota position of employers;
(iii) by reminding employers of their duties and obligations;
(iv) by maintaining records locally of employers who are subject to quota and of their quota positions;
(v) as part of the work helping people with disabilities find suitable employment and by promoting the employment of disabled people generally.

The employment service receives a small number of complaints each year from registered disabled people who consider that their dismissal contravenes section 9(5) of the 1944 Act. Precise figures are not available. All complaints are investigated and, in the period since 1985, none have led to the prosecution of an employer.

The employment service continues to administer the quota scheme in accordance with legal requirements. It is generally accepted that the scheme is not working as originally intended and we are keeping the position under review.

Employment Training

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of people with disabilities in (a) London and (b) the south-east, found jobs on leaving employment training in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. McLoughlin: The percentage of people with disabilities going into jobs after leaving employment training was 16 per cent. in London and 23 per cent. in the south-east. These figures are for all leavers who said they had a disability in the period April 1991 to March 1992, the latest period for which information is available.

Partially Sighted People

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when she next plans to meet representative of the Partially-Sighted Society to discuss the needs and rights of the partially sighted; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. Friend, the Secretary of States has no plans at present to meet the Partially-Sighted Society.

Youth Training

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of young people graduating from youth training schemes in (a) the London borough of Lewisham and (b) south-east London secured full-time permanent employment related to their training within (i) six months and (ii) one year of the completion of their course, in the latest period for which figures are available.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information requested is not available.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many eligible young people in Hampshire have currently been unable to obtain a place on a youth training scheme.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 21 January 1993]: Information on the total number of young people eligible for youth training is not available.

Sellafield

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will give details concerning the leak of radioactive plutonium at the Sellafield reprocessing plant in September; and what assessment she has made of the effect on the health of workers at the plant and those who live in close proximity to it in the short and long term.

Mr. McLoughlin: This incident was fully investigated by the Health and Safety Executive's nuclear installations inspectorate who considered that there was no escape of radioactivity to the environment and there was no additional radiation exposure to workers on the site at the time of the incident. Doses to workers engaged on remedial activities have been controlled within statutory dose limits and to be as low as reasonably practicable. A statement of the incident was published in HSE's quarterly statement on incidents at nuclear installations on 4 January 1993, and also in BNFL's Sellafield site newsletter. Copies of the statement and the site newsletter have been placed in the Library.

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information is available regarding the lengths of periods of unemployment benefit disqualification imposed by adjudication officers in the area which includes Stockton, North.

Mr. McLoughlin: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. Frank Cook, dated 28 January 1993:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to write to you direct to respond to your Parliamentary Question to her about the length of periods of unemployment benefit disqualifications in the Stockton North area. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

All decisions on claims for unemployment benefit are made by the independent adjudicating authorities.

Information about the length of disqualification periods imposed is not collated or published as each is decided in the light of the circumstances surrounding the individual case. Without knowledge of these circumstances no meaningful interpretation of the information could be made.

I hope this is helpful.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has regarding the lengths of periods of unemployment benefit disqualification imposed by adjudication officers for the unemployment office which covers the Workington constituency.

Mr. McLoughlin: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information is available regarding the lengths of periods of unemployment benefit imposed by adjudication officers on people living in the London borough of Wandsworth; and how many people have been affected by such decisions in each of the last three years.

Mr. McLoughlin: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 28 January 1993:

All decisions on claims for unemployment benefit are made by the independent adjudicating authorities.

Information about the length of disqualification periods imposed is not collated or published as each is decided in the light of the circumstances surrounding the individual case. Without knowledge of these circumstances no meaningful interpretation of the information could be made.

The maximum period of disqualification for receiving unemployment benefit is 26 weeks.

Unfortunately, information is not available in the form you have requested. We compile information on disqualification by region and the Wandsworth area is included in our London and South Eastern Region. The statistical table attached gives the figures for the number, but not the lengths, of disqualifications imposed in that region.

I hope this is helpful.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

light of the circumstances surrounding the individual case. Without knowledge of these circumstances no meaningful interpretation of the information could be made.

I hope this is helpful.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) how many claimants (a) nationally and (b) in the area containing Nottingham, North have been subject to unemployment benefit disqualification imposed by adjudication officers in each of the last five years;

(2) what information is available regarding the lengths of periods of unemployment benefit disqualification imposed by adjudication officers in the area which includes Nottingham, North;

(3) what guidance exists for adjudication officers when imposing unemployment benefit disqualification; as to the length of time of that disqualification; what is the maximum period of such disqualification; and how often it was imposed (a) in area containing Nottingham, North and (b) nationally in each of the last five years.

Mr. McLoughlin: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr Graham Allen, dated 28 January 1993:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to write to you direct to respond to your three Parliamentary Questions to her about the guidance available to adjudication officers and the numbers and length of periods of unemployment benefit disqualifications in the Nottingham North area and nationally. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

All decisions on claims for unemployment benefit are made by the independent adjudicating authorities.

Although adjudication officers are employed by us, they are appointed by the Secretary of State specifically to give independent decisions on questions relating to benefit entitlement. These decisions must comply with Social Security legislation and established case law.

Adjudication officers are assisted in their decision making by guidance contained in the Adjudication Officers Guide. This brings together the law and case law, both of which are also published and available to them, and provides further guidance based on precendent and legal advice. The Guide is written by the Office of the Chief Adjudication Officer (Central Adjudication Services) for all adjudication officers who handle questions and appeals related to social security benefits. It is hoped that its publication by Her Majesty's Stationery Office will be of help to others interested in social security, such as welfare rights groups. However, the guide is primarily designed for the use of adjudication officers and this is reflected in the way it is written and presented.

Information about the length of disqualification period imposed is not collated or published as each is decided in the light of the circumstances surrounding the individual case. Without knowledge of these circumstances no meaningful interpretation of the information could be made.

The maximum period of disqualification for receiving unemployment benefit is 26 weeks. Unfortunately because we do not collect the information about the length of disqualificaiton imposed I am unable to provide the details you requested on how often the maximum period of disqualification is imposed.

Unfortunately, the information we have is not available in the form you have requested. We compile information on disqualificaions by region and nationally. The Nottingham North area is included in our East Midlands and Eastern Region. The statistical tables attached give the number of disqualifications imposed both for that region and nationally.

I hope this is helpful.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

Unemployment, Ashfield

Mr. Hoon: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the latest figure for the total number of people unemployed in Ashfield.

Mr. McLoughlin: In December 1992, the latest date for which figures are available, there were 5,623 claimant unemployed people in the Ashfield local authority district.

Training, Liverpool

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people in the Liverpool travel-to-work area are currently being trained on Government financed schemes; what percentage of trainees leaving schemes last year are known to have found employment: and if she will express these figures as a proportion of the total number of people registered for employment benefit in Liverpool.

Mr. McLoughlin: At November 1992, the latest date for which information is available, there were about 12,600 people on employment and youth training in the Merseyside training and enterprise council area. Estimates are not available for the Liverpool travel-to-work area. In the latest full year to March 1992, 22 per cent. of employment training leavers and 33 per cent. of youth training leavers were in a job after leaving their programme. People on Government training schemes are not included in the monthly unemployment figures.

Training (Homeless People)

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what research her Department has commissioned into training initiatives for homeless people.

Mr. McLoughlin: In May 1992 a report was produced by Conran Roche Planning for the employment service regional office in Birmingham called "Access Needs of Homeless People into Employment and Training". I will arrange for a copy to be sent to the hon. Member.

In October 1992 my Department commissioned the production of a good practice guide for training and enterprise councils based on initiatives to help homeless people find suitable training and employment. I will ensure a copy of the guide is sent to the hon. Member when it is issued.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many 16 and 17-year-olds are waiting for a youth training place (a) nationally, (b) in Nottinghamshire and (c) in the city of Nottingham.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 11 January 1993]: My right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State has already announced the estimated numbers of young people seeking training at national level in a reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Gedling (Mr. Mitchell) on 1 December 1992, at columns 127-28.

Changes have been introduced to improve the estimates of demand for places at local level. My right hon. Friend is considering what further information to make available in the light of advice on the reliability of the statistics.

Management Charter Initiative

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what efforts are currently undertaken by her Department to promote the management charter initiative code of practice, specifically among small and medium-sized enterprises.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Government have been instrumental in helping the management charter initiative (MCI) to become established and fully support its efforts to promote the code of practice to all enterprises, including the small and medium sized. With the Department of Trade and Industry and Scottish Enterprise, the Employment Department is sponsoring an MCI development project to help training and enterprise councils, local enterprise councils and chambers of commerce better ensure that the management development needs of small and medium sized enterprises are met.

Pit Closures

Ms. Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment on what date she was informed of the extent of the job losses announced in the recent British Coal pit closure programme.

Mr. McLoughlin: Information on consultation with the Department on pit closures is set out in a memorandum and supplementary memorandum to the Employment Seclect Committee which the Committee has published.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Children's Play

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what progress has been made on discussing Sports Council funding for the national children's play and recreation unit; and what measures will be implemented to fund children's play after March 1993 pending the completion of these talks.

Mr. Brooke: The Sports Council's budget proposals for 1993-94 include provision for some continuing work on children's play. I shall make a further statement in due course.

National Lottery

177. Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what estimate he has made of the annual costs incurred in connection with administering the national lottery by (a) the Office of the National Lottery, (b) the National Heritage Memorial Fund, (c) the National Lottery Charities Board, (d) the Millenium Commission, (e) the Arts Councils of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and (f) the Sports Councils of England, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland as a percentage of turnover.

Mr. Brooke: I have estimated that the annual costs of Oflot will be £1·5 million in 1993-94, and around £2 million thereafter. The percentage of turnover which these figures represent will depend on the success of the national lottery. It is not possible to say with any exactness what proportion of the funds allocated to each distributor will be spent on administration, since this will largely be determined by the volume of funds generated for distribution, and the volume of applications to be processed. The national lottery administration costs of the distributive bodies will be voted by Parliament annually in the normal way, and fully covered by receipts from national lottery proceeds.

Minority Languages

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when he expects to make a final decision regarding his Department's position on the Council of Europe convention on regional or minority languages.

Sir Wyn Roberts: I have been asked to reply.

The United Kingdom decision on whether to ratify the Council of Europe convention on regional or minority languages will be taken by the Government as a whole. The Government hope to be able to announce their decision shortly.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list the organisations and individuals with whom he has had consultations on the Council of Europe convention on regional or minority languages since 5 November 1992.

Sir Wyn Roberts: I have been asked to reply.

The Council of Europe convention on regional or minority languages places obligations on national Governments. Consultations on the implications of the convention have therefore taken place within the Government.

ENVIRONMENT

Housing Stock

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of housing stock is unfit for habitation or in serious disrepair, in each standard region; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: The latest reliable figures on the percentage of unfit dwellings in each English standard region are presented in the table. The figures are from the 1986 English house condition survey and relate to the fitness standard in operation prior to the changes made in the Local Government and Housing Act 1989. Data on the percentage of dwellings in serious disrepair are not available at standard region level from this survey.

Region	Percent Unfit

Yorkshire/Humberside	5·8
North West	6·1
East Midlands	4·8

Local Government Finance

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total level of local authority debt for each financial year since 1980.

Mr. Robin Squire: The toal external debt (temporary and longer-term) of local authorities in the United Kingdom at 31 March each year was as follows:

	£ billion
1980	33·5
1981	35·8
1982	35·9
1983	36·0
1984	37·3
1985	40·2
1986	42·7
1987	45·0
1988	47·8
1989	50·8
1990	51·7
1991	53·7
1992	54·4

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to announce the outcome of the consultation on the local government finance settlement for 1993-94; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: I am today laying before this House the Local Government Finance Report (England) 1993-94, the Limitation of Council Tax and Precepts (Relevant Notional Amounts) Report (England) 1993-94, and the Special Grant Report (No. 5). These reports establish the amount of grant to be paid to local authorities and the basis of its distribution for 1993-94, and specify the amounts which are to be used as the basis of comparison for measuring increases in local authorities' budget in 1993-94 for the purposes of capping. I shall be sending copies of these reports to all authorities, together with a table showing the standard spending assessments and grant entitlement of each authority; these will be placed in the Library and have been placed in the Vote Office. I also reaffirm the provisional capping criteria that I announced last November.

Marston Moor Airfield

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to respond to the inspector's report following the public inquiry on the planning proposal to permit flying on the Marston Moor airfield near York.

Mr. Baldry: The planning inspector's formal report of the local inquiry, held on 8 to 11 September last year, was submitted to my right hon. and learned Friend at the beginning of this month and is being considered urgently. Unless there are unforeseen difficulties, my Department expects to issue the appeals decision within eight weeks of receiving the inspector's report.

Refugees

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the Government will make a decision as to the distribution of the special grant for local authorities faced with exceptional costs arising from the influx of refugees from former Yugoslavia, announced on 16 November 1992; and what criteria will be applied in the making of that decision.

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment is today laying the Special Grant Report (No. 5). That report, inter alia, sets out the determination of the amounts of Yugoslav displaced persons grant to be paid to certain charging authorities in support of expenditure incurred in the financial year 1992-93. The criteria applied in making the determination are set out in the report.

Homelessness

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will tabulate the 10 highest spending borough or district councils in the year 1991-92, or forecast for 1992-93, or 1993-94, in their statutory duties for homelessness (a) by sum involved and (b) by amounts per head of adult population, giving the figures in each case.

Mr. Baldry: The available information is as follows:

Budgeted expenditure on homelessness[1] 1992-93

1. Haringey	11·7
2. Hackney	11·5

Homelessness

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many people were turned down as not being officially homeless under the provisions of the Housing Act 1985 in Nottingham, and not offered temporary accommodation, in the last year for which figures are available; and how many were accepted.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 26 January 1993]: The available information for 1991 is contained in edition No. 102, table 9(b) of "Local Housing Statistics: England and Wales", a copy of which is available in the Library.

Urban Air

Mr. Thomason: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the report of the quality of urban air review group will be published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The executive summary of the report was published last December. The full report is published today. I am arranging for copies to be placed in the Library. I am grateful to Professor Roy Harrison and his colleagues for their thorough assessment of the current state of knowledge on urban air quality. We will study their recommendations with care.

Controlled Waste

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many appeals have been made against the refusal by waste regulation authorities to register applicants as carriers of controlled waste; and whether he has issued any decisions.

Mr. Maclean: Carriers of controlled waste are required to register with waste regulation authorities under the Control of Pollution (Amendment) Act 1989 and the Controlled Waste (Registration of Carriers and Seizure of Vehicles) Regulations 1991. The registration system is an important part of the measures being introduced by the Government to improve the handling and disposal of waste. The legislation provides for applicants to appeal to the Secretary of State against a decision to refuse to register them. To date 25 appeals have been made.

The first decision letter on such an appeal was issued on 22 December 1992. The appeal was made on the grounds that it was unreasonable for the waste regulation authority to conclude that, in the light of the appellant's convictions for prescribed offences, it was undesirable for him to be authorised to transport controlled waste. The appellant argued that steps had been taken to ensure that the offences are not repeated. The Secretary of State's decision in this case was to uphold the appeal and direct the waste regulation authority to register the appellant.

The Secretary of State does not consider that operators should be forced out of business unnecessarily as a result of the registration system. He is of the opinion that waste regulation authorities should normally register operators who have taken steps to ensure that there is no repetition of the offences for which they have been convicted. Powers are available to regulation authorities to revoke a person's registration if that person is subsequently convicted of a prescribed offence and the authority considers that it is undesirable for the registered carrier to continue to be authorised to transport controlled waste.

Construction Industry Training Board

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to establish a statutory construction industry training board.

Mr. McLoughlin: I have been asked to reply.

There has been a statutory industry training board since 1964.

DEFENCE

Nuclear Testing

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to discuss with the United States Secretary of State for Defence the future access to the Nevada test site that will be afforded to the United Kingdom for safety tests of nuclear warheads.

Mr. Aitken: My right hon. and learned Friend looks forward to discussing a range of subjects of mutual interest with Mr Aspin.

Maritime Defence Exhibition

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what contribution his Department plans to make to the international maritime defence exhibition and conference to be held in Brighton on 31 March to 2 April.

Mr Aitken: This is a matter delegated to the Defence Research Agency under its framework document. i have therefore asked the chief executive to reply directly to the hon. Member.

Letter from J.A.R. Chisholm to Mr Llew Smith, dated 28 January 1993.

In today's written answer the Minister of State for Defence Procurement informed you that I would be replying directly to your question regarding the International Maritime Defence Exhibition and Conference.

The event is being organised by a private company, Spearhead Exhibitions Ltd., and sponsored by the Defence Research Agency. The MOD and the DRA both plan to have stands at the Exhibition. They will also be members of the Conference Committee and will almost certainly be presenting papers at the Conference.

I hope you will find this helpful.

RAF Boulmer

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many RAF Boulmer married quarters are currently vacant in the village of Longhoughton, Northumberland.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As at 31 December 1992 there were 14 vacant RAF Boulmer married quarters in Longhoughton. Five of these properties were already allocated to service families who were due to move in shortly and the remainder were either undergoing or awaiting major works services. In addition a further 40 houses were emptied between September and December 1992 to allow extensive modernisation and refurbishment to take place. Once this work is completed the properties will be used to accommodate service families.

Retired Personnel

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what applications have been received from personnel in his Department for permission to transfer to the private sector on retirement.

Mr. Aitken: Between 300 and 600 applications seeking permission to take up employment in the private sector are made by crown servants in my Department each year. These represent all applications required under the business appointment rules, in respect of crown servants who retire, resign or are made redundant from crown service. In 1992, of 403 applications made under these rules, 364 were submitted because the applicant had retired.

Rosyth and Devonport Dockyards

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when Devonport Management Ltd. was first invited to file its original tender for nuclear refit work.

Mr. Aitken: In July 1991, both contractors at the royal dockyards were invited to make proposals to the Ministry of Defence for concentrating all nuclear refitting, refuelling and decommissioning work at the dockyard each manages. No tenders have yet been sought for this work.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he made before 6 January of Babcock Thorn's second bid, entitled "Scheme IV", for nuclear refit work at Rosyth.

Mr. Aitken: Babcock Thorn Ltd.'s proposals to upgrade docks at Rosyth were given appropriate consideration.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to make an announcement about the future of Rosyth and Devonport dockyards.

Mr. Aitken: As soon as possible.

Mr. McLeih: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assurances were given to Babock Thorn Ltd. on the evaluation of "Scheme IV" for the nuclear refit work at Rosyth dockyard, submitted on 10 December 1992.

Mr. Aitken: BTL asked my Department if it would consider a proposal to upgrade docks at Rosyth as an alternative to its previous proposals. In acceding to this request, my Department gave no assurances on the evaluation of the response.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he has taken to ensure that officials working on the future of Rosyth and Devonport dockyards have no conflicts of interest.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I am confident that officials working on the future of the royal dockyards have no conflict of interest.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what procedure he will adopt for the assessment of Rosyth's second nuclear docks proposal entitled "Scheme IV."

Mr. Aitken: The proposal will be given fair and equal assessment against the same criteria used to assess other proposals submitted for nuclear refitting. All relevant factors will be taken into account.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what experience each of the officials concerned with the evaluation of tenders submitted by Rosyth and Devonport dockyards has of working in the private sector.

Mr. Aitken: It is Government policy to encourage the interchange of civil servants with the private sector in order to broaden their experience. Given the number of officials concerned with providing advice on the future of the royal dockyards, it would take disproportionate time and effort to provide the information sought.

Proof and Experimental Sites

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimates he has made of the possible cost of making each proof and experimental establishment site environmentally safe and suitable for alternative use.

Mr. Aitken: This matter is being addressed by the director general of test and evaluation in his overall review of test and evaluation facilities within the Ministry of Defence.

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the contractors involved at each of the proof and experimental establishments (land); and what was the volume and value of their work in 1991-92 and in the current financial year.

Mr. Aitken: The site contracts at the proof and experimental establishments at Cold Meece, Eskmeals and Shoeburyness (including Lavington) are currently with SERCO; the contract for the environmental test centre at Foulness is with Assessment Services Ltd; and that for the proof and experimental establishment at Pendine is with Airworks Ltd. The volumes of work and their value are a matter of commercial confidentiality between the Department and the relevant contractors.

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will provide economic comparisons of the cost effectiveness of each of the proof and experimental establishments (land) including the financial turnover per year, the number of employees, details of profit and loss-making facilities and any other direct quality and efficiency comparisons; and if he will make the information available for public scrutiny.

Mr. Aitken: The cost-effectiveness of all Ministry of Defence test and evaluation facilities is an important part of the overall review that is being undertaken by the director general of test and evaluation; the results of this will not be known until May. Any proposals that emanate from this review which have an impact on the size or location of the civilian work force will be subject to consultation with the trades union and other interested parties. Any consultation document will contain relevant financial information.

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will outline the Government's proposals for market testing the work now being carried out by the proof and experimental establishments (land).

Mr. Aitken: In line with Government policy, the Ministry of Defence is committed to a substantial rolling programme of market testing to demonstrate that it provides good quality services that represent value for money to the taxpayer. As part of this exercise, the directorate general of Test and evaluation is required to market test activity amounting to £45 million. Plans for doing this will be finalised after decisions on the rationalisation of facilities have been completed.

Procurement Executive

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress there has been in his plans to allocate his Department's procurement executive at a site near Bristol; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: I am pleased to announce to the House that, following a careful review, the Government have decided to proceed with the construction phase of this important project.

A detailed planning statement was registered with Northavon district council, the local planning authority, on 22 January 1993. Following completion of the formal consultation process, we expect that the construction of the development will commence with the site infrastructure works in the spring of this year, with construction of the buildings starting in late summer. The site has been designed to accommodate a total population of some 5,500, including support staff. Occupation is scheduled to start in the autumn of 1995 and I expect all PE HQ business operations to be managed from Abbey Wood by the late autumn of 1996.

This ambitious project will provide not only a considerable stimulus to the local economy but also to the hard pressed construction industry who will be competing for work. We expect that up to 1,500 jobs will be created during the construction phase; in the longer term, up to 1,000 posts at the new headquarters will be filled by local recruitment, together with further job opportunities to meet the need for efficient running and support of the complex.

HOME DEPARTMENT

South Yorkshire Fire Service

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the budget of the South Yorkshire fire service (a) in the current financial year and (b) for 1993-94; and what estimate he has made of the effect of compliance with the capping requirement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The South Yorkshire fire and civil defence authority's revenue budget for the financial year 1992-93 is £31·614 million. The authority has yet to set a budget for the financial year 1993-94. In doing so, it must have regard to the intended designation criteria for council tax capping announced on 26 November 1992 by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment, to the nationally recommended minimum standards of fire cover, and to its statutory duties under the Fire Services Act 1947.

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the establishment level of the South Yorkshire fire service; and what the forecast actual manning level is for March 1994.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The establishment scheme notified to me on 26 February 1992 by the South Yorkshire fire and civil defence authority provided for a whole-time establishment for the South Yorkshire fire service on 1 January 1992 of 1,084 posts, and for a retained establishment on that date of 192 posts. The authority has not yet notified me of the establishment scheme for 1 January 1993. Any forecasts of actual staffing levels in the future are a matter for the authority.

Naturalisation

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what changes he expects to make in the procedures related to application for naturalisation to become British citizens consequent to the implementation of the treaty on European union; and what information he has on the principal differences in the procedures adopted from those of other member states.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans to amend the requirements for naturalisation. He is aware of the broad principles governing naturalisation in member states of the European Community.

Danish Citizens

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will state the rights and obligations of (a) a Danish citizen resident in the United Kingdom and (b) a United Kingdom citizen resident in Denmark occasioned by implementation of the inter-governmental decision agreed at Edinburgh and how they differ from those currently obtaining.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: When the treaty on European union enters into force, Danish nationals resident in the United Kingdom—like other European Community nationals—will, in addition to the existing rights of free movement and residence as provided in the treaty of Rome and in measures adopted to give it effect, gain the rights to vote and stand in local and in European parliamentary elections, to petition the European Parliament and to apply to a European ombudsman.

United Kingdom and other European Community nationals resident in Denmark already enjoy the right to vote in local elections.

The Edinburgh decision does not affect this position but makes clear that union citizenship does not replace national citizenship and the rights and obligations accruing from it, which will continue to be decided by reference to the national law of the member state concerned.

Police Statistics

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many civilian staff there were in each police force in England and Wales in 1981 and 1991; and what percentage of total employees these figures represented in each year.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information requested is set out in the table:

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for each police force in England and Wales in 1981 and 1991 the number and percentage of entrants who were over the age of (a) 30 years and (b) 40 years.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information requested is not held centrally and could be collected only at disproportionate cost.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Judiciary (Training)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what was the total cost of training for the judiciary for each year since 1979.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Judicial Studies Board, which is responsible for training the judiciary, was established in 1979. Until 1987 it had no separate budget and expenditure on training for the judiciary in that period cannot be discretely identified. Since 1987-88 the Judicial Studies Board has had its own budget. Annual expenditure has been as follows:

1987-88	604,330
1988-89	601,100
1989-90	977,909
1990-91	1,535,720
1991-92	1,765,460
1992-93	[1]1,800,000

[1] Estimate.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many days training per year were undertaken by the judiciary in (a) the Court of Appeal, (b) the High Court and (c) the circuit bench for each year since 1987.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Training for the judiciary is organised by the Judicial Studies Board. The numbers of judges trained at courses and seminars arranged by the Judicial Studies Board since January 1987 were as follows:

	Days
(a) 1987
Circuit judges	300
(b) 1988
Court of appeal judges	4
High court judges	34
Circuit judges	519
(c) 1989

Circuit judges	383
(d) 1990
Court of appeal judges	41
High court judges	116
Circuit judges	936
(e) 1991
Court of appeal judges	31
High court judges	19
Circuit judges	840
(f) 1992
High court judges	19
Circuit judges	546
(g) 1993 (to date)
Court of appeal judges	30
High court judges	72
Circuit judges	56

In addition, each circuit judge attends an annual circuit conference chaired by the presiding judges. Precise figures for these are not available.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the names of those judges who have not undertaken any training (a) since their appointment to the bench, (b) in the last five years and (c) in the last 12 months.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The information required is not available. Each year conferences are arranged on each Circuit for all circuit judges. Recorders and assistant recorders and also for district judges and deputy district judges. In addition a wide range of training is available through the Judicial Studies Board in the form of courses, seminars and other training events. When they are appointed all assistant recorders and deputy district judges attend induction courses and thereafter attend refresher seminars. If the hon. Member has a more specific question I invite him to write to me.

Justices of the Peace

Mr. Hoon: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the composition of the advisory committee for the appointment of JPs in the Mansfield area.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The membership of the Mansfield advisory sub-committee of the Nottinghamshire advisory committee is:

J. Archer Esq JP
Mrs. J. Dennis JP
Mrs. C. M. Gaster JP
Mrs. M. Harper JP
E. Higham Esq JP
T. King Esq JP
P. R. Marsh Esq JP
Mrs. K. Winson

The membership of the Nottinghamshire advisory committee is:

Sir Andrew Buchanan JP
C. M. Dennis Esq JP
R. A. Hassett Esq JP
T. King Esq JP

Mrs. J. E. Latham JP
P. R. Marsh Esq JP
Mrs. J. M. Parry JP
Colonel A. R. Ripley TD, DL

Mr. Hoon: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many (a) women, (b) trade union members and (c) members of ethnic minorities have been appointed as JPs in the last five years.

Mr. John M. Taylor: During the five-year period ending 31 December 1992 a total of 9,823 persons were appointed to the magistracy, of whom 4,832 were women. Figures for appointment of members of ethnic minorities have been collected only since January 1989 since when a total of 375 persons has been appointed. No records are kept of trade union membership.

EDUCATION

Grant-maintained Schools

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list, for each local education authority, the latest available figures for the numbers of pupils attending (a) schools which have grant-maintained status, (b) schools which have had proposals to acquire grant-maintained status approved and (c) the total of (a) and (b).

Mr. Forth: The numbers of pupils in schools currently operating as grant-maintained and in schools which have had proposals to acquire grant-maintained status formally approved and the total for each LEA in England are given in the table. Authorities with no such schools are left blank. Pupil numbers shown relate to January 1992, the latest date for which information is available.

Pupils in schools operating as grant-maintained or in schools with proposals approved in England.

Further Education

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will give the most recent figures for revenue spending by each local education authority in England and Wales per full-time student aged 16 to 19 years at (a) further education colleges, (b) sixth-form colleges and (c) sixth forms in secondary schools.

Mr. Boswell: This information is not collected centrally for local education authorities in England. Expenditure returns from LEAs contain information about their total spending on all secondary education, including sixth-form education, and on further education, but this information cannot be disaggregated between particular age ranges.

Dyslexia

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list the available facilities for pupils with dyslexia problems in the London boroughs.

Mr. Forth: Comprehensive information about such facilities is not held centrally.

TRANSPORT

Signal Failures

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will tabulate the number of reported signal failures on the railways of (a) the British Railways Board and (b) London Underground Ltd., giving the number of reported wrong side failures of signals for each year since 1981; and what steps have been taken to reduce their numbers.

Mr. Freeman: The Health and Safety Executive's railway inspectorate began recording reported wrong side failures in 1990, following recommendations in Sir Anthony Hidden's report of the investigation into the Clapham junction accident.

The figures available are:

	Figures
1990
BR	1,298
LUL	0
1991-92
BR	698
LUL	4

Of those, only one in 1990 and five in 1991-92 led to reportable accidents. Also, of the respective years' totals, 847 and 277 incidents involved failures of position light signals which are usually located in yards and sidings not used by passenger trains, and where speeds are low.

The reduction is due largely to BR's total quality campaign whereby a systematic approach to quality is closely aligned with safety management.

Level Crossings

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects the railways inspectorate to publish its requirements for level crossing of railway lines by footpaths and bridleways.

Mr. Freeman: The Health and Safety Executive's railway inspectorate expects this section of its revised requirements to be published shortly. The full title will be "Railway Construction and Operation Requirements, Part F Level Crossings, Protection of Footpath and Bridleway Level Crossings (Section 18)" (ISBN 0-11-882115-6).

Company Cars

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proportion of total car mileage is shown by the national travel survey to be accounted for by company cars; and what proportion of company car mileage is shown to be for commuting and other personal, as against business, purposes.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: In 1985-86, the national travel survey showed that 20 per cent of total car mileage was by company-owned cars, of which 57 per cent. was for commuting and other personal purposes as against 43 per cent. for business purposes.

Newly Qualified Drivers

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what research or evidence his Department has commissioned on the casualty reduction consequences of restrictions on driving on the display of "P" or "R" plates by newly qualified drivers in the United Kingdom or elsewhere.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: We are considering the available evidence on the effectiveness of probationary driving schemes in Northern Ireland and overseas. The Department of the Environment (Northern Ireland) has commissioned a study by Queen's university, Belfast into the working of the "R" plate system in Northern Ireland.

Railways Bill

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will set out details of his calculations for the numbers of staff required in the offices of the rail regulatory and the franchising director respectively under the Railways Bill; and what estimate he has made of the changes in personnel (a) required in the railway section of the Department of Transport and (b) to occur in the British Railways board and combined new companies relative to those currently employed by the board.

Mr. Freeman: The number of staff estimated for the offices of the rail regulator and the franchising director reflects their expected workloads and is broadly comparable with the numbers working in other regulators' offices. Once the new regime for the railways is established, we expect there to be a small saving in the number of departmental staff concerned with the railway industry. It is not possible to predict with any accuracy future employment levels within the railway industry.

Concessionary Rail Travel

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will tabulate the number of people entitled to concessionary travel from British Rail in total and categorised as (a) employees, (b) pensioners, (c) employees' dependants and offspring, (d) former employees of British Transport Docks Board, (e) former employees of British Transport Hotels, (f) former employees of Sealink, (g) former employees of Wightlink, (h) British Transport police and (i) pensioners of British Transport police; and what estimate he has of the cost in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Freeman: I understand that the number of people entitled to concessionary travel, as at 9 January, totals 561,922, made up as follows:

	Numbers
(a) Employees	137,488
(b) Pensioners	262,825
(c) Employees dependants and offspring	150,669
(d) Former employees of British Transport Docks Board	3,611
(e) Former employees of British Transport hotels	431
(f) Former employees of Sealink	2,340
(g) Former employees of Wightlink	Nil
(h) British Transport police	1,677
(i) BTP pensioners	2,881

The extra costs to British Rail of providing concessionary travel arrangements are not quantifiable.

Biofuels

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action is currently undertaken by his Department to promote the production and use of biodiesel in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The Government are sponsoring a number of research projects looking at a wide range of alternative fuels, including biodiesel.

Although biodiesel offers the possibility of reduced carbon dioxide emissions through the growth of plant feedstock, available evidence regarding exhaust emissions and other environmental impacts suggests that the case for its use is not obvious. Current technology biodiesel is also some two and a half to three times as expensive as conventional diesel. It would therefore be premature to encourage its widespread use. Further study is needed.

To improve our understanding of this fuel the Department is carrying out emissions tests on one of the vehicles being used in the Reading Buses biodiesel fuel trial. The results will be made available when testing is complete.

Cycle Routes

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has to increase the marking of cycle priority routes in London.

Mr. Norris: There are no cycle priority routes in London. My hon. Friend may be referring to the proposed 1,000-mile strategic cycle network. Provision of cycle routes falls to the Department on trunk roads and the London borough councils on local roads. The traffic director for London is responsible for approving cycling facilities which may be contained in local plans for priority red routes. There are no current plans to change marking requirements for cycle routes.

Bus Deregulation

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy that his proposals for bus deregulation will give priority to tendering for existing services by the private sector.

Mr. Norris: London Transport will be offering at least a further 5 per cent. of London's bus routes to competitive tender this year. We have also announced plans to begin privatisation of all London Buses Ltd. subsidiaries by the end of the year. All bus routes will therefore be operated by private operators competing on level terms before deregulation of the London bus market.

Rail Electrification

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy, under the Government's policy with regard to the additionality of funding of projects by the EC, that offers of funding from EC sources for the electrification of railway lines will not be netted off from other funds earmarked by the Government for transport projects; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The policy for the treatment of European regional development fund grants remains that which was announced by the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry to the House on 17 February 1992, Official Report, columns 22-37.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the policy which was adopted by Her Majesty's Government towards the suggested EC funding for the electrification of the north Wales railway line from Crewe to Holyhead; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: It would be for British Rail, in conjunction with local authorities as appropriate, to apply for European funding of any electrification of the Crewe to Holyhead line. British Rail is upgrading the line to allow 90 mph running and is financing this itself. It has no plans at present for electrifying the line.

Official Travel

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on how many occasions he has used trains for his official duties since being appointed to his present position.

Mr. MacGregor: I have travelled by train for my official duties on several occasions since becoming Secretary of State for Transport.

Estuarial Rail Bridges

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will publish the maintenance and upkeep costs of (a) the Tay rail bridge and (b) the Forth rail bridge in each year since 1980;

(2) if he publish the number of safety checks carried out, and their cost, on (a) the Tay rail bridge and (b) the Forth rail bridge since 1980;

(3) if he will publish the cost of maintaining estuarial rail bridges in the BR network in each year since 1980.

Mr. Freeman: The Department does not hold this information. These are matters for British Rail.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Shining Path

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps have been taken to extradite to Peru known members of the Shining Path terrorist organisation.

Mr. Garel-Jones: I am not aware of any extradition request from Peru. Any such request would have to satisfy the conditions set out in schedule 1 of the Extradition Act 1989 and the terms of the UK/Peru extradition treaty of 1904.

Human Rights

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on the status of the European convention on human rights in each signatory state.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The European convention on human rights has been incorporated into domestic law in all signatory states except Iceland, Ireland, Norway, Sweden and the United Kingdom.

Hong Kong

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to revise the Hong Kong Emergency Regulations Ordinance.

Mr. Goodlad: The Hong Kong Government have no immediate plans to revise the Emergency Regulations Ordinance, but it is examining its provisions to ensure that there is no conflict with the Bill of Rights Ordinance.

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects Radio Television Hong Kong to become an incorporated company.

Mr. Goodlad: The corporation of Radio Television Hong Kong remains under consideration by the Hong Kong Government.

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to repeal the broadcasting authority ordinance in Hong Kong before the handover of the colony in 1997.

Mr. Goodlad: The Hong Kong Government have no immediate plans to repeal the Broadcasting Authority Ordinance. They are, however, reviewing all aspects of the law relevant to freedom of information.

International Events

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list all the major international events in the United Kingdom and overseas in which Her Majesty's Government will participate in 1993; and which Minister will attend in each case.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: On present plans, in 1993, we will participate in the following major international events overseas:

(a) two Western European Union ministerial meetings attended by the Foreign Secretary;
(b) two North Atlantic Council meetings attended by the Foreign Secretary;
(c) two European Council meetings attended by the Prime Minister accompanied by the Foreign Secretary;
(d) the G7 economic summit attended by the Prime Minister accompanied by the Chancellor of the Exchequer and the Foreign Secretary;
(e) the Commonwealth Heads of Government meeting attended by the Prime Minister accompanied by the Foreign Secretary;
(f) the United Nations General Assembly attended by the Foreign Secretary.

We have no current plans to participate in any major international events in the United Kingdom in 1993.

Yugoslavia

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what has been decided by the EC Council of Ministers on establishing an ad hoc war crimes tribunal for the former Yugoslavia; what action has been taken by the French and Italian Governments on drafting a statute for the tribunal; what action has been taken by Her Majesty's Government; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: EC Foreign Ministers expressed their readiness on 13 January to support the creation of an international criminal court at the United Nations to deal with war crimes in former Yugoslavia. We understand that, separately, the French and Italian Governments have tasked committees of national legal experts to examine options to bring those responsible to justice.

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will establish a committee of United Kingdom experts to draft the statute for an ad hoc war crimes tribunal for the former Yugoslavia.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. A United Kingdom initiative along these lines would unnecessarily duplicate work being done by Ambassador Corell, the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe human rights rapporteur, and in other forums on a draft statute.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Mastitis Research Centre

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what funding the mastitis research centre at Compton, Berkshire receives from sources other than the Government.

Mr. Waldegrave: As well as receiving Government funding from the Office of Science and Technology and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, the milking and mastitis centre has recently received a three-year grant of £140,000 from commercial sources.

Non-departmental Public Bodies

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many non-departmental public bodies are currently in existence; and when the annual list of such bodies will be published.

Mr. Robert Jackson: On 1 April 1992 there were 369 executive bodies, six fewer than in 1991; 846 advisory bodies, 28 fewer than in 1991, 66 tribunals, two more than in 1991; and 131 boards of visitors, the same as in 1991. In total there are 1,412 non-departmental public bodies (NDPBs)—a fall of 32 over 1991. Details can be found in "Public Bodies 1992" published today. A copy has been placed in the Library of the House.

Details are also included of the number of appointments to boards and tribunals which are held by women. The figures show that at 1 September 1992, 26 per cent. of such appointments were held by women.

Included for the first time are details of the number of public appointments held by members of the ethnic minorities. Ethnic monitoring of all public appointees has now been introduced and statistics will be published each year. The first figures show that, at 1 September 1992, 2 per cent. of all appointments were held by members of the minority groups.

EMPLOYMENT

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will publish a table of annual income and expenditure for each training and enterprise council since its inception.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information requested from these accounts is not recorded by the Department and the cost of doing so would be disproportionate to the information supplied.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many members of the public in training and enterprise council areas are informed about TEC's spending priorities and projects.

Mr. McLoughlin: A summary of the TEC's business plan and a full copy of the corporate plan are available at the TEC's business premises and can be accessed by any member of the public. Over and above this, every TEC is required to hold a public meeting once a year to explain their plans and activities and to produce an annual report.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will provide a table showing the total allocation to training and enterprise councils for 1993-94 for each programme or activity and the allocation for each programme or activity to each TEC.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information that the hon. Member has requested is not yet available. We are currently in negotiations with TECs on targets and funding for 1993-94 and have not yet agreed TEC 1993-94 budgets.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Mr. Stefan Kiszko

Ms. Lynne: To ask the Attorney-General for what reasons he has decided that he will not publish the papers relating to the investigations into the wrongful imprisonment of Stefan Kiszko; and if he will make it his policy to place the papers in the Library.

The Attorney-General: I have taken no such decision. Police inquiries into the events that led to the prosecution and conviction of Mr. Kiszko are continuing and a report is shortly to be submitted to the Director of Public Prosecutions.

Such reports are by their nature confidential and should not therefore be placed in the Library of the House.

Local Government Corruption

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Attorney-General how many local government (a) councillors and (b) employees have been convicted of corruption in connection with their council duties in each year since 1979.

The Attorney-General: My Department does not keep records sought by the hon. Member.

ENVIRONMENT

Climate Change Convention

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consideration his Department has given to the financial consequences for the United Kingdom of the climate change convention agreed at the Earth summit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The cost of complying with the convention's commitments on limiting emissions of greenhouse gases will depend on what measures the Government decide to take—the Government issued a consultation paper on possible measures to limit carbon dioxide emissions last month. The United Kingdom will also be expected to contribute to the costs of the bodies established to administer the convention and towards the costs that developing countries incur in complying with their commitments.

Tropical Timber

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 3 December, Official Report, column 317, what assessment he has made of the research carried out by the world conservation monitoring centre for the International Tropical Timber Organisation on the conservation status of African and Asian tropical timber species threatened by trade; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: We expect to assess all relevant scientific information on tropical timber later this year, when deciding whether to propose further species for listing in the appendices to the convention on international trade in endangered species (CITES). Our proposal at the last CITES conference to list Pericopsis elata in appendix II was based on a report undertaken for the European Commission by the world conservation monitoring centre. It is the first significantly traded tropical timber species to be listed in this appendix.

Climate Change

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action is being undertaken by his Department to secure test baseline data collected by the United Kingdom for the first conference of the parties to the climate convention distinguishing between naturally occurring and anthropogenic changes.

Mr. Maclean: The United Kingdom is making a major contribution to the second assessment report of the intergovernmental panel on climate change which is scheduled to be produced in 1995. This will include the latest information on the extent and impact of naturally occurring and human-induced climate change.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to make representations to the first conference of the parties to the climate convention to secure the establishment of an independent body of experts under the statutory body for implementation in order to (a) review the implementation of the convention and (b) devise an effective greenhouse gas monitoring regime.

Mr. Maclean: The Government believe that effective procedures for reviewing and monitoring the implementation of the convention are vital. Consideration of the precise mechanisms for achieving this is still at an early stage, but we will be pressing for these matters to be resolved at the first conference of the parties.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to make representations to the first conference of the parties to the climate convention to secure that a new baseline date is established for collecting information on emission levels.

Mr. Maclean: The framework convention on climate change includes a requirement for all parties to develop and periodically update national inventories of anthropogenic emissions of greenhouse gases, as well as sinks for their removal. Developed countries will be required to take steps aimed at returning emissions of greenhouse gases to 1990 levels by 2000, so 1990 is in effect the initial baseline date for the inventories. The conference of the parties will decide how frequently inventories should be updated in the future.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make representations to the first conference of the parties to the climate convention to secure that greenhouse gas emissions are categorised according to sector.

Mr. Maclean: In the United Kingdom emissions are already categorised by sector, and we will be encouraging others to adopt a similar approach.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his policy on the EC proposal Com 92 508 final, 14 December 1992 for all EC nations to ratify the climate change convention simultaneously before 30 June; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The United Kingdom is committed, with our G7 partners, to seeking to ratify the convention by the end of 1993. We would hope to do so alongside our Community partners, and are currently discussing with them what the earliest practicable date might be.

Toxic Waste Imports

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to announce a cut-off date for imports of toxic waste into the United Kingdom.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave him on 9 November 1992, Official Report, column 570.

The Government are also intending to use powers under the EC waste shipments regulation to reduce the amount of waste imported for disposal in the United Kingdom particulary from developed countries. Potential imports from developing countries will be assessed on a case-by-case basis.

Water Pollution

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the potential pollution of water supplies to Sunderland and the River Wear resulting from ceasing pumping operations at Easington and Vane Tempest collieries.

Mr. Maclean: None. It is for British Coal and the National Rivers Authority in the first place to assess any environmental effects of pit closures in the north-east. This will allow the water companies to assess any consequences for water supplies.

Builders (Infrastructure Charges)

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will review the infrastructure charges currently imposed on builders of new developments.

Mr. Baldry: Responsibility for water and sewerage infrastructure charges rests with the Director General of Water Services. He is aware of concern over the level of these charges, and has announced his intention to undertake a fundamental review as part of the overall review of water company charges in 1994. He will shortly be issuing a consultation paper which will set out the options for change to the basis of infrastructure charges. The results of this review will be reflected in infrastructure charges payable from 1 April 1995.

Property Purchases

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many additional purchases of properties from the private sector by housing associations have so far taken place using the additional funding announced in the autumn statement.

Mr. Baldry: Of the £750 million announced in the autumn statement to boost the housing market in the United Kingdom, £577 million went to the Housing Corporation to enable housing associations to purchase new, empty and repossessed properties in England. The latest figures from the corporation show that by 22 January approvals had been granted for the purchase of 11,812 properties: 11,746 of these are for purchases from the private sector.

Another £20 million was made available to the corporation to support the tenants incentive scheme and £30 million to local authorities to support the cash incentive scheme, to encourage housing association and local authority tenants in England to move out and buy their own homes. This is expected to result in some 3,500 additional first-time buyers.

Woodland

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to offer statutory protection to all remaining areas of ancient forest and woodland in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Maclean: Adequate statutory provision is already available.

My hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Scotland, the Member for Dumfries (Sir Hector Monro), has today set out the operation by the Forestry Commission of the felling licence provisions of the Forestry Act 1967 in an answer to the hon. Member.

The felling of woodland associated with development proposed under the planning system is exempt from felling licensing arrangements and is dealt with under normal planning procedures.

Where appropriate, specific protection can be afforded to individual woodlands under the provisions of conservation legislation. Such woodlands can be designated by the relevant agencies as sites of special scientific interest, protecting them against damaging operations of all types: some are also declared and managed as national nature reserves. In addition local authorities have powers to safeguard woods of amenity value by the making of tree preservation orders.

Community Charge Leaflets

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what advice he issues to community charge registration officers and other relevant local authority officials, with regard to the distribution of registration forms and related explanatory leaflets in languages other than English; whether similar provisions are intended in respect of the council tax; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: There is no statutory requirement for community charge registration forms in England, and we do not issue guidance about the language in which they should be written. There will be no registration for the council tax.

We leave the design of forms and local information material to local authorities, which are best placed to identify the needs of their own areas. Questions relating to the production of such material should therefore be addressed to them.

The Department of the Environment is producing a series of general information leaflets about the council tax. These are being translated into 11 ethnic minority languages, as well as Braille, large print and audio tape.

Northern Hemisphere Ozone

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment for what reasons his Department has decided not to ask EASOE—the European Arctic Stratospheric Ozone Experiment—to research any assessment of northern hemisphere ozone loss this year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: My Department supports the decision of the EC/EFTA task group on stratospheric ozone research that the results of the 1991-92 EASOE experimental campaign should be fully analysed before mounting a further campaign in 1993-94. Monitoring of northern hemisphere stratospheric ozone will continue by the participating EASOE groups, including important contributions by scientists funded by my Department.

Fire Hydrants

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment under what arrangements the fire services are charged for the use of water from hydrants; to whom payments are made; and what levels of payment have been in force for each of the last four years.

Mr. Maclean: Under section 147 of the Water Industry Act 1991 no charge may be made by a water undertaker for water used by a fire authority for extinguishing fires or any other emergency purpose. But under section 57 of the Act, the expenses incurred by a water undertaker in providing and maintaining fire hydrants requested by a fire authority are chargeable to the fire authority concerned. Information on the level of these charges is not held centrally.

Contaminated Land

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans Her Majesty's Government have to exempt land owned by British Rail from the register of contaminated land.

Mr. Maclean: There is no power under section 143 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 to exempt sites from registers of land subject to contaminative uses on the basis of their ownership.

Local Government Employees

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many people were employed (a) full-time and (b) part-time in local government in Northamptonshire in each year since 1983.

Mr. Robin Squire: The information is given in the table for each authority in Northamptonshire. Totals have not been given because data for some authorities are not available centrally.

Urban Programme

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the voluntary organisations and associations which he consulted before reducing urban programme funding from the planned totals announced in February 1992.

Mr. Robin Squire: It became clear only at a very late stage of the public expenditure negotiations for 1993-94 that changes to the urban programme were necessary. Because of the timing of the decisions and the fact that the new arrangements for the urban programme formed part of the autumn statement, consultation was not possible. However, since then, I have met representatives of the voluntary sector to discuss the impact of these changes.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much money has been given under the urban programme to projects aimed at the ethnic minorities for each of the last three years.

Mr. Robin Squire: The information requested is as follows:

	£ million
1990-91	27
1991-92	25
1992-93	28

Source: Department of the Environment departmental reports.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of urban programme schemes run by the voluntary sector were (a) capital projects and (b) revenue projects for the past three years.

Mr. Robin Squire: This information is not available.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library the urban programme standard output measures for each authority for each of the last three years.

Mr. Robin Squire: It is not our policy to publish output data for each individual authority under the urban programme. However, national output data for the urban programme are available in the Department's annual reports.

Standard Spending Assessment, Tower Hamlets

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment by how much the standard spending assessment for the London borough of Tower Hamlets in 1993-94 has been reduced as a result of the reduction in population density due to the borough assuming responsibility for the whole of Victoria park; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: There has been no reduction in the standard spending assessment for Tower Hamlets for 1993-94 due to that authority assuming responsibility for the whole of Victoria park. The boundary change giving effect to the change in responsibility is not intended to take place before 1 April 1994.

Local Government Finance

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on what information the estimate of population numbers for the calculation of standard spending assessments is based.

Mr. Robin Squire: The population numbers used in the calculation of standard spending assessments for 1993-94 are those provisionally estimated by the Registrar General for 30 June 1991. The estimates are based primarily on information collected in the 1991 census on numbers of residents in each local authority area, but adjustments have been made to allow for differences in definition and reference dates and to take account of under-enumeration in the census.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library a table showing for each authority (a) its 1992-93 standard spending assessment with and without adjustments for changes in local authority functions, (b) the 1993-94 standard spending assessment consistent with the local government finance report laid before the House on 28 January and (c) the percentage changes between both versions of the 1992-93 standard spending assessment.

Mr. Redwood: I have today placed in the Library a table providing the information requested.

Inland Quarries

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when his draft planning guidelines in respect of inland quarries will be published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: My Department published draft revised planning guidelines for provision of aggregates in England and Wales (Minerals Planning Guidance Note 6) for consultation on 4 January. These were accompanied by a policy issues paper. The draft guidelines set out policies for aggregates provision from a range of sources including inalnd quarries and seek views on how future requirements should be met. A copy is in the Library, but I will arrange for a copy to be sent to the hon. Member.

Recycling

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to announce his conclusions about the use of economic instruments for promoting the recycling of solid waste.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 27 January 1993]: We are currently considering a consultants' report on "Economic Instruments and Recovery of Resources from Waste", commissioned by my Department and the Department of Trade and Industry. The DTI have invited comments on the report, which is available from HMSO, by 1 March. I intend to publish and invite comments on a related report, on landfill pricing, next month. We will announce our conclusions on economic instruments for solid waste once we have received and considered comments on both of those reports.

Cetaceans

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the numbers, species and location of cetaceans found washed ashore and reported to his Department since 1 January; together with details of cause of death from any post-mortem or examination his Department has carried out.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 25 January 1993]: The natural history museum has advised that it received reports of five common dolphins and one dolphin of species unknown found dead on the south coast of England since 1 January 1993. It also received reports of a harbour porpoise and a whale, possibly a minke whale, found dead in Wales. The species and locations are as follows:

Species	Location	Date found
Common dolphin	Mullion, Cornwall	5 January
Common dolphin	Mullion, Cornwall	8 January
Harbour porpoise	Llanelli, Dyfed	9 January
Common dolphin	Portwrinkle, Cornwall	11 January
Common dolphin	Portwrinkle, Cornwall	Precise date not known
Whale (possibly minke)	Tal-y-Bont, Gwynedd	12 January
Dolphin (species unknown)	Porthleven, Cornwall	14 January
Common dolphin	Bournemouth, Dorset	17 January

Postmortem examination of three of the common dolphins has been carried out by veterinary pathologists at the Ministry of Agriculture and Fisheries investigation centre at Truro and at the Institute of Zoology, London. Further laboratory examination will be necessary to see whether the cause of death can be established.

Native Forests

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to introduce legislation to minimise clearfelling of native forests within the United Kingdom.

Sir Hector Monro: I have been asked to reply.

The felling of trees and woodland in Great Britain is already effectively controlled through the licensing system operated by the Forestry Commission under the Forestry Act 1967. When considering applications for felling licences, the Commission follows a strict policy of protecting ancient and semi-natural woodlands, and operates a general presumption that felling licences will be granted only on condition that felled areas are replanted.

Pylon Line, Cleveland

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to publish the decision on the pylon line from Lockerby to Picton across Cleveland.

Mr. Eggar: I have been asked to reply.

The Lackenby-Picton-Shipton overhead line public inquiry proceedings and inspections were concluded on 11 December 1992. It is now for the inspectors to prepare their report and submit it to my right hon. and learned Friend who will deal with it and give his decision in a timely manner.

SCOTLAND

Shetland Oil Spill

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to monitor the effects of the Shetland oil spill and publish the results.

Sir Hector Monro: I have nothing to add to my replies of 28 January.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many soil, air, water and sediment samples have been taken by, or on behalf of, his Department for analysis of oil and oil breakdown products following the wreck of MV Braer; and if the results will be published.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer of 27 January 1993]: Very extensive sampling is being undertaken in the course of a range of studies of the Shetland environment which are now being pursued: work by the Macaulay Land Use Research Institute, for example, involves taking hundreds of samples over a 5 to 10 acre area of each of seven different soil types. Shetland Islands council also has an extensive programme in hand. All this work will be drawn together by the ecological steering group which my right hon. Friend announced on 11 January. Results will be published in due course or, if of a technical and complex nature, made available on request.

WALES

Management Charter Initiative

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the companies within Wales which have adopted the management charter initiative code of practice to date; and if he will indicate which of the companies are officially designated as small and medium-sized enterprises.

Mr. David Hunt: The list I have is for organisations, including companies, which are not differentiated by size.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many local education authorities have developed strategies for supporting the behaviour policies of their schools which meet the standards expected by his Department;

(2) how many LEAs have schools which have whole school behaviour policies as recommended in the Elton report on discipline in schools; what information he has on the percentage of such schools in each LEA; and to what extent they meet the standards expected by his Department.

Sir Wyn Roberts: This information is not available centrally.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what research he has commissioned on the impact of imposing on parents civil liabilities for the acts of their children in schools.

Sir Wyn Roberts: None.

Grant-Maintained Schools

Mr. Ron. Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what financial provision he has made for the years 1993-94 and 1994-95 for the construction of new school buildings as described in schedule 5 of the Education (Grant-maintained Schools) (Finance) Regulations 1990.

Sir Wyn Roberts: While it is open to grant-maintained schools to include such proposals in their bid for capital grants under these regulations, no money has been specifically set aside for the construction of new school buildings.

Teachers (Professional Development)

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many local education authorities provide management consultancy services for head teachers and support services for the professional development of teachers which meet the standards expected by his Department.

Sir Wyn Roberts: This information is not available centrally.

Urban Expenditure

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list public expenditure per head on urban regeneration in Wales for each year since 1980 in (a) cash prices and (b) real terms—1992 prices.

Mr. David Hunt: A wide variety of programmes contributes to urban regeneration in Wales and it is not possible to calculate total spend per head except at disproportionate cost. However, spend on the main programmes, that is, urban programme, urban development grants/urban investment grants, Welsh Development Agency—urban development (1987-88 onwards) and Cardiff Bay development corporation is shown in the table.

[1] Including Urban Development Grant.
[2] From 1990-91 figures exclude local authorities' 25 per cent. revenue contribution.

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the urban expenditure per capita in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: A very wide variety of programmes contribute to urban expenditure in Wales and it is not possible to calculate total spend per head except at disproportionate cost. However, spend in 1991-92 on the main central Government and agency programmes, that is, urban programme, urban development grants/urban investment grants, Welsh Development Agency—urban development and Cardiff Bay development corporation was £83·0 million which represents £28·75 per head of total population.

Gwent County Council

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received from Gwent county council concerning its allocations of funds from central Government for the forthcoming financial year; what response he has made; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I have received representations from Gwent county council on provisional proposals for its 1993-94 standard spending assessment, its 1992-93 notional amount and capping. I have announced my final decisions on the 1993-94 local government revenue settlement. These take account of the representations made to me by Gwent county council, in particular those concerning its notional amount. I propose to lay the Local Government Finance Report (Wales) 1993-94 and the Limitation of Council Tax and Precepts (Relevant Notional Amounts) Report (Wales) 1993-94 before the House, for its approval, early next week. I will make my final decisions on capping in the spring.

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will visit the Littlewoods Pools operation in Cardiff.

Mr. David Hunt: Yes.

Publicity

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson) of 2 June 1992, Official Report, column 430, what is his current estimate of expenditure on publicity in the present financial year.

Mr. David Hunt: I estimate that my Department will spend in the region of £2·5 million on information and publicity this financial year.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will make a statement in relation to the instruction dated 27 April 1992 to all heads of division not to invite the Wilprint Group to tender for printed publicity-related material until further notice; whether the instruction is still in force; what proposals he has to review it; and what consultations he has had with non-departmental public bodies in relation to recommended lists of supplies of such material;

(2) what policy considerations led to the instruction of 27 April 1992 to all heads of division to delete the Wilprint Group from the recommended list of suppliers of printed publicity-related material.

Mr. David Hunt: No. The information requested is commercial in confidence.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson) of 2 June 1992, Official Report, column 430, what are the main components of publicity expenditure in the "other" category.

Mr. David Hunt: The main components of the "other" category in my reply to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson) on 2 June 1992, Official Report, column 435 are the costs of publications, films and videos and exhibitions.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will place in the Library a copy of the memorandum of 27 April 1992 from the head of establishments to all heads of division, deleting the Wilprint Group from the recommended list of suppliers.

Mr. David Hunt: No.

Mr. David Hunt: Comprehensive information in the form requested is not available.

Printing Costs

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 19 November 1992, Official Report, columns 323-24, what was his total expenditure on printing, publicity and stationery for school governors in Wales in each year since 1988 and in the first-half year of 1992-93.

Mr. David Hunt [holding answer 22 January 1993]: The information is as follows:

HEALTH

Pharmaceutical Prices

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the average rate of return of historic capital produced by the pharmaceutical price regulation system for the pharmaceutical industry in each year since 1979.

Dr. Mawhinney: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Ophthalmology, Leeds

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the size of the ophthalmology waiting list at St. James's hospital, Leeds, for each year since 1985.

Mr. Sackville: Information on waiting times by specialty for each district health authority and national health service trust is given in "Hospital Waiting List, In-Patient and Day Cases" published twice a year, copies of which are available in the Library. Waiting time information on St. James' university hospital was not collected centrally prior to its becoming an NHS trust on 1 April 1991.

Cancer Treatment

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many NHS specialist cancer centres there are in Britain; if she will list their locations; and what is their average annual running cost.

Mr. Sackville: Services for people with cancer are provided in most district general hospitals in England. Specialist centres are not separately identified.

Information relating to Scotland and Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Wales respectively.

Dentistry

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps her Department is taking to reduce delays in delivering dental treatment to patients with a disability particularly those who require domiciliary visits.

Mr. Mawhinney: The Department has no information suggesting that people with disabilities are experiencing undue delays in getting dental treatment or domiciliary visits.

Hospital Creches

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many national health service hospitals operate creches for (a) staff and (b) patients and visitors.

Mr. Yeo: Full information on the number of national health service hospitals that operate a creche is not held centrally. In 1991 a survey showed that at least 181 health authorities and hospitals in the NHS provided a workplace nursery for their staff.

Expenditure

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish figures showing capital receipts as a proportion of capital expenditure in the national health service for each year since 1988.

Mr. Sackville: The information requested is given in the table.

National health service capital expenditure

	Gross	Net	Receipts	Capital receipts as a proportion of gross NHS capital expenditure per cent.

[2] Figures for 1992-93 are estimates.

Blood Donors

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action she will take to ensure that all blood donors are aware of the possibility of giving bone marrow; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Regional transfusion centres are able to supply blood donors with information on how they can become bone marrow donors. Awareness of the possibility of giving bone marrow has increased among blood donors in recent years. The British bone marrow and platelet donor panel recruits donors exclusively through the blood transfusion services and in 1992 recorded a net increase of 12,000 donors.

Community Care

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish figures showing community care expenditure as a proportion of gross domestic product for each year since 1979.

Mr. Yeo: Available figures are given in the table. Figures for earlier years are not comparable due to changes in the method of data collection for expenditure on community health services. Figures for 1991-92 are not yet available.

Expenditure on core services for community care (cash) England
£ million

	1988-89	1989-90	1990-91
Community care expenditure	5,755	6,494	7,653
GDP (nearest equivalent calendar year)	336,022	370,662	402,422
Per cent.	1·71	1·75	1·90

Notes:
1. Percentages are based on gross domestic product (GDP) for England in the calendar years 1988 to 1990. GDP figures for England only are not available on a financial year basis.
2. Community care expenditure is taken to mean expenditure on domiciliary and residential care provided by local authorities for adults; community health services provided by the NHS for adults; and certain social security and housing benefits which support community care objectives.
3. Local authority expenditure is in gross terms before any income from charges is taken into account.

Prescription Charges

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has for changes to the standard prescription charge; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave him on Tuesday 12 January at column 699.

Selected List Prescribing

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received with regard to the Government's proposals to expand the selected list prescribing system; and when she expects to make a full statement on those specific drugs to be added to the selected list.

Dr. Mawhinney: We have received a number of representations about the extension of the selected list scheme from hon. Members, various organisations and members of the public. The timing of announcements about specific products in the new categories will depend on the future work programme of the advisory committee on national health service drugs, which I understand that the committee will be considering shortly.

Patients with Learning Disabilities

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will establish an inquiry into the standards of management of, and the safety of in-patients at hospitals for people with learning disabilities;

(2) if she will establish an independent inquiry into the management of Stallington hospital, with particular reference to the case of Freda Latham and other examples of maltreatment of in-patients which have recently come to light.

Mr. Yeo: No. We have seen no evidence that there is a national problem regarding the standards of management of, or the safety of patients in hospitals for people with learning disabilities.

Any further inquiry into the Stallington hospital is a matter for West Midlands regional health authority in conjunction with North Staffordshire district health authority. A review team has been set up by North Staffordshire health authority to oversee the implementation of the findings of their inquiry into the death of Freda Latham.

South Birmingham Health Authority

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she expects to reply to the letters of 25 November 1992 and 5 January about South Birmingham health authority.

Mr. Sackville: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State received two letters from the hon. Member dated 25 November 1992 about South Birmingham district health authority, and I replied on 14 and 17 December respectively. I will be responding to the letter of 5 January 1993 very shortly.

West Midlands RHA

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will give details of the full remuneration paid each year since 1983 to the former chairman of the West Midlands regional health authority.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 26 January 1993]: The annual rates of remuneration paid to regional chairman since 1983 are as follows:

To 31 July 1983	7,590
1 August 1983	8,122
1 January 1984	8,424

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Arts Councils

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what proportion of the annual income received by the Arts Councils of Great Britain and Northern Ireland is spent on administration.

Mr. Brooke: Of its grant-in-aid in 1992-93 of £221·2 million, the Arts Council of Great Britain spends £7·97 million, or 3·6 per cent. on administration. It also funds the Scottish and Welsh Arts Councils and the regional arts boards in England, all of which incur administrative expenditure; this, like that of ACGB, is subject to cash limits. For the funding system as a whole in 1992-93, administration accounts for £20·47 million, or 9·25 per cent., of the grant-in-aid, although these costs are partly offset by income RABs receive from other sources.

Sports Council

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what proportion of the annual income received by the Sports Council is spent on administration.

Mr. Brooke: The forecast expenditure by the Sports Council on salaries and running costs in 1992-93 is £18 million. This represents approximately 34 per cent. of forecast income and 37 per cent. of the Government's grant-in-aid.

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what proportion of the annual income received by the Sports Council is spent on parliamentary lobbying.

Mr. Brooke: The Sports Council estimates that its expenditure over the last twelve months on parliamentary lobbying was £43,650, or less than one tenth of 1 per cent. of its current grant-in-aid.

Football Stadiums

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many jobs have been created in the construction industry as a result of the implementation of the recommendations of the Taylor report on football stadium safety.

Mr. Brooke: The information requested is not available from Government sources.

Royal Collection

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage (1) how many people are employed in the royal collection department of the royal household; and if he will list their grades and duties;

(2) if he will publish the work in progress on the inventory of the royal collection;

(3) pursuant to his answer of 11 January, Official Report, column 540, what items in the royal collection are the personal property of the sovereign; and whose consent is required for the sale or other disposal of items in the royal collection;

(4) pursuant to his answer of 11 January, Official Report, column 540, what items in the royal collection are located in the private residences of the sovereign.

Mr. Brooke: The Government have no funding or supervisory responsibility for the royal collection. The questions raised are matters for the Director of the Royal Collection, to whom the hon. Member may wish to write.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Chancellor (Legal Fees)

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what cost benefit analysis he has made into the Exchequer contribution to the cost of the legal fees he incurred in relation to his former tenant.

Mr. Nelson: The basis on which this payment was made was set out in the answer which I gave to the right hon. and learned Member for Aberavon (Mr. Morris) on 8 December, Official Report, column 571. It was subsequently described in the memorandum to the PAC by the Comptroller and Auditor General and covered in oral evidence given by the accounting officer at the PAC hearing on 25 January. I have nothing further to add.

Social Security

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what considerations underlay his choice of the benefits to be included in the definition of cyclical social security in paragraph 2107 in the autumn statement, Cm 2096; and if he will provide ready reckoners of the effects of (a) the new control total by Department, as in table 2A.5 and (b) on the new control total by spending sector and on the other components of general Government expenditure, as in table 2A.4, of each increment of 100,000 on unemployment above the working assumptions of table 2D.1 of the autumn statement, Cm 2096.

Mr. Portillo: In defining the new control total the intention has been to include as many elements of public spending as possible to ensure that it is effective in restraining the trend in growth of public spending below the trend rate of growth of the economy as a whole. Only as much cyclical spending has been excluded from the NCT as is necessary to capture most of the cyclical variation in public expenditure.

Ready reckoners on the effects of an additional 100,000 unemployed are due to be published on 11 February in the Department of Social Security's departmental report.

Set-aside Land

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to adjust the tax regime on bio-fuels to encourage British farmers to grow the appropriate crops on set-aside land.

Sir John Cope: Under the EC mineral oils duties structure directive agreed last year, all substitutes for mineral oils are required to be subject to duty at the same rates as the oils themselves, although there is an optional provision under which member states can introduce a duty exemption for pilot projects. How this directive is implemented in the United Kingdom is a matter which my hon. Friend will consider in the run-up to the Budget. In view of this it would be inappropriate for me to comment further at this stage.

The European Commission has also made a proposal on reduced rates of excise duty for biofuels but this has not yet been agreed. The Government are carrying out detailed analysis of the proposals.

Manufacturing Industry

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement outlining those steps which have been taken by his Department since 9 April 1992 specifically to assist the United Kingdom manufacturing industry; and what future action he intends to take to assist manufacturing industry.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 26 January 1993]: Specific measures outlined in the autumn statement included substantial help for manufacturing industry. Examples are:

a temporary increase in first-year capital allowances;
the abolition of the car tax;
the relaxation of the rules for private financing of public sector projects; and additional ECGD cover to help exporters in certain important but risky markets.

There is evidence that businesses now recognise the opportunities created by the measures in the autumn statement, low inflation and lower interest rates, and the lower exchange rate. This is reflected in the CBI economic situation report for January, which shows business optimism at its highest level since April 1988.

Construction Industry

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement outlining those steps which have been taken by his Department since 9 April 1992 specifically to assist the United Kingdom construction industry; and what future action he intends to take to assist the construction industry.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 26 January 1993]: The measures outlined in the autumn statement included substantial help for the construction industry:

assistance to the housing market, such as extra spending by the Housing Corporation;
local authorities allowed to spend 100 per cent. of all capital receipts realised between 12 November 1992 and the end of 1993;
priority given to investment and construction expenditure within public expenditure plans wherever possible; over £1·2 billion allocated to the Jubilee Line Extension over next three years. The project will go ahead, subject to successful outcome of negotiations with the administrators of Canary Wharf; the roads programme baseline was protected, allowing an increase in the volume of work, given lower construction prices; relaxation of rules on private sector financing of public sector projects should encourage a wider range of joint ventures additional £700 million of ECGD cover in 1992-93 and 1993-94 in important but risky markets will help construction projects run by United Kingdom companies abroad.

In conjunction with the other measures in the autumn statement to help industry in general, as well as low inflation, recent reductions in interest rates, and the lower exchange rate, this package should have a beneficial impact on construction.

Economic Policy Advisers

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what period of time will be spent in an average month by his seven new advisers on economic policy; what remuneration package has been set for their work; and how often he expects to meet them in the average year.

Mr. Lamont [holding answer 28 January 1993]: The primary role of the panel of forecasters is to provide an independent source of advice on Britain's economic prospects. The panel will produce a report three times a year. Meetings of the forecasting panel will be chaired by the chief economic adviser, and other Treasury officials will put the report together on the panel's behalf. I look forward to receiving the panel's reports.

The amount of time spent per month on this work by panel members will vary according to when and how often they produce forecasts independently. For those members who publish forecasts frequently the time required will be less than those who do not. At this stage it is not possible to estimate the time spent. Remuneration will be £125 plus expenses per meeting attended.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Set-aside Land

Mr. Cox: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the total amount of money paid to farmers in settlement for set-aside in each of the last three years.

Mr. Curry: The total amount of set-aside payments to farmers in England and Wales in each of the last three years was:

1990-91	15,533,000
1991-92	20,654,000
1992-93	[1]39,176,000

[1] Estimate.

Notes:

Payments in 1990-91 and 1991-92 were under the five year scheme.

Payments in 1992-93 were under the five year and one year set-aside schemes.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the total acreage of farm land in England and Wales in set aside as of 18 January.

Mr. Curry: Around 91,000 hectares, 222,950 acres, of arable land were set aside under the five-year set-aside scheme on England and Wales as of 18 January 1993. Information on land set aside under the new arable area payments scheme will not be available until growers have to declare the area later this year.

Fishing Industry

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals he has for involving the fishing industry organisations in the process of decision making about the future of the industry.

Mr. Curry: It is the Department's policy formally to consult the fishing industry on matters affecting its future.

Abattoirs

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received about small rural abattoirs; what he intends to do to promote their viability; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that my right hon. Friend the Minister gave to a question from the hon. Member for Taunton (Mr. Nicholson) on 2 December 1992, Official Report, columns 223-24. Many right hon. and hon. Members have written to me about small abattoirs since 2 December.

On the initiative of my right hon. Friend the Minister, the December Council of Agriculture Ministers agreed to increase the throughput limit for small slaughterhouses from 12 to 20 units per week until 31 December 1994. The Commission has been asked to review during 1993 the implications of the meat hygiene directives for small businesses. The Government will work closely with the Commission as it carries out this review.

No small business was forced to close on 1 January because it did not comply with the structural standards required by the fresh meat directive. The agriculture departments have issued time-limited licences to all businesses which have not completed the licensing process provided for in the Fresh Meat (Hygiene and Inspection) Regulations 1992. The arrangements for temporary derogations will ensure that no small premises is required to comply with the full structural requirements of the directive until the Commission has completed its review.

My right hon. Friend the Minister and I intend to look in detail at any recommendations from officials to refuse or revoke licences. We will not hesitate to take action where there are real hygiene problems, but we are not prepared to see small businesses closed as a result of over-zealous application of the regulations.

We issued further guidance on 30 November 1992 making it easier for local authorities to provide a cost-effective veterinary ante-mortem inspection service at small abattoirs. We are also consulting on proposals to set statutory limits on the amount local authorities can charge for the inspection service based on the reasonable cost of providing the inspection service required by the new regulations. We remain concerned about some of the veterinary costs being quoted. We consider that work carried out on a guaranteed contract basis should be charged at a lower hourly rate than ad hoc visits. We shall continue to monitor the level of inspection costs very closely.

Green Pound

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how far the green pound has depreciated against the ecu since sterling left the exchange rate mechanism.

Mr. Curry: The answer is 15·3 per cent.

Fishing Vessels

Mr. Ausin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether vessels owned abroad will be eligible for finance from his decommissioning fund.

Mr. Curry: The scheme will be confined to fishing vessels registered and licensed in this country. Rules on ownership will have to respect Community law.

Beef

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food for what reasons the passport system for cattle was introduced; and what is the estimated cost to the farming industry.

Mr. Curry: It is a requirement of the EC rules that cattle on which beef special premium is claimed must be accompanied by an administrative document showing the animal's premium status. The system of cattle identification documents which we are introducing is designed to meet this requirement. Since the industry will not have to pay for the issue of cattle identification documents the cost to the industry will be minimal.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will instruct his Department to make the advance payment of the beef special premium scheme within 28 days of application.

Mr. Curry: No. EC rules require that no advance payment is made on this scheme until after 1 November in the year of claim.

KPMG Management Consultants

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the contracts awarded by his Department to KPMG Management Consultants over the past 12 months.

Mr. Gummer: No such contracts have been awarded by my core-Department. The appointment of consultants by Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food agencies is a matter delegated to chief executives. The chief executives of ADAS and the Central Science Laboratory advise me, however, that they made use of KPMG in 1992 and will write to the hon. Member with details.

Letter from P. Stanley to Ms. Marjorie Mowlam, dated 21 January 1993:

The contracts awarded to KPMG Management Consultants by the Central Science Laboratory over the past 12 months are as follows:

(1) Appraisal of laboratory information management systems

(2) Pay and Grading: Initial consideration of options

(3) Human resource database: User requirement definition

Letter from J. Walsh to Ms. Marjorie Mowlam, dated 29 January 1993:

I am responding on behalf of the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, to your Parliamentary Question regarding contracts awarded by his Department to KPMG Management Consultants over the past 12 months.

The following consultancy services were commissioned from KPMG by ADAS over that period:

Software support for the Toolbox runtime package.
UNIX system configuration.
A review of ADAS networking,

Food Irradiation

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will state his policy towards the irradiation of food.

Mr. Soames: The Government have accepted the advice of expert bodies, including the World Health Organisation and the United Nations Food and Agriculture Organisation, that food irradiation is a safe and effective preservation process which can play a valuable role in enhancing food safety and extending consumer choice.

Accordingly, and taking account also of further advice from an independent scientific committee in the United Kingdom, the Government introduced the Food (Control of Irradiation) Regulations 1990 which lay down detailed licensing controls for the application of the process.

It is the policy of the Government to permit the irradiation of the foods listed in the regulations under the strict controls provided and to reach agreement on proposals from the EC Commission for a control measure covering the whole of the European Community.

DEFENCE

Trident

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence from which countries his Department is purchasing the Mk IV and Mk V bus for the Trident system.

Mr. Aitken: The United Kingdom is purchasing the bus, which forms part of the Trident D5 missile, from the United States.

Contracts

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what contracts his Department has with (a) Submarine Dismantlers Ltd. and (b) ENSC Ltd.

Mr. Aitken: My Department has no record of any contracts with either of these companies.

Nuclear Facilities

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are his Department's outstanding liabilities for future decommissioning of nuclear facilities at (a) Calder hall, (b) Chapelcross and (c) Capenhurst.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: British Nuclear Fuels Ltd. is responsible for assesssing the costs of decommissioning facilities at its sites. My Department's share of these costs is either subsumed in prices paid on supply contracts or is met when the costs are actually incurred, which in most cases will not be for some considerable time. It is not possible accurately to determine the cost of these liabilities as they will depend on a number of factors including future usage of the facilities by other customers.

Procurement Budget

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of his Department's procurement budget was spent in the United Kingdom for each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The percentage of defence equipment expenditure spent with British companies in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available is estimated to be:

Year	Per cent.
1981-82	96
1982-83	96
1983-84	93
1984-85	93
1985-86	90
1986-87	91
1987-89	92

Year	Per cent.
1989-90	92
1990-91	90

Nuclear Submarines

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the implications for disposal of nuclear submarines of the decisions of the meeting of the London dumping convention held in November 1992.

Mr. Aitken: I am not aware that there were any implications affecting disposal of our nuclear submarines. Our policy remains that when nuclear-powered submarines have been decommissioned the hulls should be stored afloat at a suitable berth, pending eventual disposal. This policy is kept under review.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what studies his Department has commissioned with commercial organisations regarding the disposal of nuclear submarines; and with which organisations these contracts were placed.

Mr. Aitken: The details of studies on the disposal of nuclear submarines undertaken by commercial organisations on MOD's behalf since 1986 are as follows:

Year and company	Study
1986
National Radiological Protection Board	Assessment of radiological impact of land disposal of radioactive wastes from a decommissioned nuclear submarine.
1986
Rolls-Royce and Associates	Services in support of project manager nuclear submarine disposal.
1987
National Radiological Protection Board	Assessment of radiological impact of land and sea disposal of radioactive wastes from a decommissioned nuclear submarine.
1988
Taywood Engineering Ltd.	Feasibility of decommissioning submarine components by concrete encasement.
1988
Osel Ulvertech Ltd.	Design and development of a recoverable underwater instrumental package.
1988
Taywood Engineering Ltd.	Concrete encasement of submarine reactor compartments.
1988
Electrowatt Engineering Services (UK) Ltd.	Environmental assessment document for the disposal of HMS Dreadnought.
1988
British Maritime Technology	HMS Dreadnought—support contract.
1988
Jet Research Centre	Linear cutting charge procurement.
1992
Babcock Thorn Ltd.	Design study into the safe storage of submarine reactor compartments.

Note: Information is not available on any studies undertaken before 1986.

Herald Reactor

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's outstanding liability for decommissioning of the Herald reactor at AWE Aldermaston.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Herald reactor at AWE Aldermaston is in the initial stages of decommissioning in accordance with the International Atomic Energy Authority's guidelines. Defuelling has been completed. It is expected that that full decommissioning will take some considerable time to complete.

Parachute Training

Ms. Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what procedures exist for the reporting, monitoring and investigation of falls of, and accidents sustained by, service personnel undergoing parachute training.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: A record of all military training descents is kept, including a note of all abnormalities and injuries. Unusual incidents are subject to further investigation and action as appropriate. Incidents resulting in death or serious injury are governed by regulations which set out the full investigative procedure to be taken, up to and including boards of inquiry.

Iraq

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the threat to allied aircraft from (a) Iraqi aircraft and (b) Iraqi surface-to-air missile installations.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The recent coalition air attacks have seriously degraded the Iraqi ground-based air defence system in the south, and since 27 December the Iraqi air force has lost a number of its most sophisticated fighters in air-to-air engagements with coalition aircraft. As a result coalition aircraft patrolling the no-fly zone can do so in greater safety. We are continuing closely to monitor the potential threat posed to coalition aircraft from the Iraqi air defences.

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has on the number of Iraqi (a) military personnel and (b) citizens who were killed or were injured and required hospital treatment as a result of the recent bombing raids on Iraq.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We do not have definitive casualty figures. Figures released by the Iraqi authorities indicate that 27 people died and eight were injured in the coalition military action on 13, 17 and 18 January. From the information available it is not possible to separate these figures into military civilian totals.

Nuclear Proliferation

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Mr. Llwyd) of 19 January, Official Report, column 202, what measures have been taken by his Department in fulfilment of obligations under article VI of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Government's policy continues to be to work for secure defence at the lowest possible level of armaments, both conventional and nuclear. To that end, we announced in 1991 substantial reductions in our nuclear weapons holdings including the giving up of the Lance missile and nuclear artillery roles; the reduction of the nuclear capable RAF squadrons from 11 to eight; the reduction of our WE177 bomb stockpile by more than half; and, in 1992, the elimination of our maritime sub-strategic capability. We are also party to, and are implementing, the conventional forces in Europe treaty and earlier this month we signed the chemical weapons convention.

Royal Yacht Britannia

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 26 January, Official Report, columns 645-46, on expenditure on the refit of the royal yacht Britannia, if he will give a breakdown of the category listed as "other".

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The category listed as "other" contained the following elements:

Cold, cool and provision rooms
Galley and laundry
Crew accommodation
Navigation and communications
Lobbies and passageways
Air conditioning and ventilation plant and systems
Asbestos removals in areas other than royal apartments
Anchors, cable and rigging
Opening and closing shipping routes
Docking and undocking the ship
Safety, security and other general activities
Ladders and brows
Jack and ensign staffs and upper deck lockers
Davits derricks and booms
Awnings and stanchions
Fixed eyeplates and miscellaneous lifting appliances
Auxiliary boiler and domestic steam system
Steering gear
Stabilisers
Winches
Lubrication oil systems and coolers
Feed systems and pumps
Fuel filling, storage and transfer systems including pumps
Fresh water system
Lifts
General fire protection
Rewiring outside royal apartments
Diesel and steam generators and associated switchboards
Conversion machinery
Miscellaneous update of equipment and systems.

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the ranks and numbers serving within each rank on the Royal yacht Britannia.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The current personnel complement of Her Majesty's yacht Britannia is as follows:

	Number
Officers
Rear admiral	1
Commander	4
Lieutenant commander	8
Lieutenant	6
Sub lieutenant	1
Total officers	20
Ratings
Warrant officer	2
Charge chief petty officer	4
Chief petty officer	22
Sergeant	1
Petty officer	26
Corporal	1
Leading hand	60
Marine	7
Able rate	106
Total ratings	229

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the cost of the Royal yacht Britannia includes the cost of the support vessels which accompany her.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No, nor is it possible to identify such support element costs without incurring disproportionate cost.

Royal Flight

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 26 January, Official Report, column 646, on flights by the royal flight in 1991, how many of the flights were made by members of the royal family and how many by Ministers; and how many flights undertaken by members of the royal family were for public duties.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Of the 1,200 passenger-carrying flights made by the Queen's Flight in 1991, 1,149 were for members of the royal family and 71 were for other entitled passengers such as the Prime Minister and other Government Ministers. Her Majesty the Queen, Her Majesty the Queen Mother, His Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh and their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales are entitled to use the Queen's Flight on all occasions, and we do not therefore maintain records which indicate the purpose of journeys undertaken by them. Other members of the royal family are entitled to use the Queen's Flight only when travelling in pursuance of their royal functions.

RAF Brawdy

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 22 January, Official Report, column 464, what account he took of the relative numbers of flying days lost at RAF Valley, RAF Chivenor and RAF Brawdy on reaching his decision to end flying training at RAF Brawdy.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I regret to say that due to an administrative error in my Department the answer given to the hon. Member on 22 January was incorrect. The figures for RAF Brawdy and RAF Valley were transposed and the correct figures for days lost are shown below:

Per cent.

	RAF Brawdy	RAF Valley	RAF Chivenor
1987	26·5	12·7	8·7
1988	20·8	8·8	5·6
1989	16·5	8·9	4·1
1990	16·8	7·1	6·9
1991	24·0	10·0	6·9

The relative numbers of flying days lost at the above stations were a contributory, but not determining factor in reaching our decision to end flying training at RAF Brawdy.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Nuclear Industry

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many representations he has received on the thermal oxide reprocessing plant at Sellafield since November 1992; and how many came from abroad.

Mr. Eggar: Since the beginning of November 1992, my Department has received some 70 letters about the thermal oxide reprocessing plant constructed by British Nuclear Fuels plc at Sellafield. Two of these letters came from abroad.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether he has evaluated the report, "Fuel Reprocessing at Thorp" by Dr. Frans Berkhout, a copy of which has been sent to him.

Mr. Eggar: My Department has received a number of reports on Thorp, including the one referred to by the hon. Member, and these are being considered.

Concessionary Fuel

Mr. Hain: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he was consulted by British Coal over its decision to reduce by about 20 per cent. anthracite tonnage supplied to mining pensioners and widows in receipt of concessionary fuel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The administration of concessionary fuel agreements is a matter for British Coal. The corporation will be writing to the hon. Member on the issue raised.

Oil and Gas Exploration

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he hopes to announce the names of the successful applicants who have been granted licences in respect of the 14th round of coastal oil and gas exploration.

Mr. Eggar: An announcement on awards of licences offered in the 14th offshore licensing round is expected to be made in May 1993.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list by (a) location and (b) name of applicant, the applications his Department has received in respect of the 14th round of coastal oil and gas exploration.

Mr. Eggar: Details of applications received in all offshore oil and gas licensing rounds are regarded as commercially confidential. The names of successful applicants will be announced.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the names of the organisations he consulted before making his final decision on granting licences in respect of the 14th round of coastal oil and gas explorations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: No decisions have yet been made on granting licences in respect of the 14th round of offshore licensing. Although a number of statutory and non-statutory bodies are consulted regarding their interests before blocks are announced to be available for licensing, any decision on the award of licences is a matter of ministerial discretion, based on the published criteria for awards.

GATT

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make it his policy to propose amendments to the proposals to establish a multi-lateral trade organisation set out in the draft final act of the Uruguay round of the general agreement on tariffs and trade to secure (a) explicit commitments to the protection of the environment and incomes of the poor in third-world countries and (b) revisions to the disputes procedures enabling increased accountability of panel members.

Mr. Needham: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave him on 11 January, Official Report, col 567.

British Coal

Ms. Walley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will place in the Library a copy of each report by Boyds concerning British Coal.

Mr. Eggar: Boyds has produced two reports concerning British Coal and is currently working on a third.

The 1992 report into productivity improvements and cost reductions at selected collieries has not been placed in the Library. It was commissioned on a confidential basis and contains detailed information which is commercially confidential. However, a copy was provided to the Trade and Industry Select Committee on a confidential basis.

A copy of the report published on 22 January on the viability of the 21 pits proposed for closure by British Coal has been placed in the Library.

Boyds is currently undertaking a review on whether British Coal's criteria for the closure of the 10 pits were met in relation to all or any of them. I have proposed to British Coal and the unions that the report be published and, if it is, it will of course be placed in the Library.

Ms. Walley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will give (a) the terms of reference and (b) the full cost of each contract entered into by his Department with Boyds in connection with the coal industry, for the last five years.

Mr. Eggar: My Department and the former Department of Energy have engaged the John T. Boyd Company to undertake three studies in connection with the coal industry. The terms of reference of the first study provide for Boyds to give advice on the technical issues which need to be taken into account when considering the future privatisation of the industry. In respect of the other two studies I refer to the reply my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Waveney (Mr. Porter) on 20 November 1992, Official Report, column 433 and to my reply to the hon. Member for Clackmannan (Mr. O'Neill) on 22 January 1993, Official Report, column 498. On grounds of commercial confidentiality, the cost of individual contracts is not released.

International Co-operation and Development

Mr. Meacher: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what policy initiatives he is planning to undertake in the next six months to promote international co-operation and development; what meetings he is planning to attend; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: I and my ministerial colleagues and officials play a full part in all the relevant international bodies such as GATT, OECD and UNCTAD, including in this case participation in the restructuring of the organisation following UNCTAD VIII. We work in these bodies both through the European Community and in our own right. In the coming months my colleagues and I will make a number of overseas visits to strengthen the United Kingdom's trading links.

General Insurance Intermediaries

Mr. Conway: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the regulation of general insurance intermediaries.

Mr. Heseltine: I have received a copy of the report of the code monitoring committee that, under the chairmanship of Sir Kenneth Clucas, has been monitoring the operation of the Association of British Insurers code of practice for the selling of general insurance. I am grateful to Sir Kenneth and his committee for their work. I shall be discussing the report with the Association of British Insurers.

I am placing a copy of the report in the Library of the House.

Mining Industry

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will give a list of the mining jobs lost in each constituency and the percentage change in unemployment for each such constituency since June 1987.

Mr. Eggar: The information is given in the following table:

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what information he has concerning the level of manufacturing output as a percentage of gross national product in each member country of the European Community in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Disability Allowances

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what are the national average clearance times for (a) new claims, (b) top-up claims and (c) requests for review of disability living allowance for each month since September 1992; and if he will break down the figures by disability benefit centre;

(2) if he will list the number of appeals against a disability living allowance and attendance allowance decision broken down by outcome of appeal heard by the new disability appeal tribunals, and the number and percentage of appeals waiting to be heard;

(3) in how many cases a person has lost either a care or mobility component of the disability living allowance following a review of the other component;

(4) if he will provide details of in which parts of the Benefits Agency the 800 additional staff taken on to help clear the backlog of disability living allowance and attendance allowance cases were previously employed; what training on disability living allowance and attendance allowance they received, and the number and percentage that had to be relocated; and if he will make a statement on the Benefits Agency's future plans with regard to the employment of these additional staff to work on disability living allowance and attendance allowance;

(5) what number and percentage of (a) new claims and (b) top-up claims for disability living allowance claims to date have (i) resulted in an award, (ii) been rejected, broken down by whether (1) further evidence was requested or (2) the claim was decided solely on the statement of disability evidence provided by the claimant;

(6) how many staff, divided into full and part-time and permanent and temporary, have been employed by his Department at each disability benefit centre in each month since the beginning of February 1992;

(7) for what number and percentage of claims for disability living allowance and attendance allowance the adjudicating officer required further evidence; and if he will list the number and percentage requiring (a) an examining medical practitioner report, (b) evidence other than an examining medical practitioner report and (c) both;

(8) how many requests for reviews of disability living allowance and attendance allowance have been received by his Department since the introduction of self-assessment; and what number and percentage of these (a) resulted in an increase in the amount of benefit payable, (b) resulted in an orginal award being maintained, (c) resulted in a reduction in benefit and (d) remain outstanding;

(9) how many claims for the disability living allowance and attendance allowance have been received by the Department to date in total and in each month since the beginning of February 1992; and if he will provide a breakdown by (a) the number and percentage of these that resulted in an award, (b) the number and percentage of these that were refused broken down by grounds for refusal (c) the number and percentage of these that required further evidence broken down by type of evidence and (d) the number and percentage of these that are awaiting a decision; and if these can be broken down by the totals for the country as a whole and by each of the regions covered by the 10 disability benefit centres.

Mr. Scott: The administration of disability benefits is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from M. Bichard to Mr. Paul Flynn, dated 28 January 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary of State for Social Security about Disability Living Allowance (DLA) and Attendance Allowance (AA). I will deal with each of your points in turn.

Number of claims made and decided

You asked for the number of new claims and "top-up" claims for DLA together with the number and percentage of awards and refusals, including reasons for refusal. Annex 1 shows a breakdown of this information together with details of decisions based upon information provided on the claim form, medical examinations and other forms of evidence.

A further breakdown showing the complete picture of the outcome of claims within each of the DBC's from May 1992 to date for AA claims is shown at Annex 2 and Annex 3 for DLA claims from February 1992 to date. The first half of each Annex shows the actual numbers and the remainder reflects the percentages.

National average clearance times

Since the launch of DLA in February 1992 the performance to date has shown a 37 per cent. clearance rate against the primary target of 30 days. Performance has been improving steadily over recent months and the latest performance for the month of December shows 55 per cent of claims cleared within 30 days. The table at Annex 4 shows the clearance times for each Disability Benefit Centre (DBC) between February and December inclusive for new claims and those made under the special rules, for both the primary target (60 per cent. in 30 days for normal; 80 per cent. for special rules) and the secondary target (95 per cent. in 55 days for normal; 90 per cent. in 15 for special). The clearance of top-up claims is shown at Annex 5.

Reviews of decisions on DLA

You have asked how many requests for review of DLA and AA claims have been received. To date just under 56,000 requests for DLA reviews have been received whilst in the case of AA around 92,000 have been received. At the end of December 47,000 DLA reviews were outstanding and 30,000 AA reviews.

I should explain that figures are not routinely gathered to show instances whereby a claimant loses either a care or mobility element following a review of the other component. However, these occurrences are not thought to be significant, as protection exists within the Regulations so that the Adjudication Officer need not consider the other component to that which he is reviewing. Annex 6 shows details of the number and percentage of reviews that have resulted in (a) an increase, (b) an award maintained and (c) reduction in benefit.

Number of appeals against a DLA and AA decision

The number of appeals received by the AA Unit between 6 April 1992 and 31 December 1992 is 782. This figure includes both Disability Appeal Tribunal cases as well as Social Security Appeal Tribunal cases. Of these, 372 are still awaiting submission to the Independent Tribunal Service. For DLA the number of appeals registered by the end of December 1992 was 2,375. 246 have so far been cleared and 2,129 remain outstanding.

Staffing

You asked how many staff, divided into full-time, part-time, permanent and temporary have been employed at each of the DBC's since the beginning of February 1992. I presume you are referring to those staff employed on DLA and AA65+ operations within the Centres. This information is shown in Annex 7 attached.

The figures show a steady increase in the manpower deployed on the new benefits. Across the DBCs and Fylde Units, this increase amounts to around 800 additional staff. Approximately half of this total were redeployed from within the Agency, with just over 300 from the District Office network around the country and almost 100 from other operations within the Fylde Directorate. The remaining 400 are temporary staff recruited to assist in the clearance of the backlogs of cases which existed in the months surrounding the benefits' launch.

I am of course conscious of the need to ensure that the valuable support these additional resources have provided is not removed too early. We are constantly monitoring this situation and reviewing staff needs therefore on an ongoing basis.

You also asked about the training which these staff received. In most areas extra staff were taken on to deal with specific areas of work. In the main, training was therefore specifically designed to meet the needs of the individual circumstances which prevailed, often covering specific tasks. Formal computer system and adjudication training courses were arranged as appropriate.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report. A copy will also be placed in the Library.

The information has been placed in the Library.

Samuel Skinnard

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when Mrs. J. Skinnard of 29 Bowers Park drive, Woolwell, Plymouth PL6 7SH, will know the outcome of her appeal against the decision to refuse disability living allowance for her son, Samuel Skinnard.

Mr. Scott: The administration of disability living allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from M. Bichard to Mr. Anthony Steen, dated 28 January 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking when Mrs. J. Skinnard will know the outcome of her appeal against the decision to refuse Disability Living Allowance (DLA) for her son, Samuel.

As Mrs. Skinnard's letter of appeal was received within three months of the original decision, the claim fell to be reviewed under the new DLA adjudication procedures.

I can confirm that a review decision was given on 5 January 1993 and Mrs. Skinnard has now been notified of the outcome. I have replied to you separately in greater detail about the case.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report. A copy will also be placed in the Library.

Rosaleen Foster

Mrs. Angela Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the consequences for his Department of the recent House of Lords judgment in the case of Rosaleen Foster; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: The judgment given in the House of Lords on 28 January in this case confirmed that the regulations under which the severe disability premium had been awarded in income support housing benefit and community charge benefit were validly made.

The Government have always intended that the severe disability premium should provide extra help to those particularly vulnerable severely disabled people who live independently of their families, and do not have anyone caring for them who receives invalid care allowance. The decision has put beyond doubt that the law enables Secretary of State to make such conditions. I am pleased that this matter has now been finally resolved, and I continue to believe that the SDP is an effective way of helping those severely disabled people who live independently and who are, therefore, most likely to have to rely on bought-in care.

Departmental Accounts

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what measures he is taking to produce the accounts of his Department in a form which is acceptable to the Comptroller and Auditor General; on how many occasions the accounts of his Department have been subject to a qualified audit report; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: The appropriation account recording expenditure of income support, family benefits and pension and disability benefits has been qualified on each occasion by the Comptroller and Auditor General for the years 1981-82 to 1991-92. There were a number of factors which caused the account to be qualified over the period. The main one, relating to the use of issues and encashment data, has not been a factor since 1989-90

The 1991-92 account was subject to a qualified audit report due to errors in the assessment and recording of payments of income support and inaccuracies in the awards of family credit. Action is in hand seeking to improve performance in these areas.

The reformed housing benefit scheme came into effect in 1982 and since that time the housing benefit appropriation account has been qualified by the Comptroller and Auditor General on three occasions; 1983-84, 1984-85 and 1991-92. To improve the Department's performance tighter subsidy arrangements have been introduced.

Since 1981-82 the administration and miscellaneous services account has been qualified on four occasions; 1981-82, 1983-84, 1984-85 and 1986-87; the last occasion on which the account was subject to a qualified audit report from the Comptroller and Auditor General.

Claimants' Files, Liverpool

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many files relating to claims for social security benefits have been destroyed in each year since 1985 at the (a) Huyton, (b) Edge Hill, (c) Breckfield and (d) Childwell Valley social security offices in Liverpool.

Mr. Burt: The administration of income support is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from M. Bichard to Ms. Jane Kennedy, dated 28 January 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking how many files relating to claims for social security benefits have been destroyed in each year since 1985 at the (a) Huyton, (b) Edge Hill, (c) Breckfield and (d) Childwall Valley social security offices in Liverpool.

The information you requested is not available as offices do not record either the details of the numbers of records destroyed over any particular period or the names of the customers concerned. I have outlined below the normal practice for destruction of documents in Income Support and Contributory Benefit records.

The records of customers in receipt of Income Support are kept intact as long as they receive benefit. Only when a customer's benefit ceases and all outstanding action has been completed will clerical records be transferred to the dormant file. If the records are dormant for 18 months, they are destroyed but only if there is no ongoing activity such as an outstanding appeal or overpayment.

Contributory Benefit files are normally destroyed 18 months after death or 18 months after the final payment of benefit. However, from 1987 there has been an embargo on the destruction of any files relating to claims for Contributory Benefits. Such records are called General Benefit Units (GBUs).

In 1986 a national "one off" exercise allowed the destruction of all GBUs which had been inactive, (i.e. not the subject of claims or change of circumstances) for 5 years or more with certain exceptions.

If there is a particular case that is causing you concern please let me know the details and I will be happy to look into it for you.

A copy will appear in the Official Report. A copy will also be placed in the Library.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 217

SESSION 1992–93

18th January, 1993—29th January, 1993

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc, between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes and cannot therefore, be used in connection with the daily part or weekly Hansard. For these versions use the Fortnightly Index.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland' and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instrument etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Speaker and deputies are brought together under the heading Speaker's rulings and statements.

Other contributions by Speaker and deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates, Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates etc (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Money res = money resolution, Com = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
